

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

SUPPLEMENT.

CUBA.

Vol. II, p. 362.

Cuba, under the military governor, a foreign country. — In U. S. v. Assia, (1902) 118 Fed. 915, it was held that Cuba, under the military governor, was a foreign country, so that one committing a crime on a vessel registered at a Cuban port was not subject to trial therefor in the courts of the United States.

Vol. II, p. 364, cl. IV.

Abolition of private franchise. — In O'Reilly de Camara v. Brooke, (1908) 209 U. S. 45, 28 S. Ct. 439, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 676, affirming (1906) 142 Fed. 858, it appeared that the defendant, while governor of Cuba during its occupation by the United States, abolished a valuable franchise owned by plaintiff, who was a Spanish subject. On appeal the secretary of war of the United States confirmed the governor's order. Subsequently, by the so-called "Platt Amendment," incorporated in the treaty between the United States and the republic of Cuba, it was provided that "all acts of the United States in Cuba during its military occupancy thereof are ratified and validated, and all lawful rights acquired thereunder shall be maintained and protected." It was held that such ratification was equivalent to an original authorization of defendant by the United States government to make the order in question and exempted defendant from any personal liability to plaintiff for depriving her of her property right in the franchise, and transferred such liability, if any, to the United States, or to the government of Cuba.

Vol. II, p. 364, cl. VI.

In Pearcy v. Stranahan, (1907) 205 U. S. 257, 27 S. Ct. 545, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 793, it was held that the Isle of Pines must be regarded as at least de facto under the jurisdiction of the Republic of Cuba, and hence, as a "foreign country" within the meaning of the Dingley Tariff Act of July 24, 1897 (30 Stat. 151, ch. 11, 2 Fed. Stat. Annot. 391), since the United States has never taken possession of such island as included in the territory ceded by Spain to the United States in the treaty of peace, but, instead, through its legislative and executive departments, has recognized the Cuban government as rightfully exercising sovereignty over the Isle of Pines as a de facto government until the de jure status shall be determined.

CUSTOMS DUTIES.

Territory acquired by the United States by cession.—Lincoln v. U. S., (1905) 197 U. S. 419, 25 S. Ct. 455, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 816, following Fourteen Diamond Rings v. U. S., (1901) 183 U. S. 176, 22 S. Ct. 59, 46 U. S. (L. ed.) 138, set out in the original note.

The treaty with Spain by which Porto Rico was ceded to the United States, although signed December 10, 1898, and ratified by Spain (which was the last to ratify) on March 19, 1899, did not become effective for the purposes of the tariff laws until the exchange of ratifications, April 11, 1899, and all importations of merchandise arriving from Porto Rico at a port of entry of the United States prior to that date were subject to duty. Armstrong v. Bidwell, (1903) 124 Fed. 690. But merchandise arriving from Porto Rico at a port of entry of the United States at any time during said April 11th was not subject to duty. Howell v. Bidwell, (1903) 124 Fed. 688. Goods arriving at a port of entry of the United States from the Philippine ports after the treaty took effect were not subject to duty, although they were shipped prior to said April 11th. American Sugar Refining Co. v. Bidwell, (1903) 124 Fed. 677.

Rule of classification.—Where a tariff enumeration is descriptive of the use of imported merchandise, the chief or predominant use of an article should control in determining whether or not it comes within that enumeration. U. S. v. Lehn, (1901) 124 Fed. 87.

Canal zone.—Importations into the United States from the Panama Canal zone, since the cession of such territory to the United States, are dutiable. David Kaufman, etc., Co. v. Smith, (1909) 175 Fed. 887.

Isle of Pines.—In Pearcy v. Stranahan, 205 U. S. 257, 27 S. Ct. 545, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 793, decided in 1907, it was held that the Isle of Pines must be regarded as at least de facto under the jurisdiction of the Republic of Cuba, and hence as a "foreign country" within the meaning of the Dingley Tariff Act of July 24, 1897 (30 Stat. L. 151, ch. 11), since the United States has never taken possession of such island as included in the territory ceded by Spain to the United States in the treaty of peace, but, instead, through its legislative and executive departments, has recognized the Cuban government as rightfully exercising sovereignty over the Isle of Pines as a de facto government until the de jure status shall be determined.

Schedule titles.—The titles of the various schedules in tariff acts are not intended to be perfectly accurate, but furnish general information only of the articles enumerated in the paragraphs therein. U. S. v. Brown, (C. C. A. 1905) 136 Fed. 550.

Time duties due.—As soon as imported merchandise subject to duty has been entered into the country, duties become due on same, whether the entry is surreptitious or honest. American Sugar Refining Co. v. Bidwell, (1903) 124 Fed. 683; Cuccio Di G. v. U. S., (1909) 172 Fed. 304; U. S. v. Ehrigott, (1910) 182 Fed. 267.

Vol. II, p. 392, par. 1.

Acetic acid anhydrid.—The term "acetic acid" is not limited to the article scientifically known by that name, but is intended as a general commercial designation of a class of articles which are commercially so known, and includes the substance known as "acetic acid anhydrid." Lueders v. U. S., (1905) 140 Fed. 970.

Extract of nutgalls.—This paragraph does not include extract of nutgalls, consisting of a mixture of powdered nutgalls and water, which contains some tannin, and from which tannic acid may be produced. U. S. v. Proctor, (C. C. A. 1906) 145 Fed. 126, affirming (1905) 139 Fed. 586.

Mixture of boracic acid and borax.—In Levi v. U. S., (1903) 126 Fed. 420, it was held that a certain antiseptic preservative, consisting of an intimate mechanical mixture of boracic acid and borax, the former being the more valuable component, is an article not enumerated in the Tariff Act of July 24, 1897, either as "boracic acid," under this paragraph, as "chemical compounds," under paragraph 3, or as "borax," or "borate material," under paragraph 11, and is therefore subject to assessment at the same rate of duty as boracic acid, under this paragraph, by virtue of section 7, which prescribes that "on articles not enumerated, manufactures of two or more materials, the duty shall be assessed at the highest rate at which the same would be chargeable if composed wholly of the component material thereof of chief value."

Oleic acid or red oil.—Paragraph 568 does not include so-called "oleic acid," or red oil, which is fit for other uses, although commonly used as soap stock, but it is properly dutiable under paragraph 1. Hill v. U. S., (1906) 151 Fed. 475, 81 C. C. A. 13, affirming 143 Fed. 361.

Extract of nutgall.—See under this title, vol. 2, p. 395, par. 20.

Vol. II, p. 392, par. 2.

"Compound."—In paragraph 2, relating to alcoholic compounds, the word "compound" is not limited by any trade usage or technical adaptation, but is used in its common broad sense of being any union or mixture of elements, ingredients, or parts, as fine-cut herbs commingled with alcohol and constituting to some degree an infusion. U. S. v. Stone, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 1909) 175 Fed. 33, reversing 171 Fed. 293.

Mixture of fine cut herbs and alcohol.—In paragraph 2, the term "alcoholic compounds" includes a mixture of fine-cut herbs and alcohol, in which the alcohol mainly serves as a preservative in the importation of the leaves, but continues in use after importation, for the purpose of producing a tincture, although there might be no justification for holding that the purpose of using the alcohol as a mere preservative determines classification under this provision. U. S. v. Stone, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 1909) 175 Fed. 33, reversing 171 Fed. 293.

Herbs in alcohol.—See under this title, vol. 2, p. 504, sec. 6.

Vol. II, p. 392, par. 3.

Bone-size substitute, consisting of chemical starch, dextrin, magnesium chloride, and silica, which is used for stiffening the backs of fabrics, is not a preparation fit for use as starch, under paragraph 285, but is a chemical compound, under paragraph 3. U. S. v. Ducas, (1903) 149 Fed. 253.

Borate of manganese.—The enumeration in paragraph 11, of "other borate material," refers only to borate materials found in nature in a raw condition, such as the "borates of lime or soda" included in the same provision, and does not embrace borate of manganese, or bormangan, which is a manufactured article made from manganese and borates of lime or soda, and which is held to be dutiable as a chemical compound or salt under paragraph 2. Hempstead v. Thomas, (C. C. A. 1904) 129 Fed. 907, reversing (1903) 123 Fed. 346.

Gadulol, an extract of cod liver oil, which in the form in which imported is not prepared for the use of the apothecary or physician, and which is not dispensed in that form, is not a "medicinal preparation," under paragraph 67, but is dutiable as a chemical compound under paragraph 3. U. S. v. Merck, (1905) 136 Fed. 817, 69 C. C. A. 472, affirming (1903) 126 Fed. 438.

Glycerophosphate of lime, though occasionally dispensed medicinally, is almost always used in combination with other drugs in the preparation of elixirs. It has been held that it is not a "medicinal preparation," but a "chemical compound," within the meaning of paragraph 3. Klipstein v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1909) 167 Fed. 535.

Olein, a distillate from wool grease, in the form of an oil, is not "wool grease," within the meaning of paragraph 279, but is dutiable as a "distilled oil," under paragraph 3. Swan, etc., Co. v. U. S., (1909) 172 Fed. 173.

Extract of nutgall.—See under this title, vol. 2, p. 395, par. 20.

Commercial carbonate of baryta.—See under this title, vol. 2, par. 489.

Lysol.—See under this title, vol. 2, p. 393, par. 11.

Muguet pomade.—See under this title, vol. 2, p. 493, par. 626.

Mixture of boracic acid and borax.—See under this title, vol. 2, p. 392, par. 1.

Niger-seed oil.—See under this title, vol. 2, p. 490, par. 568.

Nut oil.—See under this title, vol. 2, p. 493, par. 626.

Soluble creosote.—See under this title, vol. 2, par. 524.

Vol. II, p. 393, par. 10.

Blood charcoal, a substance which, like bone char, is composed chiefly of carbon, and is used for decolorizing sugar, is not dutiable under paragraph 97 as an article composed of carbon, but either under paragraph 10 as bone char by similitude, or at the similar rate provided in section 6, for unenumerated manufactured articles. U. S. v. Lueders, (1906) 148 Fed. 398.

Vol. II, p. 393, par. 11.

Borate of manganese.—See under this title, vol. 2, p. 392, par. 3.

Mixture of boracic acid and borax.—See under this title, vol. 2, p. 392, par. 1.

Vol. II, p. 394, par. 12.

Synthetic camphor.—See under this title, vol. 2, p. 487, par. 515.

Vol. II, p. 394, par. 13.

Precipitated chalk.—The article produced by the artificial precipitation of chalk, and bolting and packing it in bags, is not "manufactures" of chalk, within the meaning of paragraph 13, but is chalk itself, and is dutiable under the provision in the same paragraph for "chalk artificially precipitated." U. S. v. Anderson, (1909) 175 Fed. 961, 99 C. C. A. 451. Compare Lyon v. U. S., (1903) 121 Fed. 204.

"Prepared for toilet purposes."—While in the exception in this paragraph of chalk "prepared for toilet purposes" the preparation referred to is not, perhaps, such as is necessary to make a completed toilet article, there must be advancement toward use for toilet purposes, by the admixture of flavoring or other ingredients, or otherwise; and chalk that has been merely precipitated artificially, bolted, and packed in bags is not within that provision. U. S. v. Anderson, (1909) 175 Fed. 961, 99 C. C. A. 451.

Talc in the form of cubes, which is used in making gas burners and insulators, is dutiable as French chalk, by similitude, under paragraph 13. Kraemer v. U. S., (1910) 180 Fed. 638.

Vol. II, p. 394, par. 15.

Bleachers' blue, which is not used as a color or dye, but solely as a bleaching mixture, has been held not to be within the provision in paragraph 15, for coal tar colors or dyes, but within the further provision in the same paragraph for coal tar products or preparations that are not colors or dyes. De Ronde v. U. S., (1903) 148 Fed. 653.

Bromofluorescic acid is dutiable as a coal tar color or dye under paragraph 15. U. S. v. Kuttroff, (1906) 147 Fed. 758, affirmed (C. C. A. 1907) 154 Fed. 1004.

"Carbolineum" or "carbolineum avenarius."—The article known as "carbolineum" or "carbolineum avenarius," which consists of dead oil modified by the action of chlorine gas, is dutiable under the provision in paragraph 15, for "preparations of coal tar, not colors or dyes and not medicinal, not specially provided for," and is not dutiable under the provision for "chemical compounds," in paragraph 3, or free of duty as "dead or creosote oil," under paragraph 524. Downing v. U. S., (1901) 123 Fed. 1000.

"Color or dye."—An article which contains all the essential elements and determining characteristics of a color or dye, needing only to have its coloring properties rendered accessible by dropping it into water containing an alkali, is a color or dye within the meaning of paragraph 15. U. S. v. Kuttroff, (1906) 147 Fed. 758, affirming (C. C. A. 1907) 154 Fed. 1004.

Lysol, a liquid substance in which coal tar in the origin of the elements that give it its determining characteristic, the chief use of the article being otherwise than as a medicine, though used as such to a limited and comparatively insignificant extent, is dutiable under the provision in paragraph 15, for "preparations of coal tar, . . . not medicinal," and not under paragraph 3, covering "chemical compounds." U. S. v. Lehn, (1901) 124 Fed. 87.

Phthalic anhydride and tetrachlorophthalic anhydride.—See under this title, p. 392, par. 1.

Soluble creosote.—See under this title, vol. 2, par. 524.

Vol. II, p. 394, par. 17.

Ping-pong balls are not "toys," as provided for in paragraph 418, but are dutiable under paragraph 17 as articles of collodion. U. S. v. Strauss, (1905) 136 Fed. 185, 69 C. C. A. 201, reversing (1904) 128 Fed. 473; U. S. v. Wanamaker, (1905) 136 Fed. 266.

Pyroxylin rods partly finished are dutiable as partly finished "articles" of pyroxylin, under paragraph 17. Rice v. U. S., (1909) 176 Fed. 581.

Umbrella sticks with celluloid handles.—See under this title, p. 481, par. 426.

Vol. II, p. 395, par. 20.

Articles used in dyeing or tanning are not "drugs," within the meaning of that expression as used in paragraph 20 and paragraph 548; that term being limited in its common acceptance to medicinal preparations, though broadly it may include all preparations used in the arts. Leber v. U. S., (1904) 135 Fed. 243.

Chrysarobin is dutiable as a drug advanced in value, under paragraph 20, and not as a medicinal preparation, under paragraph 68. Levi v. U. S., (1905) 140 Fed. 126.

Extract of nutgalls, an article which is made by grinding nutgalls, digesting the powder in water, and filtering to remove impurities, a chemical being added as a preservative without working any chemical change, is not dutiable as tannin or tannic acid, under paragraph 1, nor as a chemical compound under paragraph 3, but either directly or by similitude as "drugs, such as . . . nutgalls, . . . advanced in value or condition," under paragraph 20. Proctor v. U. S., (1905) 139 Fed. 586.

Powered opium is a "drug advanced in value or condition," within the meaning of paragraph 20, rather than opium crude or unmanufactured, under paragraph 43. U. S.

v. McKesson, (1909) 172 Fed. 168, following Merck v. U. S., (1906) 151 Fed. 14, 80 C. C. A. 510.

Scammony resin, prepared from gum scammony, or scammony root, and used principally in compounding medicines, is dutiable as a drug advanced in value or condition, under paragraph 20, rather than as a medicinal preparation, under paragraph 67. U. S. v. Martin, (1907) 155 Fed. 264.

Capers pickled in vinegar. — See under this title, vol. 2, p. 431, par. 241.

Herbs in alcohol. — See under this title, vol. 2, p. 504, sec. 6.

Persian berry extract. — See under this title, vol. 2, p. 504, sec. 6.

Vol. II, p. 395, par. 22.

Extract of mangrove bark. — See under this title, vol. 2, p. 488, par. 542.

Vol. II, p. 396, par. 23.

Gelatin. — So-called "finings," an article consisting of gelatin containing considerable proportion of sulphurous acid or sulphite as a preservative, is dutiable as "gelatin," under paragraph 23, and not as a manufacture of gelatin, under paragraph 450, or as an un-enumerated manufactured article, under section 6. Sonoma Wine, etc., Co. v. U. S., (1900) 123 Fed. 999.

Bone size. — See under this title, vol. 2, p. 504, sec. 6.

Vol. II, p. 396, sec. 32.

Soluble grease. — See under this title, vol. 2, p. 504, sec. 6.

Vol. II, p. 397, par. 40.

Measurement. — The description of merchandise in an invoice as contained in "gallon" tins is not to be taken as conclusive against the importers, as fixing the amount contained in the tins for the assessment of duty. Such descriptions do not purport to indicate exactly the amount so contained, and it is the duty of government officers to ascertain as nearly as possible the quantity imported. U. S. v. Zucca, (1907) 154 Fed. 172.

Olive oil in large cans. — In U. S. v. La Manna, (1907) 154 Fed. 927, affirmed (C. C. A. 1908) 158 Fed. 1022, the court in construing paragraph 40, providing (1) for olive oil "in bottles, jars, tins, or similar packages," and (2) for "olive oil not specially provided for," held, that oil in five-gallon tins, in which form it is not sold to the consumer but to hotels and retail dealers, is not subject to the first provision, but to the latter.

Vol. II, p. 397, par. 43.

Powdered opium. — See under this title, vol. 2, p. 395, par. 20.

Vol. II, p. 398, par. 53.

Enamel paint. — See under this title, vol. 2, p. 399, par. 57.

Vol. II, p. 398, par. 54.

Colors containing lead. — The provision for "colors . . . not containing quicksilver, but . . . containing lead," in paragraph 54, is a more specific enumeration of colors containing lead than the provision for "colors . . . not otherwise specially provided for," in paragraph 58. U. S. v. Marsching, (1909) 177 Fed. 593.

Lakes containing lead are more specifically provided for as "colors . . . containing lead," under paragraph 54, than as "lakes . . . not specially provided for," under paragraph 58. U. S. v. G. Siegle Co., (1909) 175 Fed. 885.

Vol. II, p. 399, par. 57.

Enamel paint. — In Pomeroy v. U. S., (1903) 126 Fed. 583, it was held that certain so-called enamel paint, consisting of a white paint containing zinc, but not containing lead, ground in linseed oil, varnish being added to give a gloss, but without affecting the character of the mixture as a paint, is more specifically enumerated under the provision in paragraph 57, for "white paint or pigment containing zinc, but not containing lead," than under the provision in paragraph 53, for "varnishes," or that in paragraph 58, for "all paints, . . . whether crude or dry or mixed, or ground with water or oil or with solutions other than oil, not otherwise specially provided for." To the same effect see U. S. v. Bird, (1909) 167 Fed. 319, 92 C. C. A. 631.

Lithofone.—Where it was proved that lithofone, composed of 70 per cent. sulphite of barytes and 30 per cent. sulphide of zinc, was known as "lithofone," whether dry or ground in oil, and by commercial designation was known as "sulphide of zinc white," it was classifiable for duty as such under paragraph 57, and not as a white paint or pigment containing zinc, but not containing lead. Gabriel v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1903) 123 Fed. 296, affirming (1902) 114 Fed. 401, set out in the original note.

Chlorophyll.—See under this title, vol. 2, p. 504, sec. 6.

Colors containing lead.—See under this title, vol. 2, p. 398, par. 54.

Enamel paint.—See under this title, vol. 2, p. 399, par. 57.

"Flitters."—See under this title, vol. 2, p. 420, par. 175.

Persian berry extract.—See under this title, vol. 2, p. 504, sec. 6.

Vol. II, p. 400, par. 67.

Hyoscin hydrobromate, shown to be a chemical salt of solely medicinal use, in the preparation of which alcohol is necessarily used, was dutiable under the Tariff Act of 1890, paragraph 74, as a medicinal preparation in the preparation of which alcohol is used, and not under paragraph 76 of that Act as a chemical compound or salt. Schering v. U. S., (1900) 119 Fed. 472.

"Medicinal preparations" defined.—The expression "medicinal preparations," as used in the Tariff Act, means such articles as are of use, or believed by the prescriber or user fairly and honestly to be of use, in curing, or alleviating, or palliating, or preventing some disease or affection of the human frame. Dodge v. U. S., (1891) 130 Fed. 624.

Preparations in which alcohol may or may not be used.—This paragraph applies to an import which is a medicinal preparation in the preparation of which alcohol is used, though alcohol need not be, and sometimes is not, used in the preparation of the article. U. S. v. Schering, (C. C. A. 1903) 123 Fed. 65, reversing (1900) 119 Fed. 473, cited in the original note.

Presumption.—In the absence of evidence that alcohol was not used in the preparation of the import, it will be presumed, in support of the collector's assessment, that it was so used. U. S. v. Schering, (C. C. A. 1903) 123 Fed. 65, reversing (1900) 119 Fed. 472.

Bottles with cut glass stoppers.—Filled bottles, with cut glass stoppers, the bottle neck and the stopper being ground to fit each other, and the stopper not being capable of use in any other bottle, are dutiable as entreties, rather than separately from the stoppers. Park v. U. S., (1909) 174 Fed. 831, following Utard v. U. S., (1904) 128 Fed. 422, 63 C. C. A. 164.

Decorated glassware.—Glassware ornamented with metal filigree work was held to be dutiable as "articles of glass, . . . ornamented, decorated," etc., under paragraph 100, regardless of whether glass or metal is the component of chief value. Gallenkamp v. Rachman, (1906) 147 Fed. 769.

U. S.*, (1901) 123 Fed. 847.

Microscope slides.—In paragraph 100, providing for "vessels or articles of glass, . . . all the foregoing, filled or unfilled, and whether their contents be dutiable or free," the reference to the filling of such articles does not, in view of the history of the legislation, imply that only articles capable of being used as containers are covered by the paragraph; and microscope slides cannot for that reason be excluded. Hempstead v. U. S., (1907) 158 Fed. 584, 86 C. C. A. 42.

Vol. II, p. 407, par. 109.

Molded lenses. — It is necessary that lenses should be both ground and polished in order to be brought within the provision of paragraph 109 for "lenses . . . ground and polished to a spherical, cylindrical, or prismatic form;" and where they have been brought to such form by molding they are not within that provision. U. S. v. Robinson, (1905) 140 Fed. 968.

Vol. II, p. 408, par. 110.

"Prismatic form." — The provision in paragraph 110, for glass strips "ground or polished on one or both sides to a . . . prismatic form," does not require that the strips shall be in the form of a prism, nor that an entire side shall be in prismatic form; and

In U. S. v. Durand, (C. C. A. 1905) 137 Fed. 382, affirming (1903) 127 Fed. 624, it was held that crude, incomplete articles of glass, known as "blanks," produced by blowing glass into a mold, which are suitable only to be placed in the hands of glass cutters for further manufacture into finished articles, are not within the provision for "blown glassware" in paragraph 100, but are dutiable under the provision for "all glass or manufactures of glass," in paragraph 112.

Rhinestones. — Certain so-called rhinestones, articles composed of metal and paste, the latter being the more valuable component, which are merely used to decorate and ornament women's outer apparel, are dutiable as manufactures of paste, not specially provided for, under paragraph 112. They are excluded from the provision in paragraph 414, for buttons made of glass, because they are not strictly buttons, and because, though paste is a species of glass, it is differentiated therefrom elsewhere in the tariff as a separate substance. Blumenthal v. U. S., (1904) 135

Fed. 254, affirmed (C. C. A. 1905) 144 Fed. 384.

Vol. II, p. 410, par. 122.

Ferroalloys.—Certain alloys of iron and mineral substances known as ferrochrome, ferrotungsten, ferromolybdenum, and ferrovandium are not dutiable as "metals unwrought," under paragraph 183, but are dutiable at the rate applicable to the ferromanganese, enumerated in paragraph 122, which they resemble in quality and use, within the meaning of the so-called similitude clause in section 7. U. S. v. Roessler, etc., Chemical Co., (1904) 131 Fed. 576, following Dana v. U. S., (1899) 91 Fed. 522, set out in the original note; U. S. v. Lavino, (C. C. A. 1909) 175 Fed. 964, affirming 171 Fed. 245.

Old fishplates, which are so worn as to have lost their usefulness for railway purposes and are suitable for use only as scrap steel, are not dutiable under paragraph 130, as "railway fishplates," but under paragraph 122, as "scrap steel . . . fit only to be "remanufactured."

tured." Ginsburg v. U. S., (1906) 147 Fed. 531.

Scrap iron.—This paragraph, which provides for "scrap iron," and defines it as "waste or refuse iron . . . fit only to be remanufactured," refers not only to pieces or scraps thrown off or discarded in the course of manufacture, but to completed articles worn out by use, such as old chains, in small pieces fit only for remanufacture. Sheldon v.

Muck bars, produced by converting pig iron into wrought iron in the puddling furnace, and then rolling the wrought iron through a set of rolls, from which it comes in the form known as "muck bars," have been held to be dutiable under paragraph 123, as "bar iron," and not under paragraph 135, relating to "steel in all forms and shapes not specially provided for," nor under the first proviso in paragraph 124, covering "iron in . . . forms less finished than iron in bars and more advanced than pig iron." Moorhead v. U. S., (1904) 127 Fed. 779.

Defective steel rails.—Steel rails, which are new, but by reason of defects are depreciated in value, but which have not lost their character or identity as rails, are not within the provision in paragraph 122, for "scrap steel . . . fit only to be remanufactured," but are dutiable as "rails," under paragraph 130, even though they be intended to be used as scrap iron. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. McCall, (1904) 147 Fed. 925.

Old fishplates.—See under this title, vol. 2, p. 410, par. 122.

Vol. II, p. 412, par. 134.

Small tin disks.—The term "sheets . . . commercially known as tin plates," in paragraph 134, means rectangular sheets, and does not include small disks. Shallus v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1908) 162 Fed. 653, reversing (1907) 155 Fed. 213.

Vol. II, p. 412, par. 135.

Cold-rolled sheet steel, in strips, as described in the original note, was held to be dutiable under paragraph 122 of the Act of 1894, corresponding to paragraph 135 of the Act of 1897, but not dutiable under paragraph 124 of the Act of 1894, corresponding to paragraph 137 of the Act of 1897. Boker v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1903) 124 Fed. 59, reversing (1902) 116 Fed. 1015, of the original note.

Completed articles. — Paragraph 135, relating to steel shapes, does not include in that provision articles so far completed as to be practically ready for use. U. S. v. Prosser, (1910) 177 Fed. 569.

Monogram dies and plates for engraving. — The provision for steel plates in paragraph 135, while not covering all steel articles that are known as plates, includes so-called monogram dies and plates used in engraving, which, besides being called plates, are within the dictionary definitions of "plates." U. S. v. Sellers, (1908) 160 Fed. 518, affirmed (C. C. A. 1909) 166 Fed. 1022.

Steel plates slightly changed from usual form. — In U. S. v. Vandegrift, (C. C. A. 1905) 142 Fed. 448, affirming 139 Fed. 790, it was held, as to steel plates changed from the usual form by being cut at a slight variation from a right angle, for a special purpose and not for evasion, that they are provided for in paragraph 135, enumerating "sheared . . . shapes" of steel and "plates and steel in all forms and shapes not specially provided for," rather than in paragraph 126, enumerating "boiler, or other plate iron or steel . . . sheared or un-sheared."

Steel stampings for manufacturing ornaments. — Paragraph 135, relating to "pressed or stamped shapes," includes stampings which have been pressed or stamped into an open-work or raised pattern and are used in manufacturing ornaments, etc. U. S. v. Veith, (1909) 169 Fed. 665.

Steel strips. — Coils of thin steel, from fifty to two hundred feet long, and from less than one inch to about six inches wide, which are not produced from sheets, were not within the provision for "sheet steel in strips" in Tariff Act Aug. 27, 1894, ch. 349, sec. 1, Schedule C, par. 124, 28 Stat. L. 517, and in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, ch. 11, sec. 1, Schedule C, par. 137, 30 Stat. L. 161. The term "sheet" does not include shapes of such dimensions. This article is dutiable under paragraph 135 as "steel in all forms and shapes not specially provided for." Boker v. U. S., (1907) 154 Fed. 174, affirmed (C. C. A.) 158 Fed. 396.

Thin, checkered steel plates, about twelve by five feet, specially adapted for use in the construction of floors for boiler rooms, are dutiable as steel "plates," under paragraph 135, rather than as "plate . . . steel," under paragraph 126. Hill v. Wood, (1908) 163 Fed. 51, 89 C. C. A. 635.

"Wortles" or "draw plates," so called, consisting respectively of bars and blocks with holes for wire drawings, are not dutiable as steel "plates" under paragraph 135, that term being, in the absence of evidence of a contrary commercial usage, limited to articles in the form of sheets. Newman v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1907) 159 Fed. 123, reversing 152 Fed. 488.

Vol. II, p. 414, par. 137.

Articles made from coated steel wire. — This paragraph imposes a duty on steel wire smaller than No. 16 wire gauge of two cents per pound, with an additional duty of one and one-quarter cents per pound on articles manufactured from such wire, "and on iron or steel wire coated with zinc, tin, or any other metal, two-tenths of one cent per pound in addition to the rate imposed on the wire from which it is made." In 1900 the treasury department rules that articles manufactured from steel wire coated were subject to all three of such duties, but shortly thereafter, and in the same year, formally reversed such ruling, and has since uniformly ruled that the additional duty of two-tenths of one cent was not to be imposed on articles manufactured from coated steel wire. It was held that in view of the uncertainty of the language of the statute such uniform ruling by the executive department, continued for five years, would be treated as practical construction of the Act, and would not be reversed by the courts. Burditt, etc., Co. v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1907) 153 Fed. 67.

Construction of second proviso — "article." A cable used for making connections with a telephone switch board, consisting of sixty-four wires bound together, which, both individually and in the group, are covered with various materials for insulating and waterproofing purposes, is an "article," within the meaning of the second proviso in paragraph 137, relating to "articles manufactured from . . . copper wire," and is not dutiable under the provision in the same paragraph for "wire not specially provided for, . . . whether uncovered or covered," nor under paragraph 193, as a manufacture of metal not specially provided for. Salt v. U. S., (1903) 127 Fed. 890, affirmed (C. C. A. 1904) 134 Fed. 1021.

Nickel-coated wire. — The provision for wire "coated with . . . metal" includes an article produced by pushing a steel or iron rod through a nickel tube and then wire-drawing the whole, thus bring it down to the required diameter, and welding the nickel to the core. It makes no difference whether the coating referred to is affixed by welding, dipping, electrolysis, or otherwise. U. S. v. Boker, (1910) 176 Fed. 730, 100 C. C. A. 276, affirming (1909) 168 Fed. 464.

Steel wool.—In paragraph 137 the provision for "articles manufactured from . . . wire" cannot be restricted to manufactured articles which contain the round wire in its integrity; and "steel wool," consisting of filaments shaved from steel wire, and constituting a finished commercial article, is embraced in said provision. Buehne Steel Wool Co. v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1907) 159 Fed. 107, reversing 154 Fed. 93. Compare Buehne v. U. S., (1905) 140 Fed. 772, affirmed (C. C. A. 1906) 145 Fed. 1021.

Small tin disks.—See under this title, vol. 2, p. 412, par. 134, and p. 423, par. 193.

Vol. II, p. 415, par. 141.

Wire screw rods.—Under this paragraph it was held that wire screw rods which have been cold drawn after being hot rolled are subject to additional duty regardless of the fact that such articles are specially enumerated in another paragraph as "wire screw rods" and that cold drawing is a necessary part of the process of making such rods. U. S. v. Nash, (C. C. A. 1907) 158 Fed. 401, reversing 152 Fed. 573.

Plates resembling circular saw plates.—The provision in this paragraph for "steel circular saw plates" includes plates that resemble circular saw plates in size, shape, general finish, and general quality of steel, though imported for other uses. Boker v. U. S., (1909) 168 Fed. 573.

Polished steel.—The provision in this paragraph relating to steel strips "cold rolled, . . . brightened . . . or polished by any process to such perfected surface finish or polish better than the grade of cold rolled, smoothed only," do not include strips whose only polish or brightening is incidentally acquired during the cold-rolling, and which were not included in similar former provisions. U. S. v. Crucible Steel Co., (1906) 147 Fed. 537, affirmed (C. C. A. 1907) 154 Fed. 1005.

Sheet steel in strips.—The provision in paragraph 141 for steel strips brought to a "perfected surface finish or polish better than the grade of cold-rolled, smoothed only," does not require that such "better" finish or polish must be produced by some process other than cold-rolling; but it does not include certain steel strips of a thickness of 13/1000 of one inch, which have been subjected to no other process than the cold-rolling (with incidental annealing, pickling, etc.) necessary to produce so small a gauge; for a precisely similar provision in the Tariff Act of 1890 having received the same construction, it is presumed that Congress, by re-enacting it, intended it to have the same effect, especially in the absence of proof of a general, well-recognized meaning for the words quoted that would include such articles. U. S. v. Crucible Steel Co., (C. C. A. 1905) 137 Fed. 384.

Vol. II, p. 416, par. 152.

Gas cylinders.—The provision in paragraph 152 for "steel tubes, finished," includes bottle-shaped vessels of steel, which are used in the transportation of gas and are about four feet long and eight inches in diameter, with one end permanently closed and the other tapered to a neck, which are not dutiable under paragraph 193. U. S. v. Liquid Carbonic Co., (1908) 160 Fed. 455, 87 C. C. A. 671.

Purves ribbed boiler flues.—The provision for "furnaces" in paragraph 152, does not include so-called arched Purves furnaces, consisting simply of corrugated steel cylinders or tubes, which are not furnaces in fact, but are intended to be used in the manufacture of furnaces. Such articles are dutiable under the provision in the same paragraph for boiler tubes or flues. Thomas v. Vandegrift, (C. C. A. 1908) 162 Fed. 645, affirming (1907) 153 Fed. 591.

Steel gas holders.—Steel cylinders, severally nineteen feet in length and four feet in diameter, and thirty-five feet in length and eight feet in diameter, used as storage tanks for illuminating gas, are "tubes finished," within the meaning of paragraph 152. U. S. v. Knauth, (C. C. A. 1909) 168 Fed. 539, following U. S. v. Downing, (1900) 105 Fed. 1005, 44 C. C. A. 686, and U. S. v. Liquid Carbonic Co., (1908) 160 Fed. 455, 87 C. C. A. 671.

Vol. II, p. 416, par. 153.

Diminutive penknives with odd-shaped handles.—The real test of whether an article is a toy is its use by children as a plaything; and diminutive penknives with odd-shaped handles, which, though they cannot be effectively used for most of the purposes for which an ordinary pocketknife is used, are not in fact used as playthings, are less properly classed as "toys," under paragraph 418, than as "penknives," under paragraph 153. Kastor v. U. S., (1909) 167 Fed. 893.

Rough-bored rifle barrels.—The provision in paragraph 157, for "parts" of rifles, is not limited to such as are in a finished condition, but embraces also parts, such as rough-bored rifle barrels, that have been advanced to a condition unfitting them for any other use than in connection with rifles. U. S. v. Riga, (1909) 171 Fed. 783.

paragraph 176. U. S. v. Drakenfeld, (1910) 178 Fed. 258, 101 C. C. A. 618, reversing (1909) 172 Fed. 296.

Vol. II, p. 420, par. 179.

Articles in chief value of metal threads.—Fabrics in the piece, composed chiefly of metal thread, but in part of silk, are more specifically enumerated in paragraph 179, as "articles . . . in chief value of . . . metal threads," than under paragraph 387, as "woven fabrics in the piece, not specially provided for, . . . weighing not less than one and one-third ounces per square yard and not more than eight ounces per square yard, . . . dyed in the thread or yarn, and containing not more than thirty per centum in weight of silk, . . . if other than black." Hirsch v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1909) 167 Fed. 309.

Christmas tree ornaments.—The provision for "toys" in paragraph 418 was held not to include fragile, flimsy articles of tinsel, in the shape of rings, stars, etc., which, while they may amuse or entertain children when hung on a Christmas tree, are not suitable to be played with, and, besides being used as Christmas tree ornaments, are employed in shop decorations, and properly classified under paragraph 179. Thanhauser v. U. S., (1908) 159 Fed. 228.

Fabrics in the piece.—The principle of ejusdem generis does not operate to exclude metal thread fabrics in the piece from the provision in paragraph 179 for "articles made wholly or in chief value of . . . metal threads," following the enumeration of metal thread laces, embroideries, trimmings, and narrow fabrics of various descriptions. Jules v. U. S., (1905) 141 Fed. 379; Hirsch v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1909) 167 Fed. 309.

Lead bullion — assay. — While paragraph 181, which imposes a duty on imported lead ores, contemplates the determination of the quantity of metal in the ore by assay, by paragraph 182 of that Act the determination of the quantity of metal contained in imported lead bullion is to be by official weighing only, and the application of assay to lead bullion under the current treasury regulations for bonded smelters and refiners is without warrant of law. (1902) 24 Op. Atty-Gen. 45; (1903) 24 Op. Atty-Gen. 569.

Vol. II, p. 421, par. 183.

Bronze hardener. — An alloy in the form of pigs, which is used chiefly in hardening manganese bronze, and which, in order to produce that effect, must be melted and mixed with other metals, was held to come within paragraph 183, relating to "metallic mineral substances in a crude state, and metals unwrought," rather than paragraph 193, relating to articles composed of metal, or paragraph 122, by similitude to the "ferro-manganese" there enumerated. Thomas v. William Cramp, etc., Ship, etc., Bldg. Co., (C. C. A. 1906) 142 Fed. 734, affirming (1905) 139 Fed. 303.

Ferroalloys. — The provision in paragraph 183, for "metals unwrought," does not include ferroalloys, which, though capable of being wrought into different forms and shapes, are not to any extent shown to be imported to be themselves wrought into useful articles, but are generally used for imparting certain qualities to steel in the process of its manufacture. U. S. v. Lavino, (C. C. A. 1909) 175 Fed. 964, affirming 171 Fed. 245. See also under this title, vol. 2, p. 410, par. 122.

"Metals unwrought." — In construing the provision in paragraph 183, for "metals unwrought," the court held that "unwrought" implies a metal which is capable of being wrought, and not a substance fit only to be used with other ingredients to produce an entirely different and distinct product, and that ferrochrome, ferromolybdenum, ferrotungsten, and ferrovanadium, used only in imparting certain qualities to steel, and incapable of being themselves wrought into any useful article, are not within said provision. U. S. v. Roesseler, etc., Chemical Co., (C. C. A. 1905) 137 Fed. 770, affirming (1904) 131 Fed. 576.

Broken stereotype plates. — The provision for "types, old," in paragraph 690, does not include an alloy, containing approximately eighty-five per cent. of lead, twelve per cent. of antimony, and three per cent. of tin and copper, made from the dross of type metal refined and melted with fifteen to twenty per cent. of old movable types, and cast in the form of stereotype plates, which were never used as such, but broken into pieces and packed in barrels for importation. Such material is dutiable as "type metal," under paragraph 190. Sapery v. U. S., (1905) 135 Fed. 332, 68 C. C. A. 140.

Vol. II, p. 422, par. 191.

Certain incomplete watch movements, adjusted so as to run, the only parts lacking being the dial, or the dial, the various hands, and the minute wheel, are dutiable as "watch movements," and not as "parts of watches, . . . not otherwise provided for." Hipp v. U. S., (1901) 123 Fed. 998.

Time detectors, used for registering the movements of watchmen, which have a clock mechanism or time indicator, are dutiable under the provision in paragraph 191, for "watch movements, whether imported in cases or not." Hensel v. U. S., (1904) 135 Fed. 255.

Automobile with tires unattached.—When an automobile is imported without tires attached, but tires are contained in the same crate as the car, such tires are not dutiable separately from the car; but the whole is dutiable as an entirety, though before use other tires may be substituted for those imported with the car. U. S. v. Auto Import Co., (C. C. A. 1909) 188 Fed. 242.

Bottles with mountings.—The provision in paragraph 99, for "plain" glass bottles, has been held not to include fancy bottles with metal mountings. Mark Cross Co. v. U. S., (1906) 150 Fed. 610.

Bronze ornaments—Act of 1894.—Bronze ornaments, being manufactured articles and advanced beyond the condition of "old copper," "clipping," and "composition metal," enumerated in paragraph 452, Tariff Act Aug. 27, 1894, 28 Stat. L. 539, were not subject to that provision, but were dutiable as manufactures of metal under paragraph 117 of said Act, which corresponds to par. 193 of the Act of 1897. Tiffany v. U. S., (1896) 142 Fed. 282.

Card-clothing packed separately from machine.—In U. S. v. Leigh, (1908) 159 Fed. 314, it appeared that in an importation of carding machines some of the clothing was packed separately; this clothing was so made as to fit the different parts of the machines, except that a certain amount of cutting, stretching, etc., would be necessary in the final adjustment; it would have been impracticable to import the machines with all the clothing attached, and it was customary to pack this part of the clothing separately. It was held that this clothing was not dutiable separately from the rest of the machines under paragraph 146, but that the whole apparatus was dutiable as an entirety at the same rate under paragraph 193.

"Coin swords."—So-called "coin swords," which consist of copper coins corded together and securely fastened around an iron bar or rod covered by metal foil, and are used for ornamental purposes, are not within the provision for "coins," in paragraph 530, but are dutiable under paragraph 193. Soy Kee v. U. S., (1910) 177 Fed. 601.

Engraved steel table.—The provision in paragraph 135, for "plates and steel in all forms and shapes," does not include plates that have been manufactured into some other completed commercial article, such as a so-called engraved steel table, consisting of a rectangular slab incised with a pattern to be impressed upon plate glass, which is properly classifiable under paragraph 193. Morris v. U. S., (1909) 189 Fed. 686, affirmed (C. C. A.) 174 Fed. 656; contra Morris v. U. S., (1903) 140 Fed. 774.

Figures of animals used as mantel ornaments.—The provision for toys in paragraph 418 does not include figures of animals, single or groups, which are known in trade as metal novelties, and are generally used as mantel or cabinet ornaments, but they are dutiable under paragraph 193. Samstag, etc., Co. v. U. S., (1907) 154 Fed. 756.

Finished castings.—The term "castings" in paragraph 148 does not include articles which have been advanced in condition by work bestowed on them after they were cast. Lehigh Mfg. Co. v. U. S., (1907) 153 Fed. 596; Bromley v. U. S., (1907) 154 Fed. 399, affirmed 156 Fed. 958, 84 C. C. A. 458.

Flitters.—The article commercially known as "flitters," produced from the thin sheets which constitute the composition metal of commerce, by a process of manufacture that makes it no longer available for the uses to which composition metal of trade is put, but adapts it for other uses, is not free of duty as "composition metal," under paragraph 553, but is dutiable as manufactures of metal under paragraph 193. U. S. v. Meier, (1905) 136 Fed. 764, 69 C. C. A. 421, affirming (1904) 128 Fed. 472.

Neither is such article dutiable as bronze powder, under paragraph 175, nor as a color or pigment, under paragraph 58. Baer v. U. S., (1903) 130 Fed. 391.

Horseshoe calks.—The provision for "steel in all forms and shapes," in paragraph 135, does not include completed articles, such as horseshoe calks and ball bearings, to which nothing needs to be done to fit them for immediate use. Maldonado v. U. S., (1910) 176 Fed. 737, 100 C. C. A. 282, affirming (1909) 172 Fed. 170.

"Iron-sand," a completed article produced by a series of manufacturing processes from cast iron and steel scrap, is not within the provision for "all iron in . . . forms less finished than iron in bars, and more advanced than pig iron," in paragraph 124, but is dutiable as "iron manufactured," under paragraph 193. Harrison Supply Co. v. U. S., (1908) 164 Fed. 155; Harrison Supply Co. v. U. S., (1909) 171 Fed. 406, 96 C. C. A. 362.

Machined forgings.—In paragraph 127, relating to forgings of whatever "degree or stage of manufacture," the words quoted relate only to different stages of the forging process, not extending beyond the completion of that process; and forms that, after being subjected to the final forging process, are further advanced into completed articles practically ready for use, such as axles, piston rods, etc., are removed from said provision into that for manufactured metal in paragraph 193. U. S. v. Prosser, (1910) 177 Fed. 569.

"Manufacture."—An article which has been advanced through one or more processes into a completed commercial article, known and recognized in trade by a specific and distinctive name other than the name of the material from which it is made, and is put into a completed shape, designed and adapted for a particular use to which the material in its original form is not adapted, is to be deemed a manufacture, although its component materials are unchanged. U. S. v. Meier, (1905) 136 Fed. 764, 69 C. C. A. 421, affirming (1904) 128 Fed. 472.

"Manufacture" implies addition to, and not subtraction from, and an article cannot be said to have been manufactured which results from a process that reduces its value. Shallus v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1908) 162 Fed. 653, reversing (1907) 155 Fed. 213.

Metal beads temporarily strung on cotton cords or string for the purpose of facilitating transportation are not dutiable under paragraph 408, at thirty-five cents ad valorem as loose beads, but are subject to the forty-five cent ad valorem duty prescribed by paragraph 193 for articles or wares not specially provided for in the Act, composed wholly or in part of metal whether wholly or partly manufactured. Henry E. Frankenberg Co. v. U. S., (1907) 206 U. S. 224, 27 S. Ct. 628, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 1034, affirming (C. C. A. 1906) 146 Fed. 63, which affirmed (1905) 144 Fed. 704.

Millinery articles containing feathers and wire.—Millinery articles made almost wholly of feathers, but containing a small quantity of wire, which is an important feature of their construction, are dutiable as "articles in part of metal," under paragraph 193, rather than as "feathers advanced or manufactured," under paragraph 425. U. S. v. Berlinger, (C. C. A. 1909) 167 Fed. 800.

Miniature frames of precious metal set with diamonds.—The provision in paragraph 434, for "articles commonly known as jewelry," does not include miniature frames composed of precious metals set with diamonds and pearls, which are not used as articles of personal adornment but for utility, but they are dutiable under paragraph 193. U. S. v. Knoedler, (1907) 154 Fed. 928.

Nickel anodes.—In construing paragraph 185, relating to nickel, nickel oxide, nickel alloy, "pigs, ingots, bars, or sheets," it was held (1) that only nickel in one of the forms enumerated is included; (2) that the provision for "sheets," therefore, does not include anodes consisting of nickel plates about twelve inches long, six and one-half inches wide, and less than a half inch thick, a "sheet" being broad, thin, and expanded, and (3) that such anodes are dutiable as manufactures of nickel under paragraph 193. Boker v. U. S., (1907) 152 Fed. 589, affirmed (C. C. A.) 157 Fed. 1003.

Old cannon, made of composition metal, and useless as artillery, but salable as relics and souvenirs, are dutiable under paragraph 193, as manufactures of metal, and are not free of duty as "old brass," within paragraph 505, or as "composition metal," within paragraph 533. Downing v. U. S., (1903) 122 Fed. 445, 58 C. C. A. 427, affirming (1902) 116 Fed. 779, set out in the original note.

Ornamental slipper buckles.—In Bailey v. U. S., (1905) 135 Fed. 917, it was held that certain slides or buckles, made of steel or a base metal, some ornamented with rhinestones and some colored in imitation of precious metals, and used in ornamenting slippers, were not within the provision in paragraph 434, for "articles commonly known as jewelry," but are dutiable as manufactures of metal, not specially provided for, under paragraph 193.

Silver hand bags.—Women's silver hand bags or purses, used for holding money, articles of wearing apparel, etc., are not within the provision in paragraph 434, for "articles commonly known as jewelry," but are dutiable as articles of silver under paragraph 193. Tiffany v. U. S., (1904) 131 Fed. 398.

Small tin disks.—Small disks produced in the manufacture of tin cans, being a by-product in the process of cutting an aperture for filling, and being of much less value than the tin from which they were cut, are not articles "wholly or partly manufactured from tin plate," under paragraph 140, nor as "waste" under paragraph 463, but are dutiable as articles of metal, "whether partly or wholly manufactured," under paragraph 193. Shallus v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1908) 162 Fed. 653, reversing (1907) 155 Fed. 213.

Steel window sashes.—Where steel parts have been assembled and united into complete window sashes, they have been too far advanced in manufacture to permit their inclusion within paragraph 125, relating to "structural shapes of iron or steel . . . fitted for use," but are properly classified under paragraph 193. Ackerson v. U. S., (1909) 172 Fed. 303, affirmed (C. C. A. 1910) 178 Fed. 1003, 101 C. C. A. 416.

Welded sheets of iron and nickel.—Sheets consisting of a plate of iron or steel with a sheet of nickel welded thereto, the material being rolled to the desired thickness after welding, are not sheets "coated with . . . metals," within the meaning of paragraph 132, nor "sheets of iron or steel, common or black," within the meaning of paragraph 131, but are dutiable under paragraph 193. Boker v. U. S., (1910) 180 Fed. 959.

Zinc sheets, when nickel-plated, do not fall within the provision in paragraph 192, for "zinc . . . in sheets," but are dutiable under paragraph 193. Victor v. U. S., (1904) 128 Fed. 472.

Nickel-plated zinc sheets are not dutiable as "zinc . . . in sheets," under paragraph 192, but as "articles or wares not specially provided for, . . . composed wholly or in part of . . . nickel, . . . zinc, . . . or other metal," under paragraph 193. Eckstein v. U. S., (1905) 140 Fed. 94, affirmed (C. C. A. 1906) 145 Fed. 1021.

Round timber in rough condition.—In Perfection Pile-Preserving Co. v. U. S., (1905) 147 Fed. 922, it was held that any round sticks which in their shape as imported are used for any of the purposes specified in paragraphs 194 and 196, either in the rough or finished, are subject to classification under those paragraphs, rather than under paragraph 699.

Vol. II, p. 425, par. 195.

Fireproofed lumber.—Lumber which has been subjected to a fireproofing process that largely increases its value, but which can still be applied to the ordinary uses of sawed lumber, is not dutiable as manufactures of wood, not specially provided for, under paragraph 208, but as "sawed lumber," under paragraph 195. Myers v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1906) 147 Fed. 204, reversing (1905) 139 Fed. 344.

Vol. II, p. 425, par. 196.

Round timber in rough condition.—See under this title, vol. 2, p. 425, par. 194.

Vol. II, p. 425, par. 198.

Cabinet wood.—In Williams v. U. S., (1903) 126 Fed. 838, it was held that certain cabinet wood, sawed lengthwise on two or more sides, was not free of duty, under the provisions in paragraph 700, for "all forms of cabinet woods, in the log, rough, or hewn only," but was dutiable under paragraph 198, covering "cabinet woods not further manufactured than sawed."

Wood veneers with paper backing.—In American Trading Co. v. U. S., (1904) 142 Fed. 214, it was held, as to veneers of wood of exceeding thinness, pasted on paper for the purpose of keeping them in shape, the paper being in some instances the component material of chief value, that they are within the provision in paragraph 198.

Vol. II, p. 426, par. 200.

"Blocks or sticks, rough-hewn, sawed."—In construing paragraph 200, relating to "blocks or sticks, rough-hewn, sawed," etc., it was held that the hewing contemplated is a new shaping, and that the sawing is something more than merely sawing the blocks or sticks off from longer pieces. U. S. v. Pierce, (1905) 140 Fed. 962, affirmed (C. C. A. 1906) 147 Fed. 199.

Manicure sticks.—See under this title, vol. 2, p. 426, par. 208.

Vol. II, p. 426, par. 205.

Fruit boxes.—In showing that fruit boxes are entitled to classification under paragraph 205, as being made from reimported shooks, it is not enough to establish a probability that many of the boxes were of such origin. There must be definite evidence as to the quantity in each importation entitled to such classification. Westervelt v. U. S., (1900) 150 Fed. 378.

Vol. II, p. 426, par. 206.

Baskets made from willow chip.—Under paragraph 206, relating to "willow prepared for basket makers' use," . . . manufactures of . . . willow," it was the intention for the final clause to cover completed manufactures from the "prepared" willow enumerated in the preceding clause; and baskets made from willow chip would be dutiable thereunder rather than as "manufactures of chip" under paragraph 449. Olleshauser v. U. S., (1907) 158 Fed. 977, 86 C. C. A. 181, affirming 154 Fed. 167.

Rattan reeds, from which the outside has been removed, are not "in the rough," within the meaning of Tariff Act Oct. 1, 1890, ch. 1244, sec. 2, Free List, par. 756, 26 Stat. L.

611, but are "reeds wrought or manufactured from rattans," within the meaning of section 1, Schedule D, par. 229, of that Act, which corresponds to paragraph 206 of the Act of 1897. Foppes v. U. S., (1894) 154 Fed. 866.

Vol. II, p. 426, par. 208.

Magnesite brick.—The phrase "fire brick," in paragraph 87, is a well-known commercial designation, which means brick made from fire clay, and therefore does not include magnesite brick, which is properly dutiable under paragraph 208. U. S. v. Hempstead, (1907) 153 Fed. 483.

Manicure sticks, being completed articles of wood, several inches long, pointed at one end and beveled off at the other to form a cutting edge, are "manufactures of wood," and dutiable as such under paragraph 208. Estes v. U. S., (1909) 176 Fed. 932.

Upholstered furniture with wooden frames is dutiable under paragraph 208, as "furniture of wood," though silk, and not wood, is the chief component in the completed articles. U. S. v. Woodruff, (1909) 175 Fed. 776, 99 C. C. A. 348, affirming 168 Fed. 452.

Wood flour.—The provision for "house or cabinet furniture, of wood, wholly or partly finished, and manufactures of wood," in paragraph 208, is intended to cover all finished manufactured wooden articles, however different they may be in nature or appearance from "house or cabinet furniture;" and wood flour, a completed product, already prepared for use, is therefore not to be excluded under the rule of ejusdem generis. Nairn Linoleum Co. v. U. S., (1907) 151 Fed. 955.

Shida baskets, composed of vegetable fibre derived from ferns, are not dutiable by similitude as manufactures of grass, etc., under paragraph 449, but are dutiable under paragraph 206. Butler v. U. S., (1910) 181 Fed. 402.

Wood furniture decorated with metal.—In paragraph 208, providing for "furniture of wood, . . . and manufactures of wood, or of which wood is the component material of chief value," the last clause as to chief value does not relate to the provision for furniture; and furniture whose framework and principal bulk are of wood is furniture "of wood," within the meaning of the paragraph, though decorative metal may be the component of chief value. Hempstead v. U. S., (1909) 168 Fed. 450, affirmed (1910) 175 Fed. 966, 99 C. C. A. 356.

Kinoki baskets.—See under this title, vol. 2, p. 478, par. 449.

Smokers' articles.—See under this title, vol. 2, p. 481, par. 459.

Vol. II, p. 427, par. 209.

Beet sugar.—In Franklin Sugar Refining Co. v. U. S., (1907) 153 Fed. 653, the court in construing paragraph 209, relating to "sugar above number sixteen Dutch standard in color, and . . . sugar which has gone through a process of refining," held that it was not necessary that, in order to come within the first clause of this provision, sugar should be capable of being used commercially, without refining, as cane sugar, and therefore beet sugar, which is not so capable, is included therein.

Fraction of degree.—In determining whether sugar drainings should be classed under a tariff act as "not above fifty-six degrees," by the polariscope, or as "fifty-six degrees and above," it was held that the rule of de minimis non curat lex does not apply to drainings testing 56.025, so as to require their classification under the former provision as testing fifty-six, by disregarding the fraction of a degree. U. S. v. Lueder, (C. C. A. 1907) 154 Fed. 1, reversing (1906) 146 Fed. 149.

Polariscopic test.—The expressions therein, "testing by the polariscope" and "shown by the polariscopic test," are not used with any special trade meaning that would confine them to a particular method of conducting such test, but import an intention on the part of Congress that the method adopted should be the one best calculated to make a scientific determination; therefore under the general power of the secretary of the treasury to make customs regulations not inconsistent with law, granted by section 251, Rev. Stat., 7 Fed. Stat. Annot. 369, it is competent for that officer to prescribe the method of "testing by the polariscope" the sugars dutiable according to such test under paragraph 209, and so long as he acts in good faith and it does not appear that his regulations operate to make the polariscope test less accurate than when Congress adopted it, the courts should not interfere with the administrative details confined to him. U. S. v. Bartram, (C. C. A. 1904) 131 Fed. 833, reversing (1903) 123 Fed. 327.

Settlement test.—Where no official polariscopic test has been made of imported sugar, it is proper to classify the sugar in accordance with the settlement test, especially where the importers have agreed to accept such tests, and the secretary of the treasury has authorized their use. American Sugar Refining Co. v. U. S., (1909) 175 Fed. 893.

Vol. II, p. 428, par. 212.

Dragees, which are small spherical or spheroidal objects, with a sugar coating and a sweet taste, and which are used by bakers for decorating cakes and to some extent by confectioners, are "confectionery" within the meaning of this paragraph. U. S. v. La Manna, (C. C. A. 1908) 166 Fed. 751, reversing (1907) 154 Fed. 955.

Wafers and biscuits.—See under this title, vol. 2, p. 504, sec. 6.

Vol. II, p. 429, par. 214.

Sweepings.—See under this title, vol. 2, p. 429, par. 215.

Vol. II, p. 429, par. 215.

Sweepings.—Tobacco suitable for neither wrappers nor fillers, but which may be used as a filler in the manufacture of a very small size of tobacco cigars, is not leaf tobacco, and is properly dutiable under paragraph 215. Dominguez v. U. S., (1903) 122 Fed. 556.

Vol. II, p. 431, par. 231.

Oatmeal feed.—A by-product in the manufacture of oatmeal, which consists merely of the broken hulls of the oats, and is known as "oatmeal feed," is dutiable as "oat hulls," under paragraph 231. U. S. v. McGettrick, (1905) 139 Fed. 304.

Vol. II, p. 431, par. 232.

Deterioration in size of rice due to handling.—The fact that age and repeated handling of broken rice may have caused an infinitesimal increase in the percentage of the material that will pass through the standard sieve, is not a sufficient reason for rejecting a test based on samples of such rice, especially where the failure to make a proper test at the time of importation was due to no fault of the importer. Seattle Brewing, etc., Co. v. U. S., (1910) 176 Fed. 125.

Size of wire in sieve.—Under this paragraph, relating to broken rice that will pass through what is "known commercially as No. 12 wire sieve," it appearing that there are several sieves so known commercially, the secretary of the treasury is authorized, in order to secure uniformity, to specify which of them should be used by customs officers. Wakem v. U. S., (1906) 147 Fed. 874; Seattle Brewing, etc., Co. v. U. S., (1910) 176 Fed. 125.

Vol. II, p. 431, par. 236.

Vol. II, p. 431, par. 241.

Capers pickled in vinegar, which are used as a condiment and in flavoring sauces, are dutiable under this paragraph, relating to "pickles and sauces of all kinds." S. S. Pierce Co. v. U. S., (1910) 176 Fed. 440.

Dried mushrooms in cans.—Mushrooms dried in order to preserve them, and placed in hermetically sealed tins holding from thirty to forty-five pounds, are within the provision in this paragraph, rather than paragraph 257 relating to "vegetables in their natural state." Choy Chong Woh v. U. S., (1907) 153 Fed. 879, 82 C. C. A. 608.

Salted cabbage.—Hanks and balls of dried and salted cabbage, the salting and manipulation of which were done as a preparation fitting the cabbage for cooking purposes, and intended to be permanent, are dutiable as vegetables "prepared or preserved," under this paragraph, and not as vegetables in their "natural state," under paragraph 257. Sun Kwong On v. U. S., (1909) 177 Fed. 595.

Substances with medicinal properties.—Articles are not to be removed from a provision for pickles and sauces, and placed in a provision for drugs, simply because a medicinal or therapeutic property may be extracted from them. S. S. Pierce Co. v. U. S., (1910) 176 Fed. 440.

Truffles in tins are dutiable as "mushrooms in tins," by similitude, under this paragraph. Von Bremen v. U. S., (1909) 168 Fed. 889, 94 C. C. A. 301.

Use, not botanical classification, controlling.—Articles are not to be excluded from the provision in paragraph 241, for "vegetables . . . including pickles and sauces of all kinds," on the ground that they are not palatable or desirable as a distinct and separate eatable, or are not known as garden vegetables. The use, rather than strict botanical classification, is the determinative factor; and therefore capers, which are flower buds, but are used as pickles or as a sauce, are included in said provision. S. S. Pierce Co. v. U. S., (1910) 176 Fed. 440.

"Vegetables."—In paragraph 241, the term "vegetables" is used in accordance with the ordinary understanding, vegetables usually served at dinner, and does not include truffles, which are used only as a condiment in cooking. Von Bremen v. U. S., (1909) 168 Fed. 889, 94 C. C. A. 301.

An edible fungus.—See under this title, vol. 2, p. 433, par. 257.

Ducks' eggs.—Paragraph 549, relating to "eggs of birds," does not include eggs of the domesticated duck, which are dutiable under paragraph 244 as "eggs, not specially provided for." Sun Kwong On v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1906) 143 Fed. 115.

Vol. II, p. 432, par. 245.

Albumen.—See under this title, vol. 2, p. 482, par. 468.

Vol. II, p. 432, par. 249.

"Bushel."—In passing paragraph 249, Congress must be assumed to have known the practice of the treasury department to consider fifty-seven pounds as a bushel and to have intended to accept that as a standard. Hills Bros. Co. v. U. S., (1906) 151 Fed. 476, 81 C. C. A. 14, affirming 143 Fed. 695.

Vol. II, p. 432, par. 251.

Lily buds, imported in condition to open in full bloom immediately upon arrival at their destination in this country, are dutiable as "lilies," under this paragraph, and are not free of duty under paragraph 617, as "vegetable substances, crude or unmanufactured, not otherwise specially provided for." Vandergrift v. U. S., (1901) 123 Fed. 1002.

Lily of the valley roots.—Act of 1894.—In construing the provision in Tariff Act August 27, 1894, ch. 349, sec. 1, Schedule G, par. 234½, 28 Stat. L. 525, for "lily of the valley . . . plants used for forcing," it was held that lily of the valley roots, sprouted, which are imported for forcing, were dutiable thereunder, being included within the term "plants," in a popular sense, though not technically. McAllister v. U. S., (1896) 147 Fed. 773.

Statice wreaths, which have all the appearance of "natural flowers . . . preserved," are dutiable under the enumeration of such articles in paragraph 251. Bayersdorfer v. U. S., (1909) 171 Fed. 286.

Prepared palm leaves.—See under this title, vol. 2, p. 473, par. 425.

Vol. II, p. 432, par. 252.

Rooted rose cuttings.—Under this paragraph, relating first to "rose plants," and second to "cuttings" of "shrubs" and of "plants," rooted rose cuttings that have been placed in sand to facilitate handling, but have never been in soil, fall within the latter provision as cuttings of shrubs or plants. U. S. v. American Express Co., (1908) 158 Fed. 808, 86 C. C. A. 68.

Seedlings of rhododendrons and laurels.—In this paragraph the provision for "evergreen seedlings" is not restricted to such evergreen plants as the conifers and box, but extends to those that retain their verdure or greenness throughout the year; and seedlings of rhododendrons and laurels, that remain green constantly, are included in said provision. U. S. v. Ouwkerk, (1907) 153 Fed. 916, affirmed (C. C. A. 1908) 166 Fed. 1622.

The word "seedlings" includes all trees or plants grown from seed, irrespective of their age. U. S. v. American Express Co., (1908) 158 Fed. 808, 86 C. C. A. 68.

Vol. II, p. 432, par. 254.

Canary seed.—See Nordlinger v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1904) 127 Fed. 683, affirming (1902) 119 Fed. 478, set out in the original note.

Vol. II, p. 433, par. 257.

An edible fungus, that grows on the bark of trees and has been merely dried and packed loose, bears a greater similitude to vegetables in their natural state, enumerated in this paragraph, than to mushrooms prepared, enumerated in paragraph 241, and is therefore dutiable under this paragraph 257. Sun Kwong On v. U. S., (1909) 176 Fed. 930.

Cauliflowers in brine.—Cauliflowers that have been trimmed, washed, and packed in brine for preservation during transportation, and to keep them in their natural state, and that when taken out of the brine and washed are still in their natural state, are dutiable under this paragraph as "vegetables in their natural state," rather than under paragraph 241, as "vegetables prepared or preserved." U. S. v. Strohmeier, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 1909) 167 Fed. 533.

Dried mushrooms.—The provision in paragraph 241 for mushrooms "prepared or preserved," does not include mushrooms dried merely by evaporation, which are dutiable under paragraph 257 as "vegetables in their natural state." Kraut v. U. S., (1905) 139 Fed. 94.

Dried mushrooms sliced.—The slicing of vegetables solely to facilitate the natural drying operation is not sufficient to remove them from their natural state; and mushrooms cleaned, sliced, and dried in the sun are dutiable as "vegetables in their natural state," under this paragraph, rather than as "vegetables prepared or preserved," under paragraph 241. Zanmati v. U. S., (1907) 153 Fed. 880, 82 C. C. A. 626.

Vol. II, p. 433, par. 258.

Fish in small packages.—In this paragraph, relating to fish "in packages containing less than one-half barrel," classification should be determined by the size of the container in which the merchandise is packed for transportation and wholesale trade, rather than of the container in which it is packed for retail trade; and fish in boxes of a capacity of not less than one-half barrel, but filled with one pound paper packages for retail, is not dutiable under said provision. U. S. v. Yamashita, (1910) 175 Fed. 1018.

Fish packed in round tin boxes holding "appetit-sild."—Herring called appetit-sild or appetit-herring, in tins, but not "known or labeled as anchovies, sardines, sprats, brislings, sardels, or sardellen, packed in . . . tin boxes or cans," are not dutiable under such enumeration in paragraph 258, but are within the provision in the same paragraph for "all other fish . . . in tin packages." Benson v. U. S., (1907) 159 Fed. 118, 86 C. C. A. 308, distinguishing Reiss v. U. S., (1902) 113 Fed. 1001, set out in the original note, on the ground that the opinion in that case expressly rests its adoption of a classification upon the appraiser's finding that "the contents of the boxes is 'fish known as anchovies,' with no evidence in the case one way or the other to contradict this finding."

Fish roe, or caviar, in tin packages, is, by virtue of the similitude clause in section 7, dutiable at the rate applicable to fish in tin packages, enumerated in this paragraph, which article it resembles in quality, texture, and use, especially use, within the meaning of said section. Menzel v. U. S., (1904) 135 Fed. 918, affirmed (1906) 142 Fed. 1038.

Frozen fish imported in packages containing less than one-half barrel are dutiable under the provision in this paragraph, for "fish in packages containing less than one-half barrel, and not specially provided for," rather than under that in paragraph 261, for "fish, fresh, . . . frozen, packed in ice, or otherwise prepared for preservation, not specially provided for." Loggie v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1905) 137 Fed. 813.

Wai san, an edible root used by the Chinese as a vegetable, is, because edible, removed from the provision for "drugs," in paragraph 20, and is dutiable as "vegetables," under paragraph 257. Wing On Wo v. U. S., (1909) 175 Fed. 891.

Dried mushrooms in cans.—See under this title, vol. 2, p. 431, par. 241.

Herring in tins, which have been pickled, salted, skinned, or boned, are dutiable as "fish . . . in tin packages," under this paragraph, rather than as "herrings pickled or salted," or as "fish, skinned or boned," under paragraphs 260, 261. The fact of importation in tins controls over the other conditions set forth in the two latter paragraphs. Benson v. U. S., (1907) 159 Fed. 118, 86 C. C. A. 308.

Measurement.—In applying the provision in paragraph 258 for fish in tins "containing" various quantities, the actual capacity of the tins should be considered, rather than the quantity of fish found in them. Gandolfi v. U. S., (1907) 152 Fed. 656.

Sardines in large tins.—In this paragraph, relating to sardines "in bottles, jars, tin boxes or cans" of various small sizes not exceeding seventy cubic inches, also "in other packages," the doctrine of noscitur a sociis is not to be so applied as to limit the latter phrase to packages of a retail size, and thus exclude sardines in large tins dealt in at wholesale. Strohmeyer, etc., Co. v. U. S., (1910) 178 Fed. 268, 101 C. C. A. 400, affirming (1909) 172 Fed. 295.

"Cream of codfish."—See under this title, vol. 2, p. 434, par. 261.

Filled bottles.—See under this title, vol. 2, p. 405, par. 99.

Salted fish in wooden packages.—See under this title, vol. 2, p. 506, sec. 7.

Vol. II, p. 434, par. 260.

Allowance for salt, etc.—In Lincoln v. U. S., (1910) 178 Fed. 599, it appeared that salted herring are dealt in by the barrel, that in wholesale trade a "barrel" means 200 pounds of net fish, that it is usual to deliver 228 pounds of fish as taken from the hold of a vessel, in accordance with a long-standing custom to allow for salt, scale, and dirt, and that at no time does this extra twenty-eight pounds enter into the marketable weight of the merchandise. It was held that in assessing duty on the weight of such fish under paragraph 260, a like allowance should be made.

Smoked herring, though salted before being smoked, are not dutiable as "herrings, pickled or salted," under paragraph 260, being a commodity distinct therefrom both commercially and in common speech. Mattlage v. U. S., (1904) 139 Fed. 704.

Herring in tins.—See under this title, vol. 2, p. 433, par. 258.

Vol. II, p. 434, par. 261.

Cream of codfish.—So-called cream of codfish, consisting of codfish skinned and boned, and subjected to the further process of cutting or shredding, is dutiable as "fish, skinned or boned," under this paragraph, and not as fish "in packages less than one-half barrel, and not specially provided for," under paragraph 258. Teed v. U. S., (1903) 126 Fed. 447.

Fresh salmon packed in ice.—Under this paragraph, relating (1) to "fish, fresh, . . . frozen, packed in ice, or otherwise prepared for preservation, not specially provided for," and (2) to "salmon, fresh," salmon packed in ice for preservation are dutiable under the first provision; for Congress by enumerating fish packed in ice separately from fish fresh, indicated an intention to exclude the former class from the provision for the latter. U. S. v. Perry, (1909) 171 Fed. 303.

Frozen fish imported in packages containing less than one-half barrel.—See under this title, vol. 2, p. 433, par. 258.

Herring in tins.—See under this title, vol. 2, p. 433, par. 258.

Salted fish in wooden packages.—See under this title, vol. 2, p. 506, sec. 7.

Vol. II, p. 434, par. 262.

Cherries, which have been washed, pitted, and packed in salt water to preserve them in transit, are not dutiable as "fruits preserved . . . in their own juices," under paragraph 263, but as "edible fruits . . . prepared in any manner," under paragraph 262. Causse Mfg. Co. v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1906) 151 Fed. 4.

Fox berries.—In Boak v. U. S., (1903) 125 Fed. 599, 60 C. C. A. 335, it was held that the expression "berries, edible, in their natural condition," in this paragraph, means berries which are in their natural condition as imported, and are edible either in that state or after cooking, and that fox berries imported in barrels filled with water are in their natural condition, and are included within said provision and not within paragraph 559, relating to "berries, green, ripe, or dried, . . . not specially provided for."

Fruits "green or ripe."—The first part of this paragraph, imposing a duty per bushel on cherries and other fruits, "green or ripe," applies to those fruits, ripe or unripe, when imported in their natural condition. Causse Mfg. Co. v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1906) 151 Fed. 4, modifying 143 Fed. 690.

Fruits prepared.—Fruit preserved in hermetically sealed bottles, surrounded by a light syrup containing no juice and an insignificant amount of alcohol, the preservation being due to the sealing, is not "fruits preserved in sugar, . . . spirits, or in their own juices," within the meaning of paragraph 263, but is dutiable under paragraph 262, as "fruits . . . prepared." In providing for fruit preserved in "sugar," Congress contemplated sugar which causes or materially contributes to the preservation of the fruit. U. S. v. Reiss, (C. C. A. 1909) 166 Fed. 746, affirming (1908) 163 Fed. 65.

"Prepared in any manner."—Under this paragraph relating to fruits "dried, desiccated, evaporated, or prepared in any manner," the scope of the expression "prepared in any manner" is not by the rule of noscitur a sociis to be so limited as to embrace only fruits prepared by a drying process. Causse Mfg. Co. v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1906) 151 Fed. 4, modifying 143 Fed. 690.

"Quart."—In U. S. v. Boak Fish Co., (1906) 146 Fed. 104, it was held, as to foxberries in barrels, with water added to act as a cushion, so as to prevent crushing, that, in assessing the duty "per quart," provided in this paragraph, the dutiable quantity should be ascertained by the use of the dry quart and not the liquid quart.

Berry jams.—See under this title, vol. 2, p. 434, par. 263.

Chutney.—See under this title, vol. 2, p. 434, par. 263.

"Preservation" and "preparation" distinguished.—See under this title, vol. 2, p. 434, par. 263.

Vol. II, p. 434, par. 263.

Berry jams are dutiable under this paragraph, as sweetmeats or preserved fruits, rather than as "jelly" under the same paragraph, or as "edible fruits prepared," under paragraph 262. Bogle v. U. S., (1909) 175 Fed. 889.

Cherries in alcohol.—Certain cherries imported in casks, in a surrounding fluid containing alcohol added for the purpose of resisting fermentation and decay, the cherries being an inedible variety, intended to be used in the manufacture of cherry juice, are specially provided for in this paragraph as "fruits preserved in . . . spirits," and are not dutiable under paragraph 269, either as "cherry juice" or as an unenumerated article similar thereto, "either in material, quality, texture, or the use to which it may be applied," under section 7 of said act. Voight v. Mihalovitch, (1899) 125 Fed. 78.

Chutney.—The article commercially known as "chutney," which consists of various fruits preserved with sugar and spices, is dutiable as "fruits preserved," under this paragraph, rather than as "edible fruits . . . prepared," under paragraph 262. Park v. U. S., (1908) 164 Fed. 910.

Excess of alcohol.—Under this paragraph, relating to fruits in spirits and imposing a duty "per proof gallon on the alcohol contained therein in excess of ten per centum," the duty is to be levied on all such excess, whether absorbed by the fruit or supernatant. Mihalovitch v. U. S., (1908) 160 Fed. 988.

Leghorn citron, preserved by being cut in halves, boiled and soaked in salt water, freshened, and then covered with syrup and boiled down, and fresh sugar placed thereon, and the process repeated until the peel is thoroughly impregnated with the sugar and cured, was held to be taxable as "fruits preserved in sugar," under the Tariff Act of 1883, par. 302, and not entitled to admission free under paragraph 704 of that act, as dried fruits not specifically enumerated. U. S. v. Nordlinger, (1903) 121 Fed. 690, 58 C. C. A. 438, reversing (1902) 115 Fed. 828, cited in the original note.

Marmalade is dutiable under the provision in this paragraph relating to "sweetmeats and fruits preserved," rather than as "jellies," under the same paragraph. Bogle v. U. S., (1909) 175 Fed. 889.

Marrons.—The term "comfits" in this paragraph is practically synonymous with "confections," and includes boiled marrons (chestnuts) preserved in syrup. U. S. v. Schall, (1906) 147 Fed. 760, affirmed (C. C. A. 1907) 164 Fed. 1005.

Pineapples preserved in own juice.—Pineapples preserved in cans in their own juice, with enough sugar added for flavoring, and not aiding substantially in their preservation, which is accomplished by the canning process, are held to be dutiable as "pineapples preserved in their own juice," and not as fruit preserved in sugar, under the same paragraph. U. S. v. Boden, (1904) 133 Fed. 839; U. S. v. Johnson, (C. C. A. 1907) 152 Fed. 164, affirming (1906) 143 Fed. 915; Dudley v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1907) 153 Fed. 881, reversing (1906) 148 Fed. 333; U. S. v. Johnson, (1906) 166 Fed. 1002.

"Preservation" and "preparation" distinguished.—The process of hermetically sealing fruit in tin cans, thus preserving it from decay until the cans are opened, constitutes "preservation," rather than "preparation;" and fruit pulp that has been cooked and subjected to such sealing process is dutiable under this paragraph as fruit "preserved . . . in their own juices," rather than under paragraph 262, as fruit "prepared in any manner." Habicht v. U. S., (1910) 175 Fed. 1009.

Preserved figs.—In U. S. v. Reiss, (C. C. A. 1905) 136 Fed. 741, reversing (1903) 126 Fed. 578, it was held that the "fruits preserved in sugar, molasses, spirits, or in their own juices," enumerated in this paragraph, are known commercially as a class by themselves, of which the use and form constitute the distinctive characteristics, and that certain figs preserved whole are within that provision, rather than the provision for "figs" in paragraph 264.

Preserved fruit.—The provision in this paragraph for "comfits, sweetmeats, and fruits preserved in sugar, molasses, spirits, or in their own juices," refers to a class of goods commercially known as preserved fruits, and is intended to apply to fruits treated so as to become a preserve or comfit and not to such as merely remain temporarily in their natural juice. Causee Mfg. Co. v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1906) 151 Fed. 4.

Vol. II, p. 435, par. 264.

"Gallon."—Under this paragraph imposing a duty at various rates "per gallon," according to condition, the duty should be assessed on the basis of the wine or liquid gallon and not the dry gallon, regardless of whether the olives are imported dried or in brine. Ceballos v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1906) 146 Fed. 380, affirming (1904) 139 Fed. 705.

Olives in brine.—Olives which have been immersed in salt and water for the purpose of preserving them from decay in shipment, and which have been subjected to no preparation to fit them for eating, are not "olives prepared," within the meaning of this paragraph. U. S. v. Zucca, (1909) 175 Fed. 578.

Vol. II, p. 435, par. 266.

Limes in brine.—See under this title, vol. 2, p. 489, par. 559.

Vol. II, p. 435, par. 267.

Lemon peel preserved.—Halved lemons in brine are "fruits in brine," within paragraph 559, and not dutiable as lemon peel preserved, under paragraph 267, notwithstanding the brine renders the pulp inedible, and the only value is in the peel. Hills Bros Co. v.

Olives in ten gallon jars.—This paragraph relates to olives "in bottles, jars, or similar packages," and "in casks or otherwise than in bottles, jars, or similar packages." It has been held that this language does not import an intention to make a division between olives in retail packages and those in wholesale packages, and that olives in jars holding ten gallons are therefore within the first of these provisions. U. S. v. Shing Shun, (1909) 173 Fed. 844.

Allowance for impurities.—In ascertaining the dutiable weight of shelled nuts dutiable by the pound under paragraphs 269, 270, no allowance should be made for impurities in importations not shown to contain abnormal quantities of foreign matter, nor to vary from the ordinary wholesale condition. Spencer v. U. S., (1906) 143 Fed. 916.

Clear almonds.—The provision in this paragraph for "clear" shelled almonds refers to nuts that are practically and substantially free from shells, dust, and dirt, and after being divested of their outer covering are fairly free from that covering. Heide v. U. S., (1909) 175 Fed. 316.

Apricot stones come within the common definition of "nuts," and apricot kernels are dutiable as "nuts . . . not specially provided for," under this paragraph. Spencer v. U. S., (1906) 146 Fed. 112.

Marrons.—See under this title, vol. 2, p. 434, par. 263.

Vol. II, p. 436, par. 275.

Duck meat in tins, some salted and dried, and some packed in oil, is not "poultry . . . dressed," within the meaning of paragraph 278, but is rather classifiable as "meats of all kinds, prepared or preserved," under paragraph 275. Kwong Yuen Shing v. U. S., (1909) 177 Fed. 605.

Paté de foie gras.—In this paragraph the provision for "meats of all kinds, prepared or preserved," is broad enough to include not only the cooked meat of poultry and game, in tins, but also goose livers prepared as paté de foie gras. Smith v. U. S., (1909) 168 Fed. 462.

Coverings for chocolate.—Certain coverings for chocolate, consisting of small boxes, some in the form of a trunk, having hinged tops fastened with a catch and hook, and lined with fancy paper, are "coverings, other than plain wooden," within the meaning of the part of this paragraph, which provides that "the weight and value of all coverings, other than plain wooden, shall be included in the dutiable weight and value" of their contents, when containing chocolate and cocoa. Cure v. U. S., (1901) 123 Fed. 994, following U. S. v. Volkmann, (C. C. A. 1901) 107 Fed. 109, set out in the original note.

Vol. II, p. 437, par. 283.

Coffee essence, which is used as coffee or as a substitute therefor, is not "coffee," within the meaning of paragraph 529, but is dutiable, either directly or by similitude, as Refined cocoanut oil is not "cocoa butterine," within the meaning of paragraph 282. Fuerst v. U. S., (1909) 176 Fed. 95, 100 C. C. A. 25, reversing (1908) 166 Fed. 1014.

Vol. II, p. 438, par. 285.

Arrowroot starch.—The provision in paragraph 478, for "arrowroot in its natural state and not manufactured," relates to the tubers or root of the arrowroot plant, though no importations are ever made in that form, and does not include the article commercially known as arrowroot, consisting of starch made from arrowroot tubers, which is more "articles used as coffee, or as substitutes for coffee," under paragraph 283. Hazard v. U. S., (1909) 175 Fed. 967, 99 C. C. A. 357, reversing (1908) 164 Fed. 907.

Vol. II, p. 438, par. 286.

properly classifiable as "starch," under paragraph 285. Leaycraft v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1904) 130 Fed. 106, affirming (1903) 124 Fed. 999; Middleton v. U. S., (1906) 151 Fed. 16, 80 C. C. A. 512.

Bone-size substitute.—See under this title, vol. 2, p. 392, par. 3.

Vol. II, p. 438, par. 287.

Residuum from decorticating pepper berries.—The residuum in the process of decorticating pepper berries, consisting of the inner cuticle in the form of a powder, which, without further grinding, is mixed with ground pepper as an adulterant, is not within the provision in paragraph 667 for pepper "un-ground." It is sufficient if the pepper reaches its ground condition by decortication, or some other process equivalent to grinding, to be excluded from this provision. Frame v. U. S., (1906) 143 Fed. 692, affirmed (C. C. A.) 149 Fed. 1022.

Chinese spirituous beverages.—Chinese spirituous beverages imported in bottles containing on the average one-tenth of one gallon, and in spirituous strength below proof, were dutiable at two dollars per gallon, under paragraph 311 of the Tariff Act of 1893, corresponding to paragraph 289 of the Act of 1897. Kwong Chin Chong v. U. S., (1902) 119 Fed. 383.

Vol. II, p. 440, par. 296.

Construction of paragraph.—This paragraph separates still wines in bottles into three classes and fixes a specific rate of duty on each, as follows: (a) Bottles "containing each not more than one pint," which are to be assessed as full pints at $1.60 per twenty-four bottles, or at the rate of 6½ cents per pint; (b) bottles "containing each not more than one quart and more than one pint," which are to be assessed as full quarts at $1.60 per dozen bottles; that is, at the same rate of 6½ cents per pint; and (c) bottles containing "any excess beyond these quantities," which are to be assessed at the rate of $1.60 per dozen, plus five cents per pint or fractional pint on the excess over a quart contained in each bottle. U. S. v. Cerecedo Hermanos y Compañia, (1908) 200 U. S. 337, 28 S. Ct. 532, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 821.

Leakage of vermouth.—Vermuth is not covered by this paragraph prescribing that no allowance of duty should be made for leakage of "wines, liquors, cordials, or distilled spirits," as the context indicates that Congress regarded vermouth as an independent article from those enumerated in said provision. Wile v. U. S., (1909) 172 Fed. 164, affirmed (1910) 178 Fed. 269, 101 C. C. A. 574.

Leakage of wine.—In an importation of 3,660 gallons of wine there was a shortage of 12.17 gallons in excess of the normal leakage.

Vol. II, p. 448, par. 318.

Specific designation.—With respect to embroidered hosiery, the provision in paragraph 339, for “wearing apparel . . . embroidered in any manner by hand or machinery, . . . composed wholly or in chief value of flax, cotton, or other vegetable fiber, and not elsewhere specially provided for,” is less specific than the provision in paragraph 318 for “stockings, hose, and half-hose . . . composed of cotton or other vegetable fiber.” Carter v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1906) 143 Fed. 256, affirming (1905) 137 Fed. 978.

Embroidered hosiery.—See under this title, vol. 2, p. 451, par. 339.

Vol. II, p. 448, par. 320.

Bindings.—A narrow woven tape of cotton, used largely for covering the seams of underwear and waists, if a braid, within paragraph 339, placing a sixty per cent. duty on braids not otherwise provided for, is also a binding or tape, and therefore otherwise provided for by, and dutiable under, paragraph 320, placing a forty-five per cent. duty on bindings and tapes. Steinhardt v. U. S., (1903) 121 Fed. 442. See also Baruch v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1909) 172 Fed. 342, reversing (1907) 159 Fed. 294.

Labels of cotton and silk. cotton the chief component, are not to be excluded from the provision in this paragraph for labels “composed of cotton,” because not composed wholly of cotton. U. S. v. Herzog, (C. C. A. 1906) 145 Fed. 622, reversing (1904) 135 Fed. 919.

Labels in the piece.—In construing the provision in paragraph 320 for “labels, for garments or other articles, composed of cotton,” it was held that labels are not to be excluded therefrom because in the piece and requiring to be cut apart before being used as labels. U. S. v. Herzog, (C. C. A. 1905) 145 Fed. 622, reversing (1904) 135 Fed. 919.

Featherstitch braids.—See under this title, vol. 2, p. 451, par. 339.

Ribbons of silk and cotton.—See under this title, vol. 2, p. 465, par. 391.

Vol. II, p. 449, par. 321.

“Cotton table damask.”—The expression “cotton table damask,” in paragraph 321 was not used by Congress according to any trade meaning it might have, but according to its denominative, or common, popular sense, which includes completed articles as well as goods in the piece from which such articles are made. Wilson v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1906) 146 Fed. 64, affirming (1905) 138 Fed. 1007; Dunham v. U. S., (1906) 150 Fed. 562, 80 C. C. A. 364; contra Douglass v. U. S., (1901) 123 Fed. 993.

Vol. II, p. 449, par. 322.

Cotton-wool cloth—Act of 1890.—Goods composed in part of wool, but in chief value of cotton, were more specifically enumerated in Tariff Act Oct. 1, 1890, ch. 1244, sec. 1, Schedule I, par. 355, 26 Stat. L. 593, as “manufactures of cotton” than in the provision in Schedule K, paragraph 392, 26 Stat. L. 596, for “manufactures of every description . . . in part of wool.” Benoit v. U. S., (1892) 150 Fed. 687.

Crocheted goods.—So-called “crochet yokes,” made by knitting or crocheting, and used for the yokes of women’s vests, are not trimmings or lace within the meaning of paragraph 339. Loewenthal v. U. S., (1906) 147 Fed. 774.

Hemstitched lawns—Act of 1894.—Hemstitched cotton lawns, made by subjecting cotton cloth to the process of turning over the edges, drawing certain threads, and other manipulation, but not appropriated by these processes to any particular ultimate use, were held to have been advanced beyond the condition of “cotton cloth,” and not to be dutiable as such under the “countable clauses” of Tariff Act Aug. 27, 1894, c. 349, sec. 1, Schedule I, paragraphs 252–257, but to be dutiable as “manufactures of cotton,” under paragraph 264 of said act. Meyer v. U. S., (1901) 124 Fed. 296.

“Manufactures of cotton.”—The provision for “manufactures of cotton,” in Tariff Act Oct. 1, 1890, ch. 1244, sec. 1, Schedule I, par. 355.30 Stat. L. 593, was held to include materials composed in chief value of cotton and in part of another substance. Benoit v. U. S., (1892) 150 Fed. 687.

Hat bands or hat trimmings.—See under this title, vol. 2, p. 451, par. 339.

Ruffled cotton curtains.—See under this title, vol. 2, p. 451, par. 339.

Vol. II, p. 450, par. 326.

Flax noils.—See under this title, vol. 2, p. 481, par. 463.

Vol. II, p. 451, par. 337.

Cravenette cloth—Act of 1890.—Certain woolen goods known as “cravenette cloths,” which have been subjected to a process intended to make them rain-repellant, which are chiefly used for outer garments to be worn in rainy weather, and which, for all ordinary purposes, are waterproof, were held to be dutiable as "waterproof cloth," under paragraph 369, Tariff Act Oct. 1, 1890, and not under paragraphs 392 and 395, relating, respectively, to "woolen or worsted cloths" and "dress goods . . . of wool, worsted," etc. U. S. v. Brown, (1905) 136 Fed. 550, 69 C. C. A. 260, affirming (1903) 126 Fed. 446.

Linoleum of colored material, mixed in making, and taking such form as the pressure of the rollers and resistance of the materials give them, is not taxable for duty as "inlaid linoleum," but as linoleum "figured or plain," under this paragraph. Hunter v. U. S., (1903) 121 Fed. 207, affirmed (1904) 127 Fed. 1022, 61 C. C. A. 270.

Plank linoleum, made by running upon the burlap foundation paste of two colors in stripes of equal width, a process differing from that employed in making linoleum, is, under paragraph 337, dutiable as "linoleum . . . figured or plain," rather than as "inlaid linoleum." U. S. v. Scott, (1908) 164 Fed. 285.

Vol. II, p. 451, par. 339.

Appliquéd mottoes.—Certain so-called "Haussegen" or wahl mottoes, consisting of pasteboard cards with mottoes sewn thereon, and with various pictures surrounded by wreaths, affixed thereto by some adhesive material, are dutiable under this paragraph 339, relating to appliquéd or embroidered articles, and not under paragraph 407, as manufactures in chief value of paper. Kaufmann v. U. S., (1904) 128 Fed. 468.

Articles stitched on edge to prevent raveling.—The provision in paragraph 339 for "embroidery" and articles "embroidered in any manner," does not include articles stitched on the edge with needlework of the plainest description, which simply serves the necessary and useful purpose of preventing raveling. The fundamental idea of embroidery is that it is needlework done upon a previously completed fabric, as distinguished from tapestry or lace work, in which the design is a part of the original fabric. It is also essential that it should be ornamental, rather than merely useful. U. S. v. Waentig, (1909) 168 Fed. 570.

Braids of cotton and rubber.—The provision in this paragraph for braids "wholly or in chief value of . . . cotton, . . . whether composed in part of india rubber or otherwise," applies only to braids in which cotton is the chief or only component. Braids in part of cotton and in chief value of rubber are dutiable under paragraph 449, as manufactures in chief value of india rubber. Horrax v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1909) 167 Fed. 526. See also Calhoun v. U. S., (1901) 122 Fed. 894.

Braid sets.—Collars and cuffs composed of braids sewn together and ornamented with cords and threads were held to be dutiable as "wearing apparel . . . in imitation of lace," under this paragraph. It is not necessary that articles coming within this provision should be imitation lace as known to the trade. U. S. v. Hesse, (C. C. A. 1907) 158 Fed. 407, reversing 154 Fed. 171.

Drawnwork.—The provision for articles "embroidered," in paragraph 339 has been held to include so-called "drawnwork" goods, consisting of fabrics in which an openwork effect has been produced by drawing out certain of the threads and interjecting different and independent threads, and which have ornamental work and figures in various portions of the goods. Beach v. Sharpe,

Embroidered furs.—Fur garments, ready to wear, lined with silk and trimmed with embroidery, are "embroidered articles," though the fur itself has not been embroidered. Jaeckel v. U. S., (1910) 178 Fed. 260, 101 C. C. A. 620, affirming (1909) 172 Fed. 292.

Embroidered hosiery.—The proviso in this paragraph, prescribing that no embroidered wearing apparel, etc., "shall pay duty at a less rate than that imposed in any schedule . . . upon any embroideries of the materials of which such embroidery is composed," is not restricted to the articles previously enumerated in the same paragraph, but extends to other portions of the act. Silk embroidered cotton hosiery is therefore dutiable at the rate applicable to silk embroideries, when such rate exceeds that provided for cotton hosiery in paragraph 318. Carter v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1906) 143 Fed. 256, affirming (1905) 137 Fed. 978.

Embroidered screens.—Under the proviso in paragraph 339, prescribing that embroidered articles shall not pay a less rate of duty than is applicable to "any embroideries of the materials of which such embroidery is composed," it was held that silk-embroidered screens, composed of wood and other materials, were liable to the rate provided for silk embroideries. The rule of "noscitur a sociis" does not operate to exclude such articles by reason of the enumeration in the same paragraph of laces, trimmings, etc. Lichtenstein Millinery Co. v. U. S., (1907) 154 Fed. 736.

Featherstitch braids, so called, which are not produced by braiding, but by a process of weaving, but which are known commercially as braids, are within the provision for "braids" in this paragraph. Vom Baur v. U. S., (1905) 141 Fed. 439.

Flax drawn work.—In U. S. v. Ulmann, (C. C. A. 1905) 139 Fed. 3, affirming (1904) 131 Fed. 649, it was held that certain woven flax articles, in portions of which ornamental effects had been produced by drawing out certain of the threads and interjecting different, independent threads, producing openwork effects, are not "articles . . . in imitation of lace," as enumerated in paragraph 339.

Hat bands or hat trimmings.—Certain woven cotton articles, from 1 to 2½ inches wide, chiefly used as hat bands for trimming men's hats, were held to be dutiable as "trimmings" of cotton, under paragraph 276, Tariff Act Aug. 28, 1894, and not as "galloons," under paragraph 263 of said act, nor as "manufactures of cotton . . . not specially provided for," under paragraph 264 of said act. U. S. v. Graef, (C. C. A. 1904) 127 Fed. 688, reversing (1903) 120 Fed. 1015.

Hemstitched lace-trimmed handkerchiefs.—Paragraph 345 provides for handkerchiefs, hemmed, hemstitched, etc., the duty being increased for each of these stages of elaboration. Paragraph 339 provides a still higher rate for "handkerchiefs . . . in part of lace . . . not elsewhere specially provided for." It has been held that it was the intention of Congress to advance the duty in accordance with the advancement of the goods in condition, and that hemstitched lace-trimmed handkerchiefs are dutiable under the latter rather than the former paragraph. Glendinning v. U. S., (1908) 162 Fed. 910.

Lace articles.—This paragraph includes goods made by sewing together pieces of lace produced in shapes designed to be used in making the articles; the term "lace" not being restricted to articles made up from lace that is bought and sold by the yard. Goldenberg v. U. S., (1907) 152 Fed. 658.

Lace neckwear.—Lace neckwear is more specifically provided for in this paragraph, as "wearing apparel . . . made wholly or in part of lace," than in paragraph 314 of this act, as "articles of wearing apparel of every description, including neckties or neckwear." Goldenberg v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1904) 130 Fed. 108, affirming (1903) 124 Fed. 1003.

Openwork embroidery—Act of 1890.—So-called openwork articles, having ornamental designs stitched thereon by hand with a needle and thread, were held to be "embroideries," within the meaning of Tariff Act

Oct. 1, 1890, ch. 1244, sec. 1, par. 373, Schedule J, 28 Stat. L. 594. Neuss v. U. S., (1896) 142 Fed. 281.

Ramie braids.—In U. S. v. Rosenberg, (C. C. A. 1906) 145 Fed. 343, it was held that, as to braids of ramie, the provision in paragraph 339, for "braids . . . of . . . vegetable fiber," is more specific than that in paragraph 347 for "all manufactures of . . . ramie" and other vegetable fibers; the latter provision being intended to embrace any manufactures of vegetable fiber that have been omitted elsewhere in the tariff.

Ruffled cotton curtains.—In construing the Tariff Act of Aug. 27, 1894, paragraph 276, which relates to "neck ruffings, . . . and articles made wholly or in part of . . . ruffings," it was held that the word "neck" should not be reread in connection with the word "ruffings," and that cotton curtains made in part of ruffings were dutiable under said paragraph, and not under paragraph 264 of said Act as "manufactures of cotton." Brill v. U. S., (1900) 123 Fed. 845.

"Wearing apparel."—In Darlington v. U. S., (1905) 136 Fed. 716, it was held that dress shields, which are articles for women's wear, intended to be worn under the arms to protect the dress from perspiration, are "wearing apparel," within the meaning of paragraph 413, which corresponds to paragraph 339 of the Act of 1897.

Vol. II, p. 454, par. 345.

Unfinished handkerchiefs.—In Meyer v. U. S., (1905) 138 Fed. 974, the provision in paragraph 345 for "handkerchiefs . . . unfinished," was held to include cloth cut into pieces which are in the shape of squares and other geometrical figures, and which in that shape are principally used in the manufacture of handkerchiefs.

Hemstitched lace-trimmed handkerchiefs.—See under this title, vol. 2, p. 451, par. 339.

Vol. II, p. 454, par. 346.

Drawn work in flax.—"Drawn work," composed of flax, made by drawing some of the threads and tying and looping them with other threads to form figures, are not dutiable as articles made in imitation of lace, under paragraph 339, but as fabrics of flax under paragraph 346. Simon v. U. S., (1904) 131 Fed. 649, affirmed (C. C. A. 1905) 139 Fed. 3.

Flax-wool fabrics.—Fabrics in chief value of flax, but in part of wool, are dutiable under paragraph 346, relating to goods "the component material of chief value" in which is flax, and not under paragraph 366 relating to cloths "in part of wool." U. S. v. Johnson, (1907) 154 Fed. 752, affirmed (C. C. A.) 157 Fed. 754.

Includes piece goods and made up articles. — In construing this paragraph which relates to "woven fabrics or articles" of flax, etc., with a proviso "that none of the foregoing articles in this paragraph shall pay a less rate of duty than fifty per centum ad valorem," it has been held that this proviso includes the foregoing "woven fabrics" as well as "articles." Schulemann v. U. S., (1901) 123 Fed. 1002.

Variation in thread count. — In construing the provision in this paragraph of different rates of duty on fabrics of flax, varying according to thread count, etc., it has been held that it is not necessary that a fabric should be homogeneous throughout in order to bring it within said paragraph, and that the paragraph may include so-called "drawn work" from which some of the threads have been removed. Simon v. U. S., (1904) 131 Fed. 649, affirmed (C. C. A. 1905) 139 Fed. 3.

Burlaps — Act of 1894. — The provision for "burlaps," in the Tariff Act of Aug. 27, 1894, ch. 349, sec. 2, Free List par. 424½, 28 Stat. L. 539, did not include so-called double-warp

Ramie braids. — See under this title, vol. 2, p. 451, par. 339.

Vol. II, p. 455, par. 349.

"Merino blood, immediate or remote." — In paragraph 349, relating to wools, the words "merino blood, immediate or remote," convey an unmistakable meaning, and include wool in which the presence of merino blood is marked, though of inferior quality. U. S. v. American Express Co., (1910) 177 Fed. 735.

Growth on the skin of mocha sheep. — See under this title, vol. 2, p. 497, par. 664.

Vol. II, p. 456, par. 352.

Conclusiveness of samples. — The standard samples of wool prescribed by the secretary of the treasury on the authority of this paragraph are conclusive in respect to classification and quality, except, perhaps, where the issue is one of fraud or mistake, and regulations in respect to such samples are not subject to review by the courts or the board of general appraisers; and where imported wools answer the quality of the standard samples, they should be classified accordingly, regardless of whether such standards operate unjustly, oppressively, or disproportionately to other classifications and values. U. S. v. American Express Co., (1910) 177 Fed. 735.

Vol. II, p. 456, par. 356.

"Changed in character or condition." — In construing paragraph 356 it has been held that it is not necessary that there should be any mechanical or chemical change, disguising the quality or character of the wool; and that, where white and black Iceland wools, which had always been dealt in and imported separately in different bales, were imported mixed together in the same bale for the purpose of securing a lower rate of duty on the white wool, the wool had been changed in condition within the meaning of the law. Stone, etc., Co. v. U. S., (1906) 147 Fed. 603.

Double duty. — Where two kinds of wools were changed in condition by mixing them in the same bale, in order to make the mixture subject to the lower duty provided for the poorer kind, it was held (1) that, within the meaning of paragraph 356, only the better kind is changed "for the purpose of evading the duty to which it would otherwise be subject," because the poorer kind would be subject to the same rate, whether mixed or not; (2) that, therefore, the further provision in the same paragraph that wool changed for such purpose shall pay "twice the duty to which it would be otherwise subject," would apply only to the better kind, and not the poorer; and (3) that the duty which is thus doubled is that which would have been applicable to the better kind if imported in its natural condition. Stone, etc., Co. v. U. S., (1906) 147 Fed. 603.

Vol. II, p. 457, par. 360.

"Reasonable number."—The question of what is a "reasonable number" of skins to test in ascertaining the quantity of wool thereon is one that is to be determined by the testimony of men qualified by experience and knowledge to pass upon that subject. Without such evidence it will not be held to be self-evident that an estimate based on an examination of eight out of 20,000 skins was inadequate. U. S. v. Thomas, (1910) 178 Fed. 602.

Weight of wool on skins.—In attacking the estimate of customs officers as to the quantity of wool on imported sheepskins, it is not enough to show a different weight to have been found by others. It must appear by direct and positive evidence that the method adopted by such officers was incorrect; and, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, it will not be assumed that a test of eight out of 20,000 skins was inadequate, especially where there is evidence that such test was in accordance with the usual mode. U. S. v. Thomas, (1910) 178 Fed. 602.

Growth on the skins of mocha sheep.—See under this title, vol. 2, p. 497, par. 664.

Vol. II, p. 458, par. 363.

Clippings of woolen material, produced in the process of making up garments, are "rags," within both the popular and the commercial signification of the term, and are more specifically provided for as "woolen rags" in this paragraph than in paragraph 362, as "wastes composed wholly or in part of wool, not specially provided for." U. S. v. Pearson, (1904) 131 Fed. 571, affirmed (C. A. 1905) 137 Fed. 1021.

Vol. II, p. 458, par. 366.

Camel's-hair press cloth is dutiable as manufactures of "wool" under this paragraph, rather than as "hair press cloth" under paragraph 431. Oberle v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1908) 165 Fed. 53.

Cattle-hair goods are dutiable by similitude as manufactures of "wool," under this paragraph, being similar in quality, use, and texture. Rosenstern v. U. S., (1909) 171 Fed. 71, 96 C. C. A. 175.

Woolen powder puffs.—In paragraph 410, the provision for "brushes" does not include so-called powder puffs, which are composed of flat circular pieces of woolen cloth with a fuzzy surface and are useful in applying toilet powder, and which, though resembling brushes in use, do not resemble them in construction, and are properly classified under paragraph 366. U. S. v. Borgfeldt, (1907) 153 Fed. 480.

Wool travelling rugs, which are not "portions of carpets or carpeting," were not included in the provision in Tariff Act of Oct. 1, 1890, ch. 1244, sec. 1, Schedule K, par. 408, 26 Stat. L. 598, for "rugs . . . and other portions of carpets or carpeting, made wholly or in part of wool," but were dutiable under the provision in paragraph 392 of that act, for "all manufactures of every description made wholly or in part of wool." *U. A. 594, affirming (1903) 123 Fed. 193, it was held that so-called wool "dress robes" or "dress patterns," consisting of women's dress goods of wool, embroidered with silk, imported in single patterns in separate lengths and pieces, each pattern comprising the material for the body and trimming of a dress, were "dress goods," and were dutiable under the provision in paragraph 369, for "women's . . . dress goods . . . composed wholly or in part of wool," which is limited by the expression "not specially provided for in this act," and not under paragraph 371, which provides, without such limitation, for "articles embroidered, . . . made of wool," nor under paragraph 370, relating to "articles of wearing apparel of every description, . . . manufactured . . . in part, . . . composed wholly or in part of wool." Measurement.—In assessing the duty "per square foot" provided for rugs in this paragraph, it was held as to certain oriental rugs having a pile and a selvage, that the entire area of the rug, including the selvage, should be measured in ascertaining the number of square feet. Fritz v. U. S., (1904) 135 Fed. 916.

Manufactures of wool.—Goods of silk and wool, the latter being the minor component, were held to be within the purview of Tariff Act Aug. 27, 1894, deferring until Jan. 1, 1895, the reduction in duties provided in said Act on "manufactures of wool." Robinson v. U. S., (1905) 143 Fed. 919.

Vol. 2, p. 462, par. 384.

Combed silk that has fallen from or been caught in the machines in which it was undergoing further operations is dutiable under the provision in this paragraph for silk not further manufactured than combed, and is not subject to the provision for silk waste in paragraph 661. Fawcett v. U. S., (1906) 146 Fed. 83, affirmed (C. C. A. 1907) 154 Fed. 1003.

Silk on tubes.—In construing the provision in paragraph 660, for "silk, raw, or as reeled from the cocoon, but not . . . advanced in manufacture in any way," it was held: (1) That the provision does not cover any form of raw silk advanced beyond the condition of skeins; (2) that silk known as "singles" or "silk on tubes," which has been wound from the skeins onto tubes, the effect of this process being to advance the silk to a stage in preparation for its ultimate use, has been "advanced in manufacture;" and (3) that silk in this form is not free of duty under this provision, but dutiable under paragraph 384 as "silk . . . not further advanced or manufactured than carded or combed silk." Klots v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1905) 139 Fed. 606, affirming (1904) 133 Fed. 808.

Re-reeled silk.—See under this title, vol. 2, p. 497, par. 660.

Vol. II, p. 462, par. 385.

Silk organzine, damaged in dyeing, is not by reason of the damage removed from the provision for "organzine," in this paragraph, and is classifiable as such, rather than as "silk waste," under paragraph 661. Cohen v. U. S., (1910) 180 Fed. 834.

Dividing line between plush and velvet.—No rule exists in trade or commercial usage declaring that fabrics having a pile of 3.5 millimeters or less in length should be regarded as velvets, and over 3.5 millimeters as plush. U. S. v. Silberstein, (1907) 153 Fed. 965.

Panne velvets.—Under this paragraph enumerating "plush" and "velvets" as subject to different rates of duty, panne velvets are subject to the former classification. U. S. v. Silberstein, (1907) 153 Fed. 965, followed in U. S. v. Passavant, (1908) 164 Fed. 912.

Vol. II, p. 463, par. 387.

Appraisal by examiner, not by weigher.—In appraising goods under this paragraph the goods may appropriately be sent to an examiner, rather than to a weigher, whose duty is confined to weighing articles in bulk; and it is within the examiner's duty to make return of the weight, as well as the other requisite facts. U. S. v. Rosenthal, (1903) 126 Fed. 766, affirmed (C. C. A. 1905) 145 Fed. 1.

Figured silk.—In Wimpfheimer v. U. S., (1905) 142 Fed. 849, affirmed (C. C. A. 1906) 149 Fed. 1022, it was held, in regard to a fabric of two colors, one of which is produced by threads introduced by the swivel process to form figures, and not extending across the cloth from selva to selva, that the swivel threads are not a part of the filling, and that the goods are not within the provision in paragraph 391, for Jacquard figured silks containing two or more colors "in the filling" but were properly dutiable under paragraph 387. Compare Johnson v. U. S., (1901) 123 Fed. 997.

Vol. II, p. 464, par. 390.

Appliquéd articles.—It does not appear that there is any definition of "appliqué" in trade and commerce different from the dictionary definition of it as "any ornament laid out and applied on another surface such as cloth;" and goods within this definition are dutiable under paragraph 390, relating to "articles . . . appliquéd." It is not necessary that the design should be regular, conventional, or highly ornamental, and therefore the provision includes a fabric to which a gilt cord has been applied in irregular loops of a crude design, being in this form fairly durable, permanent, and salable. U. S. v. Vantine, (C. C. A. 1908) 166 Fed. 735, affirming (1907) 155 Fed. 149.

"Articles."—The ordinary use of the word "articles" in tariff acts is a broad one; and there is nothing in the structure of paragraph 390, which would require the restriction of that term to completed articles. It may include woven fabrics in 25-yard pieces. U. S. v. Vantine, (C. C. A. 1908) 166 Fed. 735, affirming (1907) 155 Fed. 149.

Artificial silk hats are dutiable under paragraph 390, by similitude to silk wearing apparel. U. S. v. Wanamaker, (1910) 175 Fed. 900, 99 C. C. A. 390, reversing (1909) 160 Fed. 664.

Construction of proviso.—In construing paragraph 390, relating to articles of silk, or in chief value of silk, with a proviso that the "articles provided for in this paragraph, . . . when composed in part of India rubber, shall be subject to" the same duty, it has been held that the proviso does not cover articles not in chief value of silk. Simpson-Crawford Co. v. U. S., (1909) 172 Fed. 301, affirmed (1910) 178 Fed. 1006, 101 C. C. A. 665.

Garters were included within the term "wearing apparel," as used under paragraph "In the gum"—"boiled off."—Under this paragraph, providing for silk fabrics when "in the gum" and when "boiled off," it was held that fabrics which on boiling lost from eighteen to twenty-seven per cent. in weight were classable under the former, rather than the latter, clause. Mendelson v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1907) 154 Fed. 33, reversing (1906) 146 Fed. 78.

Where certain silk fabrics were partly boiled, so that, out of twenty-five per cent. of gum 7.8 per cent. was removed, it was held that this slight boiling was not sufficient to bring the goods within the provision in paragraph 387, for silk piece goods "boiled off," or to remove them from the provision in the same paragraph for fabrics "in the gum." Rice v. U. S., (1901) 123 Fed. 848.

413 of the Tariff Act of 1890. U. S. v. Steinhart, (1892) 141 Fed. 494.

Mourning crepes.—So-called mourning crepes, consisting of all-silk fabrics in the piece, of the width known as "4/4," are not dutiable as "woven fabrics in the piece not specially provided for," under paragraph 387, but as "trimmings . . . made of silk, . . . not specially provided for," under paragraph 390. Robinson v. U. S., (1900) 122 Fed. 970.

Narrow strips of silk with interwoven designs.—The provision in this paragraph for galloons or trimmings includes narrow strips of silk having interwoven thereon ornamental designs, which are chiefly used to decorate and embellish women's apparel. Loewenthal v. U. S., (1910) 180 Fed. 941.

The term "trimmings" is used in this paragraph in a commercial rather than a descriptive sense. Naday v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1908) 164 Fed. 44.

Trimmed hats.—In applying the provision in paragraph 432, for "hats . . . trimmed, . . . composed wholly or in chief value of fur," the composition of the hats should be determined by reference to the whole hat including the trimming; so that where hats, the bodies of which are fur, are so trimmed that the silk trimming is the component of chief value in the hats, they are dutiable under paragraph 390, as wearing apparel in chief value of silk. Leon Rheims Co. v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1908) 160 Fed. 925, affirming (1907) 154 Fed. 969.

Trimmings.—While ribbons that must be made up into bows, rosettes, and the like before being used for purposes of trimming or ornamentation are not dutiable as "trimmings" under paragraph 390, goods are so dutiable which are manufactured with ornamentation and characteristic design to be used as a trimming, and intended to be so used without anything further being done to them. Naday v. U. S., (1907) 155 Fed. 303, affirmed (C. C. A. 1908) 164 Fed. 44.

Vol. II, p. 465, par. 391.

Construction of proviso.—In construing paragraph 391, relating to "all manufactures . . . of which silk is the component material of chief value," and containing a proviso that "manufactures of which wool is a component material shall be classified and assessed for duty as manufactures of wool," it was held that the ordinary rule should be applied that a proviso at the close of an independent paragraph like this should be construed as limiting only what precedes it, and that the words "all manufactures" in the proviso have no broader relation than the same words in the beginning of the paragraph. U. S. v. Walsh, (1907) 154 Fed. 770, 83 C. C. A. 472, affirming 154 Fed. 749. See also Woodruff v. U. S., (1909) 168 Fed. 452, affirmed 175 Fed. 776, 99 C. C. A. 348. Contra, U. S. v. Seruggs, etc., Dry Goods Co., (C. C. A. 1907) 156 Fed. 940, reversing (1906) 147 Fed. 888.

Flax-wool fabrics.—The provision in paragraph 391 "that all manufactures, of which wool is a component material, shall be classified and assessed for duty as manufactures of wool," is limited to said schedule, which relates to goods containing silk, and the classification of fabrics of flax and wool should be determined without regard to said provision. U. S. v. E. De F. Wilkinson Co., (1907) 154 Fed. 751; U. S. v. Johnson, (C. C. A. 1907) 157 Fed. 754, affirming 154 Fed. 752.

Garnitures and hussar sets in designs of silk cord and braid, stitched in place in extremes about sixteen inches long and ten or eleven inches wide for the fronts of dress waists, and twenty-four to twenty-six inches long and twenty to twenty-four inches wide for dress skirts, and bought and sold by the piece, are not dutiable as silk trimmings, under paragraph 390, but as manufactures of silk not specially provided for, under paragraph 391. Garrison v. U. S., (1903) 121 Fed. 149.

Jacquard figured goods.—Goods which have been made on a Jacquard loom and contain two or more colors in the filling are dutiable under the provision in this paragraph for "all Jacquard figured goods in the piece, made on looms . . . and containing two or more colors in the filling," irrespective of the fact that they are not such goods as are customarily made upon the Jacquard loom nor are its characteristic and usual product. Bassett v. U. S., (1907) 154 Fed. 681.

In U. S. v. Johnson, (1905) 139 Fed. 55, affirmed (C. C. A. 1906) 142 Fed. 1039, it was held that silk goods woven on Jacquard looms, with broad and narrow stripes, the body between having a watered effect, were within the provision in paragraph 391 for "Jacquard figured goods" of silk.

Ornaments in the piece.—Ornaments, loops, etc., which are manufactured separately but are temporarily stitched together in six-yard lengths for convenience and economy in handling and carding, and which are used singly in decorating garments, are not "trimmings or galloons" within the meaning of paragraph 390, but are properly classified under paragraph 391. U. S. v. Hilbert, (1909) 171 Fed. 69, 96 C. C. A. 173.

Remanit.—So-called remanit, in the form of ropes, braids, and mats, which has been manufactured from silk produced by carbonizing rags containing silk, has been held to be a manufacture of silk, within the meaning of this paragraph. Frank v. U. S., (1906) 143 Fed. 702, affirmed (C. C. A.) 149 Fed. 1023.

Ribbons of silk and cotton.—Ribbons composed chiefly of silk, but in part of cotton, are not "ribbons . . . of cotton, . . . whether composed in part of India rubber or otherwise," under paragraph 320, for the word "otherwise" is there used with the meaning of "not," and not as relating to other materials than India rubber. Such ribbons are properly assessed as manufactures of silk, under paragraph 391. Gartner v. U. S., (1907) 154 Fed. 967, affirmed (C. C. A. 1908) 168 Fed. 1019.

Silk powder.—In Thomas v. U. S., (1905) 140 Fed. 98, affirmed (C. C. A. 1906) 145 Fed. 1023, it was held that a powder made from raw silk, which is used in the manufacture of wall paper and artificial flowers, is dutiable under paragraph 391, as manufactures of silk, or is at least so dutiable by similitude, under section 7.

Silk ribbons.—Silk ribbons, of which some are, and others are not, in the nature of trimmings, but which, whenever used for trimmings are required to be further fashioned for such use, and which are not in fact or commercially within the class of goods known as "trimmings," are not dutiable as silk trimmings, under paragraph 390, but as manufactures of silk, not specially provided for, under paragraph 391. Gartner v. U. S., (1904) 131 Fed. 574.

Small silk flags.—The provision for "toys" in paragraph 419 does not include small silk flags mounted on slender wooden staffs about four and one-half inches long, which are properly assessed under paragraph 391. Tuska v. U. S., (1908) 162 Fed. 814.

Trimnings for women's hats.—Goods woven wholly from silk from four to twelve inches wide, and used directly in these widths for trimming women's hats, etc., are not assessable as trimmings, under paragraph 390, not being trimmings until made into designs to be applied as trimmings, or into trimmings as they are applied to articles being trimmed, but are assessable as manufactures of silk, under paragraph 391. Robinson v. U. S., (1903) 121 Fed. 204.

Figured silks.—See under this title, vol. 2, p. 463, par. 387.

Vol. II, p. 466, par. 393.

Construction of foreign law.—Under paragraph 393, prescribing a countervailing duty on wood pulp imported from a "country or dependency" imposing "an export duty on pulp wood exported to the United States," customs officers are not required to pass upon questions of foreign constitutional or statutory construction, to determine whether such export duty was authorized. They are justified if they find correctly that what in fact was an export duty was acted upon by taxing officers throughout the country of exportation as fully as if imposed by unquestionable authority. Heckendorn v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1908) 162 Fed. 141.

"Country or dependency."—The British North America Act (Stat. 30-31 Vict., ch. 3, secs. 91, 92) gives the Dominion of Canada exclusive power to impose export and import duties, but distributes among the provinces of Canada certain legislative powers, including that of taxation by way of license; and under this authority the province of Quebec imposes what is in point of fact and in effect an export duty. It has been held that such duty is imposed by a "country or dependency," within the meaning of paragraph 393. Myers v. U. S., (1905) 140 Fed. 648.

Mixed goods.—In regard to pulp imported from Canada, made from wood of which a part is subject to a Canadian export duty, it was held that the countervailing duty equal to such export duty, which is imposed under paragraph 393, should be assessed on the basis of the percentage used therein of wood subject to the export duty, when such percentage is established by satisfactory evidence. Myers v. U. S., (1905) 140 Fed. 648.

Place of manufacture.—Pulp produced in Canada from wood cut on public lands in Quebec is subject to the countervailing duty provided in paragraph 393, irrespective of whether it is manufactured into pulp in that province or not. Myers v. U. S., (1905) 140 Fed. 648.

Canada license fee.—The action of the province of Quebec in imposing a license fee for cutting wood on public lands, which is reduced when the wood is manufactured into pulp in Canada, is in effect the imposition of an "export duty on pulp wood exported to the United States," within the meaning of paragraph 393. Myers v. U. S., (1905) 140 Fed. 648; Heckendorn v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1908) 162 Fed. 141.

Wood flour.—See under this title, vol. 2, p. 426, par. 208.

Vol. II, p. 466, par. 396.

Classification of printing paper.—In Hensel v. U. S., (1903) 126 Fed. 576, it was held that the provision in paragraph 396 for "printing paper . . . suitable for books and newspapers," is not limited to such paper as is suitable for printing both books and newspapers, and that certain paper used for printing covers of booklets, pamphlets, and the like, but not suitable for printing newspapers, is properly classifiable for duty under said provision, rather than under paragraph 402, covering "all other paper not specially provided for."

Thin, flimsy, colored paper.—In paragraph 396 the provision for printing paper "suitable for books and newspapers" prescribes an exceptionally low duty on such material on account of the educational value of books and newspapers, and only such paper as comes within the true spirit of the law should be assessed thereunder. A thin, flimsy, colored paper, said to be used for "printing circulars and printing of all kinds," but not shown to be used for books or newspapers, is not within the scope of the provision. Gallenkamp v. Wyman, (1906) 178 Fed. 460.

Handmade printing paper.—See under this title, vol. 2, p. 468, par. 401.

Grease-proof paper.—See under this title, vol. 2, p. 468, par. 402.

Vol. II, p. 466, par. 397.

Crepe paper.—The provision for "crepe paper" in this paragraph was intended to apply to paper that has been subjected to a creping process; and a paper made by that process and resembling crepe paper generally, but somewhat heavier, and treated with sizing for waterproofing purposes, is dutiable under that provision. Figel v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1909) 167 Fed. 537, affirming (1908) 160 Fed. 225.

Filtering paper—Act of 1890.—Filtering paper that has been cut into disks and made ready for use in filtering is not by this treatment removed from the provision in paragraph 419, Tariff Act Oct. 1, 1890, ch. 1244, sec. 1, Schedule M, 26 Stat. L. 599, for "papers commercially known as . . . 'filtering paper,' . . . made up in copying books, reams, or in any other form," Murphy v. U. S., (1896) 148 Fed. 336.

Vol. II, p. 467, par. 398.

Box tops made of surface-coated paper and having designs printed by the lithographic process are dutiable as "surface-coated papers . . . printed," under this paragraph, rather than as lithographic prints under paragraph 400. Devoy v. U. S., (1906) 147 Fed. 765.

Decalcomania paper is not dutiable, under

Vol. II, p. 467, par. 399.

"Flat envelopes."—Paper cut into particular shapes and sizes, ready to be folded and gummed, so as to constitute envelopes, and found to have been commercially known as "flat envelopes" at the time of the passage of the Act, was held dutiable as "paper envelopes, plain," under paragraph 399.

Vol. II, p. 468, par. 400.

Books for children's use.—In Petry v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1903) 127 Fed. 115, affirming 121 Fed. 207, it was held that the provision in this paragraph for "books of paper or other material for children's use, containing illuminated lithographic prints, not exceeding in weight twenty-four ounces each," is more specific than that in paragraph 502, for "books . . . printed exclusively in languages other than English."

Calendars composed of lithographic sheets with a metal strip at each end, and having a calendar pad composed of lithographic sheets attached thereto, the lithographic prints being the most important feature of the importation, are dutiable as lithographic prints bound, under paragraph 400, rather than as printed matter, paragraph 403, or as manufactures of paper, paragraph 407. Luyties v. U. S., (1910) 180 Fed. 1022.

Determination of cutting size.—The "cutting size" of post cards, imported in a folded, undetached condition, should be ascertained, under this paragraph, by measuring each card by itself, rather than by taking the whole series as the unit of measurement. Downing v. U. S., (1909) 172 Fed. 447.

Folded post cards.—Under this paragraph, relating respectively to "lithographic prints" and to "booklets," articles consisting of several post cards folded together and ready to paragraphs 400, 403, as lithographic prints or printed matter, being commercially a distinct article from either, but falls under the provision for "surface-coated papers . . . printed," under paragraph 398. U. S. v. Hempstead, (1908) 159 Fed. 290.

Handmade surface-coated paper.—See under this title, vol. 2, p. 468, par. 401.

Hunter v. U. S., (1906) 143 Fed. 914, distinguishing Hunter v. U. S., (1904) 134 Fed. 361, 67 C. C. A. 343, on the ground that in this case the article in question was shown by competent evidence to have been generally known as envelopes at the time of the passage of the Act of 1897.

be detached, with a paper cover pasted thereon, are covered by the former rather than the latter term. Downing v. U. S., (1909) 172 Fed. 447.

Lithographic prints — commercial designation.—The expression "lithographic prints," in paragraph 400, had no such definite, general, and uniform meaning in the wholesale trade and commerce of the United States at the time of the passage of that Act as to control its construction. Knauth v. U. S., (1907) 155 Fed. 144.

Lithographic prints of varying thickness.—In Fuld v. U. S., (1905) 138 Fed. 973, it was held, as to lithographic prints in the form of folding pictures, of which substantial parts are of one thickness, and relatively smaller parts, consisting of little figures of an ornamental and incidental character, of a less thickness, that they should be classified according to the thickness of the substantial portions.

Book with lithographic covers.—See under this title, vol. 2, p. 469, par. 403.

Box tops.—See under this title, vol. 2, p. 457, par. 398.

Decalcomania paper.—See under this title, vol. 2, p. 467, par. 398.

Wall pockets.—See under this title, vol. 2, p. 469, par. 407.

Vol. II, p. 468, par. 401.

Handmade printing paper.—Under paragraphs 398, 401, handmade printing paper is dutiable as "handmade" rather than as "printing paper," even when suitable for printing. U. S. v. Davies, (1910) 177 Fed. 371, 101 C. C. A. 425, reversing (1909) 172 Fed. 298. Contra, U. S. v. Miller, (1904) 135 Fed. 349, 68 C. C. A. 131, affirming 128 Fed. 469.

Handmade surface-covered paper.—The provision in paragraph 401 for handmade paper is not restricted to paper ejusdem generis with the writing, letter, and other papers enumerated in that paragraph; and handmade surface-coated paper is more specifically provided for thereunder than under the provision in paragraph 398, for surface-coated paper "not specially provided for." U. S. v. Seyd, (C. C. A. 1907) 158 Fed. 408, reversing 152 Fed. 657.

History of legislation.—In construing the application of the terms "handmade" and "printing," as applied to paper imports, consideration must be given to the evident intent of Congress (1) as revealed in numerous successive tariff acts to reduce the duties on printing paper for the benefit of the ordinary reading public, and (2) by elevating handmade paper into a new class, now that it has become in the art of printing a luxury. U. S. v. Davies, (1910) 177 Fed. 371, 101 C. C. A. 425, reversing (1909) 172 Fed. 298.

India transfer paper.—The handmade papers covered by paragraph 401, enumerating "writing, letter, handmade, drawing, . . . and typewriter paper," are not only those used as writing papers, but also paper suitable for other uses, as handmade India transfer paper used for making lithographic transfers and in printing. Benneche v. U. S., (1907) 153 Fed. 861, 83 C. C. A. 43.

Vol. II, p. 468, par. 402.

Duplex lithographic transfer paper, which is used in transferring decalcomania designs to pottery, and is produced by pasting together two sheets of paper, one coated with a gummy substance and the other uncoated, is "paper" rather than "manufactures of paper," under paragraphs 403, 407. Drakenfield v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1909) 167 Fed. 798.

Grease-proof paper.—In Germania Importing Co. v. U. S., (1905) 142 Fed. 215, it was held that an imitation parchment paper, known as grease-proof paper, which, though it can be printed on, is not suitable for printing purposes, but is used almost altogether as wrapping paper, is not dutiable as printing paper, under paragraph 396, but as paper not specially provided for, under paragraph 402.

Vol. II, p. 469, par. 403.

Book with lithographic covers.—A book having no lithographic prints, except one on the front cover, was held not to be within the provision for "books . . . containing illuminated lithographic prints," in paragraph 400, but to be dutiable under paragraph 403. Dutton v. U. S., (1907) 154 Fed. 214.

Cinematograph films are photographs within the meaning of this paragraph, and not dutiable under paragraph 17, as manufactures "of which collodion or any compound of pyroxylin is the component material of chief value." U. S. v. Berst, (1909) 175 Fed. 121.

Feathered post cards.—In Ringk v. U. S., (1908) 164 Fed. 1021, it appeared that imported post cards bore on the face words printed in different languages and on the back printed pictorial representations, and were ornamented with feathers; the feathers being the element of chief value. It was held that the printing, and not the feathers, constituted the chief feature of the cards, and that therefore the cards were "printed matter," within the meaning of paragraph 403.

Lace paper, which is used in decoratively packing confectionery, etc., is not brought within the provision for printed matter in paragraph 403 by reason of having names and addresses of merchants printed thereon. Said provision does not cover matter on which the

Lace paper.—In Hamilton v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1909) 167 Fed. 796, it appeared that plaid paper was stamped by a single operation into shapes with lacelike effects, which are known as tops or doilies, and are used for placing on the tops of packages of candy, fruit, etc., or under finger bowls. Plain paper might have been used for the same purpose, except that it would not have been so pleasing. It was held that, as the improvement of the original material had not interfered with its distinguishing characteristics, it was dutiable as "paper," rather than as "manufactures of paper." Contra, U. S. v. Hensel, (1907) 152 Fed. 578.

Classification of printing paper.—See under this title, vol. 2, p. 466, par. 396.

Post cards.—The provision in paragraph 403, for "printed matter," includes post cards of paper combined with such materials as celluloid, silk, and wool, the latter the components of chief value; one side bearing floral and decorative effects produced by spraying and embossing, and the other being printed with the words "Post Card" in various languages. U. S. v. Deutsch, (1910) 178 Fed. 272, 101 C. C. A. 116, affirming (1909) 172 Fed. 290.

Paper used for box tops and similar purposes was printed with trademarks and business names and addresses, and in some instances with floral or other decorative designs. It was held that the authorities would justify its classification as "printed matter," under paragraph 403. Hamilton v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1909) 167 Fed. 796.

Post card albums.—Books or albums used for preserving collections of postal cards are dutiable as "scrapbooks," under paragraph 404, and not under paragraph 403 as "books of all kinds including blank books." American News Co. v. U. S., (1906) 142 Fed. 786, affirmed (C. C. A.) 148 Fed. 1017, (C. C. A.) 149 Fed. 1022.

Japanese paper napkins.—The provision for "printed matter" in paragraph 403 does not include Japanese napkins made of crinkled paper and ornamented with designs in colors, stenciled, stamped, or printed thereon, which are properly classified under paragraph 407. Morimura v. U. S., (1908) 172 Fed. 248.

Printed paper bags.—Paper bags printed with advertising matter relating to the goods intended to be packed and sold within them are not "printed matter" within the meaning of paragraph 403, but are dutiable as manufactures of paper not specially provided for under paragraph 407. Kraut v. U. S., (1903) 130 Fed. 392; Kraut v. U. S., (1904) 134 Fed. 701, affirmed (C. C. A. 1905) 142 Fed. 1037.

Bead fringes, which consist of beads strung on a cord or webbing, and which are used to decorate lamps as trimmings and shades, are not removed by the doctrine of ejusdem generis from the provision for "ornaments, trimmings, and other articles . . . in part of beads," in paragraph 408. Holcomb v. U. S., (1910) 180 Fed. 795.

Beaded leather hand bags.—Ladies' hand bags in chief value of leather and ornamented with beads are dutiable as "articles . . . in part of beads," under this paragraph, rather than as "manufactures of leather, finished or unfinished, . . . or of which [leather] is the component material of chief value," under paragraph 450. U. S. v. Guthman, (1907) 159 Fed. 273.

Beads temporarily strung.—The provision in paragraph 408, for "beads of all kinds not threaded or strung," was intended to exclude only beads permanently threaded or strung, as in the manufacture of fabrics and other articles, and is held to include metal beads intended for the manufacture of purses, threaded or strung temporarily for the purpose of transportation and sale only, on cheap, weak cotton threads, and arranged in bunches. U. S. v. Buettner, (1904) 133 Fed. 183, 86 C. C. A. 289.

Gelatin spangles strung on cord, and used in making trimmings or ornaments for wearing apparel, are ejusdem generis with the articles enumerated in paragraph 408, and are dutiable under that paragraph rather than under paragraph 450 relating to "manufactures of . . . gelatin." Hirsch v. U. S., (1905) 141 Fed. 380, affirmed (C. C. A. 1906) 145 Fed. 1022.

Pierced imitation pearls.—Pierced imitation pearls are dutiable under paragraph 408 rather than under paragraph 435. U. S. v. Weinberg, (1905) 139 Fed. 1006.

Rice paste curtains.—Curtains in chief value of rice paste formed into regular-shaped particles are dutiable under this paragraph, relating to "articles . . . in part of beads," not being excluded by the doctrine of ejusdem generis, though the paragraph also enumerates laces, wearing apparel, ornaments, etc. Morimura v. U. S., (1909) 169 Fed. 279, 94 C. C. A. 555.

Rosaries are not subject to duty as "articles . . . in part of beads" under this paragraph, because not ejusdem generis with the other goods (ornaments, trimmings, etc.) there enumerated. Benziger v. U. S., (1909) 172 Fed. 280, affirmed (1910) 178 Fed. 1006, 101 C. C. A. 664.

Spangled hat crowns are in a general way of the same character as the class of materials considered under the provision in this paragraph for fabrics, wearing apparel, trimmings, etc., including "other articles . . . composed wholly or in part" of gelatin spangles, and are dutiable under said provision for "articles," rather than under paragraph 450 as manufactures of gelatin. Metzger v. U. S., (1905) 141 Fed. 381, affirmed (C. C. A. 1906) 146 Fed. 132.

Spangled horsehair braids, being very loose braids of the very long hair from the manes and tails of horses, carrying the spangles, which are the chief feature of the manufacture, are not assessable as "manufactures of wool ornamented with beads or spangles of whatever material composed," under paragraph 371, but as articles "composed wholly or in part of beads or spangles, . . . but not composed in part of wool," under paragraph 408. *Veit v. Metal beads temporarily strung.—See under this title, vol. 2, p. 425, par. 193.

Vol. II, p. 470, par. 409.

Braid tied with cotton.—A small amount of cotton thread in straw braids will not remove such articles from the provision in paragraph 409 for braids composed "wholly" of straw, where the thread is only used for temporarily tying the ends of the braids to prevent them from unraveling. Schiff v. U. S., (1905) 140 Fed. 63, affirmed (C. C. A. 1906) 145 Fed. 1023.

Horsehair goods.—Trimmed and untrimmed hats, and braids, composed of horsehair, are respectively dutiable by similitude as straw hats, trimmed and untrimmed, and straw braids, suitable for hats, under paragraph 409. Rheims Co. v. U. S., (1909) 169 Fed. 662, affirmed 175 Fed. 778, 99 C. C. A. 350. See also Paterson v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1908) 166 Fed. 733, reversing (1907) 159 Fed. 320.

Straw braids or plaits for hats.—In Schiff

v. U. S., (1905) 140 Fed. 63, affirmed (C. C. A. 1906) 145 Fed. 1023, it was held that certain merchandise, consisting of wide braids or plaits of straw, fastened together so as to form rectangular strips measuring about eighteen by thirty-six inches, are not dutiable as hats partly manufactured, under paragraph 409, but as straw braids or plaits, "suitable for making or ornamenting hats," etc., under the same paragraph.

Untrimmed hats of imitation horsehair, which is a material of vegetable origin, resemble untrimmed hats of straw more than silk wearing apparel, and are accordingly dutiable at the rate provided for the former, under paragraph 409. Cochran v. U. S., (1910) 180 Fed. 955.

Straw lace sewed with thread.—See under this title, vol. 2, p. 478, par. 449.

Vol. II, p. 470, par. 411.

Bristles in bunches.—In paragraph 411, relating to "bristles, sorted, bunched, or prepared," and in paragraph 509, relating to "bristles, crude, not sorted, bunched, or prepared," the distinction made is between absolute crudeness and advancement one or more steps in preparation for the arts; and bristles that have been tied in separate bundles, with their butt ends together, in preparation for brushmakers, are subject to duty under the former provision. Pushee v. U. S., (1907) 155 Fed. 265, affirmed (C. C. A. 1908) 158 Fed. 968.

Vol. II, p. 471, par. 414.

Button shanks.—The provision in this paragraph for "button molds," includes articles commercially known as button shanks, consisting of pairs of metal disks so constructed that when a piece of cloth is placed on top of one of the disks, and they are subjected to pressure, a cloth-covered button is produced. Hormann v. U. S., (1907) 153 Fed. 868, 83 C. C. A. 50, reversing (1906) 144 Fed. 707.

Construction of paragraph—parts of buttons.—In construing paragraph 414, which enumerates "buttons or parts of buttons" as being subject to "the following rates," and provides for "buttons" certain rates of duty, and "in addition thereto, on all the foregoing articles in this paragraph," a further rate of duty, it was held that parts of buttons were not subject to the rates provided for buttons; that they were not liable to the additional rate on "all the foregoing articles;" and that, no definite rate being attached to them, they were dutiable as manufactures of the component material of chief value. Hormann v. U. S., (1906) 144 Fed. 707.

Metal button molds.—Paragraph 414 provides that "buttons . . . and button molds . . . shall pay duty at the following rates," and the schedule of rates then prescribed mentions only "buttons." It was held that this provision for "buttons" should be construed as though reading "buttons and button molds," and that metal button molds should pay the rate assigned to metal buttons. Hormann v. U. S., (1907) 153 Fed. 868, 83 C. C. A. 50, reversing (1906) 144 Fed. 707.

Vol. II, p. 471, par. 415.

Amendment.—This section was amended by Act of Jan. 15, 1903, ch. 189, sec. 2, 10 Fed. Stat. Annot. 70.

Allowance of drawback.—Continuous customs custody is not essential to the allowance of drawback, under this paragraph, on coal imported into the United States and afterwards used for fuel on board of vessels registered under the laws of the United States, propelled by steam, and engaged in trade with foreign countries. (1908) 26 Op. Atty.-Gen. 531.

Anthracite coal.—In Perkins Co. v. U. S., (1910) 180 Fed. 935, it was held that certain anthracite coal does not contain ninety-two per cent. of fixed carbon, and is therefore within the provision in paragraph 415 for "all coals containing less than ninety-two per centum of fixed carbon."

Coal imported for the use of the navy is subject to the duties prescribed by paragraph 415, notwithstanding the coal is imported by the navy department, and the duties will have to be paid from the appropriations of that department. (1908) 26 Op. Atty.-Gen. 463.

Honolulu is a Pacific port of the United States within the meaning of this paragraph, and coal imported into the United States, which is afterwards used for fuel on board a vessel propelled by steam plying between the ports of New York and Honolulu and registered under the laws of the United States, is

Vol. II, p. 472, par. 418.

Articles sold by toy dealers not necessarily toys.—Articles do not become dutiable as toys because of the mere fact that they are imported and generally sold by toy dealers, nor because they may be used chiefly by children. Hamburger v. U. S., (1910) 180 Fed. 632.

Artificial shamrocks.—Artificial shamrocks, that are used by the Irish of all ages as a national emblem and are not commercially known as "toys," are not toys, though usually to be obtained in toy shops. U. S. v. Cattus, (C. C. A. 1909) 167 Fed. 532. See also under this title, vol. 2, p. 473, par. 425.

Bath babies and position babies are "dolls" within the meaning of this paragraph, and are dutiable as such, rather than as china toys, under paragraph 95. U. S. v. Butler, (1910) 180 Fed. 1005.

Cigar and firecracker fans.—The provision in paragraph 427, for "fans of all kinds," was, notwithstanding its broad language, not intended to include everything which might be called a fan, and to an exceedingly limited extent used as a fan; and so-called cigar and firecracker fans, consisting of small folding fans closing into cases representing cigars, etc., are not dutiable under said provision, but under paragraph 418 as "toys." Morimura v. U. S., (1909) 175 Fed. 887.

Magic lanterns.—Certain slightly made magic lanterns, not sufficiently substantial to be used by mature persons, but rather by children as toys, were dutiable as "toys," under paragraph 321, Tariff Act Aug. 27, 1894, and not as "optical instruments" under paragraph 98 of that Act. Borgfeldt v. U. S., (1900) 124 Fed. 457.

Mouth organs and metallophones.—Certain metallophones and mouth organs or harmonicas, having at least one full octave, and capable of playing a musical air, but not entitled to drawback. (1902) 24 Op. Atty.-Gen. 6.

Mixtures of coal and slack.—In U. S. v. Bond, (1908) 161 Fed. 165, it appeared that an importation in question was a mixture of bituminous coal and slack, in the proportion of about two to one. It was held that the two classes of merchandise should be subjected to the rates of duty respectively provided therefor in the tariff, on the basis of this proportion, regardless of their intermingled condition; but that, as such proportion could be fixed by the use of scale and screen on a single tub, the law would not cast on the importer the burden of the useless separation of the two kinds of coal.

so finished as to musical qualities that they would be used by musicians, being fitted rather for the amusement of children, are dutiable as "toys" under paragraph 418 and not as "musical instruments" under paragraph 453. Borgfeldt v. U. S., (1900) 124 Fed. 473.

"Toys."—An article is not necessarily a toy simply because children can or do play with it. In order to fall within that designation its intended and principal use must be for the amusement of children; or, if capable of other uses, it must nevertheless be commercially known as a "toy." Thannhauser v. U. S., (1908) 159 Fed. 228.

Toys made of celluloid, a compound of pyroxylin, are less specifically designated in the provision in paragraph 17 for "all compounds of pyroxylin, . . . and articles of which . . . any compound of pyroxylin is the component material of chief value," than in that in paragraph 418 for "toys . . . not specially provided for." *U. Ground corundum ore that has been advanced in value by processes of manufacture for a specific use is not a "crude mineral," within the meaning of paragraph 614, nor "manufactured sand," within the meaning of paragraph 671, but is dutiable as emery by similitude under paragraph 419. Myers v. U. S., (1910) 178 Fed. 462.

Pulverized corundum, which, though a distinct article from emery, is identical with it in use and nearly identical in material, is dutiable by similitude to ground emery under this paragraph. Myers v. U. S., (1907)

Artificial shamrocks are not "toys" within the meaning of paragraph 418, but are dutiable as "artificial leaves" under paragraph 425. U. S. v. Cattus, (C. C. A. 1909) 167 Fed. 532.

Bleached or dyed grasses that are intended for ornamental or decorative purposes are classifiable as "ornamental . . . leaves . . . not specially provided for," under this paragraph, rather than under paragraph 440 as "manufactures" of grass, or under paragraph 566 relating to "grasses . . . not dressed or manufactured." U. S. v. Bayersdorfer, (1909) 175 Fed. 959, 99 C. C. A. 449.

Feather boas, made by stringing dressed feathers upon a cord, are subject to the classification of "feathers . . . dressed," etc., under this paragraph, by virtue of section 7 prescribing that enumerated articles "shall be assessed at the highest rate at which the same would be chargeable if composed wholly of the component material thereof of chief value." *Legg v. Goose skins with down. — The provision in paragraph 426, for "furs dressed on the skin," does not include dressed goose skins with the down on. Such articles are dutiable as "bird skins, . . . dressed . . . or manufactured in any manner," under paragraph 425. Herskovitz v. U. S., (1910) 180 Fed. 631.

Grass piquets, consisting of stalks of oats or of wheat, cut in the milk, and grasses dyed to imitate their natural color, mixed with palm leaf and other artificial leaves, bound at the ends of the stems with wire, in all about fifteen inches in length, to be used for millinery purposes, are not taxable for duty under paragraph 449, as manufactures of grass, palm leaves, straw, weeds, etc., but are properly assessed at fifty per cent. ad valorem, under paragraph 425, as artificial or ornamental grains, leaves, and flowers, and stems or parts thereof, not specially provided for. Herman v. U. S., (1903) 121 Fed. 201, affirmed (1904) 128 Fed. 420, 63 C. C. A. 162.

U. S.*, (1910) 180 Fed. 632.

Peacock feathers in a crude condition, used in that state for ornamental purposes, are dutiable under the provision in this paragraph for "ornamental feathers," and not under that in the same paragraph for "feathers . . . crude." Silva v. U. S., (1903) 127 Fed. 781.

Prepared palm leaves. — Palm leaves that have been subjected to a process of painting, etc., to give them their natural appearance and to prevent decomposition, are dutiable as "ornamental . . . leaves . . . not specially provided for" under this paragraph, rather than as "palms, preserved, . . . suitable for decorative purposes," under paragraph 251, or as "manufactures" of palm leaf, under paragraph 449. Kreshower v. U. S., (1907) 152 Fed. 485; U. S. v. Bayersdorfer, (1909) 175 Fed. 959, 99 C. C. A. 449.

Vol. II, p. 474, par. 433.

Printed beer mats, consisting of round pieces of wood pulp upon which have been printed German verses, and the name and advertisement of beer dealers, are within this paragraph as a manufacture of pulp. Hollender v. U. S., (1910) 177 Fed. 594.

Vol. II, p. 474, par. 434.

Chatelaine purses of metal, gilded or plated in imitation of gold and silver, and set with imitation precious stones, which range in value from thirty-four marks per gross to thirty marks per dozen, are not within the provision in paragraph 434 for "articles commonly known as jewelry." Steinhardt v. U. S., (1903) 148 Fed. 512.

Millinery ornaments.—This section does not include so-called "millinery ornaments," used in trimming hats, which are flimsy articles, intended for ephemeral use, are not made by jewelers, and contain no gems or precious metals, but are made of base metal either wholly or in combination with imitation jet or imitation precious stones. U. S. v. Schiff, (C. C. A. 1905) 139 Fed. 549.

Pearls are within the provisions of this section. Hahn v. U. S., (1903) 131 Fed. 1000, affirmed (1904) 135 Fed. 349, 68 C. C. A. 130.

Ornamental slipper buckles.—See under this title, vol. 2, p. 423, par. 193.

Silver hand bags.—See under this title, vol. 2, p. 423, par. 193.

Vol. II, p. 474, par. 435.

Cut agate, garnet, etc., for jewelry settings.—Small pieces of agate, garnet, etc., advanced from their natural state by cutting or other process, for the purpose of fitting them for use as settings for jewelry, and known commercially as agates, garnets, etc., are more specifically provided for as "precious stones advanced," under this paragraph, than as "manufactures of agate, garnet, etc.," under paragraph 115. U. S. v. Lorsch, (1909) 172 Fed. 277.

"Dimensions."—The provision in this paragraph for imitation precious stones not exceeding an inch in "dimensions" does not exclude stones exceeding an inch in a single dimension. To be excluded they must exceed an inch in more than one direction. Lorsch v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1906) 146 Fed. 379, modified (1904) 135 Fed. 214.

Imitation pearls.—The provision in this paragraph for imitations of precious stones was held to cover imitation whole and half pearls, including such as have been strung on wire for purposes of manufacture. U. S. v. Weinberg, (1905) 139 Fed. 1006.

Incrusted stones.—In construing the provision in paragraph 435, for imitation precious stones not "ornamented or decorated," it was held, as to stones which have been incrusted but in which the incrustations are a part of the imitation, that they are not ornamented or decorated within the meaning of said provision. U. S. v. Downing, (1905) 139 Fed. 155.

Jewels for bearings.—Sapphires intended for bearings for electrical instruments are dutiable as precious stones, under this paragraph, rather than as articles composed of mineral substances under paragraph 97. U. S. v. American Express Co., (1904) 147 Fed. 894.

Opal balls—rock crystal rondelles.—In construing the provisions in paragraphs 408, 435, for “beads of all kinds,” and “precious stones,” respectively, it was held that pierced opal balls about one-fourth of an inch in diameter and pierced rock crystal rondelles, or small, flat, faceted disks, were dutiable under paragraph 435 rather than paragraph 408; these articles not being commercially known as beads. It was held also as to the rock crystal articles that they were dutiable under paragraph 435 rather than as manufactures of rock crystal under paragraph 115. U. S. v. American Gem, etc., Co., (1905) 142 Fed. 283.

Paste cameos, in imitation of shell cameos, which imitate certain descriptions of precious stones, are dutiable as imitation precious stones under this paragraph. U. S. v. Goldberg, (1904) 139 Fed. 706.

Rock crystal intaglios.—In construing the provision in paragraph 435 for “precious stones advanced in condition or value from their natural state by cleaving, splitting, cutting, or other process,” in reference to intaglios incised in rock crystal (a precious stone), which have been attractively and skillfully painted, the value and salability of the articles being chiefly attributable to the painting, it was held that the words “or other process” include such process of painting, and that such intaglios were dutiable under said provision, rather than as manufactures of rock crystal, not specially provided for, under paragraph 115. Benedict v. U. S., (1904) 135 Fed. 242, affirmed (C. C. A. 1906) 145 Fed. 914.

“Set.”—The word “set,” as used in this paragraph, has a well-known and well-defined trade meaning in connection with precious stones, which would not include the insertion of an agate bearing in a scale. Smith v. Computing Scale Co., (1906) 147 Fed. 890.

Agate bearings.—See under this title, vol. 2, p. 409, par. 115.

Bort.—See under this title, vol. 2, p. 488, par. 545.

Pierced imitation pearls.—See under this title, vol. 2, p. 470, par. 408.

Vol. II, p. 475, par. 436.

“Half pearls.”—Under section 7, providing that any unenumerated article “shall pay the same rate of duty which is levied on the enumerated article which it most resembles,” it has been held that so-called “half pearls,” consisting of the better part of the true pearl, from which the flaws or blemishes have been removed by sawing or splitting, and which are not adapted for stringing, but are chiefly useful for jewelry settings, and require labor and expense in completion, are dutiable at the same rate as “pearls in their natural state,” under paragraph 436, which they resemble more than the “pearls, set or strung,” enumerated in paragraph 434. Hahn v. U. S., (1903) 131 Fed. 1000, affirmed (C. C. A. 1904) 135 Fed. 349.

Loose pearls.—In Citroen v. U. S., (1909) 166 Fed. 693, 92 C. C. A. 365, it appeared that loose drilled pearls, imported in separate packages, had been assembled into a necklace abroad and tentatively worn by a person who contracted to purchase them, delivery to be made in the United States, and who, after receiving them here, added six more pearls and had them made into a necklace. It was held that as imported they were not “jewelry,” within the meaning of paragraph 434, but that they were dutiable as “pearls in their natural state,” by similitude, under paragraph 436. Of similar effect see U. S. v. Tiffany, (1909) 172 Fed. 300, affirmed (1910) 178 Fed. 1006, 101 C. C. A. 665.

In Neresheimer v. U. S., (1904) 136 Fed. 86, 68 C. C. A. 654, reversing (1903) 131 Fed. 977, it appeared that certain drilled pearls of exceptionally large size and fine quality were imported together, arranged in collections according to size, the largest in the centre. It appeared that these collections had not been selected for a special piece of jewelry, but that the pearls were to be sold separately on their individual merits, and that they had not been advanced to a special value beyond the aggregate amount of their individual values by an assortment and selection that fitted them for immediate transformation into a necklace or string of pearls. It was held that under the similitude clause in section 7 they bore a closer resemblance to “pearls in their natural state not strung or set” than to “pearls set or strung,” which are enumerated in paragraphs 436 and 434, respectively.

Vol. II, p. 475, par. 437.

Hides of the East Indian buffalo.—The term “hides of cattle” in paragraph 437 is not used in a commercial sense, but according to the ordinary dictionary meaning of the words, and refers to the hides of domesticated animals of the bovine species, including those of the East Indian buffalo. U. S. v. Schmoll, (1907) 154 Fed. 734, affirmed (C. C. A.) 157 Fed. 1005.

Singapore buffalo hides.—Singapore buffaloes are not “cattle,” because they are not domesticated, and their hides are therefore not within the provision for hides of “cattle,” in paragraph 437. Furthermore, the presence in the same paragraph of a drawback provision with respect to leather indicates an intention to include therein only such hides as can be tanned into leather, a use of which these Singapore hides are not susceptible. U. S. v. Wadleigh, (1909) 172 Fed. 169, affirmed (1910) 178 Fed. 1007, 101 C. C. A. 666.

Mud buffalo hides.—See under this title, vol. 2, p. 497, par. 664.

Vol. II, p. 475, par. 438.

Japanned skins—Act of 1890.—Japanned skins, used for uppers, were within the provision in paragraph 456, Tariff Act Oct. 1, 1890, ch. 1244, sec. 1, Schedule N, 26 Stat. L. 601, for "dressed upper leather, including . . . japanned leather," rather than under the provision in the same paragraph for "japanned calfskins," the latter provision being limited to japanned skins which were not upper leather. U. S. v. Bittel, (1892) 155 Fed. 554, affirmed (1893) 4 C. C. A. 680.

Skins for morocco.—The provision in this paragraph for "skins for morocco" is not limited to goatskins, but includes also certain sheepskins known as "New Zealand basils," or "Cape sheepskins." Helmuth v. U. S., (1903) 125 Fed. 634.

Vol. II, p. 476, par. 439.

Measurement of gloves.—In U. S. v. Mayer, (C. C. A. 1909) 175 Fed. 963, affirming (1908) 164 Fed. 905, it appeared that imported gloves exceeded the statutory dividing line as to length in some instances as much as a half inch; but that this excess was accidental, and did not affect the value, nor result in any advantage to buyer or seller. It was held that this excess is negligible, and should not affect the classification of the gloves, notwithstanding the provision in paragraph 439, that gloves shall be classified according to their measurement at "extreme length when stretched to their full extent."

Vol. II, p. 477, par. 445.

Cumulative duties.—The provision relative to leather gloves in this paragraph, that "in addition to the foregoing rates there shall be paid the following cumulative duties," justifies the imposition of more than one of said "cumulative duties" in addition to the rates applicable by virtue of the preceding provisions for gloves. Douillet v. U. S., (1904) 133 Fed. 1007.

Embroidered gloves.—This paragraph has been held not to cover gloves having three rows of embroidery, each of which presents on the back of the gloves the appearance of three-plait crochet work, but is produced by the needle with only one cord or strand or thread. U. S. v. Robinson, (1900) 124 Fed. 1013; Trefousse v. U. S., (1905) 144 Fed. 708, affirmed (C. C. A. 1907) 154 Fed. 1005.

Neither does it include gloves having but three points each, each point having three distinct rows of stitching, though the stitching shows nine chains of embroidery on the outside of the backs of the gloves and nine single rows of stitching on the inside. U. S. v. La Fetra, (1909) 172 Fed. 297, affirmed (1910) 178 Fed. 1006, 101 C. C. A. 665.

Vol. II, p. 478, par. 448.

Albolene.—The article known as "albolene," consisting of a mechanical combination of paraffin, a petroleum product, and ceresia, a fossil wax, the paraffin constituting eighty per cent. of the article by weight, but only four-elevenths of its value, is not a product of petroleum within the meaning of paragraph 626, providing for a countervailing duty on products of petroleum produced in any country which imposes a duty on petroleum or its products exported from the United States," but is dutiable under paragraph 448, as a manufacture of wax. Ropes v. U. S., (1900) 123 Fed. 990.

Ground cork refuse.—See under this title, vol. 2, p. 481, par. 463.

"Manufacture".—See under this title, vol. 2, p. 423, par. 193.

Vol. II, p. 478, par. 449.

Bone swords.—The provision for "swords" in paragraph 154, relating to "swords, sword-blades, and side-arms," does not include so-called "bone swords" used as curios, ornaments, etc., which are properly dutiable under paragraph 449. Morimura v. U. S., (1908) 165 Fed. 64.

"Chip".—In Ollesheimer v. U. S., (1907) 154 Fed. 167, certain baskets were held not to be manufactures of "chip" within the meaning of that term as used in this paragraph.

Dress shields.—Act of 1890.—In Darlington v. U. S., (1905) 136 Fed. 716, it was held that certain wearing apparel, consisting of dress shields, and composed in chief value of rubber, and in part of cotton, were dutiable as manufactures in chief value of India rubber, under paragraph 460, Tariff Act Oct.

1, 1890, and not under paragraph 349 of said Act, relating to wearing apparel composed of cotton, or in chief value thereof, and to such wearing apparel "having India rubber as a component material."

Grasses.—Certain grasses were held to be more specifically provided for as manufactures of grass under this paragraph than as "artificial grains, leaves, or flowers," under paragraph 425. Bayersdorfer v. U. S., (1909) 171 Fed. 286.

Kinoki baskets.—Baskets made of twisted kinoki wood shavings were held to be dutiable as "manufactures of chip," under this paragraph. Morimura v. U. S., (1909) 167 Fed. 687.

Rubber recoil pads, intended for reducing the shock from the discharge of a gun, but which are not a necessary attachment, their use being optional, were held, in the absence of satisfactory evidence of a commercial understanding in support of such classification, not to be dutiable as parts or fittings of guns, under paragraph 158, but as manufactures of India rubber, under paragraph 449. Schoverling v. U. S., (1906) 142 Fed. 302.

Rubber sponges are dutiable under this paragraph as manufactures of india rubber, and not under paragraph 82, relating to sponges. Alfred H. Smith Co. v. U. S., (1906) 143 Fed. 691, affirmed (C. C. A.) 149 Fed. 1022.

Straw lace sewed with thread which constitutes a substantial element of its cost, and without which the material could not be held together or be a merchantable article, is not within the provision in paragraph 409, for lace composed "wholly" of straw, but is dutiable as a manufacture in chief value of straw, under paragraph 449. Kurtz v. U. S., (1904) 136 Fed. 268, affirmed (C. C. A. 1906) 146 Fed. 127. To the same effect under the Tariff Act of 1890. U. S. v. Rheims, (1894) 154 Fed. 865, affirming (C. C. A.) 89 Fed. 1020.

Beaver strips. — In Hermann v. U. S., (1905) 141 Fed. 486, it was held that so-called beaver strips, in the form of rectangular pieces of felted material measuring fifteen to twenty-four inches wide and thirty-six to forty-eight inches long, used in the manufacture of hats and composed in part of wool, but chiefly of rabbit fur, are not within the provision in paragraph 370 for articles of wearing apparel in part of wool, nor within that in paragraph 432 for hats or forms for hats, but are dutiable as manufactures in chief value of fur, under paragraph 450.

Fountain pens without the pen points are not "penholders" within the meaning of paragraph 187, but are dutiable as manufactures of hard rubber under paragraph 450. Schrader v. U. S., (1910) 180 Fed. 953.

Leather watch guards, mounted with cheap miniature bits, stirrups, etc., intended to be worn by horse-men, are not "articles commonly known as jewelry," as provided for in paragraph 434, but are dutiable as manufactures of leather, under paragraph 450. Veil v. U. S., (1904) 128 Fed. 471.

Plaster of paris statuettes. — Decorated and ornamental statuettes, made from plaster of paris — sulphuric acid, lime, and water — are not taxable under paragraph 95, as china, porcelain, or crockery ware, including statuettes ornamented, etc., but are taxable under paragraph 450, as manufactures of plaster of paris, or of which such substance is the component material of chief value, not specially provided for in the Act. Bing v. U. S., (1903) 121 Fed. 194.

Slabs of mother-of-pearl. — This paragraph covering "manufactures" of mother-of-pearl was held to include mother-of-pearl made into slabs by cutting or grinding, which are designed for use in the manufacture of knife handles and similar articles. *Morris European, etc., Express Co. v. Bronze statuary. — The provision for "statuary . . . wrought by hand . . . from metal," in paragraph 454, does not include a bronze statue cast in a foundry by artisans from a model made in plastic material by an artist, but upon which he did little or no retouching. Altman v. U. S., (1909) 172 Fed. 161.

But in U. S. v. Tiffany, (C. C. A. 1908) 160 Fed. 408, affirmed (1907) 154 Fed. 168, it appeared that a statute of great value and high artistic merit, in which bronze was overwhelmingly predominant in bulk, though ivory was the component of chief value, was produced by the "cire perdue" process. After the metal part was cast, it was gone over carefully by hand by a renowned sculptor, who thereby made the alterations necessary to the execution of his artistic conceptions; this being the important part, which gave the piece its distinctive personal character. The entire work, from the original conception to the last touch, was under the sculptor's constant supervision, and he did everything that a sculptor could do to make his work complete. It was held that this statue was within the provision of paragraph 454, for "such statuary as is cut, carved, or otherwise wrought by hand . . . from metal, and is the professional production of a statuary or sculptor only," and not within paragraph 450 as a manufacture of metal and ivory, ivory chief value.

"By hand."—Under this paragraph it is not necessary that the entire work on a statue shall be "by hand," nor that the entire handiwork must be that of the statuary or sculptor personally. U. S. v. Tiffany, (C. C. A. 1908) 160 Fed. 408, affirming (1907) 154 Fed. 168.

Carved "cistern."—A "cistern" in several pieces, with figures sculptured thereon in almost full relief, is "statuary" within the meaning of that term as used in this paragraph. U. S. v. American Express Co., (1905) 139 Fed. 89.

Metal statuary.—The provision for "statuary . . . wrought . . . from metal" does not require metal to be the only component, or even the component of chief value. It is enough if it so greatly predominate as to characterize the entire work. U. S. v. Tiffany, (C. C. A. 1908) 160 Fed. 408, affirming (1907) 154 Fed. 168.

Painted calendar.—The term "paintings," in paragraph 454, includes handpainted panels having a small calendar affixed, which is a trifling part of the entire article. Vantine v. U. S., (1909) 168 Fed. 562.

Painted lithographs.—The provision in this paragraph for "paintings" in oil or water colors, does not include articles consisting of lithographic prints pasted on wood, and painted to a slight extent, and varnished. Steinhardt v. U. S., (1909) 172 Fed. 168.

"Paintings."—The expression "paintings in oil or water colors," as used in this paragraph, is not a commercial term, but is used descriptively. Steinhardt v. U. S., (1909) 172 Fed. 168.

Paintings on copper.—Certain antique mythological paintings of great value and high artistic character, consisting of a ewer and tray made of copper, and enameled by a process not now understood, were held not to be covered by the provision in paragraph 159, for "sheets, plates, wares, or articles of iron, steel, or other metal, enameled or glazed with vitreous glasses," but were dutiable under paragraph 454, as "paintings in oil or water colors." Amerman v. U. S., (1900) 124 Fed. 298.

Paragraph construed liberally.—In providing a low rate of duty on works of art in this paragraph Congress evidently intended to welcome the works of meritorious artists and sculptors, and to exclude from the low rate the productions of artisans and empirics. The definition of statuary as "the professional production of a statuary or sculptor only" was aimed against such articles as are made by machinery or unskilled labor, or are cast in large numbers from molds by ordinary workmen. Such paragraph should be construed liberally. U. S. v. Tiffany, (C. C. A. 1908) 160 Fed. 408, affirming (1907) 154 Fed. 168.

Professional productions of a statuary or sculptor.—A marble figure, produced in the establishment of a professional sculptor, under whose instructions the original model was made, and who gave such oral instructions and other supervision as were necessary to insure a faithful reproduction of the design, was held to be "statuary" within the meaning of paragraph 454, where it is provided that that term, wherever used in the Act, "shall be understood to include only such statuary . . . as is the professional production of a statuary or sculptor only." Sibbel v. U. S., (1900) 124 Fed. 105.

Reciprocal commercial agreements.—The definition given the term "statuary," as used in this Act, governs the provision for "statuary" in section 3, and the reciprocal commercial agreements negotiated as provided in said section. Altman v. U. S., (1909) 172 Fed. 161.

"Solid block."—The words "solid block," as used in this paragraph, do not refer to metal. U. S. v. Tiffany, (C. C. A. 1908) 160 Fed. 408, affirming (1907) 154 Fed. 168.

Statues in pieces.—The provision in this paragraph for statuary produced from "a solid block or mass of marble," etc., is not limited to statuary made from single blocks, and has been held to include statues each carved from three solid blocks of marble. U. S. v. Perry, (1904) 133 Fed. 841.

Pyroxylin smokers' articles.—This paragraph enumerates pyroxylin smokers' articles more specifically than does paragraph 17, covering "all compounds of pyroxylin . . . if in finished or partly finished articles." U. S. v. Knauth, (1906) 150 Fed. 610.

Smokers' articles.—Certain articles used chiefly for the convenience of smokers, consisting of tables on top of which are affixed smokers' accessories, and of an ornamental miniature automobile for the use of smokers, are dutiable as "smokers' articles" under this paragraph, and not as "house or cabinet furniture of wood," under paragraph 208. Steinhardt v. U. S., (1903) 126 Fed. 443.

Vol. II, p. 481, par. 462.

Umbrella sticks with celluloid handles.—Umbrella sticks of wood having celluloid handles, that constitute the chief element of value in the articles, are more specifically provided for as “sticks for umbrellas” in this paragraph than as “articles of which . . . any compound of pyroxylin is the component material of chief value” in paragraph 17. U. S. v. Borgfeldt, (1900) 124 Fed. 304.

Vol. II, p. 481, par. 463.

Flax noils are dutiable as waste, under this paragraph, and not under paragraph 326 as “tow of flax” by similitude. Ritchie v. U. S., (1905) 141 Fed. 664.

Fur combings.—In U. S. v. Hatters' Fur Exch., (1907) 153 Fed. 595, it was held as to combings of loose or dead hair obtained in preparing rabbit or hare skins, which are commercially known as “hares' combings” or “fur waste,” and which, after further treatment, are used as an adulterant in cheap hats, that they are dutiable as waste under this paragraph, and not as furs prepared for hatters' use under paragraph 426, nor free of duty as “furs, undressed,” under paragraph 561.

Ground cork refuse.—Small pieces of cork, which have been produced by grinding the refuse of cork bark for convenience in handling, and which need further preparation before becoming fit for its ultimate use in the manufacture of linoleum, etc., have been held to be dutiable as waste, under this paragraph, and not as a manufacture of cork under para-

Selected pieces of second-hand jute bagging, intended for patching the covering of cotton bales, are not “bagging for cotton, gunny cloth, and similar fabrics, suitable for covering cotton,” under paragraph 344, nor “rags,” under paragraph 648, but are dutiable as “waste” under paragraph 463. U. S. v. Davies, (1908) 160 Fed. 456, 87 C. C. A. 672.

Wood flour.—See under this title, vol. 2, p. 426, par. 208.

Vol. II, p. 482, sec. 2.

Presumption to classification.—Where the classification of an import is open to a construction which would as well place it on the free list as on the dutiable list, the course most favorable to the importer must be adopted. Hempstead v. Thomas, (C. C. A. 1903) 122 Fed. 538.

Vol. II, p. 482, par. 464.

Phthalic anhydride and tetrachlorphthalic anhydride.—Two coal-tar preparations, consisting of phthalic anhydride and tetrachlorphthalic anhydride, which, though not acids chemically, are commercially known as, and perform the functions of, acids, were free of duty under paragraph 473, Free List, sec. 2, ch. 1244, Tariff Act Oct. 1, 1890, as “acids used for . . . manufacturing purposes,” and were not dutiable under paragraph 19 of said Act as “coal-tar preparations.” Heller, etc., Co. v. U. S., (1900) 124 Fed. 299.

Vol. II, p. 482, par. 468.

Albumen.—An article which is not albumen in the technical language of chemists, though one in common speech, is not within paragraph 245, putting a duty on “albumen, egg or blood,” but within paragraph 468, putting on the free list “albumen not specially provided for.” Merchants' Despatch Transp. Co. v. U. S., (1903) 121 Fed. 443.

Vol. II, p. 482, par. 473.

Amendment.—This paragraph was amended by Act of March 3, 1903, ch. 998, 32 Stat. L. 1023, 10 Fed. Stat. Annot. 71.

Construction of paragraph.—This paragraph does not limit the right of free importation to citizens of the United States, nor restrict it to animals imported for the personal use of the importer, and not for sale; and, in view of the manifest policy of the provision to encourage improvement in the breeds of live stock by farmers and stock raisers, neither the administrative officers nor the courts are authorized to read such restriction into the law. In re Page, (1904) 128 Fed. 317.

Regulations of Secretary of Treasury.—The requirement in the regulations of the Secretary of the Treasury that proof should be produced of the registry of the grandsires and granddames of animals imported for breeding purposes is not in contravention of the statute. Borden v. U. S., (1904) 132 Fed. 205.

Arrowroot starch.—See under this title, vol. 2, p. 438, par. 285.

Vol. II, p. 484, par. 482.

Chrome alum.—The provision for articles in a "crude state," in this paragraph, does not include chrome alum, which is removed from its crude state of a paste by a crystallizing process, in which it is freed from incidental impurities. Kuttroff v. U. S., (1909) 169 Fed. 283, 94 C. C. A. 559.

Vol. II, p. 484, par. 483.

Importations of Porto Rican products.—All articles of Porto Rican origin exported from Porto Rico to foreign countries after the passage of the Foraker Act of April 12, 1900, 31 Stat. L. 77, 5 Fed. Stat. Annot. 762, may, since the proclamation of the President on July 25, 1901, doing away with the fifteen per cent. duty imposed under section 3 of that Act, be imported into the United States free of duty under paragraph 483, provided the articles have not been advanced in value or improved in condition by any process of manufacture or other means. (1902) 24 Op. Atty-Gen. 55.

Tobacco grown in Porto Rico after the cessation of that island to the United States, and brought into this country for warehousing, and afterwards exported to Canada and thence returned to the United States, is within the benefits of paragraph 483. (1903) 24 Op. Atty-Gen. 612.

Proof of identity.—Roberts v. U. S., (1910) 178 Fed. 607, following U. S. v. Dominici, (C. C. A. 1897) 78 Fed. 334, set out in the original note.

Vol. II, p. 485, par. 489.

Commercial carbonate of baryta is exempt from duty under this paragraph, and not dutiable at twenty-five per cent. ad valorem, under paragraph 3, as a chemical compound or salt not provided for. Gabriel v. U. S., (1903) 121 Fed. 208.

Vol. II, p. 485, par. 493.

Stuffed birds.—In Morimura v. U. S., (1904) 141 Fed. 383, it was held in regard to stuffed skins of domestic chicks and ducklings, used by confectioners and dealers in Easter goods and novelties, that they were not "toys" within the meaning of paragraph 418, but "birds, stuffed," under paragraph 493.

Vol. II, p. 485, par. 494.

Guinea fowls and turkeys.—See under this title, vol. 2, p. 436, par. 278.

Vol. II, p. 485, par. 498.

Under Act of 1894.—In U. S. v. Markt, (1899) 124 Fed. 1012, it was held that the provision in Tariff Act of Aug. 27, 1894, ch. 349, sec. 2, Free List, par. 407, 28 Stat. L. 538, for "bolting cloths, especially for milling purposes, but not suitable for the manufacture of wearing apparel," was not limited to bolting cloth composed of silk, but included also bolting cloth made of fine copper-wire gauze.

Vol. II, p. 486, par. 502.

Unbound portfolios.—In Downing v. U. S., (1903) 130 Fed. 393, it was held that the provision in paragraph 502, for "books and pamphlets printed exclusively in languages other than English," includes certain portfolios of two kinds, made up of loose sheets not intended to be bound together in book form, and containing, respectively, nineteen and twenty-four sheets of pictures and prints, and accompanied, respectively, with four and twelve loose pages printed in foreign languages; each portfolio having a loose outside covering, bearing the title of the work.

Books for children's use.—See under this title, vol. 2, p. 468, par. 400.

a preface of fifteen lines in German. Downing v. U. S., (1905) 140 Fed. 92, following Downing v. U. S., (1903) 130 Fed. 393.

Literary and social club.—In U. S. v. Vandiver, (1903) 122 Fed. 740, it appeared that the charter of a club provided that it was formed "as a permanent social club, for the promotion of literary, artistic, and antiquarian tastes among the citizens of P., and such kindred purposes as the club may from time to time determine, by establishing and maintaining a library and reading room, and a collection of works of art and antiquities, either by loan or otherwise." It appeared that while the club maintained a well-selected and valuable library, etc., its social side was fully as prominent as its literary or artistic side. It was held that books for the club were not admissible free of duty.

Vol. II, p. 486, par. 504.

Automobiles.—In the provision in paragraph 504, for books, libraries, furniture, and "similar household effects," it differs from previous legislation in the insertion of the term "similar." It has been held: (1) That this insertion indicated an intention to do away with the exemption of household effects generally, and to restrict it to such as are like books, etc., there mentioned; and (2) that automobiles are not "similar" to such articles. U. S. v. Grace, (1909) 166 Fed. 748, 92 C. C. A. 596. Compare Hillhouse v. U. S., (1907) 152 Fed. 163, 81 C. C. A. 415, reversing (1906) 142 Fed. 303, in which it was held that an automobile should not be excluded from importation free of duty as household effects used abroad more than one year, by reason of having been extensively repaired shortly before importation; but that so much of the machine as was a new manufacture might be assessed with duty, while the rest, including the cost of overhauling, oiling, cleaning, readjusting, and regulating, was free under this paragraph.

Continuity of use abroad.—The provision for household effects "used abroad . . . not less than one year," is satisfied if the periods of such use aggregate one year, even though not continuous. Hillhouse v. U. S., (1907) 152 Fed. 163, 81 C. C. A. 415, reversing (1906) 142 Fed. 303.

Bristles in bunches.—See under this title, vol. 2, p. 470, par. 411.

Vol. II, p. 487, par. 514.

Zinc ores.—The zinc ores known as carbonate, silicate, and sulphide of zinc, are free of duty, the carbonate and silicate as "calamine," under this paragraph, and the sulphide as "minerals, crude," under paragraph 614, except that when they contain lead they are subject to the duty provided on "lead bearing ore of all kinds," in paragraph 181. U. S. v. Brewster, (1909) 167 Fed. 122, 92 C. C. A. 574.

Vol. II, p. 487, par. 515.

Synthetic camphor.—The classification of synthetic camphor should be determined by the same consideration as of natural camphor, and where, measured by the principal tests, it still retains impurities that bring it far below the standard of refined camphor, and closely resembles the crude natural product, it is subject to classification as "camphor, crude," under paragraph 515, rather than as "camphor, refined," under paragraph 12. U. S. v. Schering, (C. C. A. 1908) 163 Fed. 246.

Vol. II, p. 487, par. 524.

Soluble creosote, an article prepared from coal-tar dead oil, is less specifically provided for as a "chemical compound" than under a provision for "products or preparations of coal-tar," and was properly classified for duty under the latter head in paragraph 443, Free List, sec. 2, ch. 349, Tariff Act Aug. 27, 1894. 28 Stat. L. 539, or paragraph 15 of the Tariff Act July 24, 1897. Schoellkopf v. U. S., (1901) 124 Fed. 89.

Copper plates for engravers' use. — Plates that have been ground, polished, and planished are not copper in "plates . . . not manufactured," within the meaning of this paragraph. U. S. v. Drahsenfeld, (1910) 178 Fed. 258, 101 C. C. A. 618, reversing (1909) 172 Fed. 296.

Copper matte, an article containing lead and copper, and produced in smelting ores, which is not strictly an ore itself, and which is shown to be known commercially and scientifically as copper regulus, is not dutiable under the provision in paragraph 181, for "lead-bearing ore of all kinds," but is free of duty as "copper, regulus of," under paragraph 534. Spencer v. Philadelphia Smelting, etc., Co., (1899) 124 Fed. 1002.

Vol. II, p. 488, par. 537.

Cotton waste containing jute. — The provision in paragraph 537, for "cotton waste," includes a mixture of cotton waste and jute threads in about equal proportions, which is commercially known as "cotton waste." Wood v. U. S., (1908) 160 Fed. 990.

Vol. II, p. 488, par. 542.

Vol. II, p. 488, par. 545.

Bort. — Industrial diamonds of the description known as bort, which have been pierced by a process of drilling or cutting, are not dutiable as diamonds advanced by cutting or other process, under paragraph 435, but are free of duty as "bort," under paragraph 545. U. S. v. American Express Co., (1905) 140 Fed. 967. See also U. S. v. Fifteen Drilled Diamonds, (1904) 127 Fed. 753.

Construction of paragraph. — In the provision for "diamonds . . . not advanced . . . including miners' diamonds," in this paragraph, "including" is used as a word of addition, rather than of specification. Sullivan Machinery Co. v. U. S., (1909) 168 Fed. 561.

Unset miners' diamonds. — This paragraph provides for "diamonds . . . not advanced from their natural state by cleaving, splitting, . . . including miners' . . . diamonds not set." It has been held that the provision for miners' diamonds is not qualified by what precedes, and that such diamonds, split but unset, are within the paragraph. Sullivan Machinery Co. v. U. S., (1909) 168 Fed. 561.

Vol. II, p. 488, par. 548.

Dried lizards, used by the Chinese in compounding a medicine, are drugs within the meaning of this paragraph. Wing On Wo v. U. S., (1906) 148 Fed. 334.

Guarana, a medicinal drug, consisting of a dried paste in the form of sausage-shaped rolls, this being the crudest state in which it is ever imported, and which, before being used as a medicine, must be further prepared, is not dutiable as a "medicinal preparation" under paragraph 68, but is free of duty under the provision in paragraph 548, for articles "which are drugs and not edible and are in a crude state." Cowl v. U. S., (1900) 124 Fed. 475.

purposes," within the meaning of paragraph 549. Hansen v. U. S., (1908) 175 Fed. 892.

Duck's eggs. — See under this title, vol. 2, p. 431, par. 241.

Vol. II, p. 489, par. 555.

Under Act of 1890. — In Detroit Fish Co. v. U. S., (1901) 125 Fed. 801, it appeared that an American corporation imported fish caught in Canadian fresh waters by a Canadian corporation, which in catching the fish used nets which were bought by the former corporation, and leased to the latter for a period covering the life of the nets, and for a sum much less than their value. It was held that the importing corporation "owned" these nets within the contemplation of paragraph 571, Tariff Act Oct. 1, 1890, ch. 1244, sec. 2, Free List, 26 Stat. L. 606, providing for the free entry of "fresh or frozen fish (except salmon), caught in fresh waters . . . with nets or other devices owned by citizens of the United States," and that the fish thus caught were free of duty under said paragraph.

Vol. II, p. 489, par. 559.

"Brine." — Cherries immersed in a solution containing not more than .402 per cent. of salt are not fruits in "brine" within the meaning of this paragraph. Cause Mfg. Co. v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1906) 151 Fed. 4.

Limes in brine have been held not to be dutiable as "limes" under paragraph 266, but to be free of duty under paragraph 559 as "fruits in brine, not specially provided for." Brennan v. U. S., (1905) 136 Fed. 743,

69 C. C. A. 395, reversing (1904) 129 Fed. 837.

U. S.*, (1909) 175 Fed. 588.

Unsorted sheepskins. — Sheepskins, pur-

Fur combs. — See under this title, vol. 2, p. 481, par. 463.

Vol. II, p. 490, par. 565.

Construction of proviso. — In construing the provision in this paragraph for "glass plates or discs, rough cut or unwrought," with the proviso that "discs exceeding eight inches in diameter may be polished sufficiently to enable the character of the glass to be determined," it was held that the proviso does not require the exclusion from the paragraph of polished square plates less than eight inches across, where the polishing is done simply to determine the character of the articles, is of no other use, and is taken off in their manufacture. Hansel v. U. S., (1905) 139 Fed. 95.

U. S.*, (1910) 180 Fed. 638.

Tungsten ore, the primary extracted product of which is used as a mordant in dyeing cloth and for various other commercial purposes, and another to make high-grade steel, imparting thereto extreme hardness, density, weight, and durability, is free from duty under this paragraph, and not dutiable at twenty per cent. ad valorem under section 183, which covers "metallic mineral sub-

It is immaterial that there is another and more refined product known and dealt in under the same name. Zaloom v. U. S., (1905) 140 Fed. 31.

Muguet pomade.—So-called muguet pomade produced by the combination of several kinds of enfleurage grease, to which is added about one-half of one per cent. of various essential oils to fortify and combine the article, thus producing an odor like that of the lily of the valley, was held to be free of duty, under this paragraph, as enfleurage grease. Lueders v. U. S., (1905) 143 Fed. 918.

Nut oil.—So-called nut oil, derived from the fruit of aleurites vernica, of China, is properly subject to classification under the provision in this paragraph for "nut oil or oil of nuts not otherwise specially provided for," and not under that in paragraph 3, for "essential oils." Hills v. U. S., (1903) 127 Fed. 970.

Olive oil.—In Holbrook Mfg. Co. v. U. S., (1909) 174 Fed. 736, certain olive oil was found to be edible, and was held therefore to be excluded from paragraph 626.

Paraffin.—The proviso in this paragraph providing a countervailing duty on "crude petroleum, or the products of crude petroleum," is not limited to the articles enumerated in the preceding portion of that paragraph, but should be read into every section of the tariff which enumerates a product of petroleum. The special enumeration of "paraffin," in paragraph 633, does not remove that substance from the scope of this proviso. U. S. v. Downing, (C. C. A. 1906) 146 Fed. 56, reversing (1905) 139 Fed. 58.

Petroleum products—countervailing duty.—This paragraph, providing a countervailing duty on "crude petroleum, or the products of crude petroleum, produced in any country which imposes a duty on petroleum or its products exported from the United States," is intended to provide that when crude petroleum or any of its products is imported from a country which imposes a duty thereon when imported from the United States, it shall pay duty at the rate so imposed by such country on merchandise in the same condition. A product of petroleum is subject to the duty so imposed by the country of manufacture on such product when coming from the United States, rather than to that so imposed on crude petroleum by the country in which the petroleum was produced. If no duty is so imposed on such product by the country in which it is manufactured, it is not liable to the countervailing duty, even though produced from petroleum originating in a country which does impose such a duty thereon. U. S. v. Downing, (C. C. A. 1906) 146 Fed. 56, reversing (1905) 139 Fed. 58; U. S. v. Marsilly, (C. C. A. 1908) 165 Fed. 186; U. S. v. Swan, etc., Co., (1909) 169 Fed. 108, 95 C. C. A. 669.

"Products of petroleum."—The provision in this paragraph for "products of crude petroleum" does not include articles not composed in chief value of petroleum, even though the petroleum predominates in quantity. U. S. v. Downing, (C. C. A. 1906) 146 Fed. 56, reversing (1905) 139 Fed. 58.

Refined cocoanut oil.—Cocoanut oil of the melting point of 70° to 75° F., which has been purified and rendered suitable for culinary purposes and the manufacture of high-grade soaps, and which is not susceptible of the same uses as cocoa-butter, is not subject to duty as "cocoa-butterine," under paragraph 282, but is free of duty under paragraph 626, as cocoanut oil. U. S. v. Oriental American Co., (1904) 129 Fed. 249; Fuerst v. U. S., (1909) 176 Fed. 95, 100 C. C. A. 25, reversing (1908) 166 Fed. 1014.

Vol. II, p. 494, par. 627.

Orange and lemon peel immersed in brine for the purpose of protecting it from decay during transit, without affecting its properties or quality, is not "preserved" within the meaning of paragraph 267, but is free of duty under paragraph 627. Causse Mfg. Co. v. U. S., (1906) 150 Fed. 419.

Vol. II, p. 494, par. 628.

Orchid and Persian berry extract.—See under this title, vol. 2, p. 504, sec. 6.

Vol. II, p. 494, par. 632.

Waste containing wool.—Certain waste of an inferior quality, fit only for paper stock, consisting of mill sweepings, which contain not more than one per cent. of wool, that is not of sufficient fibre for commercial purposes, and is not separable from the material with which it is mixed, is not dutiable as waste in part of wool, under paragraph 362, but is within the provision for "paper stock . . . fit only to be converted into paper," in paragraph 632. In re Downing, (1905) 139 Fed. 590.

Vol. II, p. 494, par. 633.

Paraffin.—See under this title, vol. 2, p. 493, par. 626.

Vol. II, p. 494, par. 638.

Reagent bottles are admissible free of duty. Hempstead v. U. S., (1903) 122 Fed. 752.

Surgical scissors are admissible free of duty. Hempstead v. U. S., (1903) 122 Fed. 752.

Treasury regulations.—In Eimer v. U. S., (1906) 146 Fed. 144, it appeared that certain scientific apparatus, etc., imported for educational institutions was claimed to be subject to paragraph 638, exempting such articles from duty when imported in compliance with regulations of the Secretary of the Treasury; but that the importers had not filed a certificate of delivery to the institutions within ninety days after entry, as required by such regulations. It was held that that requirement was a reasonable one, and that the collector, in default of a compliance therewith, properly exacted duty on the apparatus.

Casts of sculpture.—See under this title, vol. 2, p. 496, par. 649.

Vol. II, p. 496, par. 647.

Euquinine.—In this paragraph the provision for "salts of cinchona bark" is not in the language of chemical science. It was meant to include derivatives of cinchona bark which preserved its essential medicinal element, and therefore euquinine, which is such a preparation, though not chemically a salt, is within said provision. U. S. v. Merck, (C. C. A. 1909) 168 Fed. 244.

Vol. II, p. 496, par. 648.

Old bagging.—The term "rags" in this paragraph includes coarse pieces of jute bagging which are in their condition as torn from cotton bales, and are not sufficiently large and otherwise suitable for use other than as mere rags in stuffing and as paper stock. Train-Smith Co. v. U. S., (1905) 140 Fed. 113.

Selected pieces of second-hand jute bagging.—See under this title, vol. 2, p. 481, par. 463.

Vol. II, p. 496, par. 649.

Casts of sculpture.—The omission from paragraph 638 of the provision of prior tariff acts for the free entry of casts was not intended to prevent the free entry of such casts as also come within the designation of "casts of sculpture," which, under paragraph 649, are entitled to free entry where specially imported, in good faith, for the use and by the order of any society incorporated or established solely for religious, philosophical, scientific, educational, or literary purposes. Benziger v. U. S., (1904) 192 U. S. 38, 24 S. Ct. 189, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 331, reversing (1902) 113 Fed. 1016, 51 C. C. A. 587.

Plaster casts of clay models, though painted and gilded and produced in unlimited quantities, are "casts of sculpture," which, under paragraph 649, are entitled to free entry where specially imported, in good faith, for the use and by the order of any society incorporated or established solely for religious, philosophical, scientific, educational, or literary purposes. Benziger v. U. S., (1904) 192 U. S. 38, 24 S. Ct. 189, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 331, reversing (1902) 113 Fed. 1016, 51 C. C. A. 587.

Production of proof.—Proof that certain imported regalia was entitled to admission under this paragraph was not produced at the time of entry as required by the customs regulations, but was offered the collector before he had liquidated the entry. It was held that free entry should have been allowed by the collector. Siegman v. U. S., (1905) 141 Fed. 491.

A marble statue is a specimen of sculpture, within the meaning of this paragraph. Sibel v. U. S., (1900) 124 Fed. 105.

Authority of Secretary of Treasury.—The Secretary of the Treasury is not empowered to abridge the right of free entry of the articles covered by this paragraph, relating to regalia, etc. Siegman v. U. S., (1905) 141 Fed. 491.

Vol. II, p. 497, par. 655.

Vol. II, p. 497, par. 656.

Canary seed.—See under this title, vol. 2, p. 432, par. 254.

Vol. II, p. 497, par. 657.

Used for other purposes.—The application of the exception in this paragraph is not to be determined by the rule of chief or predominant use of an article as sheep dip; and therefore "Cannon's dip," a preparation advertised as fit for various other purposes, and presumably having commercial value for such purposes, is not covered by the paragraph. Moody v. Patterson, (1907) 153 Fed. 830.

Likewise thymo-cresol, a sheep dip which is used also as a disinfectant and otherwise, is, by reason of such other uses, excluded from this paragraph. Shallus v. Stone, (1906) 150 Fed. 605.

Vol. II, p. 497, par. 658.

Shotgun barrels—Act of 1894.—Certain gun barrels, made under the Whitmore patent process, and shown to have been subjected to a hammering process, were held to be "forged" and to be free of duty as "shotgun barrels, forged, rough bored" under Tariff Act Aug. 27, 1894, ch. 349, sec. 2, Free List, paragraph 614. U. S. v. Baldwin, (1899) 125 Fed. 156.

Vol. II, p. 497, par. 660.

Re-reeled silk.—Raw tussah silk, in the same condition as when reeled from cocoons, except that it has been transferred from the large reels on which it was taken from the cocoons to smaller reels, the result of this process not being any change in the condition of the silk other than to adapt the skeins thus produced to American spinning machines, is not dutiable as "silk partially manufactured from cocoons," under paragraph 334, but is free of any duty under paragraph 660, as "silk, raw, or as reeled from the cocoon, but not . . . advanced in any way." U. S. v. Stewart, (1904) 133 Fed. 811.

Vol. II, p. 497, par. 664.

A growth on skins of mocha sheep imported from Arabia, which is commercially known, designated, and dealt in as mocha hair, having none of the characteristics of wool, and which would not be accepted by dealers therein as a good delivery of wool, is not dutiable under paragraph 360, as wool on the skin, but is entitled to free entry under paragraph 664, placing on the free list "skins of all kinds, raw (except sheepskins with the wool on) and hides not specially provided for in this Act." Goat, etc., Import Co. v. U. S., (1907) 206 U. S. 194, 27 S. Ct. 634, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 1022, reversing (1906) 145 Fed. 1022, 74 C. C. A. 82.

Cabretta skins are "sheepskins," within the meaning of the provision in this paragraph relating to raw skins "except sheepskins with the wool on," and the growth thereon is subject to duty, as provided in paragraph 360 for "wools on the skin." Lawrence v. U. S., (1903) 124 Fed. 1000; Johnson v. U. S., (1905) 140 Fed. 116, affirmed (C. C. A. 1906) 145 Fed. 1022.

Evidence to distinguish skins from hides. —

Where importations of hides and skins, mixed together, were sorted by experienced men, who determined whether they were under or over twelve pounds, the dividing line between hides and skins, by handling alone, except with doubtful pieces on which they used the scales, and it appeared that the pieces considered by them to be skins were treated as such, being sold on that basis, it was held that the evidence of these facts justified a finding that such pieces were actually skins, and not hides. Helmuth v. U. S., (1904) 135 Fed. 912, affirmed. (C. C. A. 1906) 145 Fed. 36.

Long-haired Russian calfskins were held to be free of duty under this paragraph. Weil v. U. S., (1900) 124 Fed. 1006.

Spent ginger. — The article known as spent ginger, which is a by-product from the treatment of ginger root in the manufacture of ginger extract, etc., and consists of a dried cake of ginger particles, has been held to be "ginger root, unground," as enumerated in this paragraph. German v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1905) 137 Fed. 817, reversing (1904) 128 Fed. 467.

Residuum from decorticating pepper berries. — See under this title, vol. 2, p. 438, par. 287.

Vol. II, p. 498, par. 671.

Sand. — In this paragraph relating to "sand, crude or manufactured," the term "sand" is inapplicable to any metalliferous mineral, though it be in comminuted fragments; and therefore corundum ore, being a mineral of this character, is not, when ground, classable as "sand, . . . manufactured." Myers v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1908) 163 Fed. 53, affirming (1907) 155 Fed. 502.

Vol. II, p. 499, par. 695.

Carnauba wax substitute, which is compounded of carnauba wax (vegetable wax) and paraffin (mineral wax), and which is to all appearance a waxy substance used for the same purpose as other waxes, is covered by the provision for "wax, vegetable or mineral," in this paragraph. U. S. r. Morningstar, (C. C. A. 1909) 168 Fed. 541.

Mineral wax. — The expression "wax . . . mineral," in this paragraph, must have been used in the popular sense of those words, inasmuch as the so-called mineral waxes are not waxes in the chemical sense. U. S. r. Morningstar, (C. C. A. 1909) 168 Fed. 541.

Classification according to citizenship. — To the same effect as the original note see U. S. v. Bernays, (1908) 158 Fed. 792, 86 C. C. A. 52.

Construction of proviso. — The proviso in this paragraph limits the articles, which may be brought into this country free of duty by residents returning from abroad, to all the wearing apparel and other personal effects originally taken by them out of the United States without regard to their value, and to other articles of wearing apparel, and similar personal effects which may have been purchased abroad by them not exceeding in value the sum of $100. U. S. v. Bernays, (1908) 158 Fed. 792, 86 C. C. A. 52.

Duty of making entry of exempted articles. — In construing the provision in this paragraph the court held that it was the passenger's duty to enter and declare the value of such articles, whether they cost more than $100 or not, and that when not so declared they were subject to forfeiture under R. S. sec. 2802, 2 Fed. Stat. Annot. 645. Dodge v. U. S., (1904) 131 Fed. 849, 65 C. C. A. 603.

Not applicable where improper entry. — The provision in this paragraph, exempting $100 in value of dutiable articles in the baggage of returning residents of the United States, is not applicable in proceedings under R. S. sec. 2802, 2 Fed. Stat. Annot. 645, for the forfeiture of, and the collection of penal duty on, dutiable articles not mentioned on the entry of the baggage. It applies only when a proper entry has been made of the articles entitled to such exemption, and not otherwise. U. S. v. Harts, (1904) 131 Fed. 886, affirmed (C. C. A. 1905) 140 Fed. 848.

Vol. II, p. 500, par. 699.

Rossed pulp wood. — Pulp wood subjected to the rossing process, by which the bark and excrescences are mechanically removed, in order to prepare it for use, is not, by reason of this treatment, to be excluded from the provision in this paragraph for "logs and round unmanufactured timber, including pulp woods, . . . not specially provided for." U. S. v. Pierce. (1905) 140 Fed. 962, affirmed (C. C. A. 1906) 147 Fed. 199.

Sandalwood. — In Lueders v. U. S., (1904) 131 Fed. 656, it was held that sandalwood, in pieces of varying sizes, several feet long and several inches thick, to which nothing has been done beyond removing the bark and sawing the wood into lengths convenient for transportation, is not dutiable under paragraph 198, as "wood, unmanufactured, not specially provided for," but is free of duty, under the provision in paragraph 699, for "logs" of wood.

Round timber in rough condition. — See under this title, vol. 2, p. 425, par. 194.

Vol. II, p. 500, par. 700.

Bamboo dyers' sticks, rounded at the ends and smoothed off at the joints, are covered by the enumeration of bamboo in this paragraph rather than by the provision for wood, unmanufactured, in paragraph 198. U. S. v.

Cabinet wood. — See under this title, vol. 2, p. 425, par. 198.

Instrument for reproduction of artists' models, statuary, etc. — An instrument designed for the reproduction of artists' models, statuary, and decorative architecture, imported for the purpose of being temporarily exhibited as a philosophical or scientific apparatus for the promotion of industry in the United States, and to be exported within six months after its importation, may fairly be regarded as a "philosophical or scientific apparatus" within the meaning of this paragraph. (1902) 24 Op. Atty.-Gen. 28.

Vol. II, p. 500, par. 702.

Picture frames, containing oil paintings which are imported into this country for exhibition purposes, are not to be treated as parts of "works of art" and therefore entitled to entry free of duty under paragraph 702. (1904) 25 Op. Atty.-Gen. 276.

Vol. II, p. 501, par. 703.

A native Porto Rican, an artist by profession, although temporarily living in France on the 11th day of April, 1899, is, under section 7 of the Act of April 12, 1900, 31 Stat. L. 79, 5 Fed. Stat. Annot. 765, a citizen of Porto Rico, and, as such, is an American artist, whose paintings upon importation into the United States are entitled to the privileges provided in paragraph 703. (1902) 24 Op. Atty.-Gen. 40.

Church altar.—In U. S. v. Ecclesiastical Art Works, (1904) 139 Fed. 798, affirmed (C. C. A. 1905) 142 Fed. 1038, it was held that the provision in this paragraph for "works of art" intended for presentation to religious societies, included certain marble altars imported for presentation to a church, which were carved by a professional sculptor and were of a value of $1,800.

Fashion-plate drawings.—The provision in this paragraph for "works of art" does not include fashion-plate drawings, which, though possessing artistic merit, are for purely practical and utilitarian purposes. Harper v. U. S., (1900) 172 Fed. 289.

Pen and ink drawings of an artistic character, of a proposed building, produced by an architect, are within this paragraph relating to "works of art, the production of American artists," and not dutiable under paragraph 454. Young v. Bohn, (1905) 141 Fed. 471.

Vol. II, p. 501, par. 704.

Pueraria roots.—The provision for "yams" includes the pueraria root, which, though not scientifically known as a yam, has always been so called in the trade that deals in it, and was the only vegetable so known that was imported prior to the passage of the Act. Kwong Yuen Shing v. U. S., (1909) 175 Fed. 317.

Vol. II, p. 501, sec. 3.

Right to reduce duty.—In order to be entitled to the benefits of the reciprocal commercial agreements negotiated with foreign countries, under this section, importers must furnish satisfactory evidence that their importations were both produced in and exported from the country with which the agreement was made. Migliavacca Wine Co. v. U. S., (1905) 148 Fed. 142.

Scope of agreements.—Reciprocal commercial agreements made with foreign countries under the authority of this section cannot legally extend the scope of said section. U. S. v. Wile, (C. C. A. 1904) 130 Fed. 331, affirming (1903) 124 Fed. 1023.

Place of exportation not conclusive.—In U. S. v. Luyties, (C. C. A. 1904) 130 Fed. 333, affirming (1903) 124 Fed. 977, it appeared that a bill of lading for certain merchandise was made out in Switzerland, but that the invoice was certified by a United States consul in France, and the evidence showed France to have been the country of production, and from which the merchandise was exported. It was held that the importation was within the reciprocal commercial agreement with France and the United States (May 30, 1898, 30 Stat. L. 1774, 7 Fed. Stat. Annot. 556) negotiated under the authority of section 3.

Evidence of origin of goods.—With respect to merchandise alleged to be within the reciprocal commercial agreement with France, as having been both produced in and exported from that country, it was held that evidence of those facts should be furnished by a witness who knows them, or from his position may be presumed to know them, and that a deposition by an importer to the effect that he had ordered the goods through a New York agency and that they were consigned to him direct by the exporting establishment in France, but which did not show that he had any further personal knowledge, was incompetent. Migliavacca Wine Co. v. U. S., (1905) 148 Fed. 142.

Reciprocal agreement with France.—Cordials are within the provision for "spirits manufactured or distilled from grain or other materials," in section 3, and, when imported from France, are subject to the reduced rate of duty provided for such spirits in the reciprocal commercial agreement with that country. U. S. v. Wile, (C. C. A. 1904) 130 Fed. 331, affirming (1903) 124 Fed. 1023.

Liqueurs.—Merchandise known as "liqueurs" is included in this agreement. Nicholas v. U. S., (1900) 122 Fed. 892.

Chartreuse.—So the cordial known as "Chartreuse," imported from France, is a liqueur, and is included in the provision for a reduced rate of duty on "brandies, or other spirits," in the reciprocal commercial agreement between the United States and France. Nicholas v. U. S., (1900) 122 Fed. 892.

Alcohol in preserved fruits.—The reciprocal commercial agreement with France was held to supersede the provision of a different rate by paragraph 263 on the alcohol in excess of ten per cent. found in fruit preserved in spirits. La Manna v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1906) 144 Fed. 683.

Absinthe is a liqueur within the French reciprocity agreement. U. S. v. Luyties, (1903) 124 Fed. 977, affirmed (C. C. A. 1904) 130 Fed. 333.

Question whether or not Algeria is a part of France.—U. S. v. Tartar Chemical Co., (1903) 127 Fed. 944, 62 C. C. A. 576, affirming (1902) 116 Fed. 726, set out in the original note.

Reciprocal agreement with Germany.—The reciprocal commercial agreement with Germany (July 13, 1900, 31 Stat. L. 1978, 7 Fed. Stat. Annot. 562), negotiated under section 3, which allows a reduction of duty on "spirita," supersedes the provision of a different rate by paragraph 263, on the alcohol in excess of ten per cent, found in fruit preserved in spirits. Mihalovitch v. U. S., (1908) 160 Fed. 988.

Reciprocal agreement with Italy.—The provision for "statuary" in section 3, and in the reciprocal commercial agreement with Italy (Act July 18, 1900, 31 Stat. L. 1979, 7 Fed. Stat. Annot. 665), negotiated under said section, has the same meaning as in paragraph 454, where it is prescribed that "the term 'statuary' as used in this Act shall be understood to include only such statuary as is cut, carved, or otherwise wrought by hand from a solid block or mass of marble, stone, or alabaster, or from metal." Bronze statuary, not being covered by this definition, is therefore not covered by said reciprocal agreement. Richard v. U. S., (1907) 151 Fed. 954, affirmed (C. C. A.) 158 Fed. 1019.

Reciprocal agreement with Spain.—The reciprocal commercial agreement with Spain suspending "the imposition and collection of the duties mentioned in" the Tariff Act of 1897 on wines, etc., had only the effect of reducing the duty on wines provided in paragraph 296, but did not supersede the further provision in said paragraph that there should be no allowance for leakage of wines. Shaw v. U. S., (1907) 158 Fed. 648.

Vol. II, p. 504, sec. 5.

Additional duty on quantity entered only.—The "additional" duty imposed by section 5, on articles or merchandise imported into the United States and upon which an export bounty has been paid by the country of production, and which it is provided shall be "equal to the net amount of such bounty," is leviable only upon the article or merchandise which enters the United States, and in case of merchandise dutiable by weight and as to which the bounty as declared by the secretary of the treasury is also by weight, such as sugar, where the quantity entered at the custom house as shown by the official weigher is less than that shown by the foreign invoice, the "additional" duty, like the regular duty, is assessable only on the quantity so entered, and the cause of the loss or shrinkage is immaterial. The mere diminution in the quantity of units of weight or measure of a commodity usually measured by such units is not such a change of condition "by remanufacture or otherwise," within the meaning of such section, as to authorize a resort to other than the usual means for ascertaining the amount of the additional duty. Franklin Sugar Refining Co. v. U. S., (1906) 142 Fed.

376, 73 C. C. A. 476, reversing (1905) 137 Fed. 655.

Conclusiveness of Treasury determination.—Under R. S., secs. 161, 245, 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 58, 7 Fed. Stat. Annot. 367, providing, respectively, that "in case of . . . absence . . . of the head of any department, the first or sole assistant shall . . . perform the duties of such head," and that "assistant secretaries of the treasury shall . . . perform such . . . duties in the office of the secretary of the treasury as may be prescribed by the secretary or by law," it is clear that the secretary of the treasury could require an assistant secretary to "ascertain, determine, and declare" the amount of foreign sugar bounties; that being a duty assigned "the secretary of the treasury" by section 5; and where an assistant secretary has issued a declaration under said section it will be presumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that he was performing a duty in accordance with law, and that the declaration was properly issued. Franklin Sugar Refining Co. v. U. S., (1910) 178 Fed. 743.

Vol. II, p. 504, sec. 6.

What constitutes enumeration.—In order to remove an imported article from the operation of a tariff provision for merchandise not "enumerated," it is not necessary to show that there is an enumeration of the article according to its chief use. It is enough if there is an enumeration describing any minor use. Dodge v. U. S., (1891) 130 Fed. 624.

Birch bark is properly classified under section 6, as an unenumerated manufactured article, instead of under paragraph 566 or 617. Reed v. U. S., (1909) 172 Fed. 453.

Bone size.—So-called bone size, used for filling and softening corduroys, is held to be dutiable as an unenumerated manufactured article, under section 6, and not as "glue," under paragraph 23, as resembling glue in material, quality, texture, or use, within the meaning of the so-called similitude clause in section 7. Sheldon v. U. S., (1903) 127 Fed. 494.

Cherries in maraschino.—In Reiss v. U. S., (1904) 135 Fed. 248, affirmed (C. C. A. 1906) 142 Fed. 1039, it was held that certain fruit in spirits, consisting of cherries in maraschino, were not dutiable under paragraph 218, Tariff Act Aug. 27, 1894, relating to "fruits preserved in sirup," but under section 3 of said Act, as unenumerated manufactured articles.

Chlorophyll, a coloring matter used in staining oils and foodstuffs, is not a "color," within the meaning of paragraph 58, but is dutiable as an unenumerated manufactured article under section 6. U. S. v. Magnus, (1908) 159 Fed. 751.

Edible wafers, raised in the making by the use of baking powder or bicarbonate of soda, are "leavened," although such agents do not produce fermentation, and are dutiable under section 6, as nonenumerated manufactured articles, and not entitled to free entry under paragraph 696 in the free list, covering "wafers, unleavened or not edible." Leggett v. U. S., (1904) 131 Fed. 817.

Floral waters are dutiable as unenumerated manufactured articles, under section 6, rather than as "waste," under paragraph 463, Burr v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1909) 167 Fed. 801; or as medicinal preparations, under paragraph 68, Euler v. U. S., (1906) 147 Fed. 765.

Granito or terrazo, produced by crushing the waste of marble quarries and sifting it into various sizes, is subject to classification as an unenumerated manufactured article, under this section, rather than as "waste," under paragraph 463, or as minerals "crude," under paragraph 614. U. S. v. Graser-Rothe, (1908) 164 Fed. 205.

Herbs in alcohol.—In Boericke, etc., Co. v. U. S., (1903) 126 Fed. 1018, it was held that certain herbs, imported in kegs, immersed in their natural condition in alcohol for preservation, were not dutiable as "alcohol compounds," under paragraph 2, nor as "drugs . . . advanced in value or condition," under paragraph 20, but under the provision in section 6 for "all raw or unmanufactured articles, not enumerated or provided for," at the rate of ten per cent. ad valorem.

Hone-stone polishers.—In Waddell v. U. S., (1904) 135 Fed. 211, it was held that certain articles of hone stone, which are used in polishing marble and lithographic stones, and which are not shown to be known commercially as "hones," are not free of duty as "hones" under paragraph 574, but are dutiable as unenumerated manufactured articles under section 6. See also under this title, vol. 2, p. 490, par. 574.

Japanese garden lanterns of granite, completed manufactured articles imported in separate pieces merely for convenience of shipment, have passed out of the class of "building or monumental stone, . . . hewn, dressed," etc., mentioned in paragraph 118, and are dutiable under section 6. U. S. v. Vantine, (C. C. A. 1908) 166 Fed. 751, affirming (1907) 159 Fed. 289.

"Marasque water" or "eau de marasque."—The article known as "marasque water" or "eau de marasque," which is produced by distilling the juice of crushed cherries, diluted somewhat with water used in the distilling process, is not dutiable as cherry juice, under paragraph 299, but as an unenumerated manufactured article under section 6. Leerbarger v. U. S., (1904) 141 Fed. 1023.

Persian berry extract, which is used in staining food products, and also as a dye-stuff for coloring fabrics, is not dutiable under paragraph 58 as a color, not belonging to the "paints, colors, pigments," etc., therein enumerated, nor by similitude, under paragraph 20 or 22, relating, respectively to berries advanced in value and to extracts of barks, etc., used for dyeing, but is dutiable as an unenumerated manufactured article under section 6. U. S. v. Berlin Aniline Works, (1907) 154 Fed. 925. See also Siegle v. U. S., (1908) 166 Fed. 1015.

Pickled walnuts.—The provision for "pickles" in paragraph 241 covers only vegetables. Pickled walnuts are therefore excluded therefrom, and are classifiable as unenumerated manufactures under section 6. U. S. v. Acker, etc., Co., (1909) 171 Fed. 77, 96 C. C. A. 181.

Plastillina, or modeling clay, an article not containing clay, is not dutiable as "clay," either directly or by similitude, under paragraph 93, but as an "unenumerated manufacture," under section 6. Bancel v. U. S., (1909) 176 Fed. 132.

Sawed soapstone.—Small pieces of soapstone, cut in regular sizes for gas tips and burners, have been "manufactured," and are dutiable as unenumerated "manufactured" articles, under section 6. Kirschberger v. U. S., (1908) 166 Fed. 1012.

Soap pencils, for cleaning spectacle and eyeglass lenses, in which soap is the material of chief value, are dutiable as nonenumerated manufactured articles under this section, and not as pencils under paragraph 456. U. S. v. American Express Co., (C. C. A. 1905) 136 Fed. 594, affirming (1904) 131 Fed. 656.

Soluble grease, a preparation of tallow used in the process of dyeing cotton cloth for softening the fabric after the application of the dye, is not dutiable under paragraph 32, as an alizarin assistant, but under section 6 as an unenumerated manufactured article. De Ronde v. U. S., (1905) 140 Fed. 92.

Thick soy.—In paragraph 241 the provision for "sauces" means for a seasoning or dressing usually placed on the table to be used with prepared food; and thick soy, which is not so used, but is employed as an ingredient of sauces, or as a flavor or color for food while cooking, is not a "sauce," and does not resemble a sauce in material, quality, texture, or use, but is classifiable as an unenumerated manufactured article, under section 6. U. S. v. Wo On, (1909) 167 Fed. 314, 92 C. C. A. 626.

Wafers and biscuits.—Sweet crackers, known as "wafers and biscuits," in which the proportion of the sweetened centres to the pastry envelopes is large, but in which flour is used to a substantial extent, are not dutiable either directly or by similitude as "confectionery," under paragraph 212, but as unenumerated manufactured articles, under section 6. U. S. v. Meadows, (1906) 147 Fed. 757, affirmed (C. C. A. 1907) 154 Fed. 1005.

Whetstone blocks.—See under this title, vol. 2, p. 492, par. 614.

Vpl. II, p. 506, sec. 7.

"Similar."—The term "similar" is used in this section in the sense of nearly corresponding, resembling in many respects, somewhat like, or having a general resemblance. U. S. v. Komada, (C. C. A. 1908) 162 Fed. 465, reversing (1906) 148 Fed. 125.

Similitude is a question of fact.—The question whether an article is "similar" to another within the meaning of the similitude clause is one of fact. U. S. v. Komada, (C. C. A. 1908) 162 Fed. 465, reversing (1906) 148 Fed. 125.

Degree of similitude.—The provision in section 7, that articles not enumerated shall pay the same rate that is applicable to the enumerated article which they most resemble, does not require identity. It is enough if there be a substantial similitude in any of the particulars mentioned in the statute. U. S. v. Roesseler, etc., Chemical Co., (C. C. A. 1905) 137 Fed. 770, affirming (1904) 131 Fed. 576; U. S. v. Komada, (C. C. A. 1908) 162 Fed. 465, reversing (1906) 148 Fed. 125; Paterson v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1908) 166 Fed. 733, reversing (1907) 159 Fed. 320.

Nature of resemblance.—In applying the similitude clause relative to articles similar to other articles in "material" difference in the original materials from which the articles compared is not controlling. The law concerns itself only with the condition of the articles at the time of importation. U. S. v. Komada, (C. C. A. 1908) 162 Fed. 465, reversing (1906) 148 Fed. 125.

The similarity required by the similitude clause of this section is a real or substantial similarity. U. S. v. Komada, (C. C. A. 1908) 162 Fed. 465, reversing (1906) 148 Fed. 125.

Within the meaning of the similitude clause in section 7, fabrics composed of calf hair and cotton and used in manufacturing cloaks resemble in "use" fabrics of calf hair, cotton, and wool, and also used in manufacturing cloaks, notwithstanding that the latter fabrics are of a better grade and command a higher price. Rosenstern v. U. S., (1909) 171 Fed. 71, 96 C. C. A. 175.

The provision in paragraph 97, for mineral substances, being limited to articles susceptible of decoration, wares not susceptible of decoration are not to be brought within the paragraph through the operation of the similitude clause in section 7. Kirschberger v. U. S., (1908) 166 Fed. 1012.

Where an unenumerated article has a very vague and questionable resemblance to some enumerated article, and is exactly identical with another enumerated article, its status under the similitude clause is fixed by the latter condition; the former being disregarded. Paterson v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1908) 166 Fed. 733, reversing (1907) 159 Fed. 320.

The amount of duty is not one of the tests prescribed for the application of the similitude clause in section 7. U. S. v. Behrend, (C. C. A. 1909) 167 Fed. 318.

Determination of component of chief value.

—The provision in this paragraph that the component material of chief value in imported merchandise shall be determined with reference to the value of the components in their condition as found in the article means the state which the materials are in when put together, without regard to their value after being advanced to completion; and therefore articles of cotton covered with varnish, in which, before combination, the latter is of less value, should be regarded as composed in chief value of cotton, irrespective of the fact that subsequent labor in applying the varnish may render it the component of chief value in the completed articles. U. S. v. Johnson, (C. C. A. 1907) 154 Fed. 39, reversing (1906) 146 Fed. 148.

In U. S. v. Hoeninghaus, (1905) 137 Fed. 478, 69 C. C. A. 626, affirming (1904) 131 Fed. 570, it was held that, as to woven fabrics, the ascertainment should be made with reference to the time the process of weaving commences; that the operation of warping is not a part of such process; and that the cost of such operation should be included wholly in the value of the material constituting the warp of the fabrics, and not distributed between the warp and the weft.

The test of chief value is to be applied as values may be at the time of importation. Evidence that goods are identical with some previously imported is unpersuasive that the relative value of their components remains the same. U. S. v. Leerburger, (C. C. A. 1908) 160 Fed. 651, affirming (1907) 155 Fed. 146.

The determination as to the component material of chief value of imported merchandise is to be in reference to the values of the components in the country where the compound is produced. Evidence as to the value of one component material in one country and of another component in another country is not sufficient to overcome the sworn statement of the manufacturer of the goods. U. S. v. Downing, (C. C. A. 1906) 146 Fed. 56, reversing (1905) 139 Fed. 58.

Metal, consisting of steel-point ornamentation and of buckles, was the component of chief value in certain belts, and the buckles were an essential part of the construction of the articles. It was held that the metal could not be considered as immaterial and incidental to the belts, but must be considered in determining the tariff classification of the goods. Simpson-Crawford Co. v. U. S., (1909) 172 Fed. 301, affirmed (1910) 178 Fed. 1006, 101 C. C. A. 665.

In Hoeninghaus v. U. S., (1904) 131 Fed. 570, affirmed (C. C. A. 1905) 137 Fed. 478, it was held that warping is not a part of the process of weaving, and that in determining, under the provisions of this section, the component material of chief value in fabrics having a silk warp and a cotton weft, the cost of warping should be included wholly in the value of the silk component, and not distributed between the silk and the cotton.

In manufacturing certain braids composed of cotton and india rubber, nine-tenths of the labor was employed on the cotton. It was held that under the provision in section 7, that "the value of each component material shall be determined by the ascertained value of such material in its condition as found in the article," it was proper to add this cost of labor to the original cost of the cotton, in finding the component material of chief value, rather than to apply the value of the labor equally between the cotton and the rubber. Calhoun v. U. S., (1901) 122 Fed. 894.

Application of last sentence. — A provision for "all manufactures of cotton" and one for "all manufactures of every description . . . in part of wool" are not equally applicable to cloth composed in part of wool but in chief value of cotton; the latter being less specific than the former. Therefore they are not controlled by the provision in Tariff Act Oct. 1, 1890, ch. 1244, sec. 5, 26 Stat. L. 613, that "if two or more rates of duty shall be applicable to any imported article, it shall pay duty at the highest of such rates." Benoit v. U. S., (1892) 150 Fed. 687.

Where ad valorem and specific rate applicable. — The provision in section 7, that merchandise to which "two or more rates of duty shall be applicable . . . shall pay duty at the highest of such rates," has been held not to apply in a case where one paragraph provides an ad valorem and the other a specific rate. Loggie v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1905) 137 Fed. 813.

Conclusiveness of findings of general appraisers. — Findings by the board of general appraisers as to the fact of similitude will not be disturbed on appeal to the courts, unless clearly contrary to the evidence, or further evidence of a material character is presented. U. S. v. Komada, (C. C. A. 1908) 162 Fed. 465, reversing (1906) 148 Fed. 125.

Articles made wholly or chiefly of agate or onyx. — Articles, such as paper cutters, paper weights, knife handles, and pen or pencil holders or handles, made wholly or chiefly of agate or onyx, were dutiable by similitude to "precious stones cut, but not set," under Act Oct. 1, 1890, sec. 5, laying on "every non-enumerated article which bears a similitude . . . to any article enumerated" "the same rate of duty which is levied and charged on the enumerated article which it most resembles," etc. Hahn v. U. S., (1903) 121 Fed. 152.

Artificial horsehair. — Within the meaning of the similitude clause in this section artificial horsehair resembles cotton yarn in material, because each is composed almost entirely of cellulose, and in use, because both are largely used in making braids, etc. Eckstein v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1909) 167 Fed. 802, reversing (1908) 160 Fed. 287.

Extract of nutgalls, containing a considerable percentage of tannic acid, which can be obtained therefrom in its commercial form only by a long series of chemical combinations and precipitations, was held not to be sufficiently "similar in material" to tannin or tannic acid as to be dutiable at the rate applicable to those materials, by virtue of the similitude clause in section 7. U. S. v. Proctor, (C. C. A. 1906) 145 Fed. 126, affirming (1905) 139 Fed. 586.

Ramie sliver. — Within the meaning of the similitude clause in this section ramie sliver resembles cotton sliver (1) in "material," because it is a vegetable fibre; (2) in "quality," because it has reached the same degree of purity, or freedom from objectional substances; (3) in "texture," because the fibres are in the same form, and (4) in "use," because, like cotton sliver, it is spun into yarn and thread, so as to be manufactured into fabrics. Vandegrift v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1909) 173 Fed. 609, affirming (1908) 164 Fed. 65. See also under this title, vol. 2, p. 441, par. 302.

Salted fish in wooden packages. — In Meyer v. U. S., (1900) 124 Fed. 293, it was held that the provision in paragraph 258, for "fish in packages containing less than one-half barrel," and the provision in paragraph 261, for "fish . . . salted or otherwise prepared for preservation," are, as to salted fish (sardels) in wooden packages, equally specific, and that under section 7 the merchandise in question is properly dutiable at whichever of the rates specified in the two provisions is the higher.

Removal and destruction of merchandise held in bond.—Articles of merchandise imported into the United States and held in a bonded warehouse for use in the manufacture of articles for exportation in accordance with this section may be removed from such warehouse and destroyed in the presence of an officer designated by the collector of the port, and accounted for as waste, and the manufacturer relieved from the payment of duty thereon. (1902) 24 Op. Atty-Gen. 58.

Vol. II, p. 512, sec. 29.

Method of determining amount of pure metal.—Under the proviso in this section "that each day a quantity of refined metal equal to ninety per centum of the amount of imported metal smelted or refined that day shall be set aside, . . . and the exportation of the ninety per centum of metals . . . shall entitle the ores and metals imported under" said section to admission without payment of duty, it was held in regard to importations of lead bullion containing lead and antimony, that this proviso means ninety per cent. of the pure metal contained in the crude metal as imported, as determined by assay at the time of importation, and not of the pure metal recovered by smelting and refining. In re Guggenheim Smelting Co., (C. C. A. 1903) 126 Fed. 728, reversing 121 Fed. 153.

Vol. II, p. 512, sec. 30.

The general purpose of this section was to provide that whenever materials are brought into the United States under such circumstances that they are subject to the payment of duty and used here in the manufacture of finished articles, upon the subsequent exportation of such manufactured articles to a foreign country a drawback shall be allowed upon the material on which duty has been paid. (1907) 26 Op. Atty-Gen. 355.

The word "appear," as used in this section, does not require that the imported materials should appear in the sense of being seen in the completed articles, but only in the sense of being proven to be present in the completed articles. (1905) 25 Op. Atty-Gen. 344.

The word "ascertained," as used in the proviso to this section, is obviously used to describe knowledge which is obtained from evidence, and not merely that which is obtained from the exercise of the senses. (1905) 25 Op. Atty-Gen. 344.

The word "imported," as used in this section, does not necessarily imply that the materials in which drawback is to be allowed must have come from a foreign country in a technical sense. (1907) 26 Op. Atty-Gen. 355.

The words "export" and "exportation."—Swan, etc., Co. v. U. S., (1903) 190 U. S. 143, 23 S. Ct. 702, 47 U. S. (L. ed.) 984, affirming (1901) 37 Ct. Cl. 101, set out in the original note.

Method of computing drawback.—In computing the drawback on the export of flour made from imported wheat, the relative values of the flour and other products at the time and place of manufacture should be used as the basis of calculation. (1905) 25 Op. Atty-Gen. 374.

Where only a part of the products from imported wheat is exported, the proportionate value of the same for drawback purposes should be determined without allowing anything for the increased price such part would bring in domestic markets because of the privilege of drawback. (1905) 25 Op. Atty-Gen. 374.

Where, upon the exportation of a product manufactured in the United States from a combination of domestic material and foreign material which has paid duty, the quantity or measure of the foreign material actually present in the completed article can be identified to the satisfaction of the customs officials by the evidence of books of account, or otherwise, the exporter is entitled under this section to drawback of the duties paid upon the imported material thus ascertained to be actually present in the completed article. (1905) 25 Op. Atty-Gen. 344.

Complete articles contemplated.—The drawback law contemplates the manufacture of a separate and complete article which is not merely the finished material of a further stage. (1902) 24 Op. Atty.-Gen. 53.

Apparatus not attached but reshipped in original package.—In (1904) 25 Op. Atty.-Gen. 125, it appeared that certain brakes, springs, and lighting apparatus were imported into the United States for the purpose of being used as parts of the equipment of certain railroad cars to be manufactured in this country for export. They were not installed in the cars, but were present for inspection and were shipped in their original packages, or were repacked and shipped, with the parts of the cars to which they were subsequently to be attached. It was held that such articles were not used "in the manufacture of articles manufactured or produced within the United States," within the meaning of section 30; and as the articles were removed "from the custody and control of the government," they were within the inhibition of section 3025, Rev. Stat., 2 Fed. Stat. Annot. 733, and were not entitled to drawback under any provision of law.

Blended flour.—A drawback is allowable under this section on blended flour produced by thoroughly mixing and aerating an imported flour ground from Manitoba hard spring wheat, containing a high percentage of gluten, with a domestic flour of medium strength of a high color and great keeping qualities, thus producing a superior flour differing from the imported flour in color, texture, and keeping qualities, and having a distinct commercial designation. (1908) 27 Op. Atty.-Gen. 68.

Burlap on cotton bales.—Imported burlaps, on which duty has been paid, when used as coverings on the so-called "round lap" bales of cotton, are not, when re-exported, entitled to drawback under this section, for the reason that the bale is not an article manufactured or produced within the meaning of this section. It is merely a package of material peculiarly constructed which may be resolved into covering and contents. (1903) 24 Op. Atty.-Gen. 575.

Camel's hair noils.—The separation of imported camel's hair into "tops" and "noils" by combing, for the purpose of preparing the material for manufacture, does not result in such "noils" becoming a distinct manufactured article and entitled to drawback within the meaning of section 30. (1902) 24 Op. Atty.-Gen. 53, following (1895) 21 Op. Atty.-Gen. 159, set out in the original note.

Imported corks used in exporting bottled beer.—Imported bottle corks hand cut in Spain are not "imported materials used in the manufacture or production of articles entitled to drawback of customs duty when exported," within the meaning of the Act Oct. 1, 1890, 26 Stat. L. 617, though they are sterilized, cleansed, softened, and coated by distinct and peculiar processes so as to adapt them to be used in the bottling of beer for exportation. Anheuser-Busch Brewing Co. v. U. S., (1906) 41 Ct. Cl. 389, affirmed (1908) 207 U. S. 556, 28 S. Ct. 204, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 336.

Materials from Philippines.—Materials brought into the United States from the Philippine Islands on which duty has been paid under the Philippine Revenue Act of March 8, 1902, 32 Stat. L. 54, 5 Fed. Stat. Annot. 715, are to be regarded as "imported materials" within the meaning of the drawback provision, although not brought in from a foreign country. (1907) 26 Op. Atty.-Gen. 355.

Sirup from sugar from Philippines.—Drawback should be allowed under this section upon the exportation to Europe of sirup manufactured from raw sugar which was brought into the United States from the Philippine Islands and upon which duties were paid under the Philippine Revenue Act of March 8, 1902, 32 Stat. L. 54, 5 Fed. Stat. Annot. 715. (1907) 26 Op. Atty.-Gen. 355.

Vol. II, p. 514, sec. 33.

Adoption of construction by re-enactment.—Congress by enacting the proviso to this section, which differs from the proviso to the Act of October 1, 1890, sec. 50, only in substituting the word "entry" for the word "withdrawal," as the date when the weight of merchandise withdrawn from bonded warehouse is to be taken as the basis of the duty, must be deemed to have adopted the construction given to the earlier proviso by the Attorney-General and followed by the executive officers charged with the administration of the law, viz., that such proviso was general in its application, and not restricted to merchandise imported before the Act took effect. U. S. v. Falk, (1907) 204 U. S. 143, 27 S. Ct. 191, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 411, reversing (C. C. A. 1906) 146 Fed. 484, and affirming (1904) 145 Fed. 574.

Construction of proviso.—In U. S. v. Falk, (1907) 204 U. S. 143, 27 S. Ct. 191, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 411, reversing (C. C. A. 1906) 146 Fed. 484, and affirming (1904) 145 Fed. 574, it was held that the duty upon leaf tobacco which, when withdrawn from a bonded warehouse, has lost in weight through evaporation of moisture, must be assessed on the basis of weight at the time of the original entry, as prescribed by the proviso to this section, which is general in its application and not restricted to merchandise imported before the Act took effect.

Tender of entry — change of tariff acts.—In U. S. v. Edwin S. Hartwell Lumber Co., (C. C. A. 1905) 142 Fed. 432, affirming (1904) 128 Fed. 306, it appeared that as to merchandise imported shortly before the Tariff Act of 1897 went into effect, the importers tendered entry before the importation was complete. The tender being rejected by the collector, it was not renewed until said Act became operative. It was held that under section 33, requiring that merchandise previously imported for which no entry has been made shall be subject to the provisions of that Act, the importers' failure to renew, while the old law stood, brought the merchandise within the provisions of said section.

Time to make entry.—As to merchandise imported before but entered after the Tariff Act of 1897 became operative, it was held that R. S. sec. 2785, 2 Fed. Stat. Annot. 641, which allows fifteen days for the entry of merchandise after the arrival of the vessel transporting it is reported, did not have the effect of permitting entry to be made under the Tariff Act in force at the time of importation as against the provision in section 38 that "merchandise previously imported, for which no entry has been made, . . . shall be subjected to the duties imposed by" that Act. U. S. v. Edwin S. Hartwell Lumber Co., (C. C. A. 1905) 142 Fed. 432, affirming (1904) 128 Fed. 306.

Effect of Act of Dec. 15, 1902.—The duty on imports withdrawn from bonded warehouses must be assessed on the basis of weight at the time of original entry, as prescribed by the proviso to this section, notwithstanding the addition by the Act of Dec. 15, 1902, of a proviso to section 20 of the Customs Administrative Act of June 10, 1890, 2 Fed. Stat. Annot. 682, that the same rate of duty shall be collected upon such merchandise as may be imposed by law upon like articles imported at the time of withdrawal, since this provision refers to the rate of duty, and not to the date at which the weight is to be taken as the basis of such duty. U. S. v. Falk, (1907) 204 U. S. 143, 27 S. Ct. 191, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 411, reversing (C. C. A. 1906) 146 Fed. 484, and affirming (1904) 145 Fed. 574.

"Entry."—In the provision in this section for "merchandise previously imported, for which no entry has been made," the word "entry" refers to an entry for consumption. Ellison v. U. S., (1905) 136 Fed. 989, affirmed (C. C. A. 1906) 142 Fed. 732.

"Day."—The word "day," as used in this section, refers to the time or moment when the Act took effect; and merchandise imported on that day would not escape the application of the Act, unless it was also entered before the Act became effective. U. S. v. Edwin S. Hartwell Lumber Co., (C. C. A. 1905) 142 Fed. 432, affirming (1904) 128 Fed. 306.

"On and after" day named.—The provision in this section that "on and after" that date merchandise previously imported should be subjected to the duties imposed by said Act, is not limited to merchandise imported prior to that date, but applies also to that imported on that day. Ellison v. U. S., (1905) 136 Fed. 989, affirmed (C. C. A. 1906) 142 Fed. 732.

Vol. II, p. 515, sec. 34.

Effect of offer to entry.—Where goods were tendered for consumption entry before four o'clock on July 24, 1897, and on refusal of the tender a warehouse entry was made on the 26th, they were held to be dutiable under the Tariff Act of 1894, and not under the Act of 1897. U. S. v. Perkins, (1902) 119 Fed. 384.

Amendment.—This Act was amended by Act of Aug. 5, 1909, ch. 6, 36 Stat. L. 11, 1909 Supp. Fed. Stat. Annot. 807.

Consignee.—Where a railroad company whose line extended across the boundary between Mexico and the United States, pursuant to authority of its directors, appointed two agents to receive and enter at a customs port of the United States all goods imported by or consigned to the company, and one of such agents made the declaration on a consular invoice of goods as agent of the railroad company, and the other as consignee made the entry, paid the duty with money of the company, and received the goods, it was held that the company might be held as importer or consignee for an additional duty assessed on a liquidation, and that it was error to direct a verdict for the company. U. S. v. Mexican International R. Co., (1907) 151 Fed. 545, 81 C. C. A. 61.

Shipment of goods not ordered by consignee.—In U. S. v. O'Neill, (1903) 122 Fed. 547, affirmed (C. C. A. 1904) 129 Fed. 909, it appeared that the defendants ordered a consignment of waste by sample, which consisted wholly of cotton from a foreign manufacturer, which was entitled to free entry. The manufacturer shipped waste to fill the order consigned to defendant through certain persons, who were not defendant's agents, at Suspension Bridge, which bill was indorsed to be delivered to N. When the goods arrived N. declared, without authority, that the goods belonged to defendants, and entered them for consumption. On examination it was found that the waste was cotton and woolen mixed, and was therefore taxable for duty at ten cents a pound. The defendants, on notification, refused to accept the waste under the contract, and it was sold for duty, resulting in a large deficiency. It was held that the defendants were not liable for such deficiency under this section, declaring that all merchandise imported shall be deemed and held to be the property of the person to whom it may be consigned.

Forwarding agents and custom house brokers.—A custom house broker, who makes the sworn declaration for entry of goods, in which he declares himself the consignee, cannot thereafter deny that he is such as against the government, and becomes liable for the duties under the provision of this section that "all merchandise imported into the United States shall, for the purposes of this Act, be deemed and held to be the property of the person to whom the merchandise may be consigned," including additional duties imposed for undervaluation under section 7 of this Act. U. S. v. Vandiver, (1904) 133 Fed. 252.

Rights of holder of bill of lading.—Under this section it has been held that where a consignee of goods, as appeared from the ship's sworn manifest and from a certified invoice, paid the duty and received the goods from the collector, the latter was not liable to a transferee of the bill of lading, holding the same as collateral for a draft drawn on the consignees for the price of the goods, which they refused to pay on presentation. Derobert v. Stranahan, (1903) 126 Fed. 581.

Estoppel.—This section simply provides that the government may act on the faith of the bill of lading, but is not precluded from going behind it to show the facts, in order to determine the forfeitability of importations. U. S. v. One Bag Crushed Wheat, (1908) 166 Fed. 582.

Vol. II, p. 611, sec. 3.

Verification.—This section does not require the invoices to be verified. U. S. v. 646 Half-Boxes Figs, (1908) 164 Fed. 778.

Vol. II, p. 612, sec. 4.

Clerical error in invoice.—In Gillespie v. U. S., (1900) 124 Fed. 106, it appeared that the importers of certain sugar in hogsheds made entry on an invoice which included by mistake the value of the hogsheds in that of the sugar, but before the entry was liquidated they produced a corrected invoice, showing the proper deduction for the hogsheds. It was held that it was not, under the circumstances, necessary for the importers to make entry on a pro forma invoice, and give a bond for the production of a corrected invoice, in the method prescribed in section 4, and that the collector should have made allowance for the hogsheds.

Effect of exception of personal effects.—The provision in this section that "except in case of personal effects, no importation of any merchandise" shall be entered without invoice, is equivalent to an exception of articles not personal effects from the provision relative to the declaration of "baggage" in R. S. sec. 2799, 2 Fed. Stat. Annot. 644. U. S. v. One Trunk, (1909) 175 Fed. 1012.

Vol. II, p. 613, sec. 5.

Goods purchased with right to return.—In U. S. v. Ninety-nine Diamonds, (1904) 132 Fed. 579, affirmed (C. C. A. 1905) 139 Fed. 961, it appeared that on entering an importation of certain merchandise, the importer made "the declaration of owner in cases where merchandise has been actually purchased," which is set forth in section 5, but it later appeared that the importation was made pursuant to an agreement under which the importer might, after examination, retain and pay for, or return, any part or all of the goods, and the importer admitted that he did not consider himself the actual owner, but made the entry as an accommodation to the parties who caused the goods to be shipped to him. It was held that as he had full dominion over the property, with the right to sell or otherwise dispose of it without accountability to any one, he should be considered the "owner," and might properly make the declaration aforesaid.

False certification.—Under this section, providing that on the entry of imported merchandise the importer shall make certain sworn statements in regard to the importation, it has been held that the practice of having such declarations signed in blank by an importer, to be filled in later by a customs broker, and the practice of notaries public in falsely certifying such declarations as having been made and sworn to in their presence, are illegal, and to be condemned in law as in morals. U. S. v. Cohn, (1904) 128 Fed. 615, affirmed (C. C. A. 1905) 145 Fed. 1.

Vol. II, p. 615, sec. 7.

Notice to importers of advance in value.—Where an appraiser who has advanced the value of imported merchandise fails to give notice of the advance to the importer as required by the customs regulations, the importer thus being deprived of the right of appeal for reappraisal, the reappraisal is invalid, and does not afford a proper basis for the forfeiture and condemnation of the goods for undervaluation under this section. The Lace House v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1906) 141 Fed. 869.

In U. S. v. Independent Importing Co., (1908) 165 Fed. 63, it appeared that the customs officers sent to the address given by the importer in his entry a notice of an advance on the invoice value as made by the appraiser. It was held that due diligence had been shown in this regard, and that the importer could not object to the assessment of duty on the basis of the advance, on the ground that he had not received the notice by reason of an error in the address.

Definiteness of additional entry.—In making an addition to the invoice value at the time of the entry, in order to equal market value, as permitted by this section, the importer should state the added value with sufficient definiteness to enable the customs officers to ascertain its amount; but reference to an item, without specifying its amount, is sufficient, if such amount is officially known to the customs officers. Woodruff v. U. S., (1896) 164 Fed. 861.

Functions of collector.—In finding the invoice value of imported merchandise, under this section, a collector of customs has no right, after the appraiser has appraised the merchandise and marked an item of commissions as nondutiable, to include such item on the invoice value, and assess duty thereon, upon a mere inspection of the invoice, without inquiry or evidence to justify such action. U. S. v. Lahey, (1904) 132 Fed. 181.

Goods in excess.—In U. S. v. Leeming, (1907) 153 Fed. 489, an importation subject to the additional duty for undervaluation provided by this section was found to consist of a greater quantity than was specified in the invoice. It was held that the additional duty should not be limited to the quantity so specified, but should be imposed also on the excess.

Necessity for legal appraisal.—This section is not applicable unless there has been a legal appraisal. The Lace House v. U. S., (1905) 141 Fed. 869, 73 C. C. A. 103.

Necessity for fraudulent intent.—Under this section the fraudulent intent of the owner or of his authorized agent in entering the imported merchandise is an indispensable condition of the right of the government to forfeit the goods for undervaluation. But an action to recover the additional duties accruing upon an undervaluation may be maintained against the consignee without proof of any fraudulent intent by the owner, the consignee, or the agent in making the entry. Good faith and innocence constitute no defense to such an action. U. S. v. Bishop, (1903) 125 Fed. 181, 60 C. C. A. 123.

Entered value in excess of appraised value.—On entry an importer added to the invoice value an amount that he considered necessary to equal actual market value, as permitted by this section. It was decided on reappraisal that this addition had been unnecessary and that the invoice was correct. It was held that the provision in said section that "duty shall not, however, be assessed in any case upon an amount less than the . . . entered value," indicates an intention to bind the importer to the market value as fixed by him, regardless of the value found by the appraisers or of the general rule of the conclusiveness of such finding, and that therefore duty could not be assessed on a less amount than that on which entry was made. Daloz v. U. S., (1909) 171 Fed. 275.

Invoice value.—Under the provision in this paragraph forbidding the assessment of duty "on less than the invoice . . . value," it was held, as to an importation of framed paintings which were invoiced as "paintings," that it would not be in violation of the law to treat the invoice value for this item as including the frames, where it appeared that such value was sufficient, and that it was customary so to describe paintings with frames. U. S. v. Hensel, (1896) 155 Fed. 645.

Assessment on less amount than invoice value.—The provision that duty shall not be assessed on less than the invoice value does not require that the collector should take as the dutiable value an excessive sum erroneously given in a pro forma invoice, when he has before him a consular invoice giving the correct value. He conforms to the statute if he assesses on the basis of the value in the latter invoice. U. S. v. Muller, (1907) 153 Fed. 405, 85 C. C. A. 515, affirming 152 Fed. 575.

Entry on pro forma invoice.—The provision in this section that duty shall not be assessed on "less than the invoice or entered value," does not prevent assessment on less than the value stated in a pro forma invoice on which entry is made under section 4, 2 Fed. Stat. Annot. 612; and where a certified invoice is produced in accordance with the latter section, and the value stated therein is approved by the appraiser, duty may properly be assessed on that value, even though less than that given in the pro forma invoice. U. S. v. Commercial Cable Co., (1905) 141 Fed. 473.

Clerical error.—The expression "clerical error" implies negligence or carelessness of a clerk, writer, or copyist, and assumes that the mistake, or negligence, or carelessness is that of one engaged in the subordinate service of transcription, copying, or comparison, labor not requiring original thought. It has been held that where a standard article was incorrectly invoiced at an excessive price, this was a clerical error of a kind of which correction is not harmful to the administration of customs laws, and relief from which should be granted. Morimura v. U. S., (1908) 160 Fed. 280.

In Lawder v. Stone, (1901) 125 Fed. 809, it appeared that on entering certain merchandise the importers presented an entry and invoice together, the former of which stated only the value of the merchandise, omitting a dutiable item of packing boxes, but the latter plainly stated both items. The merchandise was appraised at the higher value, as stated in the invoice. It was held that in the absence of circumstances indicating an intention to evade the law, this was a case "arising from a manifest clerical error."

In U. S. v. Muller, (1907) 153 Fed. 405, 85 C. C. A. 515, affirming 152 Fed. 575, it appeared that an importer in giving the invoice value of his merchandise stated it in dollars instead of rupees, having mistaken the rupee abbreviation for the dollar mark. It was held that this constituted a clerical mistake.

In Magnus v. U. S., (1908) 160 Fed. 281, affirmed (C. C. A. 1909) 166 Fed. 1020, it appeared that an import was of a more expensive kind than that called for by the invoice, owing to an alleged error on the part of the shipper in failing to conform to an order for the cheaper kind. It was held that this was not a clerical error for which relief should be given, and that, owing to the facility with which such apparent errors might be fraudulently arranged by collusion between importer and shipper, it would be establishing a dangerous precedent to excuse an error of this kind.

Lemon boxes.—Boxes containing lemons, which are treated in the Tariff Act as a dutiable entity by themselves, being subjected to a separate classification from the lemons they contain, are within the provision in section 7 for the undervaluation of "any article of imported merchandise," and, when undervalued, are subject to the penalties provided by said section. Phelps v. U. S., (1892) 142 Fed. 213.

Vol. II, p. 619, sec. 9.

Construction of statute.—An indictment indorsed as based on R. S. sec. 5445, 2 Fed. Stat. Annot. 773, charging defendants with having effected an entry of goods at less than their true weight, and by payment of less than the legal duty thereon, by means of a false invoice and the bribery of an officer, is sustainable under section 9, conceding that such section supersedes said section 5445. U. S. v. Rosenthal, (1903) 126 Fed. 766, affirmed (C. C. A. 1905) 145 Fed. 1.

The first part of section 9, relating to fraudulent or false invoices, statements, practices, or appliances, has application only when such means are employed in connection with goods the importation of which is not concealed. U. S. v. 218½ Carats Loose Emeralds, (1907) 153 Fed. 643, affirmed (C. C. A.) 154 Fed. 839.

"False."—The word "false," as used in this section, means more than incorrect or erroneous. It implies wrong or culpable negligence, and signifies knowingly or negligently untrue. U. S. v. Ninety-Nine Diamonds, (C. C. A. 1905) 139 Fed. 961.

When entry begins.—While it is a condition to the entry of merchandise that invoices should be carried before an American consul, this is not necessarily a part of the entry within the meaning of this section relating to "illegal entry." At the earliest, entry does not begin until the owner, after the goods reach this country, begins that series of acts through which, by application to the customs officials, he gains possession of the goods. U. S. v. One Trunk, (1909) 171 Fed. 772.

Where the defendant was charged with having withdrawn certain imported beans from the warehouse for exportation upon bond and permit, all on Jan. 15, 1902, and the indictment then alleged that the goods were not exported "then and there," but were withheld and concealed with the knowledge of the defendants, it was held that the goods would be regarded as "entered," and the duties therefrom due when the owners or the truckmen to whom the custody was intrusted disregarded the limitations put on them and introduced the goods into the unrestricted commerce of the country, though the time within which the goods might be properly exported had not arrived; and that the indictment was not objectionable because it did not allege that defendants concealed or withheld the goods, not only at the time of their removal, but for all the period which was allowed to export them. U. S. v. Ehrgott, (1910) 182 Fed. 267.

"Other person."—An employee in the custom service of the United States who makes and returns false weights in connection with an entry of imported merchandise is comprehended by the words "other person" as used in this section. U. S. v. Mescall, (1909) 215 U. S. 26, 30 S. Ct. 19, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 77, reversing (1908) 104 Fed. 580.

Fraud must result in deprivation of duties.—Under this section the falsification must be such that if consummated it would deprive the United States of lawful duties. But if by itself, without further wrongful acts, it could not, in the regular course of procedure, produce such result, forfeiture is not incurred, even though there may have been wrongful intent. U. S. v. Ninety-Nine Diamonds, (C. C. A. 1905) 139 Fed. 961; U. S. v. Twenty Boxes Cheese, (1908) 163 Fed. 369.

It is not essential that there should be a completed fraud upon the United States, but it is enough if the act or attempt is of a character calculated to deprive the United States of duty. U. S. v. Sixty-Six Cases Cheese, (1908) 163 Fed. 367.

Necessity for fraudulent intent.—In order to incur the penalty of forfeiture under this paragraph there must be a guilty scienter and intent. U. S. v. Ninety-Nine Diamonds, (1904) 132 Fed. 579, affirmed (C. C. A. 1905) 139 Fed. 961; U. S. v. One Silk Rug, (1908) 158 Fed. 974, 86 C. C. A. 178.

Where an entry was made on an invoice falsely made out by the foreign shipper, but there was an entire absence of fraudulent intent on the part of those concerned in making the entry, it was held that there could be no forfeiture, though the shipper had a financial interest in defrauding the revenue. U. S. v. One Silk Rug, (1908) 158 Fed. 974, 86 C. C. A. 178.

A mere mistake in the description of imported merchandise, unaccompanied by acts from which an intent to defraud may be presumed, is insufficient to justify a forfeiture. U. S. v. Seventy-Five Bales of Tobacco, (1906) 147 Fed. 127, 77 C. C. A. 353.

Abandonment of illegal intent.—In U. S. v. One Trunk, (1909) 171 Fed. 772, it appeared that an importer swore to a false invoice value before an American consul, but on importation presented at the custom house an invoice to which had been added a sum sufficient to make the true value. It was held that the case was not within this section, as the illegal intent was abandoned before any "attempt" was made to make entry of the goods.

To the same effect see U. S. v. One Trunk, (1909) 175 Fed. 1012.

But in U. S. v. One Bag Crushed Wheat, (1908) 166 Fed. 562, it appeared that laces and silks were packed and invoiced as preserved fruits, but before entry the invoice was corrected to show the true nature and value of the goods so concealed. It was held that if the original plan under which the goods were shipped and brought into the United States, as shown by the manner in which they were packed and invoiced, showed a purpose on the part of the consignee to smuggle the goods, they were forfeitable, notwithstanding said correction of the invoice.

Illegal entry by absentee.—Forfeiture for illegal entry under this section does not accrue against a party who was in another country when the entry was made, where it does not appear that the person making the entry at the custom house was his agent. U. S. v. 646 Half-Boxes Figs, (1908) 164 Fed. 778.

False invoice.—Where the foreign shippers of goods to the United States, who were the agents of the merchandise, attempted to make entry of the merchandise by a false invoice and a false declaration of shipment, it was held that the goods were liable to forfeiture. U. S. v. One Bag Crushed Wheat, (1908) 166 Fed. 562.

False statement of ownership.—This section covers a case where a person who is the consignee falsely describes himself as the owner of the merchandise. U. S. v. One Bag Crushed Wheat, (1908) 166 Fed. 562.

False statements as to weights.—Under this section the offense is committed by presenting an invoice containing false statements as to the weight of the merchandise, knowing that, under the practice of the office, such invoice would be used for the purpose of the first entry, and it is immaterial whether or not a statement of such weight was required by law. U. S. v. Rosenthal, (1903) 126 Fed. 766, affirmed (C. C. A. 1905) 145 Fed. 1.

Failure to specify goods.—The fact that three lace dresses in a package by themselves were found in a case of laces and embroideries, but were not mentioned in the invoice, did not by itself warrant the infliction of the penalties provided in this section for entering merchandise by means of a false or fraudulent invoice. The Lace House v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1905) 141 Fed. 869.

False statement by shipper—innocence of person making entry.—Where merchandise is innocently entered by a person on an invoice fraudulently made out by the foreign shipper, it is not liable to forfeiture under this section, providing such penalty where an importer "or other person" makes a customs entry of imports "by means of any fraudulent or false invoice," etc. U. S. v. Twenty Boxes Cheese, (1908) 163 Fed. 369.

Erroneous description of goods.—In U. S. v. Seventy-Five Bales Tobacco, (1906) 147 Fed. 127, 77 C. C. A. 353, it appeared that an importation of tobacco, a part consisting wholly of wrapper, a part of filler, and a part of wrapper and filler mixed, was invoiced and entered as "tobacco fillers." Filler tobacco was subject to a lower rate of duty than mixed tobacco or wrapper tobacco. It was held that in the absence of circumstances indicating a fraudulent intent on the part of the importers, the entry could not be considered to have been made "by means of a fraudulent or false invoice," by reason of which the tobacco should be forfeited under section 9.

Wilful act or omission.—The penalty of forfeiture prescribed by section 9, where any importer is "guilty of any wilful act or omission by means whereof the United States shall be deprived of the lawful duties," is incurred where a passenger on a steamer wilfully omits to mention to the customs officials merchandise in his possession. U. S. v. 218½ Carats Loose Emeralds, (1907) 153 Fed. 643, affirmed (C. C. A.) 154 Fed. 839.

Limitation of action.—The provision in this section for a forfeiture of undervalued merchandise is penal in its nature and is therefore subject to the three-year limitation provided in section 22, Act of June 22, 1874, ch. 391, 18 Stat. L. 190, 2 Fed. Stat. Annot. 761. U. S. v. Wittemann, (1907) 152 Fed. 377, 81 C. C. A. 503.

Exaction of regular duties.—Regular duties may be exacted on an importation of foreign goods, notwithstanding the goods have been seized and forfeited for a violation of this section, and the whole of the proceeds from their sale applied to the use of the United States. (1902) 24 Op. Atty-Gen. 1.

Sufficiency of indictment.—In an indictment under the provision of this section it is not necessary to aver that the United States was in fact deprived of duties by the acts of defendants. U. S. v. Rosenthal, (1903) 126 Fed. 766, affirmed (C. C. A. 1905) 145 Fed. 1.

Sufficiency of information.—Where, in an information for forfeiture, allegations are united from which it might be inferred that the matter could be brought under various sections of the law, but which are insufficient for the ground of forfeiture intended by the government, and where no sufficient ground is actually stated, exceptions to the sufficiency of the information should be sustained. U. S. v. 646 Half-Boxes Figs, (1908) 164 Fed. 778.

Burden of proof.—In proceedings for the forfeiture of imported merchandise, the burden of proving that the importation was legal rests upon the claimant. U. S. v. One Bag Crushed Wheat, (1908) 166 Fed. 562.

Plea in bar.—A verdict for defendants, indicted for smuggling certain diamond rings into the United States, was ground for a plea in bar to a libel by the United States for the forfeiture of the rings. U. S. v. Rosenthal, (1909) 174 Fed. 652, 98 C. C. A. 406.

New trial.—In U. S. v. Two Bales Rugs, (1908) 167 Fed. 689, it appeared that at a trial for the forfeiture of imported merchandise, a foreign shipper, who was charged with fraudulent conduct, was not heard. It was held that he was entitled to a hearing and that, where he seasonably appeared and asked for a new trial, the request should be granted.

Vol. II, p. 620, sec. 10.

Method of procedure.—In The Lace House v. U. S., (1905) 141 Fed. 869, 73 C. C. A. 103, it appeared that an appraising officer, having no knowledge as to the value of certain imported articles, sent samples to the appraiser at the port of New York for information. It was held that this was legal, and that the right so to do or to use any other available means was conferred by section 10, authorizing appraising officers to use "all reasonable ways and means" in their power in ascertaining the value of merchandise.

Pro forma invoice.—In U. S. v. Bennett, (1909) 176 Fed. 580, it appeared that entry was made on a pro forma invoice and the value stated therein was approved by the appraiser, who also, however, approved the lower value given in a consular invoice subsequently produced by the importer. It was held that duty should have been assessed on the basis of the latter value.

Must be examination of goods advanced in value.—An appraiser may not legally advance the value of imported merchandise not actually before him, or not represented by sufficient samples, even though he have before him one package in ten, as prescribed by section 2901, R. S., 2 Fed. Stat. Annot. 880. If these packages do not represent every variety of goods, such representation must be had by securing further packages or samples for examination. U. S. v. Beer, (C. C. A. 1906) 150 Fed. 566, affirming (1905) 142 Fed. 199.

Failure to appraise at true value.—Merchandise having been erroneously invoiced at an excessive value, the appraiser merely accepted that value as being sufficiently high, without making any effort to ascertain the true value, as required by section 10. It was held that the appraisement was therefore invalid. U. S. v. Muller, (1907) 158 Fed. 405, 85 C. C. A. 515, affirming 152 Fed. 575.

Vol. II, p. 622, sec. 13.

Jurisdiction.—In U. S. v. Taylor, (1909) 171 Fed. 152, it appeared that part of the evidence was taken before one general appraiser and part before another, who decided the case later, but by oversight failed to consider the evidence taken before the first general appraiser. It was held that this oversight was only an error of procedure, and did not deprive him of jurisdiction.

Right to reappraisement of seized goods.—The fact that goods have been seized for undervaluation does not deprive the consignee or owner of the right of reappraisement given under this section. The Lace House v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1905) 141 Fed. 869.

Not limited to proceedings under this Act.—A District Court of the United States has jurisdiction of an action of debt to recover duties due from an importer to the United States, which through accident, mistake, or fraud have not been paid, the government not being limited to its remedy by summary proceedings against the goods under sections 13 and 14, or other provisions of the tariff laws for the collection of duties, which are not only a charge against the goods, but also a personal debt of the importer. U. S. v. National Fibre Board Co., (1904) 133 Fed. 596.

Reviewability of reappraisement.—Under this section, providing that decisions by the Board of General Appraisers in reappraisement cases shall be "final and conclusive," it was clearly intended that such decisions shall not be open to judicial review, except to inquire whether the appraisers have exceeded the authority conferred upon them by law or have otherwise acted illegally or fraudulently; and where there was no charge that the Board of Appraisers had acted illegally in denying the importers a hearing and opportunity to produce testimony in the matter, and there was some evidence to support the board's conclusions as to value, its reappraisement was conclusive under said section. Grubnau v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1910) 176 Fed. 904, affirming (1909) 171 Fed. 284.

The provisions of this section making decisions of appraising officers final and conclusive does not prevent inquiry as to whether such officers acted legally; and evidence is admissible to show that items independent of the actual value have been included in the appraised value. Appraisers may not cut off all inquiry into their action by merely stating that an item was added "to make market value." Erlanger v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1907) 154 Fed. 949, affirming 152 Fed. 576.

Where the Board of General Appraisers misinterprets a portion of the evidence, a legal error is committed, making it necessary to see if the error works injustice, and proceedings for review may be initiated by protest under section 14. U. S. v. Haviland, (1909) 167 Fed. 414, affirmed (1910) 177 Fed. 175, 100 C. C. A. 637.

Presumption of correctness.—In the absence of evidence to the contrary, it will be presumed that an appraisement by a local appraiser, under section 13, was in conformity with law and was valid. U. S. v. Curnen, (1906) 146 Fed. 45, 76 C. C. A. 503, reversing (1904) 136 Fed. 807; Vandiver v. U. S., (1907) 156 Fed. 961, 84 C. C. A. 522.

Invalid reappraisement—dutiable value.—In U. S. v. Curnen, (1906) 146 Fed. 45, 76 C. C. A. 503, reversing (1904) 136 Fed. 807, it appeared that the value of certain imported merchandise was advanced by the local appraiser, and the importers brought reappraisement proceedings before a general appraiser and a Board of General Appraisers, as provided in section 13. The reappraisements being defective and void, but the appraisement by the local appraiser being valid, it was held that duty should be assessed on the value found by the local appraiser, rather than the invoice value.

Reliquidation — duty of collector. — The Board of General Appraisers sustained an importer's protest directing that the collector should reliquidate the duties at the rates appearing to be applicable "from the invoices, samples, or record," or, in the absence of sufficient data, should reliquidate at the rate of forty per cent. ad valorem. It was held that the terms of this decision did not require the collector to consider data outside of the record made before the board. U. S. v. Hunter, (1907) 153 Fed. 873, 83 C. C. A. 55.

Failure to examine goods on reappraisement. — In U. S. v. Murphy, (1898) 136 Fed. 811, it appeared that on appeals from appraisements by the local appraiser of imported merchandise taken by the collector of customs under section 13, the general appraiser who made the reappraisements did not have before him the merchandise in question, nor samples thereof, as the merchandise had passed out of the possession and control of the importers, and the collector had not ordered its return, in accordance with the terms of a bond which had been given by the importers under R. S. sec. 2899, 8 Fed. Stat. Annot. 679. It was held that the reappraisements were void, and that the duties should be assessed on the basis of the values found by the local appraiser, and not those found by the general appraiser.

Mode of correcting errors in procedure. — Where a general appraiser through oversight failed to consider a portion of the evidence in a reappraisement case which he decided, it was held that the remedy of the aggrieved party was by appeal for reappraisement by a Board of General Appraisers, as provided in section 13, rather than by protest as provided in section 14. U. S. v. Taylor, (1909) 171 Fed. 152.

Necessity for certificate of appraisement. — See under this title, vol. 2, p. 693, sec. 2950.

Vol. II, p. 624, sec. 14.

Amendment. — This section was amended by Act of May 27, 1908, ch. 205, 35 Stat. L. 403, 1909 Supp. Fed. Stat. Annot. 109.

Protest. — A protest against the assessment of duty which does not point out distinctly and specifically the proper rate of duty is not sufficient. In re Solvay Process Co., (1905) 134 Fed. 678; Fuld v. U. S., (1906) 143 Fed. 920.

A protest is not sufficient that claims that the merchandise is free of duty under a certain paragraph of the Tariff Act, though as a matter of fact it is free of duty under another paragraph of the free list of the same Act, to which the attention of the collector is not called in the protest. U. S. v. Knowles, (C. C. A. 1903) 126 Fed. 737, reversing 122 Fed. 971.

A protest is sufficient which, though imperfectly expressed, may be understood when read in connection with the statute referred to therein; and the fact that the collector understood the protest is relevant. Lothrop v. U. S., (1908) 164 Fed. 99.

Where, in reliquidating an entry pursuant to a decision of the Board of General Appraisers rendered under this section the collector fails to allow the importer all he is entitled to under such decision, the importer may legally file a protest against the action of the collector, as provided in this section. U. S. v. Dickson, (C. C. A. 1905) 139 Fed. 251, affirming (1904) 131 Fed. 573.

While alternative grounds of dissatisfaction may properly be stated in protests against decisions by collectors of customs, this rule does not permit the enumeration of a long list of paragraphs, many of which are entirely remote, with the purpose of covering everything. Under the provision in section 14, that protests shall set forth "distinctly and specifically" the "importers' grounds of objections, it is not enough that the provision ultimately relied upon can be found somewhere in the protest. Lichtenstein v. U. S., (1909) 175 Fed. 1016.

Protests held sufficient. — A protest claiming free entry of an importation of tapioca flour under paragraph 646 of the Tariff Act of Aug. 27, 1894, which provided for the free entry of tapioca, was held to be sufficient to advise the collector that the exemption from duty was in fact claimed under paragraph 677 of the Act of July 24, 1897, which contains an identical provision, where such act was the one then in force and which governed the importation. Shaw v. U. S., (1903) 122 Fed. 443, 58 C. C. A. 425, reversing (1902) 117 Fed. 366, set out in the original note.

In Fuld v. U. S., (1907) 152 Fed. 165, 81 C. C. A. 417, an importer's protest read: "Protest is hereby made against . . . your decision assessing duty at thirty-five per cent. ad valorem, or other rate or rates, on lithographic prints, krippen, mechanical cards, etc., covered by entries below named. . . . This protest is intended to apply separately and collectively to every part of goods assessed under paragraph 418, as well as to all other goods assessed at thirty-five per cent. ad valorem." It was held that the protest was not insufficient because no part of the importation in question was assessed at the rate of thirty-five per cent. under paragraph 418, or elsewhere, but should be construed as relating to lithographic prints and booklets assessed at other rates and under another paragraph than were mentioned in the protest.

In Woodruff v. U. S., (1896) 154 Fed. 861, it appeared that importers protested against the action of a collector of customs in considering a certain amount as the entered value, and asserted that he had erred in failing to regard the fact that said amount included some nondutiable items. It was held that this statement of objections was sufficiently distinct and specific to satisfy the requirements of section 14.

In U. S. v. Leerburger, (C. C. A. 1908) 160 Fed. 651, affirming (1907) 155 Fed. 146, materials dutiable at fifty cents per pound as "woven fabrics . . . in the gum," under the first clause of a tariff paragraph, were asserted in an importer's protest to be dutiable "at sixty cents per pound . . . under the first clause, . . . being woven fabrics in the piece, dyed." This rate and description ("dyed") pertained to the second clause, and not the first. It was held that the protest referred sufficiently to the first clause.

In Helmuth v. U. S., (1904) 135 Fed. 912, affirmed (C. C. A. 1906) 145 Fed. 36, it appeared that an importer protested against the payment of duty on ninety-nine skins, classified as hides, in regard to which he stated in his protest, "each of which weighs under twelve pounds; and looking to you for the refund of duty on these ninety-nine skins, I remain," etc. It appeared that twelve pounds is the dividing line between hides and skins, and that paragraph 664 is the only paragraph authorizing the admission of such skins free of duty. It was held that the protest was sufficient.

In Weil v. U. S., (1900) 124 Fed. 1006, it appeared that certain long-haired Russian callskins were classified as dutiable as "hides of cattle," under paragraph 437, when they should have been classified as free of duty, under paragraph 664 of said Act covering "skins of all kinds, raw." The importers' protest against the assessment of the collector did not refer to the proper paragraph (664), but only to paragraphs 561 and 562 of said Act, which relate respectively to "furs, undressed," and "fur skins." It was held that this was a sufficient compliance with the requirement in section 14.

In U. S. v. Leerburger, (C. C. A. 1908) 160 Fed. 651, affirming (1907) 155 Fed. 146, goods dutiable under one paragraph of a Tariff Act were asserted by an importer in his protest to be dutiable under another paragraph, but the language of the protest indicated an intention to cite the former. It was held that the protest should be construed as referring to the former.

Protest held insufficient.—In Boker v. U. S., (1905) 140 Fed. 115, affirmed (C. C. A. 1906) 145 Fed. 1022, it appeared that certain importers protested against the assessment of duty on an importation, stating in their protest merely the contention that the merchandise was dutiable under a certain paragraph of the Tariff Act, with no mention of the grounds of their objections or of the rate of duty claimed to be applicable, and the paragraph cited was the one under which duty had been assessed, and was a long one, containing many subdivisions and different rates of duty. It was held that the protest was insufficient, under the rule in section 14 that protests must be specific and distinct in the statement of objections to the assessment of duty.

In U. S. v. Hartley, (1905) 140 Fed. 969, it appeared that certain imported merchandise, covered by an entry embracing three invoices, was all subjected to the same rate of duty, which, it appeared, was excessive as to one of the invoices. In protesting against the rate of duty the importer specified one of the two invoices on which duty was correctly assessed. It was held that the protest should be considered restricted to the invoice which it specified.

In U. S. v. Bayersdorfer, (C. C. A. 1903) 126 Fed. 732, reversing 122 Fed. 968, it appeared that an importer filed a protest against the assessment of duty by a collector of customs, claiming therein that the merchandise was either dutiable at a less rate or was free of duty, under certain paragraphs of the dutiable and free lists of the Tariff Act, which he specified in his protest. The board of general appraisers decided that the assessment was erroneous, and that the merchandise should have been classified as free of duty under another paragraph than those cited in the protest, but that the protest should be overruled on the ground that, in not referring to the proper paragraph, it failed to satisfy the requirements of section 14, which prescribes that an importer shall set forth in his protest "distinctly and specifically . . . the reasons for his objections" to the assessment. It was held that this action was correct.

In Corbitt, etc., Co. v. U. S., (1907) 163 Fed. 648, it appeared that goods which should have been classified free of duty under a paragraph relating to "jute bagging" were asserted in the importers' protest to be free under a paragraph relating to "burlaps," and there was no suggestion that the importers at the time of filing the protest had in mind the former provision. It was held that the protest did not set forth the importers' objections "distinctly and specifically," within the meaning of section 14.

Where an importer protests against the assessment of duty on the ground of an alleged application of the similitude clause of the Tariff Act, unless the protest contains reference to said provision it is not sufficiently distinct and specific to meet the requirements of section 14. U. S. v. Dearberg, (C. C. A. 1905) 143 Fed. 472, reversing (1904) 135 Fed. 245.

A protest referring to "hats made from so-called artificial silk" cannot be construed as relating to hats made from real horsehair. U. S. v. Wanamaker, (1910) 175 Fed. 900, 99 C. C. A. 390, reversing (1909) 169 Fed. 664.

In Rosenberg v. U. S., (1906) 146 Fed. 84, it appeared that certain imported merchandise was erroneously classified as wool wearing apparel, instead of as manufactures in chief value of fur. The importers, in protesting against the classification, stated as reasons for their objection merely that the merchandise was "dutiable at the appropriate rate and under the proper paragraph according to the component material of chief value." It was held that this did not meet the requirement of section 14 that an importer in protesting shall set forth "distinctly and specifically . . . the reasons for his objections."

Certain importers, in protesting against the assessment of customs duty, based their objections on an inapplicable paragraph of the Tariff Act, but named the correct rate of duty, it happening that the rate provided in said paragraph was the same as in the paragraph that should have been referred to in the protest. There was nothing in the terms of the protest to direct the attention of the collector of customs to the proper paragraph or to suggest that the importers had inadvertently referred to the wrong paragraph and had intended to refer to the right one. It was held that the protest was not sufficiently distinct and specific. U. S. v. Fleitmann, (1905) 137 Fed. 476, 69 C. C. A. 624, affirming (1904) 131 Fed. 396.

Construction of protest.—In U. S. v. Bayersdorfer, (C. C. A. 1903) 126 Fed. 732, reversing 122 Fed. 968, it appeared that the Board of General Appraisers had before it several protests relating to the classification of certain merchandise, one of which stated objections to the collector's assessment that were not stated in the other protests. It was held that the presence of the former protest was of no moment as affecting the construction of the latter protests.

Time for lodging.—This section, permitting protests against decisions of collectors of customs to be filed "within ten days after but not before" liquidation of the entries, fixes definitely the time within which a protest must be filed; and, if not filed within this period, a protest is invalid. U. S. v. Wyman, (1907) 156 Fed. 97, 84 C. C. A. 128.

In Sgobel v. Robertson, (1893) 126 Fed. 577, it appeared that at the time of the original liquidation of duty on an importation of merchandise, the importers failed to protest against the exaction of duty on certain charges; but later, on the reliquidation of the entry solely to include a damage allowance, they filed a protest against the duty on the charges, which had not been affected in any way by the reliquidation. It was held that the protest was within the requirement of section 2931, R. S. U. S. [repealed by Act of June 10, 1890, sec. 29, 2 Fed. Stat. Annot. 935] that protests against excessive exactions of duty shall be filed "within ten days after the ascertainment and liquidation of the duties."

Where, under instructions of the Secretary of the Treasury, and upon due notice to the importers, an entry of imported merchandise was tentatively liquidated, while the final liquidation was held in abeyance over a year, pending the possibility of a change of rates, it was held that the final liquidation was the liquidation within ten days after which the importers might legally file a protest. U. S. v. Franklin Sugar Refining Co., (1905) 137 Fed. 677.

In Frost v. Saltonstall, (1887) 129 Fed. 481, it appeared that notice was posted in a custom house that it would be closed June 17th—a holiday observed by local custom, but not established by law. Certain importers having notice of the closing of the custom house on that day, which was the tenth day after the liquidation of their entry, filed a protest on the day following. It was held that the protest was filed in accordance with the requirements of R. S. sec. 2931, providing that protests shall be made within ten days after the ascertainment and liquidation of the duties.

For the purpose of ascertaining the date for filing protests, importers are bound to take notice of the dates given in the liquidation bulletin publicly posted as prescribed by the customs regulations; and, in case of a conflict between the bulletin and notations on the entry, they should be governed by the former. U. S. v. Wyman, (1907) 156 Fed. 97, 84 C. C. A. 123.

Pay duty as well as file protest.—In U. S. v. Tiffany, (C. C. A. 1906) 151 Fed. 473, reversing (1905) 137 Fed. 971, it appeared that a collector of customs reliquidated the duty on imported merchandise at an increased rate, and brought an action for the amount thus becoming due. The importers defended on the ground that the rate assessed was illegal. It was held that questions as to rate could not be raised in such proceedings; that the Board of General Appraisers was created as a special tribunal having, subject to review by the courts, exclusive jurisdiction over controversies as to the rate of duty on importations; that the importers' only remedy was to pay under protest the duties found due by the collector; and that unless they did this the collector's decision was "final and conclusive," as provided in said section.

Amendment of protest.—In U. S. v. Bayersdorfer, (C. C. A. 1903) 126 Fed. 732, reversing 122 Fed. 968, it appeared that in appealing from a decision of the Board of General Appraisers, an importer set forth in his petition a claim based on a paragraph of the Tariff Act not referred to in his protest filed with the collector and passed on by said board. It was held that this was not permissible.

Waiver of defect.—On appeal by the United States from a decision of the Board of General Appraisers, which reversed the assessment of duty by a collector of customs, where no statement of error was made by the appellant in regard to the sufficiency of the protest on which the proceedings before said board were based, it was held that this fact constituted a waiver by the United States of an alleged defect in the protest. U. S. v. Brown, (1903) 127 Fed. 793, 62 C. C. A. 473, affirming 121 Fed. 605.

Abandonment of protest.—Where importers abandoned protests before the Board of General Appraisers without taking testimony, it was within the sound discretion of the board to refuse to reopen the cases or restore them for hearing; and on appeal to the Circuit Court the importers were not entitled to introduce further evidence. Strohmeyer, etc., Co. v. U. S., (1910) 180 Fed. 636.

Duty of collector to transmit protest.—It is a breach of duty for a collector of customs to refuse to forward to the Board of General Appraisers protests which have been filed under section 14, and for this breach the protestant is entitled to damages. Kendall v. Lyman, (1908) 161 Fed. 652.

But a collector of customs is not liable to importers for the failure of his predecessor to send the importers' protests to the Board of General Appraisers. Gulbenkian v. Stranahan, (1907) 153 Fed. 838.

Damages for failure to forward protest. — Only nominal damages are recoverable for a breach of the duty of a collector of customs to forward an importer's protest to the Board of General Appraisers, where the breach is technical, and actual damage has not been sustained. Kendall v. Lyman, (1908) 161 Fed. 652.

Liability of government for delay in forwarding protest. — Where there was a delay of several years by customs officers in forwarding an importer's protests to the Board of General Appraisers for decision, and during this period the value of the importer's evidence became impaired, it was held that no right against the government arose by reason of this delay, particularly when not intentional or negligent. Franklin Sugar Refining Co. v. U. S., (1907) 153 Fed. 653.

Jurisdiction. — The jurisdiction of the Circuit Courts of the United States in respect to customs duties is concurrent with that given to the Board of United States General Appraisers. U. S. v. Johnson, (1906) 145 Fed. 1018.

The Board of General Appraisers, under the authority given in this section to "examine and decide the case" submitted to it by a collector of customs, is required first of all to determine its jurisdiction, including the validity of the protest. U. S. v. Brown, (1903) 127 Fed. 793, 62 C. C. A. 473, affirming 121 Fed. 605.

The Board of General Appraisers has jurisdiction over cases relating to the exaction of fees on packed packages, though no entry of such packages may ever have been made at the custom house. U. S. v. American Express Co., (1907) 154 Fed. 996.

Surrender of jurisdiction once acquired. — Where a board of three general appraisers has, as provided in section 14, acquired jurisdiction over a case through the transmission by the collector of the papers in the case, it is then the duty of that board to "examine and decide the case thus submitted," as prescribed by said section; it may not afterward surrender its jurisdiction to another board; and a rule adopted by the general appraisers is invalid which, in order to prevent conflicting decisions, provides for the transfer of a case from one board to another when the majority of all the general appraisers is of opinion that a proposed decision in the case by one board conflicts with a previous decision. Prosser v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1907) 158 Fed. 971, reversing 154 Fed. 721.

Evidence. — In Knauth v. U. S., (1907) 155 Fed. 144, the Board of General Appraisers admitted as evidence in a case testimony taken previously in another case. This was done over the objection of counsel, who had not appeared in the previous case nor had opportunity of cross-examining the witnesses therein; and the articles involved in the two cases were not shown to be the same. It was held that such evidence should not have been admitted.

Decision in conflict with previous court decision. — Where there is conflict between a decision of the Circuit Court on appeal from the Board of General Appraisers, and a subsequent decision of the board, the Secretary of the Treasury should give greater consideration to the decision of the court. (1903) 25 Op. Atty-Gen. 81.

How far binding on Treasury Department. — The Secretary of the Treasury and collectors of customs are bound by classification decisions of the Board of General Appraisers, when unappealed from, only so far as such decisions affect the goods immediately before the board for classification. (1903) 25 Op. Atty-Gen. 81.

Default on hearing of appeal — waiver by government. — Where importers who failed through inadvertence to appear on the hearing of an appeal taken by them to the Board of General Appraisers, which entered a default, and affirmed the action of the collector, afterward applied for and obtained an order from the Circuit Court directing further testimony to be taken, and the government made no objection to such order, and appeared pursuant thereto, and cross-examined the witnesses, it waived the right to raise the objection thereafter that the appellants were concluded by the default before the board of appraisers. In re Myers, (1903) 123 Fed. 952.

"Decision" of collector. — Under this section which confers upon the Board of General Appraisers power to review decisions of the collector, it has been held that the board had jurisdiction to review the action of the collector in reliquidating an entry although it was done pursuant to an order of the Secretary of the Treasury. U. S. v. Beebe, (1903) 122 Fed. 762, 58 C. C. A. 562.

Correction of decision. — In U. S. v. Leeming, (1907) 153 Fed. 489, it appeared that two months after a reappraisal decision had been made by a Board of General Appraisers, the board amended it in order to correct an error. It was held that the correction was illegal.

Suspension of trial until payment of duties. — In an action against an importer for unpaid duties, the Circuit Court has ample power to suspend the trial until the importer, by payment of the duties assessed, may put himself in position to try the question as to classification of the goods before the Board of General Appraisers. U. S. v. Tiffany, (1907) 153 Fed. 969, 83 C. C. A. 81; U. S. v. Tiffany, (1907) 154 Fed. 740.

Mere delay in the payment of duties on imported merchandise does not deprive the Board of General Appraisers of power to pass upon the question of the proper classification of imported merchandise under this section, where a protest has been filed within the time prescribed in said section. U. S. v. Tiffany, (1907) 154 Fed. 740.

Recovery of duties in Court of Claims. — Where importers had failed to proceed for the recovery of excessive duties by filing protests, and thus securing a decision by the Board of General Appraisers, as provided by this section, it was held that they were precluded from recovery in the Circuit Court as a Court of Claims under the Tucker Act (Act of March 3, 1887, ch. 359, 24 Stat. L. 505, 2 Fed. Stat. Annot. 80). Gulbenkian v. U. S., (1909) 175 Fed. 860.

What constitutes record.—Reappraisal proceedings under section 13 are separate and distinct from protest proceedings under section 14, and where the legality of a reappraisal is challenged by proceedings under the latter section, the entire reappraisal record does not become a part of the record in the latter proceedings, unless expressly admitted. Harris v. U. S., (1910) 177 Fed. 475.

Custom house error.—In U. S. v. Wyman, (1907) 156 Fed. 97, 84 C. C. A. 123, it appeared that by a custom house error the date of liquidation was stated in an entry as being later than it was in fact, and a representative of the importer was thereby misled; but the correct date was given in both a notice sent to the importer and the liquidation bulletin posted for inspection by importers. It was held that the error did not have the effect of extending the period for filing protests, prescribed by section 14.

Conclusiveness of findings.—Findings of the Board of General Appraisers, unless unsupported or against the weight of evidence, or additional evidence has been taken, will not be disturbed by the courts on appeal. Vandiver v. U. S., (1907) 156 Fed. 961, 84 C. C. A. 522.

Conclusiveness of reliquidation.—A reliquidation of duties by a collector, like an original liquidation, is conclusive on the owner or importer under section 14, unless notice of objection is given within ten days. U. S. v. Mexican International R. Co., (1907) 151 Fed. 545, 81 C. C. A. 61.

Illegal reappraisal not conclusive.—To the general rule that an reappraisal by the local appraiser is final and conclusive, unless revived by reappraisal proceedings, there is an exception in case the appraiser proceeded on a wrong principle, as by advancing the value of merchandise not examined by him. In such case the importer may pursue the remedy prescribed in this section. U. S. v. Beer, (C. C. A. 1906) 150 Fed. 566, affirming (1905) 142 Fed. 199.

Mandamus of general appraisers.—In the event that a Board of General Appraisers, after acquiring jurisdiction of a case under this section, refuses to "examine and decide," as prescribed in said section, an importer would be entitled to apply to the proper court for a mandamus to require the board to exercise its jurisdiction. Prosser v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1907) 158 Fed. 971, reversing 154 Fed. 721.

Duty on repairs—review of assessment by general appraisers.—The action of a collector of customs in assessing duty on the cost of repairs of vessels, as provided in R. S., sec. 3114, 2 Fed. Stat. Annot. 768, is subject to review by the Board of General Appraisers, under the provisions of this section giving said board jurisdiction to review decisions of collectors of customs "as to the rate and amount of duties chargeable upon imported merchandise, including all dutiable costs and charges, and as to all fees and exactions of whatever character (except duties on tonnage)." U. S. v. Geo. Hall Coal Co., (1905) 134 Fed. 1003, affirmed (C. C. A. 1906) 142 Fed. 1039.

Duty of collector to reliquidate.—Where, under this section, the Board of General Appraisers sustains an importer's protest against the assessment of duty by a collector of customs, it becomes the duty of the collector to reliquidate the entry in accordance with the board's decision. U. S. v. Dickson, (C. C. A. 1905) 139 Fed. 251, affirming (1904) 131 Fed. 573.

Finality of assessment.—In an action by a collector of customs against an importer for a balance of duties found due on reliquidation of an entry, it was held that the importer could not defend on the ground that the assessment was incorrect, because section 14 provides that the decision of the collector shall be final and conclusive against the importer, unless reviewed by the Board of General Appraisers. The importer could seek his remedy for erroneous assessment only through the method prescribed in said section, which requires that the duties shall be paid under protest and the matter brought before the Board of General Appraisers for decision. Louisville Pillow Co. v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1906) 144 Fed. 386.

A reliquidation has all the validity of the original liquidation, and, when made, becomes the liquidation in lieu of the original, and must be treated as such, under this section, providing that protests against the assessment of duty must be filed within ten days after "liquidation." Louisville Pillow Co. v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1906) 144 Fed. 386.

Action in court for recovery bars appeal to general appraisers.—In an action by importers against the collector of customs, in a Circuit Court, for the recovery of excessive duties, a verdict was directed for the importers for a part of the claims made, and against them for the remainder, judgment being rendered and satisfied on that basis. It was held that the entire matter thus became res adjudicata, and the importers could not by subsequent proceedings before the Board of United States General Appraisers have a further recovery on the merchandise as to which said verdict had been adverse. U. S. v. Johnson, (1906) 145 Fed. 1018.

Voluntary satisfaction of protest by collector.—In Gulbenkian v. Stranahan, (1907) 158 Fed. 836, it appeared that a collector of customs sustained an importer's protest against the assessment of duty, instead of transmitting the protest to the Board of General Appraisers for decision, under section 14. It was held that the provisions of the Act were as well complied with by this action as they would have been by transmission of the case to the board.

Protest against tentative liquidation.—Where an importer filed a protest against a tentative liquidation of an entry, it was held that this action did not preclude him from filing another protest against the final liquidation subsequently, regardless of whether at the time of making the first protest he regarded the first liquidation as final, and not tentative. U. S. v. Franklin Sugar Refining Co., (1905) 137 Fed. 877.

Review of finding of fact.—In Neresheimer v. U. S., (1904) 136 Fed. 86, 68 C. C. A. 654, reversing (1903) 131 Fed. 977, findings of fact by a Board of General Appraisers were reviewed by the court on appeal, where it appeared that the decision was made by general appraisers who did not hear the testimony, which was all taken before another general appraiser, who did not himself sign the decision.

Vol. II, p. 627, sec. 15.

Amendment.—This section was amended by Act of May 27, 1908, ch. 205, 35 Stat. L. 403, 1909 Supp. Fed. Stat. Annot. 109.

Time for filing applications for review.—The provision in this paragraph that applications for review of decisions of the Board of General Appraisers should be filed "within thirty days next after such decision, and not afterwards," is mandatory; and a delay of one day beyond the period prescribed is as fatal as a longer period. An application filed after thirty days must be dismissed for want of jurisdiction. Carriere v. U. S., (1908) 163 Fed. 1009.

Finding of fact.—On appeal from the Board of General Appraisers the Circuit Court should not disturb the board's findings on doubtful questions of fact, especially as to questions which turn upon the intelligence and credibility of witnesses produced before the board. Balaban v. U. S., (1909) 174 Fed. 832. Compare U. S. v. Proctor, (C. C. A. 1906) 145 Fed. 126, affirming (1905) 139 Fed. 586.

Where, on appeal from a classification for duty, the testimony as to the commercial designation of the article was not only conflicting, but so closely balanced as to render it difficult to say on which side the weight of evidence lay, it was held that the finding of the board of appraisers on such issue would not be disturbed. Gabriel v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1903) 123 Fed. 296.

The rule that, in reviewing decisions of the Board of General Appraisers under section 15, courts should not disturb the board's findings on doubtful questions of fact, does not extend to a case where there is no express evidence or express finding on the subject. Gallenkamp v. Wyman, (1906) 178 Fed. 460.

A finding of the Board of General Appraisers upon legitimate evidence will not be reversed, where the sole substantial statement relied upon for reversal consists of an informal acknowledgment made by a foreign merchant. Baldwin v. U. S., (1905) 139 Fed. 1005.

Effect of failure to give evidence before appraisers.—The importers, in a protest case pending before the Board of General Appraisers, having failed, after due notice, to introduce the evidence necessary to sustain their contention, the board thereupon overruled the protest, and the importers appealed to the Circuit Court. It was held that the decision of the board should be affirmed, though it appeared that the contention of the importers was correct. Donat v. U. S., (1900) 124 Fed. 463.

Sufficiency of petition.—Under this section prescribing that petitions for review of decisions of the Board of General Appraisers shall contain "a concise statement of the errors of law and fact complained of," a petition alleging that imported merchandise should have been held to be covered by a certain paragraph of the free list of a Tariff Act is not sufficient when in fact the merchandise comes within another paragraph of such list. Vandegrift v. U. S., (1907) 154 Fed. 923.

Evidence—Competency.—Though this section makes competent evidence admitted by the board, the court may attach very slight weight to such evidence. Knauth v. U. S., (1907) 155 Fed. 144.

Ex parte evidence.—There is no provision for any relaxation of the ordinary rules of evidence in taking proofs before United States general appraisers, and ex parte affidavits are not admissible before a general appraiser sitting as referee for the introduction of evidence in the Circuit Court as provided in section 15. White v. U. S., (1896) 154 Fed. 175; U. S. v. Zucca, (1909) 175 Fed. 578.

Additional evidence.—Where importers appeared before the Board of General Appraisers and submitted their protests, without introducing any evidence in support of their allegations, it was held that on appeal to the Circuit Court they would not be allowed to introduce any evidence. Allen v. U. S., (1904) 127 Fed. 777; Plummer v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1908) 166 Fed. 730, affirming (1907) 160 Fed. 284.

The rule that no evidence may be introduced on appeal from the Board of General Appraisers by the importer, where he offered none before the board, has been held to apply even though he failed to receive the board's notice of hearing, where the failure was due to his own fault. Maurer v. U. S., (1907) 160 Fed. 228.

The court will permit the importer to introduce evidence on the appeal, if it appears that it was not the importer's fault that the evidence was not presented to the board. Cowl v. U. S., (1900) 124 Fed. 475.

An importer is not precluded from introducing new evidence in the Circuit Court, on appeal from the Board of General Appraisers, if he introduced some new evidence before the board. Mendelson v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1907) 154 Fed. 33, reversing (1906) 146 Fed. 78; Wolff v. U. S., (1909) 168 Fed. 970.

Where a decision of a collector of customs as to the dutiability of imported merchandise is under review by the Board of General Appraisers or the courts, his findings of fact, when based on no other evidence than that afforded by the articles themselves, may be reversed without any further evidence. The collector, the board, and the courts are all equally entitled to avail themselves of such information as may be derived from an inspection of the articles in connection with the facts of common knowledge and experience, of which judicial notice may be taken. U. S. v. Strauss, (C. C. A. 1905) 136 Fed. 185.

Objection to additional evidence — when taken. — On appeal from the Board of General Appraisers, under this section, the importers had taken some evidence in the Circuit Court, when the government objected to the introduction of further evidence because none had been offered before the board. It was held that the fact that this objection might have been raised at an earlier stage of the proceedings did not estop the government from relying on it when raised. Plummer v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1908) 166 Fed. 730, affirming (1907) 160 Fed. 284.

Further cumulative evidence. — Importers should present to the Board of General Appraisers all the evidence which they can produce, and on appeal to the Circuit Court little weight should be given additional cumulative evidence which could easily have been laid before the board. Bromley v. U. S., (1907) 154 Fed. 399.

Excluded evidence. — Under section 15, where it is desired that evidence excluded by the Board of General Appraisers should, on appeal to the Circuit Court, be passed on by the court, it is requisite either that an exception should be taken to the board's ruling excluding the evidence, and the matter brought before the court in the assignments of error, or that the evidence should be offered as additional evidence in the manner provided in said section. Harris v. U. S., (1910) 177 Fed. 475.

Hearing de novo. — Under this section a Circuit Court has power, on appeal from a decision of the Board of General Appraisers, to direct additional testimony to be taken and to hear the case de novo; and this may be done notwithstanding the entry of a default against the importers, who were the appellants, by the Board of Appraisers, where such default has been waived. In re Myers, (1903) 123 Fed. 952.

Assignments of error. — On appeal from the Board of General Appraisers the Circuit Court will not consider whether a protest decided by the board was sufficient, unless the question of insufficiency is raised by the assignment of errors. U. S. v. Hempstead, (1910) 180 Fed. 956.

In U. S. v. Hempstead, (1910) 180 Fed. 956, on an appeal from the Board of General Appraisers, error was assigned on the point that the board had erred in holding the merchandise in question to be free of duty. It was held that this assignment related to the merits, and was not sufficiently comprehensive to include the point of the sufficiency of the protest passed on by the board.

On appeal from the Board of General Appraisers an importer made eight assignments, in none of which was the point ultimately relied upon referred to more specifically than by two general assignments — that the board had erred "in overruling the protests" and

"in not sustaining the protests." It was held that as the protests did not contain the point relied upon, there had been a sufficient compliance with the requirement in section 15, of "a concise statement of the errors of law and fact complained of." U. S. v. Loewenthal, (1909) 175 Fed. 777, 99 C. C. A. 349.

In U. S. v. Hatters' Fur Exch., (1907) 153 Fed. 595, it appeared that the board sustained the more favorable of the two alternative contentions made in an importer's protest. The government appealed to the Circuit Court, asserting in the assignment of errors that the board's decision was erroneous, and that the merchandise should have been held to have been properly assessed. It was held that the court might decide the merchandise to be dutiable in accordance with the importer's alternative contention, notwithstanding the absence of a specific assignment on that point by the government.

In making the assignments of error, on appeal from a decision of the Board of General Appraisers, under section 15, an importer omitted from his specific assignments a reference to the provision of law under which his merchandise should have been classified, though such provision had been referred to in his protest, which was passed on by the board; but he added a general assignment that "the protest should be sustained and the collector's decision reversed." It was held that said general assignment did not raise any questions additional to those raised by the specific assignments, and that it did not, by referring to the protest, have the effect of making the protest a part of the petition so as to remedy the omission of the correct contention. Vandegrift v. U. S., (1907) 154 Fed. 923.

In U. S. v. Brown, (1903) 127 Fed. 793, 62 C. C. A. 473, affirming 121 Fed. 605, it appeared that on an appeal from a decision of the Board of General Appraisers, a statement of twenty-one errors was made, nineteen of them relating to the merits, while the last two were general, alleging only that the "board erred as a matter of law." It was held that these two assignments should be construed with reference to the preceding nineteen, and not as raising the question of the validity of the protest on which the proceedings before the board were based; it was held also that statements so general in form were not in compliance with the requirements for appeals under this section wherein "a concise statement of the errors of law and fact complained of" is prescribed.

Amendment of assignments of error. — On appeal from a decision of the Board of General Appraisers under this section, in which the time for taking further evidence has expired and which has come to trial in the Circuit Court, the assignments of error may not be amended. Vandegrift v. U. S., (1907) 154 Fed. 923.

Shifting membership in board of general appraisers. — On review of a decision of the Board of General Appraisers the regularity of the board's procedure may not properly be challenged on the ground of the presence or absence of different general appraisers while the testimony is being taken. U. S. v. Pierce, (1905) 140 Fed. 962, affirmed (C. C. A. 1906) 147 Fed. 199.

No evidence against classification of appraisers.—Where, on appeal from the decision of the Board of General Appraisers affirming the collectors' classification of imported merchandise, there is no evidence to overthrow the classification, the decision of the board must stand. Bailey v. U. S., (1903) 122 Fed. 751.

Taking testimony beyond jurisdiction of court.—Where a referee has been appointed by the Circuit Court to take further testimony on appeal from the Board of General Appraisers, under this section, the court is without authority to direct the referee to take testimony beyond its territorial limits, irrespective of the referee's willingness to go. Nordlinger v. U. S., (1900) 174 Fed. 833.

Return of record.—The provision in this section that on appeal to the Circuit Court the Board of General Appraisers shall return "the record and the evidence taken by them," does not require the return of evidence which was excluded. Harris v. U. S., (1910) 177 Fed. 475.

Weight given opinions of general appraisers.—The opinions of experts like the General Appraisers, who are especially familiar with such controversies, should in close cases be given considerable weight by the courts in reviewing decisions of the Board of General Appraisers. U. S. v. Leigh, (1908) 159 Fed. 314.

Vol. II, p. 630, sec. 19.

Remedies are exclusive.—Under this and the preceding sections, containing a system for the correction of errors in the exaction of import duties, and providing that when the duty on imported merchandise is based on the value thereof the duty shall be assessed on the actual market value or wholesale price in the principal markets of the country from whence imported, an importer of wool subject to a duty under Schedule K, dividing wool into classes and fixing a duty based on valuation, must conform to the statutory method, on the appraiser's increasing the valuation over the amount stated in the invoice, and thereby subjecting the importer to a higher duty, and where he fails to take the requisite steps to secure a correction of the errors, if any, the decisions of the appraisers and collector as to value, classification, rate, and amount are final, and the importer may not recover excessive duties paid. Gulbenkian v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1911) 186 Fed. 133, affirming (1909) 175 Fed. 860.

Apportionment of cost of coverings.—This section provides no method for apportioning the cost of the coverings when they contain merchandise of different kinds. In Rice v. U. S., (1892) 123 Fed. 195, it was held that such method of apportionment must be adopted as seems most equitable and just, and that with regard to hosiery in lots of different values, contained in the same outside cases, where each dozen of the hosiery

Rulings in other circuits.—In suits of the character of customs litigation, uniformity in the judgments of the courts of first instance, as well as in those of the appellate tribunals, is desirable, and where no direct attack has been made upon a prior adjudication by a Circuit Court of the questions subsequently sought to be raised in a similar suit in the Court of Appeals in another circuit, such prior adjudication should be followed, unless clearly erroneous. Hill v. Franklyn, (1908) 162 Fed. 880, 89 C. C. A. 570.

Burden of proof.—Where an importer challenges by legal proceedings the correctness of the assessment of duty by a collector of customs, the question to be decided is not whether the collector was wrong, but whether the importer is right, and therefore the burden is on him to establish the correctness of his contention. Legg v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1908) 163 Fed. 1006, affirming (1907) 154 Fed. 858.

Review of findings when record incomplete.—Where, on review by a Circuit Court of a decision of the Board of General Appraisers, under this section, the record returned by the board was defective by reason of the loss of the evidence on which the board's findings were based, it was held that no other evidence being presented, it must be conclusively presumed that the findings by the board were proper and justifiable. Schoellkopf v. U. S., (1906) 147 Fed. 855.

occupied about the same space, the cost of the cases should be distributed among the different lots according to the number of dozens of the hosiery, and not according to value.

Under this section it has been held as to importations of goods in bottles, which are dutiable under one provision of the Tariff Act and the bottles under another, that the value of the cases containing the goods should be distributed between the bottles and their contents according to the value of each, the value of the bottles for this purpose being inclusive of the cost of their fittings, consisting of corks, caps, capsules, labels, and wiring. Leggett v. U. S., (1905) 138 Fed. 970.

Presumption as to inclusion of coverings.—A reappraisal return by a Board of General Appraisers as to the value of imported chocolate failed to state whether the value of the coverings was included in the value stated in the return. It was held that under this section it should be presumed that such value was included, notwithstanding that paragraph 281 provides that the dutiable value of chocolate shall not include the value of plain wooden coverings. U. S. v. Leeming, (1907) 153 Fed. 489.

Converters' commissions.—Under this section requiring appraised value to include, besides coverings, etc., "all other costs, charges, and expenses incident to placing the merchandise in condition, packed ready for shipment to the United States," an invoice item described as a "converter's commission" was so included. It was held that this inclusion was proper, so far as it covered converters' services in having the goods dyed and finished, and in the absence of evidence to the contrary it would be presumed to be correct as to any other elements of the item. Erlanger v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1907) 164 Fed. 949, affirming 152 Fed. 576.

Excessive invoice value.—The provisions in sections 7, 19, that "duty shall not . . . be assessed . . . upon less than the invoice . . . value," and that "duty shall be assessed upon the actual market value . . . at the time of exportation," when construed together, mean that the dutiable value shall in no case be fixed at less than the purchase price of the goods; and where subsequently to the purchase of goods for import to the United States the market value of such goods decreases, the goods are nevertheless dutiable on the basis of the price paid. Ullmann v. U. S., (1910) 177 Fed. 567.

Market value.—In U. S. v. Downing, (1904) 131 Fed. 653, affirmed (C. C. A. 1905) 139 Fed. 1, 3, it was held in regard to merchandise imported from France, that its "market value," as defined in this section, does not include the amount of certain internal revenue imposts of that country known as the "octroi tax" and the "droit de ville," which are not general in their application, but vary with the locality, and which are not collected if the merchandise is exported.

"Condition."—Where practically all the output of a china manufacturer was sold to the United States, it was held that special classes manufactured for European trade could not be said to be in "condition" to supply the American trade, within the meaning of section 19, providing that dutiable value shall be determined according to the "condition in which . . . merchandise is there bought and sold for exportation to the United States." U. S. v. Haviland, (1909) 167 Fed. 414, affirmed (1910) 177 Fed. 175, 100 C. C. A. 637.

Principal market.—In U. S. v. Haviland, (1909) 167 Fed. 414, affirmed (1910) 177 Fed. 175, 100 C. C. A. 637, it appeared that the entire output of a china manufacturer in Limoges was exported to the United States directly from Limoges, except a small amount of special classes, which was disposed of in Paris to European trade; the wholesale business in Paris being less than four per cent. of said exportations to the United States. It was held that for the goods shipped to America, Limoges, and not Paris, was the "principal market," within the meaning of section 19.

Mixed wools purchased at same price.—In Gulbenkian v. U. S., (1907) 153 Fed. 858, 83 C. C. A. 40, it appeared that white and colored wools were sold together in the Bagdad market at one price, without any distinction as to color; this being in accord with immemorial practice in that market. It was held that in finding "the actual market value . . . in the principal markets of the country whence imported, and in the condition in which such merchandise is there bought and sold for exportation to the United States," under section 19 both kinds of wool should be appraised at the same price, in accordance with the manner of purchase, without regard to any difference in value which may attach to each kind in any other country.

Unusual coverings — Duties additional.—The "additional duty" provided for in this section for unusual coverings is not a substitute for the usual duty on coverings which accrues by including their cost in the dutiable value of their contents, as also provided in this section; but both duties should be imposed, the latter because the coverings subserve a use in transportation, and the former because they subserve an additional use after transportation. U. S. v. Park, (C. C. A. 1907) 152 Fed. 142, reversing (1905) 142 Fed. 202.

Tea caddies.—Certain patent tin cases or chests known as "Toohey's Patent Excelsior Tea Caddies," which are used as coverings in the transportation of tea, and which, after having subserved that purpose, are used, and are designed to be used, for other purposes, are subject to the additional duty provided in section 19, "for any unusual article or form designed for use otherwise than in the bona fide transportation" of merchandise to the United States. Jackson v. Siegfried, (1901) 126 Fed. 837.

Needle cases.—Furnished needle cases, consisting of books or cases for holding needles during transportation and while the needles in them are being used, are not usual coverings, being used otherwise than in bona fide transportation of the needles, within the meaning of this section. Guthman v. U. S., (1906) 148 Fed. 332; U. S. v. Dieckerhoff, (C. C. A. 1908) 160 Fed. 449, affirming (1907) 151 Fed. 957.

Cases and similar coverings.—The provision in this paragraph that the value of "cases . . . and similar coverings" shall be added to the dutiable value of their contents, includes tin cans and stoneware receptacles. Austin v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1909) 171 Fed. 79.

Filled bottles.—That part of this section which prescribes that the dutiable value of imported goods subject to an ad valorem rate of duty shall include the cost of the coverings, and other expenses incident to preparing the goods for exportation, does not apply to filled bottles containing olive oil, which is subject to a specific duty though filled bottles are specifically enumerated as subject to an ad valorem duty in paragraph 99. Hayes v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1906) 150 Fed. 63.

Gelatin capsules containing a medicine are not "coverings," within the meaning of the tariff laws, not being for transportation, but an essential part of the article. U. S. v. Lehn, (1909) 172 Fed. 171.

Stone bottles.—The value of stone bottles filled with ad valorem goods (ink) should not be added to the dutiable value of their contents, to make up the dutiable value of the imported merchandise, under section 19, such bottles not being "coverings," within the meaning of the Act. Kimpton v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1909) 171 Fed. 78, reversing (1908) 165 Fed. 236.

Vol. II, p. 632, sec. 20.

Rate of duty applicable.—The provision in section 20, that merchandise in bonded warehouses may be withdrawn for consumption "on payment of the duties and charges to which it may be subject by law at the time of said withdrawal," means such payment as the merchandise would be subject to if imported at the time of withdrawal. Mosle v. Bidwell, (C. C. A. 1904) 130 Fed. 334, reversing (1902) 119 Fed. 480.

Importations from Porto Rico—Foraker Act.—In De Pass v. Bidwell, (1903) 124 Fed. 615, it was held that section 5 of the Foraker Act, providing a temporary government and revenues for Porto Rico (Act April 12, 1900, ch. 191, 31 Stat. L. 77, 5 Fed. Stat.

Annot. 764), which provides that on and after the day of its taking effect all goods, wares, and merchandise previously imported from Porto Rico, for which no entry has been made, or entered without payment of duty, and under bond for warehousing, etc., shall be subject to the duties imposed by the Act upon the entry or withdrawal thereof, is constitutional; and therefore that goods brought from Porto Rico after its cession, and when there was no duty thereon in force, and voluntarily placed and allowed to remain in a bonded warehouse by the owner until after such Act went into effect, became subject to the duty thereby imposed when withdrawn for consumption.

Vol. II, p. 632, sec. 22.

Fees on packed packages.—Under this section abolishing "all fees exacted . . . upon the entry of imported goods and the passing thereof through the customs," it is not legal to require the payment of a fee on packed packages to defray the expense of administering the law relating to such packages. U. S. v. American Express Co., (1907) 154 Fed. 996.

Vol. II, p. 633, sec. 23.

Measurement of damage.—In Courtin v. U. S., (1906) 143 Fed. 551, it appeared that for the purpose of ascertaining the percentage of decay in importations of fruit, the importers opened at least one package in ten of the consignments from each shipper; and the percentage thus estimated was assumed to prevail throughout the other packages, and was accepted by the bidders at the auction sales held immediately on the dock. It was held that this method of averaging constituted a reasonably certain and sufficient mode of proof, and should be accepted by the customs officers as a proper basis for making allowance for the decayed fruit.

In Denunzio Fruit Co. v. U. S., (1908) 164 Fed. 909, the evidence as to the amount of decay in imported rotten fruit consisted merely of proof as to the percentage of decay in five per cent. of the packages imported. It was held that as the exact facts relative to the entire importation might have been ascertained, the evidence as to the packages examined should not be extended to the packages not examined.

In proof of the amount of decay in an importation of fruit in packages, evidence was given as to the percentage of decay in certain sample packages which represented each of the lots in question, had been used as the basis of auction sales, and consisted of at least ten per cent. of all the packages. It was held that the percentage thus shown for the sample packages might be taken as showing the amount of decay in the other packages also. U. S. v. Villari, (1907) 160 Fed. 77, 87 C. C. A. 233, affirming (1906) 147 Fed. 766, on opinion in Stone v. Shallus, (1906) 143 Fed. 486, 74 C. C. A. 506.

condition does not constitute dutiable merchandise applies as well to fruit in packages as to fruit in bulk, and in the assessment of duty on fruit imported in packages allowance should be made for the decayed portions. Stone v. Shallus, (C. C. A. 1906) 143 Fed. 486, affirming (1905) 137 Fed. 674; Courtin v. U. S., (1906) 143 Fed. 551; U. S. v. Villari, (1907) 160 Fed. 77, 87 C. C. A. 233, affirming (1906) 147 Fed. 766, on opinion in Stone v. Shallus, (1906) 143 Fed. 486, 74 C. C. A. 506.

Rotten fruit condemned by health officers.—In U. S. v. Courtin, (1907) 153 Fed. 594, it appeared that before being unladen, but after being free from customs supervision, certain imported fruit was condemned by local health authorities whenever a considerable portion of any crate appeared to be decayed, and the entire contents of such crates were condemned and required to be dumped in the sea, no portion thereof becoming a subject of commerce within the United States. It was held that such condemned fruit should be treated as a nonimportation, and as not dutiable.

Breach of bond for return of unexamined packages.—Breach of a bond given under section 2899 R. S., 2 Fed. Stat. Annot. 679, for the return of goods not examined by customs officials, does not affect the right of the importer to an allowance for damaged merchandise. No other or different penalty is contemplated by the bond or by said section than the damages provided by the bond. Habicht v. U. S., (1909) 171 Fed. 441.

Time for examination.—In Cuccio Di G. v. U. S., (1909) 172 Fed. 304, it appeared that an importation of lemons was not entered until six days after arrival, and was not examined until they had lain on the dock for a week. It was held that as much loss probably occurred by rotting during that period, the loss discovered at such examination was not a sufficient basis for determining the condition of the fruit at the time of importation.

Goods destroyed before importation.—Where portions of an importation were so damaged on the voyage as to be entirely valueless, there was nothing left to abandon, under the provision of section 23. Stone v. Shallus, (C. C. A. 1906) 143 Fed. 486, af- firming (1905) 137 Fed. 674; Habicht v. U. S., (1909) 171 Fed. 441.

In Villari v. U. S., (1908) 147 Fed. 766, the importers in ascertaining the quantity of decay in imported fruit did not avail themselves of the provisions of regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury under section 23. It was held that they were not obliged to do so, as that section relates to abandonment, and not to cases of allowance for nonimportation, as for fruit worthless on importation.

Vol. II, p. 634, sec. 24.

Voluntary payment.—In Flint Eddy, etc., Trading Co. v. Bidwell, (1903) 123 Fed. 200, it was held that the owner of a cargo of sugar brought from the Philippine Islands, who voluntarily paid the duty assessed thereon as imported merchandise, without objection or protest, could not maintain an action against the collector to recover the same on the ground that the sugar was not imported, and the duty was therefore wrongfully and illegally exacted.

Mistake of law.—Where excessive customs duties are paid under a mistake of law and without protest, the payment is voluntary and there can be no recovery. Gulbenkian v. U. S., (1909) 175 Fed. 860.

Clerical error.—Where, in liquidation, the clerk miscalculated the number of square yards in an imported fabric, it was held that it constituted a "manifest clerical error," within the meaning of section 24. U. S. v. Vandegrift, (C. C. A. 1909) 175 Fed. 772, af-firming (1908) 166 Fed. 1017.

In Delapenha v. U. S., (1909) 175 Fed. 311, it was held that allowance should have been made in the dutiable value of an importation on the ground of clerical error, where it appeared that the shippers had failed to note on the invoice that the value included certain nondutiable charges.

Inasmuch as this section, relating to the correction of "manifest clerical errors," is the latest deliverance on that subject and relates most specifically thereto, it controls over Act June 22, 1874, ch. 391, sec. 21, 18

Stat. L. 190, 2 Fed. Stat. Annot. 760, relative to the "settlement of duties," and Act March 3, 1875, ch. 136, sec. 1, 18 Stat. L. 469, 2 Fed. Stat. Annot. 729, relative to the "correction of errors in liquidation." U. S. v. Vandegrift, (C. C. A. 1909) 175 Fed. 772, af-firming (1908) 166 Fed. 1017.

Reliquidation after one year.—A manifest clerical error in a liquidation made within one year after original entry cannot be corrected more than one year after such entry, because not within the provision in this section authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to correct such errors "within one year of the date of such entry," as the term "entry," as here used, refers to the document filed by the importer on entry. U. S. v. Vandegrift, (C. C. A. 1909) 175 Fed. 772, af-firming (1908) 166 Fed. 1017.

Acceptance of principal — waiver of interest.—On the refund of duties that had been improperly exacted, interest was withheld on the ground that there was no appropriation for payment of interest, so that the sum repaid was the exact equivalent of the principal. It was held that the acceptance of this sum by the importer was tantamount to a waiver of the claim of interest, and could not be considered as a general payment on account, which the payee was entitled to apply, first to the extinguishment of the interest, and next to part payment of the principal. Bidwell v. Preston, (C. C. A. 1908) 160 Fed. 653.

Placer gold.—The word "merchandise," defined in section 2766, includes placer gold. Six Parcels Placer Gold v. U. S., (1904) 8 Ariz. 389, 76 Pac. 473.

Vol. II, p. 636, sec. 2767.

"Port of Chicago" defined.—The statutes of Illinois provide that the city of Chicago shall have jurisdiction over Lake Michigan for a distance of three miles beyond the city limits, and the ordinances of that city give the city harbor master control over lake water outwardly for the same distance, between the north and south lines of the city. It was held as to certain barges in tow, which had reached a place within these limits, within the outer harbor works, where it was usual for such a tow to be broken up so the barges might be taken to their separate docks, that they should be considered as in the port of Chicago, for the purpose of fixing the time their cargoes became dutiable, though the arrival had not been reported at the barge office. Hartwell Lumber Co. v. U. S., (1904) 128 Fed. 306, affirmed (C. C. A. 1905) 142 Fed. 432.

Innocent buyer of smuggled merchandise.—The innocent buyer of smuggled merchandise is under no liability to enter it for the payment of duty. Such payment would not relieve a forfeiture already incurred, nor would failure to pay revive it when once barred. U. S. v. One Dark Bay Horse, (1904) 130 Fed. 240.

Time of entry.—In Ellison v. U. S., (1905) 136 Fed. 969, affirmed (C. C. A. 1906) 142 Fed. 732, it appeared that certain merchandise was imported at the port of New York July 24, 1897, and there entered for immediate transportation to the port of Philadelphia; and before the Tariff Act of that date had become operative the importer sought to enter the merchandise under the Tariff Act of Aug. 27, 1894, ch. 349, 28 Stat. L. 509, and tendered an entry in due form to the collector at the latter port, which was refused on the ground that the goods had not reached that port. It was held that the action of the collector was justified.

Refusal of tender—estoppel.—Where, at the time of tendering entry of merchandise, there is no existing right on the part of the importers to have it accepted, nor duty on the part of the collector of customs to accept, no estoppel against the government arises through the fact that the collector's refusal may have been on wrong grounds, the statement of which may have misled the importers into failing to renew the tender on the proper occasion. U. S. v. Hartwell Lumber Co., (C. C. A. 1905) 142 Fed. 432, affirming (1904) 128 Fed. 306.

Amendment.—This section was amended by Act of March 2, 1906, ch. 1306, 33 Stat. L. 826, 10 Fed. Stat. Annot. 78.

General bonds of sufficiently large an amount may, in special cases, be lawfully accepted by collectors of customs, in lieu of the special bonds of $1,000 each required by this section from agents making entries of imported merchandise for others, requiring them to produce the declaration of the owner in every case where goods may thereafter be imported without the same during a specified period. (1904) 25 Op. Atty.-Gen. 177.

Penal bond of agent.—This section requires collectors of customs to take from an agent or person other than the owner making an entry of imported merchandise, a bond in the penal sum of $1,000, with condition that the actual owner or consignee of the merchandise shall deliver a full and correct account thereof according to the terms and specifications of that section. Merchandise imported by passenger.—Congress having prescribed two independent systems of formalities for the importation of personal effects and merchandise not personal effects, each complete in itself, under this section and the Customs Administrative Act (Act of June 10, 1890, ch. 407, sec. 4, 26 Stat. L. 131, 2 Fed. Stat. Annot. 612), respectively, it could not have been intended that both should be applicable to merchandise which was imported by a passenger arriving in the United States, but which was not attempted to be concealed by dressing it up as baggage. U. S. v. One Trunk, (1909) 174 Fed. 1012.

False statement as to articles not baggage.—Inasmuch as articles for sale which accompany a person arriving in the United States are not required to be declared at the same time as the passenger's personal baggage, an intentional misstatement of the value of such articles does not make the articles forfeitable, because the importer was under no obligation to enter them or declare their value at that time, under section 2799, relating to "baggage." U. S. v. One Trunk, (1909) 175 Fed. 1012.

Vol. II, p. 645, sec. 2802.

Sufficiency of declaration.—In U. S. v. One Pearl Chain, (C. C. A. 1905) 139 Fed. 513, it appeared that a person coming into the United States and having in possession a valuable pearl chain, silk wearing apparel, and other articles, had made a declaration on board the vessel as to certain "wearing apparel, value not known," had proceeded to the portion of the dock adjacent to the vessel that had been roped off for convenient examination of passengers' effects, and was there awaiting opportunity to give the information necessary for completing the entry; but before this opportunity had been given, the pearl chain was seized as illegally imported. It was held that the phrase "wearing apparel," as used in the declaration, was a sufficient mention of the chain within the meaning of section 2802, and that the seizure was illegal.

In U. S. v. One Trunk, (C. C. A. 1911) 184 Fed. 317, affirming (1909) 171 Fed. 772, it appeared that at the time of the arrival of claimant at the port of New York as a passenger from a foreign country, a Treasury regulation provided that merchandise intended for sale and of the value of $500 or over could not be examined on the pier, but must be regularly entered at the custom house and appraised. Claimant in her declaration made on landing listed certain articles and "one trunk for public stores;" that being the place where imported merchandise goes for examination and appraisal. Later she filed a regular written entry at the custom house, and with it a duplicate consular invoice of the contents of the trunk, which consisted of dutiable merchandise of over $500 in value. It was held that the description in the claimant's declaration was sufficient, and that her filing of the invoice at the custom house later was a compliance with R. S. sec. 2802.

A passenger arriving in the United States, on filling out the printed form furnished by the customs officers for the declaration and entry of baggage, struck out the clause referring to the itemized description that is required of the various articles of baggage, and inserted instead a description of the pieces of baggage he had, as consisting of certain numbers of trunks, valises, etc., and said nothing as to what articles were contained therein.

Jewelry worn upon the person.—Where a passenger on a steamer purchased a pearl necklace before her departure from Paris, and by reason of its value wore the same about her neck when she made her declaration for duty, instead of having the same among her baggage, and the necklace was visible on her person, it was held to be subject to declaration under the statutes and rules regulating passengers' baggage, and not under the regulations providing for the importation of merchandise. One Pearl Chain v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1903) 123 Fed. 371.

Merchandise for sale is not baggage within the meaning of this section. U. S. v. One Trunk, (1909) 175 Fed. 1012.

It was held that this was not sufficient to put the customs officers on inquiry as to the dutiable character of the contents of the packages, so as to constitute a sufficient "mention" of the articles, within the requirement of section 2802, that dutiable articles in imported baggage shall be "mentioned" on making the customs entry. Harts v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1905) 140 Fed. 843, affirming (1904) 131 Fed. 886.

Entry after accrual of forfeiture.—In U. S. v. One Purple Cloth Costume, (1907) 158 Fed. 899, it appeared that dutiable articles in the baggage of a person arriving in the United States from abroad became forfeitable under this section because not mentioned to the collector of customs at the time of entry; but before they were seized their owner was permitted to make a lawful entry and pay the proper duty. It was held that such occurrences subsequent to the accrual of the right of forfeiture could not waive such right, nor estop the United States from asserting it.

Entry of "trunk" covers contents.—Though a passenger's baggage declaration specifies only a "trunk," without any mention of its contents, it sufficiently complies with section 2802, requiring that if such baggage contains any dutiable article it shall be "mentioned." The specification of the "trunk" is equivalent to mention of its contents. U. S. v. One Trunk, (1909) 171 Fed. 772.

Fraudulent intent is not necessary to a forfeiture.—Under this section it is not necessary that there should have been an intent to defraud the revenue in order to incur the penalties there prescribed. U. S. v. Harts, (1904) 131 Fed. 886, affirmed (C. C. A. 1905) 140 Fed. 843.

Appraisement of forfeited baggage.—The statute does not contemplate that in an action to enforce the forfeiture or penalty prescribed by this section the court shall be required to make an appraisement of the value of such articles for the purpose of ascertaining what portion would have been entitled to admission free of duty if a proper declaration and entry thereof had been made. U. S. v. Harts, (1904) 131 Fed. 886, affirmed (C. C. A. 1905) 140 Fed. 843.

Articles in clothing.—In Two Hundred and Eighteen and One-Half Carats Loose Emeralds v. U. S., (1907) 154 Fed. 839, 83 C. C. A. 475, it was held that articles in the clothing are "baggage," within the meaning of this section, and that a package of precious stones found in the pocket of a passenger is forfeitable under said provision.

Misdemeanor when fraudulently done.—A violation of this section, imposing a penalty where any dutiable article is found in the baggage of a person arriving within the United States, which was not at the time of making entry therefor mentioned to the collector, becomes the misdemeanor denounced by R. S. sec. 3082, 2 Fed. Stat. Annot. 748, when done fraudulently or knowingly. U. S. v. Chesbrough, (1910) 176 Fed. 778.

Applicable to Philippine Islands.—This section, providing penalties for the failure to make due entry of articles in passengers' baggage, is applicable to articles brought from the Philippine Islands. Harts v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1905) 140 Fed. 843, affirming (1904) 131 Fed. 886.

Duty of making entry of exempted articles.—See under this title, vol. 2, p. 499, par. 697.

Vol. II, p. 645, sec. 2804.

Release of cigars subject to forfeiture.—The Secretary of the Treasury may release cigars imported in violation of this section on payment of a fine equal to the duty, when in his opinion the importation does not involve fraud. (1903) 24 Op. Atty.-Gen. 588.

Vol. II, p. 647, sec. 2809.

Remission of fines, penalties, and forfeitures.—The Treasury Department has jurisdiction of the remission of fines, penalties, and forfeitures imposed by this section and of the issuing of instructions relating to the execution of sections 2779 to 2784, inclusive. (1905) 25 Op. Atty.-Gen. 535.

Vol. II, p. 662, sec. 2864.

Sufficiency of petition.—The petition in a proceeding by the government for the forfeiture of goods imported into the country contrary to law, which alleged that the goods were imported without being invoiced or entry made with any collector of customs, and without declaration to the proper revenue officer, and that some person fraudulently brought into the country from a foreign country goods which should have been invoiced, declared, and entered according to the law, with intent to defraud the government, sufficiently charged a violation of section 2851 et seq., providing that all merchandise imported into the country must be invoiced, which invoice shall be produced to the consul, and requiring that a declaration shall be filed with the collector of the port at the time of the entry. Six Parcels Placer Gold v. U. S., (1904) 8 Ariz. 389, 76 Pac. 473.

Vol. II, p. 664, sec. 2865.

Acts by importer.—In U. S. v. 646 Half-Boxes Figs, (1908) 164 Fed. 778, it was alleged that an exporter had caused a false and fraudulent invoice to be made out, signed, verified, and left with a consul to be transmitted to the collector of customs at an American port, and had then caused the merchandise covered by the invoice to be shipped to said port; but it was not charged nor shown that he had been concerned in importing the goods. It was held that the case was not brought within section 2865, forbidding any person to "make out or pass, or attempt to pass, through the custom house any false, forged, or fraudulent invoice."

Elements of offense.—Where a defendant, having dutiable goods secreted on his person, knowingly passed the customs office at the dock where he entered the United States and ignored three distinct calls of the customs officer before his further progress was arrested and the goods disclosed, when he stated for the first time that he expected to enter the goods at the main custom house, some distance away, instead of at the dock, it was held that a finding that he intended to evade entering the goods or paying the duty at all, and that he was guilty of smuggling, was justified under the rule that a person becomes guilty of that offense by avoiding the first opportunity given to make a customs' declaration and pay the duty. Rogers v. U. S., (1910) 180 Fed. 54, 103 C. C. A. 408.

Smuggling is the actual passage of dutiable goods through the lines of the customs house without paying or securing the payment of the duties thereon. (1903) 24 Op. Atty.-Gen. 583.

Illegal entry.—This section does not include a case where merchandise is fraudulently entered at a custom house. U. S. v. 646 Half-Boxes Figs, (1908) 164 Fed. 778.

Indictment sufficient.—An indictment for smuggling, charging that defendant did "bring into the country clandestinely" certain dutiable goods, was held to be synonymous with the provision of this section making it an offense to "clandestinely introduce" dutiable goods into the country with intent to avoid payment of duty. Rogers v. U. S., (1910) 180 Fed. 54, 103 C. C. A. 408.

An indictment alleging that accused at Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., "did unlawfully, knowingly, and fraudulently import and bring into the United States certain merchandise, to wit, 3½ yards of black woolen suiting cloth of the value of, to wit, $10, contrary to law: that is to say, clandestinely and without entering the same at the United States customs office and port of entry with the United States collector of customs . . . and paying the duty thereon — the same being foreign merchandise subject to an import duty as provided in Act July 24, 1897, ch. 11," 30 Stat. L. 151, was held to sufficiently charge "smuggling," denounced by section 2865. Rogers v. U. S., (1910) 180 Fed. 54, 103 C. C. A. 408.

Vol. II, p. 664, sec. 1.

Fees on packed packages. — See under this title, vol. 2, p. 632, sec. 22, and p. 687, sec. 2926.

Vol. II, p. 668, sec. 2871.

Amendment. — This section was amended by Act of June 30, 1906, ch. 3909, 34 Stat. L. 633, 1909 Supp. Fed. Stat. Annot. 103.

Vol. II, p. 679, sec. 2899.

Amount recoverable on bond. — U. S. v. Dieckerhoff, (1906) 202 U. S. 302, 26 S. Ct. 604, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 1041, reversing (1905) 136 Fed. 545, 69 C. C. A. 255, and affirming (1900) 103 Fed. 789, set out in the original note.

Validity of redelivery bond. — The authority of the collector under this section to require a bond from an importer for double the value of the merchandise imported, to be forfeited for the nonreturn unopened of any package of the invoice upon demand, includes the right to take a less stringent undertaking, such as a bond which provides for the return of any required package unopened or the payment of double its value as a condition of being discharged from the full penalty of the bond. U. S. v. Dieckerhoff, (1906)

Enforcement of redelivery bond. — The enforcement of the penalty prescribed in a redelivery bond taken by a collector under the authority of this section for the nonreturn unopened of any required package of an invoice of imported merchandise, is not precluded by the provision of R. S. sec. 961, 4 Fed. Stat. Annot. 604, that in suits to recover the forfeiture annexed to a bond or other specialty where the forfeiture, breach, or non-performance appears by default or confession of the defendant, or upon demurrer, the court shall render judgment for the plaintiff for so much as is due according to equity. U. S. v. Dieckerhoff, (1906) 202 U. S. 302, 26 S. Ct. 604, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 1041.

Vol. II, p. 680, sec. 2901.

Framed paintings. — The provision in this paragraph that if appraisers find in an imported package "any article not specified in the invoice," its value shall be added to the entry, has been held not to apply to an importation of framed paintings invoiced as "paintings," where it appeared that the invoice value was sufficient to include the frames, and that it was customary so to describe paintings with frames. U. S. v. Hensel, (1906) 158 Fed. 645.

Vol. II, p. 684, sec. 2910.

Different values subject to same rate of duty. — In an importation of a number of crates of glassware which were consolidated on one invoice at a lump sum, where the several crates were of different values, but chargeable with the same rate of duty, it was held that the assessment of duty should not be made upon the basis of the highest valued goods, but that all the glassware was chargeable with the same rate of duty, and similarly with regard to a number of cases of pickles imported at the same time which were also placed on one invoice though of different values, but subject to the same rate of duty. (1907) 26 Op. Atty-Gen. 119.

Vol. II, p. 684, sec. 2912.

Application of rule. — This section applies where it does not appear that the wool was mixed for the purpose of obtaining a lower rate of duty. If such purpose is shown, the case is brought within the provisions of Schedule K, paragraph 356. Stone, etc., Co. v. U. S., (1906) 147 Fed. 603.

Modification of section.—Act May 1, 1876, ch. 89, 19 Stat. L. 49, 2 Fed. Stat. Annot. 664, permitting the entry of packed packages without the production of an invoice, modified section 2926, prescribing that merchandise may be stored at the expense of the owner, when an "incomplete entry has been made, or an entry without the specification of particulars, either for want of the original invoice or for any other cause," and the latter provision does not apply to such packages. U. S. v. American Express Co., (1907) 154 Fed. 996.

Fees on packed packages.—A fee charged by a collector of customs on packed packages to defray expense incurred in administering the law relative to such packages is not such as is authorized by section 2926, prescribing that merchandise of which incomplete entry has been made shall be conveyed to and stored in a warehouse "at the expense and risk of the owner." U. S. v. American Express Co., (1907) 154 Fed. 996. See also under this title, vol. 2, p. 632, sec. 22.

This sentence was construed in Erhardt v. Ballin, (1906) 150 Fed. 529, 80 C. C. A. 271.

Vol. II, p. 693, sec. 2950.

Necessity for certificate of appraisement.—Under this section and Act June 10, 1890, ch. 407, sec. 13, 26 Stat. L. 138, 2 Fed. Stat. Annot. 622, relating to certificates of officers appraising imported goods, it is intended that the appraisement should be reduced to writing. The certificate of the appraising officer is the legal evidence of appraisement, and if it is not made the appraisement is illegal. The Lace House v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1905) 141 Fed. 869.

Amendment.—This Act was amended by Act of June 30, 1906, ch. 3914, 1909 Supp. Fed. Stat. Annot. 104.

Vol. II, p. 698, sec. 2970.

Change of Tariff Acts.—In U. S. v. Am-sinck, (1905) 140 Fed. 96, it was held that merchandise imported while Tariff Act Oct. 1, 1890, ch. 1244, 26 Stat. L. 567, was in effect, but not withdrawn from warehouse until after Tariff Act Aug. 27, 1894, ch. 349, 28 Stat. L. 509, became effective, was subject to the provisions of the latter Act.

Vol. II, p. 701, sec. 2977.

Drawback on fuel coal.—This section and sections 2978 and 3025, R. S., 2 Fed. Stat. Annot. 702 and 732, relate exclusively to drawback or return of duties on exported merchandise, and have no application to the allowance of drawback on fuel coal under paragraph 415. (1908) 28 Op. Atty-Gen. 581.

Vol. II, p. 702, sec. 2979.

Treasury regulations.—In U. S. v. Ehrgott, (1910) 182 Fed. 267, it was held that since by Treasury Department Articles 834, 838, 841, and 842, providing a system of licensed truckmen to whom a limited custody of the goods is intrusted for the purpose only of transfer from warehouse to hold, the Treasury Department has construed the words "under the inspection of proper officers" to mean that the goods are to be under the constant surveillance of such officers from the time they leave the warehouse until they reach the ship, such construction should be regarded of weight by a federal court.

Amendment.—This section was amended by Act of Aug. 5, 1909, ch. 6, 36 Stat. L. 11, 1909 Supp. Fed. Stat. Annot. 804.

Vol. II, p. 704, sec. 2984.

Authority of the Secretary of the Treasury.—Under section 2984, the secretary may not refuse to allow the refund arbitrarily or capriciously. Where all the facts enumerated in said section are presented to him undisputed, it would be assumed that that would satisfy him that the case was within the terms of the section. U. S. v. Cornell Steamboat Co., (1905) 137 Fed. 455, 69 C. C. A. 603, affirmed (1906) 202 U. S. 184, 26 S. Ct. 648, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 987.

Salvage for goods saved from fire.—Where imported merchandise while in customs custody on board a vessel was saved from destruction by fire, it was held that these facts brought the case within section 2984, under which the government would have been liable to refund the duties already paid on the merchandise if it had been destroyed; that the government had an interest which should respond to those whose services prevented the loss which it would have sustained through refund; and that the salvors were entitled to a salvage award on the basis of the amount that had been thus put at risk. U. S. v. Cornell Steamboat Co., (1905) 137 Fed. 455, 69 C. C. A. 603, affirmed (1906) 202 U. S. 184, 26 S. Ct. 648, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 987.

Construction of statute.—The offense created by this section is complete on the removal of goods subject to duty, on which duty has not been paid, from the warehouse; and subsequent concealment outside a warehouse after removal, while admissible, in proof of the fraudulent intent in the removal, does not constitute a substantive offense, nor add anything to the removal which preceded it. U. S. v. Ehr Gott, (1910) 182 Fed. 267.

Construction of indictment.—Where an indictment for removing merchandise from a public warehouse without paying the duty thereon alleged that the goods had been deposited in Brooklyn in a warehouse under bond, and then alleged that on a given day the importer withdrew them under a false pretense that they were to be exported, the term "false pretense" should be construed to mean at least that the defendant did not mean to export the goods when he removed them. U. S. v. Ehr Gott, (1910) 182 Fed. 267.

Place of violation.—An indictment alleging that certain beans subject to duty had been deposited in a warehouse in Brooklyn, and that on a given day the defendant withdrew them under bond on the false pretense that they were to be exported, and that he removed the goods from the warehouse and concealed them in Manhattan, was held not to charge a crime committed in the southern district of New York. U. S. v. Ehr Gott, (1910) 182 Fed. 267.

The word "fraudulently," as used in this section, means that the acts must be done with an intent to evade the law. U. S. v. Ehr Gott, (1910) 182 Fed. 267.

"Warehouse."—Where dutiable goods are removed from a warehouse without payment of duty and subsequently concealed, the truck on which the goods are removed cannot be considered to be a warehouse within this section. U. S. v. Ehr Gott, (1910) 182 Fed. 267.

Vol. II, p. 712, sec. 1.

Amendment.—This section was amended by Act of Jan. 22, 1903, ch. 197, 32 Stat. L. 780, 10 Fed. Stat. Annot. 77; by Act of Feb. 17, 1905, ch. 580, 33 Stat. L. 718, 10 Fed. Stat. ## Vol. II, p. 712, sec. 2.

Right to remove from district for examination.—The collector at the port of entry of imported goods is made by law the custodian of such goods until the payment of the duties thereon, and his duty as such custodian is to be performed within his own district. His duties are prescribed by statute, and an order from the Treasury Department instructing him to send or remove the goods out of his district, "for submission to trade experts," is without legal authority, and will not justify a removal of the goods from the collector's district. The importer, having the right to a speedy appraisal by the officers designated by law and to withdraw the goods on payment of the duties, has a substantial right to have them remain in the custody of the collector at the port of entry, and may invoke the power of the courts by injunction to prevent their removal. Bruhl v. Wilson, (1903) 123 Fed. 957.

Vol. II, p. 715, sec. 7.

Vol. II, p. 726, sec. 962.

Interest.—Interest is recoverable by the United States on unpaid duties, where the amount due is liquidated and clearly ascertained, and demand has been duly made on the importer. U. S. v. Mexican International R. Co., (1907) 154 Fed. 519; U. S. v. Urmoston, (1907) 154 Fed. 522; U. S. v. Tiffany, (1907) 154 Fed. 740.

Rate of interest.—Interest recoverable by the United States on unpaid duties should be computed at the rate allowed by the laws of the state into which the importation is made. U. S. v. Mexican International R. Co., (1907) 154 Fed. 519.

Period of computation.—On the reliquidation of duties at a higher rate interest on the additional amount assessed should be computed from the date of demand on the importer. U. S. v. Mexican International R. Co., (1907) 154 Fed. 519.

Vol. II, p. 729, sec. 1.

Restricted to mistake of fact.—The authority of the Secretary of the Treasury to refund duties erroneously collected, on the ground of mistake, is to be restricted to mistake of fact. (1902) 24 Op. Atty-Gen. 34.

Clerical error.—See under this title, vol. 2, p. 634, sec. 24.

Vol. II, p. 734, sec. 3030.

Merchandise entitled to drawback.—The words "entitled to drawback" apply only to imported goods on which the duties have been paid, and which have been entered for export, and having the benefit of drawback under the preceding sections, are entitled to drawback for such drawback. Such section does not authorize a change of packages of imported merchandise remaining in bond and intended for sale and consumption in this country. Thomas v. Barnett, (C. C. A. 1906) 144 Fed. 338, affirming (1905) 135 Fed. 172.

Vol. II, p. 741, sec. 17.

Section not repealed.—This section was not repealed by section 7 of the Act of Aug. 27, 1894, 28 Stat. L. 509, 548, or section 12 of the Act of July 24, 1897, 30 Stat. L. 207, 2 Fed. Stat. Annot. 508, but continues in force. (1909) 27 Op. Atty-Gen. 228.

The amount of drawback is regulated by the Act of July 24, 1897, sec. 30, 30 Stat. L. 211, 2 Fed. Stat. Annot. 512, and is ninety-nine per cent. of the duties paid. (1909) 27 Op. Atty-Gen. 228.

Applicable to vessels leaving on own bottoms.—The drawback provision of section 17 applies not only to vessels exported on the decks of other vessels but applies also to vessels leaving the United States on their own bottoms. (1909) 27 Op. Atty-Gen. 228.

Appliances.—Those appliances which are permanently attached to a vessel and which would remain on board were the vessel to be laid up for a long period are parts of the vessel itself. (1909) 27 Op. Atty-Gen. 228.

Appliances purchased abroad.—Drawback should not be refused because the materials which compose the appliance in question were not assembled after importation but were purchased as a whole abroad. The Act requires only that the vessel be built in the United States and not that each separate attachment or appliance be manufactured in this country. (1909) 27 Op. Atty-Gen. 228.

A steam pump and steam evaporator imported and used in the construction of a steam dredge are so attached to the vessel and are such essential and permanent parts of it that they are properly material used in the construction of the vessel within the meaning of this section. (1909) 27 Op. Atty-Gen. 228.

A dredge is a vessel within the meaning of this section. (1909) 27 Op. Atty-Gen. 228.

Vol. II, p. 741, sec. 3058.

Relation of consignor immaterial.—The consignee of imported goods is deemed the owner for the purpose of the collection of the duties thereon, under this section, and it is no defense to an action against the consignee for such duties that the consignor or any other party who, at the request or with the consent of the consignee, procured the importation, failed to obey the latter's instructions or to comply with the terms of the contract between them. U. S. v. Bishop, (1903) 125 Fed. 181, 60 C. C. A. 123.

Vol. II, p. 743, sec. 3062.

Property of innocent owner.—A team used in the transportation of smuggled merchandise is forfeitable, regardless of the fact that its owner and its driver did not have knowledge of the purposes for which it was being used. Such knowledge is unnecessary, except in the case of common carriers. U. S. v. One Black Horse, (1906) 147 Fed. 770.

Vol. II, p. 743, sec. 3063.

Livery.—This section should be construed as excluding vehicles other than those used by common carriers from its application, and hence a vehicle owned and let by a liveryman, and used wholly within the United States for the purposes of transporting liquor illegally brought across the Canadian border, was subject to seizure and forfeiture, though the liveryman had no knowledge of the purpose for which the team was to be used. U. S. v. One Black Horse, (1904) 129 Fed. 167.

Vol. II, p. 746, sec. 3074.

Appraisalment of smuggled goods.—When property subject to forfeiture for smuggling or cognate offenses is seized, the appraisalment should be in accordance with section 3074, R. S., and not under section 13 of the Customs Administrative Act, 26 Stat. L. 136, 2 Fed. Stat. Annot. 615. (1903) 24 Op. Atty.-Gen. 583.

Vol. II, p. 748, sec. 3081.

Home value.—The purpose of the law as to smuggled or unentered goods requires the exaction of the so-called "home value" as the condition of release on payment of the appraised value, but not as implying the assessment of duties on such goods. (1903) 24 Op. Atty.-Gen. 583.

Extent of power to release.—The power of the Secretary of the Treasury to release and remit fines, penalties, and forfeitures under sections 3081 and 5293, R. S., and under sections 17 and 18 of the Act of June 22, 1874, 18 Stat. L. 189, now subject to the restriction of section 7 of the Customs Administrative Act as amended (2 Fed. Stat. Annot. 615), relates only to civil liability and consequences where the value of the property seized or the amount of the fine or forfeiture incurred does not exceed $1,000; but does not include penalties "accrued" or "incurred" which have been "adjudged" as part of the punishment under an "indictment." (1903) 24 Op. Atty.-Gen. 583.

Failure of Secretary of Treasury to promulgate regulations.—On proceedings under this section for the forfeiture of merchandise imported contrary to law, which would have been admissible free of duty on compliance with regulations which the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized by law to prescribe, it may not be maintained in defense that the regulations have not been promulgated, and that therefore the importer was justified in importing the merchandise according to his own convenience, independently of the requirements of law. Such an importation would be "contrary to law" under said section. U. S. v. Fifty Waltham Watch Movements, (1905) 139 Fed. 291.

More intent to smuggle not sufficient.—It is immaterial that a person bringing goods to the United States intends to smuggle them. If the time has not passed when it is his duty to make the necessary declaration, and there remains an opportunity for him to change his mind, the goods are not subject to forfeiture under section 3082. U. S. v. One Pearl Chain, (1904) 139 Fed. 510; U. S. v. One Pearl Chain, (C. C. A. 1905) 139 Fed. 513.

Necessity for intent to defraud.—Proceedings for forfeiture of merchandise illegally imported may be sustained under this section, though the United States has not been defrauded of any sum, and there has been no intent to defraud. U. S. v. Fifty Waltham Watch Movements, (1905) 139 Fed. 291.

"Contrary to law."—It has been held that the words "contrary to law," as used in this section, relate to legal provisions other than those found in such section. Rogers v. U. S., (1910) 180 Fed. 54, 103 C. C. A. 403.

"Import or bring."—This section imposes a penalty on any person who shall fraudulently or knowingly import or bring into the United States any merchandise contrary to law. Section 2802, 2 Fed. Stat. Annot. 645, imposes a penalty whenever any article subject to duty is found in the baggage of a person arriving within the United States which was not at the time of making entry therefor mentioned to the collector. It was held that the term "import or bring" does not require that the offense designated in section 3082 should be complete before the merchandise is landed, so as to exclude cases within section 2802, where the entry is not made till after the baggage is landed, but includes the whole act of bringing dutiable articles into the United States. U. S. v. Chesbrough, (1910) 176 Fed. 778.

Merchandise—scope of meaning.—In this section, prescribing a penalty for importing or bringing into the United States any merchandise contrary to law, the term "merchandise" is not restricted to general merchandise as distinguished from personal baggage, especially in view of section 2766, 2 Fed. Stat. Annot. 636, declaring that the word "merchandise" may include goods, wares, and chattels of every description capable of being imported, and sections 2799, 2 Fed. Stat. Annot. 644, and 2802, 2 Fed. Stat. Annot. 645, showing that wearing apparel and other personal baggage are embraced within the term. U. S. v. Chesbrough, (1910) 176 Fed. 778.

Burden of proof.—On a suit by the United States, under this section, to forfeit articles found in the baggage of a person arriving in the United States, and seized as fraudulently imported, the burden of proof is not upon the claimant of the articles, unless the court finds that there is probable cause for seizing them. If at the close of the government's case there is not enough evidence to go to the jury, there is not such probable cause as to put the burden of proof upon the claimant. U. S. v. One Pearl Chain, (1904) 139 Fed. 510.

Action in rem for forfeiture.—Where it was charged that certain precious stones and jewelry were imported with intent to defraud the United States of duty thereon, it was held that a proceeding in rem to forfeit the same was properly brought under this section. But such proceeding in rem does not lie under said section to forfeit money arising from the sale in this country of goods fraudulently imported. U. S. v. A Lot Precious Stones, (C. C. A. 1905) 134 Fed. 61.

Bar of former acquittal.—Where a person charged to have fraudulently imported certain merchandise with intent to defraud the United States of duty legally payable thereon was tried and acquitted, it was held that such acquittal was a bar to a further proceeding to forfeit the merchandise as against him. U. S. v. A Lot Precious Stones, (C. C. A. 1905) 134 Fed. 61.

Effect of nolle prosequi.—An information having been filed to forfeit certain merchandise and money for fraudulent importation, with intent to defraud the United States of duty, indictments were found against the alleged importer and his wife; and on trial thereof the importer was acquitted, after which the indictment against the wife was nolled. It was held that such nolle prosequi was not a judgment of acquittal, and was, therefore, no bar to the proceeding to forfeit as against the wife. U. S. v. A Lot Precious Stones, (C. C. A. 1905) 134 Fed. 61.

Failure to enter free goods.—An importer, for the purpose of serving his own pecuniary interests, intentionally omitted to meet the requirements of the customs laws of the United States, in that he failed to enter certain imported articles at any custom house, and to comply otherwise with the law. If duly imported, the articles would have been free of duty. It was held that this was an offense which rendered the merchandise liable to forfeiture, under section 3082, as imported "knowingly . . . contrary to law." U. S. v. Fifty Waltham Watch Movements, (1905) 139 Fed. 291.

Waiver.—That the claimant, in an action to recover property seized for failure to declare the same for duty, moved the court to direct a verdict in her favor, was held not to constitute a waiver of her right to reserve exceptions to the refusal of her request to send the case to the jury after the denial of her motion to direct. One Pearl Chain v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1903) 123 Fed. 371.

Jewelry worn upon the person.—In One Pearl Chain v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1903) 123 Fed. 371, it appeared that when custom house officers boarded a steamship on which claimant was a passenger, a blank for the declaration of articles liable to duty was presented to her for execution. She declined to execute it, but appeared before the officer for examination, and informed him that she had bought wearing apparel abroad, but was unable to state the amount. No further specific questions were asked her, and the collector filled up the blanks with the words "wearing apparel, value not known," which she signed. In the blank, under the head of "wearing apparel," "jewelry" was included, and the plaintiff testified that she understood that wearing apparel covered her jewelry. At the time of landing, and before examination of her baggage, she wore a pearl necklace, purchased abroad, which was visible to the officers, and which was subsequently seized before claimant's baggage had been passed. It was held that such facts were insufficient to warrant a finding as a matter of law that claimant had done nothing to advise the government of her possession of such article before landing to justify a forfeiture thereof under section 3082, authorizing forfeiture of articles fraudulently imported.

Vol. II, p. 751, sec. 3087.

Jurisdiction.—Jurisdiction of a proceeding for the forfeiture of smuggled goods exists only in the district of seizure, which is the district in which the goods, if on land, are found; a collector cannot, by carrying them into another district and there making the formal seizure, confer jurisdiction of the proceeding on the court in such district. U. S. v. Larkin, (1907) 153 Fed. 113, 82 C. C. A. 247.

Vol. II, p. 755, sec. 4.

Chief officer of customs.—A deputy collector of customs, with headquarters in the customs district of Vermont, but stationed for service at Montreal, Canada, was held to be a "chief officer of customs" within the meaning of this section. (1902) 24 Op. Atty. Gen. 41.

Interest of informant.—Under this paragraph the Secretary of the Treasury is the sole judge as to whether there is an informer who is entitled to a reward, so that until the secretary acts the informer has merely an expectancy of reward. In re Ghazal, (1909) 174 Fed. 809, 98 C. C. A. 517, reversing 169 Fed. 147.

Absence of certificate.—Notwithstanding the absence of the certificate provided for by section 6 of this Act (3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 107) the Secretary of the Treasury was authorized, under section 4, to award compensation to a Canadian customs official who furnished information which resulted in a forfeiture of certain diamonds for violation of section 3082, R. S., 2 Fed. Stat. Annot. 748. (1902) 24 Op. Atty-Gen. 61.

Vol. II, p. 758, sec. 17.

Necessity for declaring forfeiture.—No application for remission of the penalty of forfeiture of imported merchandise can be instituted, under this section, until a forfeiture has been declared. U. S. v. 150 7-12 Dozen Long Gloves, (1909) 168 Fed. 1010.

Effect of failure to appear as claimant in forfeiture proceedings.—An applicant, under this section, for remission of the penalty of forfeiture, is not, though charged with due notice of the forfeiture proceedings, debarred from making such application by reason of failure to appear as claimant in those proceedings. U. S. v. 150 7-12 Dozen Long Gloves, (1909) 168 Fed. 1010.

Vol. II, p. 760, sec. 21.

Pendency of protest as to part of importation.—The presence of a protest relating to a portion of an importation does not give the collector the right to reliquidate as to another portion to which the protest does not relate. Cassel v. U. S., (1906) 146 Fed. 146.

Time from which year runs.—The entry referred to in this paragraph does not mean the entire transaction leading up to the liquidation, but the act of the importer in presenting to the collector the document known as an "entry." Cassel v. U. S., (1906) 146 Fed. 146.

Sufficiency of protest.—With no protest other than an oral complaint, importers acquiesced in a customs ruling that involved an increase in the duties on their goods. It was held that there had not been such a "protest" as is contemplated by section 21, making the settlement of duties final "in the absence of protest." Gulbenkian v. U. S., (1909) 175 Fed. 860.

Effect of filing protest.—The filing of a protest suspends the running of the statute until the protest is decided. Klumpp v. Thomas, (1908) 162 Fed. 853, 89 C. C. A. 543.

Excessive or illegal duties.—This section applies to actions to remove from the government alleged excessive or illegal duties. Gulbenkian v. U. S., (1909) 175 Fed. 860.

Change in method of assessing duties.—Under this section it is not fraud by the government, where subordinate customs officers, without notice to importers or instructions from their superior officers, make a change in the method of assessing duties, after years of uniform practice. Gulbenkian v. U. S., (1909) 175 Fed. 860.

Reliquidation.—Under this section a collector may reliquidate an entry and assess increased duties at any time before the expiration of a year, although the duties first assessed have been paid and the goods withdrawn for consumption. U. S. v. Mexican International R. Co., (1907) 151 Fed. 545, 81 C. C. A. 61.

Reliquidation at increased rate.—Under this section it has been held that, within one year after entry, the duties may be reliquidated at a higher rate, though they may have been paid and the merchandise have been withdrawn for consumption. Louisville Pillow Co. v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1906) 144 Fed. 386.

Reliquidation after protest.—This prohibition does not apply where a protest has been filed, even though it has been sustained, and is no longer pending. Gulbenkian v. Stranahan, (1907) 158 Fed. 836; Kendall v. Lyman, (1908) 161 Fed. 652.

Clerical errors.—See under this title, vol. 2, p. 634, sec. 24.

Vol. II, p. 761, sec. 22.

Limitation of prosecution.—In proceedings for the forfeiture of certain merchandise imported without the payment of duty it appeared by the averments in the pleadings that the claimant of the property had owned it for more than five years, without knowing or having reason to suspect that it had been imported, that he had never concealed it, and that neither he nor it had since been out of the United States, and that the importation of the merchandise was not known to the customs officers until about six years after the forfeiture accrued. It was held that the proceedings were barred, under R. S. sec. 1047 (3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 100, 4 Fed. Stat. Annot. 465) and this section, which prescribe, respectively, (1) that proceedings for forfeiture shall be brought within five years after the forfeiture accrued, provided the offender or the property shall, within the same period, be found within the United States; and (2) that proceedings for forfeiture accruing under the customs revenue laws shall be commenced within three years after the forfeiture accrued, provided the time of the absence from the United States of the person subject to such forfeiture, or of any absence or concealment of the property, shall not be reckoned within the period of limitation. U. S. v. One Dark Bay Horse, (1904) 130 Fed. 240.

Concealment. — In U. S. v. One Stradivarius Violin, (1911) 188 Fed. 542, it appeared that one H., in January, 1906, purchased a violin in London, to be delivered in New York or Boston free of all expense. It was delivered shortly thereafter without duty being paid thereon. H. thereafter habitually kept it in his drawingroom, where it was used, displayed, and admired by various artists at Sunday afternoon concerts held by H. It was never absent but always present in the house of H., though the revenue officers acquired no information concerning its wrongful importation until July, 1910. It was held that such lack of information by government officers, and the fact that H. knew or had reason to believe the instrument had been imported without paying duty, did not constitute "concealment" so as to bar limitations prescribed by this section.

Five-year statute of limitations. — Section 1047 R. S., 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 100, 4 Fed. Stat. Annot. 865, which provides a five-year statute of limitations for suits for "any penalty or forfeiture, pecuniary or otherwise, accruing under the laws of the United States," does not apply to customs revenue cases, which are subject to the three-year limitation for similar proceedings "accruing under the customs revenue laws of the United States," which is provided in section 22. U. S. v. Wittemann, (1907) 152 Fed. 377, 81 C. C. A. 503.

Vol. II, p. 762, sec. 3095.

Amendment. — This section was amended by Act of April 27, 1904, ch. 1625, 33 Stat. L. 362, 10 Fed. Stat. Annot. 79.

Vol. II, p. 762, sec. 3097.

Open gasoline launch. — In U. S. v. One Gasoline Launch, (1904) 133 Fed. 42, 66 C. C. A. 148, it was held that an "open, clinker-built gasoline launch, about eighteen and a half feet long," arriving at Seattle from a port of British Columbia, and not shown to be a foreign vessel or to contain merchandise, was not required to report to the customs officer of the port, under the provision of R. S. sec. 2774, 2 Fed. Stat. Annot. 638, requiring vessels from foreign ports generally to report, but was within section 3097, relating to commerce with contiguous countries, which require only vessels carrying dutiable merchandise, arriving at ports on the northern and northwestern frontier adjacent foreign territory to report, nor was she required to report by section 3109, 2 Fed. Stat. Annot. 767.

Open gasoline launch. — See under this title, vol. 2, p. 762, sec. 3097.

Vol. II, p. 768, sec. 3114.

Duty on repairs — review of assessment by general appraisers. — See under this title, vol. 2, p. 624, sec. 14.

Vol. II, p. 773, sec. 5444.

"Entry." — This section does not refer merely to the act of filing at the custom house the document known as an "entry," but comprises the transaction of entering the goods into the body of the commerce of the country; that is, the whole process of passing the goods through the custom house, which cannot be deemed complete until liquidation has been had. U. S. v. Mescall, (1908) 164 Fed. 584.

Aid in the illegal admission of imports. — This section includes aid given both before and after the fact; and where a customs officer aids one who has made wrongful entry, by concealing the falsity of the entry, or by supporting it by false official returns, he is within the prohibition of the section. U. S. v. Mescall, (1908) 164 Fed. 584.

Vol. II, p. 773, sec. 5445.

The term "entry," as used in this section, is not limited to the paper so known in the customs service, nor to the making and filing of it, nor the process of filing it and thereby entering the goods. U. S. v. Mescall, (1908) 164 Fed. 587.

"Effects, or aids in effecting." — The expression "effects, or aids in effecting," an illegal entry of imports, in section 5445, includes aid in carrying out the fraud, rendered either after or before entry at the custom house. U. S. v. Mescall, (1908) 164 Fed. 587.

Offense by officer while performing duties not within office. — Under this section an officer is indictable where he knowingly and corruptly aids an importer in effecting an entry on payment of less than the legal duty, although his action was in the performance of a duty assigned to him by a superior officer, which he was not obligated to perform, and could not legally perform under the statute. U. S. v. Rosenthal, (1903) 126 Fed. 766, affirmed (C. C. A. 1905) 145 Fed. 1.

Customs weigher.—This section, while ordinarily not intended to apply to those individuals—customs officers—covered by the preceding section of the law, does not exclude an officer of the service if the facts bring him within the definition of the “person” at whom this provision is aimed, and may therefore include a customs weigher who aids in the way prohibited. U. S. v. Mescall, (1908) 164 Fed. 587.

Failure of fraudulent entry.—The penalty provided for illegally effecting the entry of imports, under this section, cannot be avoided on the theory that the fraud would not have been successful until the release of the goods after payment of the duty, and the participants in the wrongdoing might have repented before that time. U. S. v. Mescall, (1908) 164 Fed. 587.

Defense of irregular practice at custom house.—While an importer cannot be subjected to a forfeiture or penalty unless the practice prescribed by statute has been followed in the custom house, one charged criminally with having effected an entry of goods at less than the true weight, and by payment of less than the legal duty, by means of a false invoice, and by the bribing of the examiner to approve such invoice, cannot take advantage of the fact that the practice of submitting the matter to the examiner, instead of to a surveyor, was irregular and unauthorized, and that the examiner had no legal right, under the statute, to do the things in relation to which he was corruptly influenced. U. S. v. Rosenthal, (1903) 126 Fed. 766, affirmed (C. C. A. 1905) 145 Fed. 1.

Sufficiency of indictment.—An indictment under this section, which charges that defendants, on a day named, “with intent . . . that the United States should be wrongfully deprived of a portion of the lawful duties due” on certain imported goods, which were specifically dutiable according to weight, effected an entry thereof at less than their true weight and by payment of less than their legal duty, was held to sufficiently charge that the entry was “knowingly” effected, and also that the entry was a completed entry, on which the duty was liquidated, and not merely the preliminary entry. U. S. v. Rosenthal, (1903) 126 Fed. 766, affirmed (C. C. A. 1905) 145 Fed. 1.

Vol. X, p. 70, sec. 2.

“Hereafter.”—Under this section the term “hereafter” was not intended to be retroactive, and does not apply to coal imported before the date named in the section. Perkins Co. v. U. S., (1910) 180 Fed. 935.

Vol. X, p. 72, sec. 1.

Time of taking effect of treaty.—The treaty between Cuba and the United States, signed Dec. 11, 1902, did not go into effect until Dec. 27, 1903, the date proclaimed by the President and imports from Cuba entered prior to that date were not entitled to the twenty per cent. reduction provided for therein from the duties imposed by Tariff Act July 24, 1897, ch. 11, 30 Stat. L. 151. M. J. Dalton Co. v. U. S., (1907) 151 Fed. 143; U. S. v. M. J. Dalton Co., (1907) 151 Fed. 144. Compare Franklin Sugar Refining Co. v. U. S., (1906) 144 Fed. 563.

1909 Supp., p. 110, sec. 2.

New trial in Circuit Court.—The provision in this section that “hereafter” the parties litigant should be required to introduce all their evidence before the Board of General Appraisers cut off the right under said amended Act of a new trial in the Circuit Court on appeal from the board. It has been held that this provision applied to cases decided by the board after May 27, 1908, even though prior to that date they had arisen and been submitted to the board for decision. Beer v. U. S., (1910) 181 Fed. 402.

1909 Supp., Appendix, p. 815, sec. 13.

Authority to conduct reappraisement.—Under this section the reappraisement can be conducted only by the appraising officers and not by the collector. U. S. v. Calhoun, (1911) 184 Fed. 499.

Conclusiveness of appraisement.—The provision in this section that an appraisal of goods by an appraiser shall be final and conclusive against all parties, and shall not be subject to review in any manner for any cause, in any tribunal or court, does not exclude a reappraisement previously provided for in the same section. U. S. v. Calhoun, (1911) 184 Fed. 499.

Jurisdiction of collector.—Under this and the two following sections and Act of Cong. June 22, 1874, ch. 391, sec. 21, 18 Stat. L. 190, 2 Fed. Stat. Annot. 760, it is held that where imports have been appraised by an appraiser, the collector has no jurisdiction to reappraise the same, and though authorized to institute a proceeding within a year to reliquidate the duties, and to examine the importer as a witness for that purpose, he has no jurisdiction in that proceeding to compel the importer to testify with reference to the value of the goods, and so lay a foundation for reappraisal under the guise of a reliquidation; and this though the original appraisement was induced by fraud. U. S. v. Calhoun, (1911) 184 Fed. 499.

1909 Supp. Appendix, p. 816, sec. 15.

Construction of statute.—The right of a collector to examine an importer in a proceeding for a reliquidation of duties within a year after importation, conferred by this section, is not limited or affected by the fact that the provision for forfeiture in case of default contained in section 16 does not apply to examinations in aid of reliquidation. U. S. v. Calhoun, (1911) 184 Fed. 499.

Production of books.—Where proceedings were instituted by a collector to reliquidate duties on goods imported by a corporation engaged in business and having books of account, it was held that citation was properly issued therein to the corporation directing it to appear in such proceedings and produce its books of account. U. S. v. Calhoun, (1911) 184 Fed. 499.

Examination of importer by collector.—It has been held that since the words "value or classification" include both an appraisal and liquidation, they may also include a reliquidation by the collector by proceedings instituted by him within the year, and hence the collector is entitled within that period to institute reliquidation proceedings, in which the importer may be cited for examination, though there can be no reappraisal by him. U. S. v. Calhoun, (1911) 184 Fed. 499.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR OFFICERS.

Vol. II, p. 801, sec. 1723.

Liability of surety for overcharge of fees.—The surety on the bond of a consular officer cannot be held liable for the statutory penalty incurred by the principal under this section for charging excessive fees, where such fees, including the excess, have been charged against him in his account, and paid to the Treasury Department. U. S. v. Balantine, (C. C. A. 1905) 138 Fed. 312.

Vol. II, p. 811, sec. 1745.

Official and unofficial services.—The President may prescribe a fee, as provided by this section, for the services of a consul in furnishing inspection cards to steerage passengers on vessels destined to the United States, as required by the quarantine regulations of April 1, 1903, but he has no authority to declare such a fee unofficial and to permit the consul to retain it as such. (1903) 24 Op. Atty.-Gen. 672.

Vol. II, p. 818, sec. 4080.

Arrest by marshal.—In Dallemagne v. Moisan, (1905) 197 U. S. 169, 25 S. Ct. 422, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 709, it was held that only a federal marshal can make an arrest on the requisition of a French consul, charging a seaman on a French vessel with insubordination, conformably to article 8 of the Treaty with France of Aug. 12, 1853, 10 Stat. L. 992, 996, 7 Fed. Stat. Annot. 551, since this, being the mode of arrest specified by the Act of Congress of June 11, 1864, 13 Stat. L. 121, ch. 116, enacted to provide for the execution of treaties respecting consular jurisdiction over the crews of foreign vessels in the waters and ports of the United States, and re-enacted in substance in R. S. secs. 4079-4081, must be regarded as the only means proper to be adopted for this purpose.

Vol. II, p. 818, sec. 4081.

Length of imprisonment.—The imprisonment of an insubordinate seaman on a French vessel, pursuant to article 8 of the Treaty with France of Aug. 12, 1853, 10 Stat. L. 992, 996, 7 Fed. Stat. Annot. 551, providing that such persons may be arrested on the written requisition of the consul, "supported by an official extract from the register of the ship or the list of the crew, and shall be held, during the whole time of their stay in the port, at the disposal of the consuls," need not end with the departure of the vessel from the port at which the seaman was taken from the vessel, but may last until the expiration of the two months, which is the limit prescribed by the Act of June 11, 1864, 13 Stat. L. 121, ch. 116, carried forward in substance as R. S. secs. 4079-4081, enacted to provide for the execution of treaties respecting consular jurisdiction over the crews of foreign vessels in the waters and ports of the United States. Dallemagne v. Moisan, (1905) 197 U. S. 169, 25 S. Ct. 422, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 709.

25 S. Ct. 422, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 709, it was held that an unauthorized arrest by a state official on a requisition of a French consul, charging a seaman on a French vessel with insubordination, conformably to article 8 of the Treaty with France of Aug. 12, 1853, 10 Stat. L. 992, 996, 7 Fed. Stat. Annot. 551, does not entitle the seaman to his discharge on habeas corpus when brought before a federal District Court, since the objection to the irregularity of the arrest is obviated by the action of that court in examining into the case under the authority conferred upon it by the Act of June 11, 1864, carried forward in substance as R. S. secs. 4079-4081.

EDUCATION.

Vol. II, p. 851, sec. 4.

Appropriations to be controlled and administered by state.—This Act and Act Cong. Aug. 30, 1890, ch. 841, 26 Stat. L. 417, 2 Fed. Stat. Annot. 854, granting certain public lands or land scrip to the several states, provide that the proceeds thereof shall be invested to constitute a perpetual fund for the endowment of at least one college where the leading object shall be instruction in mechanic arts and agriculture, and appropriating money arising from the sales of the public lands to the states for the benefit of such schools constituted a grant to the several states, and not to the colleges competent to receive the same in the states to be received through the state as a mere conduit. State v. Irvine, (1906) 14 Wyo. 318, 84 Pac. 90.

In State v. Bryan, (1905) 50 Fla. 293, 39 So. 929, it was held that the legislature of Florida has the power to prescribe what college or colleges shall be the recipient or recipients of the interest on the fund derived from the sale of lands donated by this Act for the maintenance of at least one college for instruction in agriculture and mechanic arts, or to bestow it for such purpose upon a university of the state, as it may elect, having also the power to withdraw the interest of this fund from any institution of learning which has been the recipient of it, and found another institution, at any time it may elect so to do, and make it the recipient of said interest for such instruction. It was further held that the legislature has the discretionary power to provide proper educational qualifications for admission to such state college or university, to appoint trustees thereof, subject to change, conferring such powers, not in conflict with some constitutional provision, upon them as it may see fit, or to establish a state board of control, as was done by chapter 5384, Laws Florida, 1905; said trustees or said state board of control being simply public agents to manage a public property.

Teaching military tactics.—In State v. Bryan, (1905) 50 Fla. 293, 39 So. 929, it was held that chapter 5384 of the Laws of 1905 of Florida were not unconstitutional or in conflict with this Act, donating to the state a fund for the establishment and maintenance of at least one college as therein specified, because said chapter 5384 provided that the state board of education and the state board of control "shall include military tactics, if the said joint boards deem the same requisite and proper," as one of the branches of education in the University of the State of Florida.

Right to use for other than educational purposes.—In Nebraska it has been held that by the terms of this Act, and by the acceptance of the grants by the state, and the pledges contained in the state constitution and statutes with reference thereto, the state became a trustee of the funds derived from such grants, for the sole purpose of applying them to the objects of the grant, and with no power to divert the same to other purposes, or to render them general funds of the state. State v. Brian, (1909) 84 Neb. 30, 120 N. W. 916.

Institutions entitled to grants.—No particular institutions are entitled to the grants and appropriations made respectively by this Act, and by the Act of Aug. 30, 1890, 26 Stat. L. 417, ch. 841, 2 Fed. Stat. Annot. 854, appropriating annually certain sums to each state and territory for the more complete endowment and maintenance of such colleges, but the states take the property, charged with the duty to devote it to the purposes named. Wyoming v. Irvine, (1907) 206 U. S. 278, 27 S. Ct. 613, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 1063.

Vol. II, p. 854, sec. 1. [Act of Aug. 30, 1890.]

Selection of beneficiary — duty of state. — The endowment of land and money conferred by Act Cong. July 2, 1862, ch. 130, 12 Stat. L. 303, 2 Fed. Stat. Annot. 851, and this Act, for the benefit of colleges in the several states for the dissemination of learning and agriculture and mechanic arts, being grants to the states for the benefit of a college or colleges situated therein, and the state being required to accept the grant by the legislative act, it is the duty of the state legislature to select the beneficiary entitled to receive and expend the funds. State v. Irvine, (1906) 14 Wyo. 318, 84 Pac. 90.

Appropriations to be controlled and administered by state. — See under this title, vol. 2, p. 851, sec. 4.

Institutions entitled to grants. — See under this title, vol. 2, p. 851, sec. 4.

ELECTIVE FRANCHISE.

Vol. II, p. 864, sec. 5507.

Constitutionality. — The provision in this section for the punishment of individuals who, by means of bribery, prevent persons to whom the right of suffrage is guaranteed by U. S. Const., 15th Amend., from exercising that right, cannot be sustained, as an exercise of the power granted to Congress by such amendment, to prevent the denial of such right by state action. James v. Bowman, (1903) 190 U. S. 127, 23 S. Ct. 678, 47 U. S. (L. ed.) 979.

Limiting operation to sustain validity. — The operation of section 5507, which was manifestly enacted to punish the bribery at all elections, state and federal, of persons guaranteed the right to vote by U. S. Const., 15th Amend., cannot be limited by judicial construction, for the purpose of sustaining its constitutionality, to the bribery of voters at elections for federal officers. James v. Bowman, (1903) 190 U. S. 127, 23 S. Ct. 678, 47 U. S. (L. ed.) 979.

Constitutionality. — In Rakes v. U. S., (1909) 212 U. S. 55, 29 S. Ct. 244, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 401, it was held that the constitutionality of the provision of this section for such punishment of persons committing any other felony or misdemeanor, when conspiring contrary to the preceding section, as is attached to such felony or misdemeanor by the laws of the state in which the offense is committed, was too well settled to permit the question as to such constitutionality to serve as the basis of a writ of error from the federal Supreme Court to a District Court.

Former jeopardy. — An acquittal of murder after a regular trial in a state court having full jurisdiction in the premises is a bar to so much of an indictment for conspiring criminally in violation of R. S. secs. 5508, 5509, as seeks, by charging defendants with the commission of such murder, to enforce the provision of section 5509, that if, in carrying out such conspiracy, an offense against the state has been committed, the punishment provided for by the state for such offense shall be imposed. U. S. v. Mason, (1909) 213 U. S. 115, 29 S. Ct. 480, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 725.

For another case citing this section see U. S. v. Powell, (1907) 151 Fed. 648, affirmed (1909) 212 U. S. 564, 29 S. Ct. 690, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 653.

ESTIMATES, APPROPRIATIONS, AND REPORTS.

Vol. II, p. 897, sec. 3678.

Expenses of railway postal clerks. — This section declares that all sums appropriated for the various branches of expenditures in the public service shall be applied solely to the objects for which they are respectively made, and for no others. Section 3679, 2 Fed.

Stat. Annot. 898, provides that no department of the government shall expend in any one fiscal year a sum in excess of appropriations made by Congress for that fiscal year, or involve the government in any contract for the future payment of money in excess of such appropriations. The annual appropriations for the post-office department provide for actual and necessary expenses by railway postal clerks while actually traveling on business of the department, and away from their several designated headquarters, etc.

It has been held that under such Acts a railway postal clerk could not recover against the United States as on an implied contract for expenses of bed and board while on his regular run, in addition to his fixed salary. Parshall v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1906) 147 Fed. 433.

Vol. II, p. 898, sec. 3679.

Rent in excess of appropriation.—In Hooe v. U. S., (1910) 218 U. S. 322, 31 S. Ct. 85, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 1055, it was held that the owners of a building who have received the entire sums which Congress has from year to year appropriated as full compensation for the rent of quarters secured for the Civil Service Commission by the Secretary of the Interior, in the discharge of his duty under the Act of Jan. 16, 1883, 22 Stat. L. 403, 405, ch. 27, 1 Fed. Stat. Annot. 812, cannot maintain suit against the government under the Act of March 3, 1887, 24 Stat. L. 505, ch. 359, 2 Fed. Stat. Annot. 80, to recover the difference between such sums and the fair rental value of the building, including the basement, which was used without consent, on the theory that the claim is founded upon a contract, express or implied, or upon the constitutional obligation to make just compensation for private property taken for public use, in view of

R. S. secs. 3679, 3732, providing respectively that "no department of the government shall expend in any one fiscal year any sum in excess of appropriations made by Congress for that fiscal year, or involve the government in any contract for the future payment of money in excess of such appropriations," and that "no contract or purchase on behalf of the United States shall be made unless the same is authorized by law, or is under an appropriation adequate to its fulfillment," and of the Acts of Congress of June 22, 1874, 18 Stat. L. 133, 144, ch. 388, and March 3, 1877, 19 Stat. L. 363, 370, ch. 106, 6 Fed. Stat. Annot. 120, prohibiting contracts for the rental of property for government purposes until an appropriation therefor shall have been made in terms by Congress.

EVIDENCE.

Vol. III, p. 2, sec. 724.

Practice in equity.—This section has no application to suits in equity. Oro Water, etc., Co. v. Oroville, (1908) 162 Fed. 975.

"Parties."—Where an action was brought against a railroad company alone for alleged violation of the Interstate Commerce Act, it was held that the corporation's officers and agents were not "parties" within this section authorizing federal courts, on notice, to require the "parties" to produce books or writings in their possession or power which contain evidence pertinent to the issue, etc. Cassatt v. Mitchell Coal, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 1907) 150 Fed. 32.

Objections to admission as evidence.—Books and papers required by an order of court to be produced by a party on the trial of a cause remain subject to objections to their relevancy as evidence which must be passed upon at the trial. International Coal Min. Co. v. Pennsylvania R. Co., (1907) 152 Fed. 557.

Review of order.—An order made by a Circuit Court under this section, requiring a party to an action at law to produce books or writings at the trial, is an interlocutory and not a final order, and is therefore not reviewable on a writ of error prior to final judgment in the cause. Pennsylvania R. Co. v. International Coal Min. Co., (C. C. A. 1907) 156 Fed. 765.

Statute not exclusive.—The power of a federal court to require the production of documentary evidence is not limited to an order made on motion, as provided by this section, but it has inherent power, as well as express authority, under section 716 (4 Fed. Stat. Annot. 498), to issue a subpoena duces tecum and to enforce obedience thereto by proceedings for contempt. American Lith. Co. v. Werckmeister, (C. C. A. 1908) 165 Fed. 426.

Photographic copies.—Where plaintiffs sued on a document alleged to have been signed by defendants' decedent, which defendants claimed was a forgery, and defendants alleged that plaintiffs had in their possession letters purporting to have been signed by deceased, written in the same handwriting as the document sued on, in which reference was made thereto, it was held that the defendants were entitled to an order under this section requiring plaintiffs to produce such letters for defendants' inspection and to permit photographic copies to be made thereof under proper restrictions. Newcomb v. Burbank, (1907) 159 Fed. 568.

Records in possession of others than parties.—Where a complaint alleged that certain nautical charters and contracts had been sold by defendants to a corporation which was not a party to the action, it was held that the complainant, in the absence of anything tending to indicate that such charters, etc., had not been transferred to the corporation, was not entitled to an order directing defendants to produce the same, together with the stock book, minute book, and all papers and bank and check books of the corporation, for plaintiff's inspection before trial, under this section. Ridgely v. Richard, (1904) 139 Fed. 387.

Production at and before trial.—For more than a century trial courts have disagreed as to whether, under this enactment, the procedure is limited to a requirement that the books, documents, and writings be produced at the trial, or, in the discretion of the court, before the trial, for such investigation and examination as the party obtaining the order might desire. The question has at last been authoritatively settled by the United States Supreme Court, which has decided that a court of law is not empowered to compel one party to an action to produce books and papers in advance of trial for his adversary's examination and inspection, by the provisions of R. S. sec. 724. Carpenter v. Winn, (1911) 221 U. S. 533, 31 S. Ct. 683, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 842, reversing (1908) 165 Fed. 636, 91 C. C. A. 301.

To the same effect as the first paragraph of the original note, see Cameron Lumber Co. v. Droney, (1904) 132 Fed. 304; American Banana Co. v. United Fruit Co., (1907) 153 Fed. 943; Shaefer v. International Power Co., (1907) 157 Fed. 896; Rosenberger v. Shubert, (1910) 182 Fed. 411.

To the same effect as second paragraph of the original note, see Cassatt v. Mitchell Coal, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 1907) 150 Fed. 32.

Vol. III, p. 5, sec. 860.

Repeal.—This section was expressly repealed by the Act of May 7, 1910, ch. 216, 36 Stat. L. 352. U. S. v. Mills, (1911) 185 Fed. 318; Sire v. Berkshire, (1911) 185 Fed. 967.

For cases under this section, see American Lith. Co. v. Werckmeister, (1911) 221 U. S. 603, 31 S. Ct. 676, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 873; Radford v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1904) 129 Fed. 49; Hammond Lumber Co. v. Sailors' Union, S.*, (C. C. A. 1909) 170 Fed. 715; Kerreh v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1909) 171 Fed. 366; Foster v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1910) 178 Fed. 166; Com. v. Ensign, (1910) 228 Pa. St. 400, 77 Atl. 657.

Vol. III, p. 7, sec. 861.

Mode of proof.—Under the express terms of this section, in common-law actions in the United States courts the witnesses must appear in open court, unless the case falls within one of the statutory exceptions. Compania Azucarera Cubana v. Ingraham, (1910) 180 Fed. 516.

Evidence admissible.—The federal courts are not required by this section to exclude evidence which, although not within the terms of such section or of the following provisions relating to depositions, is still admissible under the principles of evidence recognized by the common law before and at the time of its enactment. Toledo Traction Co. v. Cameron, (C. C. A. 1905) 137 Fed. 48.

Testimony given at former trial.—In Toledo Traction Co. v. Cameron, (1906) 137 Fed. 48, 69 C. C. A. 28, it was held that Rev. Stat. Ohio, sec. 5343a, which authorizes the admission in evidence of the testimony given by a witness on a former trial of the same case when the witness is dead or beyond the jurisdiction of the court, is in conformity with the rule recognized at common law, which permits the use of such evidence generally where it is impossible to obtain a  viva voce  examination of the witness, and is not in conflict with R. S. sec. 861, and may properly be applied in an action at law in a federal court sitting within the state, where the witness is without the district and more than one hundred miles distant from the place of trial.

But in a case from the Eighth Circuit it appeared that on a former trial a witness had testified for the plaintiff, and on the record trial on proof that this witness was about two hundred miles distant from the place of trial, but without proof of any effort to procure his attendance, or that it was not practicable to have obtained his testimony by deposition de bene esse, or otherwise, as provided by R. S. secs. 863-867, the plaintiff offered the testimony of this witness given on the former trial, to be read from the stenographer's notes. It was held that the evidence was not admissible. Diamond Coal, etc., Co. v. Allen, (C. C. A. 1905) 137 Fed. 705.

Testimony of deceased witness on former trial.—It is competent for a party, on the second trial of an action in a federal court, under the general rule, to prove the testimony given on the former trial by a witness who has since died, there being no federal statute on the subject. Nome Beach Lighterage, etc., Co. v. Standard Marine Ins. Co., (1907) 156 Fed. 484, affirming (C. C. A. 1909) 167 Fed. 119.

Hearing on rule to show cause.—This section does not prevent the use of depositions on a hearing of a rule to show cause when there is no local practice forbidding the use of depositions in such cases. Importers', etc., Nat. Bank v. Lyons, (1905) 134 Fed. 510.

Vol. III, p. 22. [Act of March 9, 1892.]

Relates to manner of taking only.—This Act merely relates to the manner of taking depositions, and neither enlarges nor restricts the grounds for taking them prescribed by R. S. secs. 863, 866, 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 8, 20. Zych v. American Car, etc., Co., (1904) 127 Fed. 724; Magone v. Colorado Smelting, etc., Co., (1905) 135 Fed. 846; Smith v. International Mercantile Co., 154 Fed. 786.

Manner of objection to mode of taking depositions.—In Zych v. American Car, etc., Co., (1904) 127 Fed. 723, it appeared that suit was brought against the defendant in the state courts of Missouri, and notice was given to the taking of the depositions of certain witnesses before trial, and subpoenas for such witnesses were duly issued and served. The defendant then removed the case to the federal court, and after removal applied for the appointment of a special commissioner before whom such witnesses might be examined, as authorized by Rev. Stat. Mo. 1899, sec. 2883. The federal court made such appointment under Act Cong. March 9, 1892, making it lawful to take depositions for use in the federal court in the mode prescribed by the laws of the state. It was held that defendant, having itself applied for the appointment of the commissioner, waived its right to object that inasmuch as the witnesses intended to remain in St. Louis, and were not aged or in poor health, conditions prescribed by R. S. secs. 861, 863, 866, 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 7, 8, 20, as conditions precedent to the taking of proof to be used in the federal courts in advance of the trial, did not obtain, and that the witnesses were not therefore required to appear and testify before the commissioner.

Enforcement of attendance of witnesses.—Where, prior to the removal of a cause to the federal court, notice of the taking of depositions of witnesses before trial as authorized by Rev. Stat. Mo. 1899, sec. 2883, was given, and after removal a special commissioner was appointed by the federal court to take such testimony, as authorized by Act of March 9, 1892, ch. 14, it was held that the commissioner was authorized to enforce the attendance of the witnesses by attachment under the authority conferred by the state statute. Zych v. American Car, etc., Co., (1904) 127 Fed. 723.

Foreign witnesses.—Under this Act and under the Connecticut law permitting the taking of depositions of nonresidents and providing for their oral examination, direct and cross, it was held that the Circuit Court for the district of Connecticut could grant a dedimus potestatem to take depositions in Cuba, where otherwise there would be a failure or delay of justice. Compania Azucarera Cubana v. Ingraham, (1910) 180 Fed. 516.

Following state practice.—Where the laws of a state in which a court is held provide for the issuance of a commission by the clerk to take depositions of witnesses on interrogatories attached on notice to the adverse party, such practice may properly be followed in the federal court with respect to the taking of depositions of witnesses residing in other districts or state. Carrara Paint Agency Co. v. Carrara Paint Co., (1905) 137 Fed. 319.

The examination of a party before trial, authorized by N. Y. Code Civ. Pro., sec. 870, cannot be required by a federal Circuit Court sitting in that state, by virtue of the declaration of the Act of March 9, 1892, ch. 14, that in addition to the mode of taking the depositions of witnesses in causes pending in the federal District and Circuit Courts it shall be lawful to take the depositions or testimony of witnesses in the mode prescribed by the laws of the state in which the courts are held. Hanks Dental Assoc. v. International Tooth Crown Co., (1904) 194 U. S. 303, 24 S. Ct. 700, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 989.

Vol. III, p. 23, sec. 867.

Use of depositions taken to perpetuate testimony.—This section, providing that "any court of the United States may in its discretion admit in evidence in any cause before it any deposition taken in perpetuam rei memoriam which would be so admissible in a court of the state wherein such cause is pending according to the laws thereof," does not limit the use of such depositions to any particular cases, nor to those taken in any particular manner, but leaves such matters to be determined by the laws of the state. Ohio Copper Min. Co. v. Hutchings, (C. C. A. 1909) 172 Fed. 201.

Vol. III, p. 24, sec. 869.

Sufficiency of application.—A petition for a subpoena duces tecum is sufficiently definite with respect to the books or documents required, where the description is specific enough to enable the witness to produce them without uncertainty. To entitle a party to a subpoena duces tecum requiring a witness not a party to the action to produce books and documents in his possession it is not sufficient to allege merely that the documents are material and relevant to the issues in the case; but the facts that will enable the court to determine that there are prima facie material and relevant must be set out. U. S. v. Terminal R. Assoc., (1907) 154 Fed. 288.

Vol. III, p. 26, sec. 882.

The records of the Pension Office are admissible in evidence, equally with the certificate issued, to prove the granting of a pension. Pooler v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1904) 127 Fed. 509.

Exemplified copies of pension vouchers executed thirty years before, made pursuant to this section, prove themselves, and are admissible in evidence. Murphy v. Cady, (1906) 145 Mich. 33, 108 N. W. 493.

Presumption of genuineness. — In Wynne v. U. S., (1910) 217 U. S. 234, 30 S. Ct. 447, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 748, it was held that the genuineness of the authentication of a copy of a certificate of enrolment offered in evidence to establish the national character of a vessel on a prosecution for a crime committed on shipboard will be assumed, as will also the official character of the purported signer and the signing by him, or one authorized to sign for him, where there is no evidence casting suspicion upon the genuineness of the copy or of the seal, or the signature, and none which challenges in any way the American character of the ship.

Vol. III, p. 27, sec. 886.

Transcript prima facie evidence. — In U. S. v. Pierson, (C. C. A. 1906) 145 Fed. 814, it was held that, in the absence of countervailing evidence in an action on the bond of an Indian agent, the introduction of a duly certified transcript of the books and proceedings of the Treasury Department established a prima facie case in favor of the government entitling it to judgment.

Rulings of Treasury Department. — Where, in an action on the bond of an Indian agent, the transcript of the books and proceedings in the Treasury Department contained a debit and credit statement of the account and a showing of the items in dispute, it was held not to be objectionable because it also contained explanatory memoranda showing the ground of the rulings of the accounting officers concerning the items rejected, and, in some instances, the evidence on which they relied. U. S. v. Pierson, (C. C. A. 1906) 145 Fed. 814.

Evidence of receipt of money. — In U. S. v. Pierson, (C. C. A. 1906) 145 Fed. 814, it was held that in an action on the bond of a United States Indian agent a transcript of the books and proceedings of the Treasury Department was not evidence of the receipt by such agent of moneys that did not come to his hands through the ordinary channels of the department.

Ex parte statement of post-office officials. — This section contemplates the certification only of a bookkeeper's plain statement of account; and therefore a statement made in a certified copy of a postmaster's account, after showing that a charge was made against him, that it was on account of money paid by him to a laborer "for which no service was performed," was held not to be admissible in evidence against him. Nagle v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1906) 145 Fed. 303.

Vol. III, p. 28, sec. 17.

Section not retroactive. — Where, in an action on the bond of a United States Indian Department agent, a transcript of the books and proceedings of the Treasury Department, certified and authenticated by the Register of the Treasury, as required by R. S. sec. 886, 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 27, was offered in evidence, it was held to be immaterial that it was not certified by the Secretary or the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, as required by Amendatory Act of March 2, 1895, ch. 177, sec. 10, 28 Stat. L. 809, enacted after the transcript was filed as a part of the record, and in force at the time of the trial, but providing expressly that it related to certificates thereafter made. U. S. v. Pierson, (C. C. A. 1906) 145 Fed. 814.

Vol. III, p. 31, sec. 889.

Account from auditor for Post Office Department. — A certified account from the books of the auditor for the Post Office Department comes within this statute. U. S. v. McCoy, (1904) 193 U. S. 593, 24 S. Ct. 530, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 805.

Vol. III, p. 32, sec. 891.

Questions of land titles. — A certified copy of the records of the General Land Office, including the certificate of local land officers that on the records of their office there were no homestead pre-emption or other valid claims to certain lands within the place limits of the grant to the Atlantic & Pacific Railroad Company, made by the Act of July 27, 1866, and that the land had not been returned or denominated as swamp or mineral land, was held to be competent evidence under this section, on the question of the title of one claiming as grantee from the railroad company. Howard v. Perrin, (1906) 200 U. S. 71, 26 S. Ct. 195, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 374.

Vol. III, p. 33, sec. 892.

Not proof of genuineness of original.—A certified copy of the record of an assignment of a patent with the acknowledgment thereto, although made evidence where the original would be evidence by this section, does not prove the genuineness of due execution of the original assignment. Eastern Dynamite Co. v. Keystone Powder Mfg. Co., (1908) 164 Fed. 47.

Statutes of state or territory.—See Hewitt v. Indian Territory Bank, (1902) 64 Neb. 463, 92 N. W. 741.

Attestation by clerk.—In Henry Invest. Co. v. Semonian, (1909) 45 Colo. 260, 100 Pac. 425, it was held that a transcript of the proceedings of a court of another state, to which was appended a certificate of the judge alone that the foregoing was a complete transcript of the proceedings of the County Court in a certain county, and in a case specified, was not admissible in evidence.

To the same effect as the third paragraph of the original note, see Dusenberry v. Abbott, (1901) 1 Neb. (unofficial) Rep. 101, 95 N. W. 466.

As to sufficiency of certification, see Bohlander v. Helkes, (C. C. A. 1909) 168 Fed. 886.

Sufficiency of authentication.—See Seymour v. Du Bois, (1906) 145 Fed. 1003; Nadel v. Campbell, (1910) 18 Idaho 335, 110 Pac. 263; Brown v. Baxter, (1908) 77 Kan. 97, 94 Pac. 155, 574; Halfhill v. Malick, (1911) 145 Wis. 200, 129 N. W. 1087.

Records and proceedings of United States courts.—To the same effect as the first paragraph of the original note, see Jordan v. McDonnell, (1907) 151 Ala. 279, 44 So. 101; Edwards v. Smith, (Tex. 1911) 137 S. W. 1161.

It seems that this section is not applicable where judicial records of a federal court are offered in evidence in a state court, especially where the federal judgment is of the state in whose court it is offered as evidence. Edwards v. Smith, (Tex. 1911) 137 S. W. 1161.

But in Harmon v. Best, (Ind. 1910) 91 N. E. 19, it appeared that a federal Circuit Court appointed a receiver for a railroad, and thereafter entered an order in the receivership proceeding appointing a commissioner to hear garnishment suits against employees of the railroad, and providing how such claims could be adjudged. A railroad employee was garnished before the commissioner, and the receiver, pursuant to the order, reported the amount of the wages due, and the garnishment was satisfied. The employee then sued the receiver in the state court without leave of the federal court, and the order of the federal court, properly authenticated, was introduced in evidence. It was held that under this section the order was entitled to be given full faith and credit in the state court and could not be collaterally attacked, and should have been treated by the state court as conclusive against its jurisdiction.

Records of state courts offered in federal courts.—This statute does not apply to judicial records of state courts where offered in evidence in a federal court. Edwards v. Smith, (Tex. 1911) 137 S. W. 1161.

State courts must give full faith and credit.—The effect of the provision regarding full faith and credit is that in the courts of other states the judgment of a court of one state is not impeachable except for fraud or want of jurisdiction; is indisputable proof that it rests upon an unanswerable cause of action; is conclusive evidence that the right to its enforcement is wholly unaffected by a laches or lapse of time which preceded its rendition; and gives a right of action for its enforcement subject to limitation and other laws of the forum which regulate, but do not deny, unreasonably restrict, or oppressively burden the exercise of the right. Lamb v. Powder River Live Stock Co., (1904) 132 Fed. 434, 65 C. C. A. 570.

In Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. McGrew, (1903) 188 U. S. 291, 23 S. Ct. 375, 47 U. S. (L. ed.) 480, it was held that a decision of a state court cannot be reviewed in the Supreme Court of the United States on the ground that by it full faith and credit were denied to an Hawaiian judgment, in violation of U. S. Const., art. 4, sec. 1, as carried out by R. S. sec. 905, where the judgment of the trial court was rendered prior to the Act of April 30, 1900, providing a government for Hawaii, and such contention was not brought to the attention of the highest state court in any form.

In Anglo-American Provision Co. v. Davis Provision Co., (1903) 191 U. S. 373, 24 S. Ct. 92, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 225, it was held that full faith and credit was not denied an Illinois judgment by N. Y. Code Civ. Pro., sec. 1780, which, as construed by the New York courts, precludes the maintenance of an action on such judgment by one foreign corporation against another, because it is not upon a cause of action which arose within the state.

A judgment of the Supreme Court of the United States to the effect that a policy of fire insurance could not be recovered upon as it stood nor be helped out by any doctrine of the common law is not denied full faith and credit by an adjudication of a state court that such judgment is not a bar to a suit in equity to reform the policy so that it will express consent to concurrent insurance, and to recover upon such policy as reformed. Northern Assur. Co. v. Grand View Bldg. Assoc., (1906) 203 U. S. 106, 27 S. Ct. 27, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 109.

In Fauntleroy v. Lum, (1908) 210 U. S. 230, 28 S. Ct. 641, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 1039, it was held that the Mississippi courts cannot deny to a judgment of a Missouri court, based upon an award in arbitration proceedings in Mississippi, the full faith and credit secured by U. S. Const., art. 4, sec. 1, to the judgments of sister states, because the original controversy grew out of a gambling transaction in futures in Mississippi, which is made a misdemeanor by Miss. Annot. Code 1892, secs. 1120, 1121, 2117, which further provide that contracts of that character shall not be enforced by any court.

In order that a judgment or decree shall be conclusive in an action brought thereon in another state, it must not only be conclusive in the jurisdiction where rendered, but also final in character, and establish a fixed and certain liability, and therefore a decree for alimony and costs will support an action in another state in so far as it is for a sum due at the time of its rendition, and which is absolutely awarded, but not with respect to future payments, for which it provides, but as to which it remains subject to modification at any time in the discretion of the court. Israel v. Israel, (C. C. A. 1906) 148 Fed. 576, 8 Ann. Cas. 697.

In Tilt v. Kelsey, (1907) 207 U. S. 43, 28 S. Ct. 1, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 95, it was held that the full faith and credit due the probate proceedings of the New Jersey courts do not require that the courts of New York shall be bound by the adjudication of the New Jersey courts on the question of domicile.

In Andrews v. Andrews, (1903) 188 U. S. 14, 23 S. Ct. 237, 47 U. S. (L. ed.) 366, it was held that the full faith and credit clause of the Federal Constitution is not violated by the refusal of the Massachusetts courts, acting in accordance with Mass. Pub. Stat., ch. 144, sec. 41, to give effect to a decree of divorce rendered by a court of another state in a suit instituted by one who temporarily left the state of Massachusetts, where he was domiciled, for the purpose of obtaining a divorce for a cause which occurred in that state while the parties resided there, but which was not a ground for divorce in that state.

Rule of evidence.—This section providing that the record of a judgment after due notice in one state shall be conclusive evidence in the courts of another state or of the United States of a matter adjudged, etc., prescribes a rule of evidence rather than one of jurisdiction. Israel v. Israel, (1904) 130 Fed. 237; Clifford v. Williams, (1904) 131 Fed. 160; Beauchamp v. Bertig, (1909) 90 Ark. 251, 119 S. W. 75; De Vall v. De Vall, (Ore. 1910) 109 Pac. 755.

Limitations.—Under this section it was held that the question whether a judgment dismissing an action on a note in New York on the ground that it was barred by limitations of that state was a determination on the merits of the case, and therefore barred another action on the note in Kentucky, depended on the effect which would be given to such judgment by the courts of New York, and that where under the decisions of New York a judgment based solely on the statute of limitations is held to affect the remedy only, and not the cause of action, such judgment was no bar to the plaintiff's action in Kentucky, where a different statute of limitation prevailed. Brand v. Brand, (1903) 116 Ky. 785, 76 S. W. 868.

Completeness of transcript.—In Montgomery v. Consolidated Boat Store Co., (1903) 115 Ky. 156, 72 S. W. 816, it was held that a transcript of the judgment of a sister state on which execution had been issued and certified, as required by sections 905-909, so as to entitle the judgment to full faith and credit, would be deemed to contain a complete copy of the judgment, though it differed in form from the form of judgment used in Kentucky.

Conclusiveness as to jurisdiction.—Neither the full faith and credit clause of the Federal Constitution (Const., art. 4, sec. 1) nor this section passed in conformity therewith prevents an inquiry into the jurisdiction of the court of a sister state by which a judgment rendered therein is offered in evidence, and a copy of the record, though duly authenticated, may be contradicted as to the facts necessary to give jurisdiction, or where it appears in a collateral proceeding in another state that such facts did not exist, the record is a nullity, though it may contain recitals that the facts did exist. De Vall v. De Vall, (Ore. 1910) 109 Pac. 755.

Not applicable to courts of limited jurisdiction.—Strecker v. Railson, (1907) 16 N. D. 68, 111 N. W. 612.

Probate of will.—On proceedings to probate a will which had been admitted to probate in Illinois, where the copy of the will and of the record showing the admission to probate were not authenticated by the attestation of the officer having charge of the record, nor certified by him to have been compared with the original, and to be a true copy thereof, as required by this section, it was held that the County Court of another state had no jurisdiction to admit the will to probate. In re Box, (1906) 127 Wis. 264, 106 N. W. 1063.

Orders in supplementary proceedings.—In Orient Ins. Co. v. Rudolph, (1905) 69 N. J. Eq. 570, 61 Atl. 26, it was held that as supplementary proceedings in the state of New York are not considered special proceedings before a court or officer of limited jurisdiction, but as a new remedy in an action in which the court has general jurisdiction, the production and proof in a New Jersey court of an order by a court of New York appointing a receiver in supplementary proceedings there, and reciting the facts necessary to give the court jurisdiction, furnishes conclusive evidence of the regularity and validity of the order, and prima facie evidence of the jurisdictional facts.

Record of deeds, etc. — Copies of the record of deeds and other similar private writings made in a sister state are admissible in evidence in the courts of other states when properly certified and authenticated. But they will be given such force and effect only as is given thereto by the law of the state from which they are taken, and it must appear that the record was one which was authorized and provided for by the statutes of that state. Wilcox v. Bergman, (1905) 96 Minn. 219, 104 N. W. 955.

Vol. III, p. 39, sec. 906.

Validity of statute. — Congress had the power to enact this section, under which territorial legislation must be given, by every court within the United States, the same faith and credit which it has by law or usage in the court of the territory enacting it. Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Sowers, (1909) 213 U. S. 55, 29 S. Ct. 397, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 695.

Evidentiary value of copy. — In the absence of a state statute defining the evidentiary value or effect of a copy of a record from another state, this section is binding upon the courts of the state, at least to the extent of defining the evidentiary value of such a copy. Milwaukee Gold Extraction Co. v. Gordon, (1908) 37 Mont. 209, 95 Pac. 995.

Proof of incorporation. — In Milwaukee Gold Extraction Co. v. Gordon, (1908) 37 Mont. 209, 95 Pac. 995, it was held that as there is no common-law rule for granting charters to corporations, which are the creatures of law, and authorized by private statutes or general laws, and as courts of Montana do not take judicial notice of the statutory law of Arizona, a certified copy of the record of incorporation of a company in Arizona is not evidence in a Montana court of its lawful incorporation in Arizona, in the absence of proof that the laws of Arizona authorized its incorporation.

Full faith and credit to state statutes. — In Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Sowers, (1909) 213 U. S. 55, 29 S. Ct. 397, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 695, it was held that the full faith and credit demanded by this section is given by the Texas courts to the New Mexico Act of March 11, 1903, providing that an action for personal injuries received in that territory will not lie unless certain requirements as to the making of an affidavit and the bringing of suit within a specified time are observed, where a recovery is permitted in those courts subject to such restrictions, although the statute also undertakes to make the suit maintainable only in the District Court of the territory.

But in El Paso, etc., R. Co. v. Gutierrez, (1909) 215 U. S. 87, 30 S. Ct. 21, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 106, it was held that the full faith and credit demanded by this section is not given to the New Mexico Act mentioned in the preceding paragraph, where a recovery is permitted in a state court on such a cause of action, with no showing of a compliance with the preliminaries of notice and demand prescribed by the territorial statute.

Sufficiency of authentication. — See Milwaukee Gold Extraction Co. v. Gordon, (1908) 37 Mont. 209, 95 Pac. 995.

EXECUTION.

Vol. III, p. 46, sec. 988.

Construction. — This section gives a right of stay in a federal court only when the defendant has property upon which the judgment, if in a state court, would be a lien, and who by reason of such lien would be entitled under the state law to a stay of such judgment. Thus where a state statute makes judgments liens on real estate, but not on personal property, and gives a right of stay to a defendant owning sufficient real estate without other security, and also a right of stay to other defendants on their giving bail, a judgment defendant in a federal court who has no real estate cannot obtain a stay by virtue of section 988 by giving bail. The Island Queen, (1907) 152 Fed. 470.

In Petrified Bone Min. Co. v. Rogers, (1908) 159 Fed. 1019, it appeared that the Pennsylvania codifying statute of June 16, 1836, P. L. 762, secs. 3 and 4, 2 Purd. Dig. (Stewart's ed.) 1517, pars. 9 and 10, provides that certain judgment defendants may give security for the sum recovered, with interest and costs, and thereupon be entitled to a stay, to be computed from the first day of the term to which the action was commenced, from six to twelve months, depending upon the size of the judgment. Act Pa. 1873, P. L. 60, 1 Purd. Dig. 1519, par. 16, changed the time from which the stay is to be computed to the return day of the writ by which the action was commenced. No term of state court in Pennsylvania lasts six months. 1 Purd. Dig. (Stewart's ed.) 629, 630, para. 59, 60. It was held that so far as a stay of execution is concerned, defendants in the federal courts in Pennsylvania have the same privilege as those in the state courts, and upon the same conditions, except that the stay cannot last longer than one term, and that either the Pennsylvania Act of 1836 or that of 1873 fixes the time when the stay begins in the federal courts, as well as in the state courts.

Interest.—Notwithstanding R. S. secs. 989, 3210, 3220, 3226, 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 593, 597, 601, requiring a collecting officer to immediately pay over gross collections to the Treasury of the United States, and declaring that a certificate of probable cause shall protect him against execution, so that a judgment against him in a suit to recover inheritance taxes paid under protest will in fact be paid out of the United States Treasury, the suit does not thereby become a suit in form against the United States, and hence the successful claimant may recover interest. Kinney v. Conant, (C. C. A. 1909) 166 Fed. 720, affirming (1908) 162 Fed. 581.

Vol. III, p. 48, sec. 990.

Imprisonment of defaulting officer on distress warrant.—This section has no application to imprisonment under a distress warrant issued by a department under authority of a specific Act of Congress against the property and body of a defaulting officer of the government. U. S. v. Dillin, (C. C. A. 1909) 168 Fed. 813.

Contempt.—See In re Lacov, (C. C. A. 1905) 142 Fed. 960.

Vol. III, p. 50, sec. 991.

Jurisdiction of court commissioners.—Where a judgment debtor is arrested on a writ issued out of the federal court on the ground that he had property which he refused to apply to a judgment against him, all proceedings to secure his release after commitment other than by petition in bankruptcy must be taken before a United States commissioner. Johnson v. Crawford, (1907) 154 Fed. 761.

Vol. III, p. 54, sec. 1.

Statute mandatory.—This Act, prescribing the manner in which "all real estate or any interest in land sold under any order or decree of any United States court shall be sold," etc., is mandatory and deprives such courts of the discretion which theretofore existed of making sales otherwise than by public auction as therein prescribed, and a sale otherwise made is illegal and void and does not bind the purchaser even after confirmation, who cannot be required to pay for and accept a title which might be subsequently impeached for palpable legal defect in the proceeding itself under which the sale was made. Cumberland Lumber Co. v. Tunis Lumber Co., (C. C. A. 1909) 171 Fed. 352.

Sale of street railroad under mortgage.—

In Provident L., etc., Co. v. Camden, etc., R. Co., (C. C. A. 1910) 177 Fed. 854, it was held that the fact that the method of advertisement of the property of a street railroad company to be sold under a foreclosure decree did not conform to the method designated in the mortgages was immaterial, as such foreclosure was governed by the provision of this Act.

Bankruptcy.—A court of bankruptcy is not limited in its sales of assets of bankrupts by this Act; but the Bankruptcy Act confers upon such courts full equitable powers in the administration of estates, and they may, for good cause shown, order either real or personal property sold at private sale. In re Edes, (1905) 135 Fed. 595.

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS.

Vol. III, p. 58, sec. 161.

Form.—The regulations mentioned in this section need not be promulgated in any set form, nor in writing, but may consist of established usages and practices which have become a kind of common law of the department. Haas v. Henkel, (1909) 216 U. S. 462, 30 S. Ct. 249, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 569, affirming (1906) 167 Fed. 211.

Regulations of postmaster-general.—Under this section, pursuant to which the postmaster-general intrusted the determination of matters pertaining to the second class mailing privilege to the third assistant postmaster-general, it was held to be immaterial to the right of a publisher to have an order excluding his publication from the mails as second-class mail matter reviewed by the courts that the hearing was before the third assistant postmaster-general, if the order was made by the postmaster-general. Lewis Pub. Co. v. Wyman, (1907) 152 Fed. 787.

In Lewis Pub. Co. v. Wyman, (C. C. A. 1910) 182 Fed. 13, it was held that the postmaster-general was authorized to limit the number of sample copies a publisher who was entitled to mail his publication at second-class rates might send out under those rates to an amount equal to that of the publisher's legitimate subscriptions; the publisher not being entitled under Act Cong. March 3, 1885, ch. 342, 23 Stat. L. 387, prescribing a one-cent per pound second-class rate, "including sample copies," to mail an unlimited number of sample copies at that rate.

Regulations become a part of the law.—Under the regulations of the Internal Revenue Department promulgated with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, providing that officers of the department "will decline to testify as to facts contained in the records, or coming to their knowledge in their official capacity; and this prohibition is hereby extended to include also internal revenue storekeepers and gaugers and agents"—a storekeeper and gauger stationed at a distillery has no right to divulge information in regard to the business of the distiller obtained by him solely in his official capacity as an internal revenue officer, even when called as a witness in a state court. Stegall v. Thurman, (1910) 175 Fed. 813.

Vol. III, p. 60, sec. 162.

Saturday afternoons.—"Every Saturday after 12 o'clock noon" is a holiday for all purposes within the District of Columbia, and is therefore one of the "days declared public holidays by law" within the meaning of the statutes regulating the number of hours of labor which must be required of all clerks and employees in the executive departments. Consequently, heads of departments are not obliged to require labor of such clerks, etc., after the hour of noon on Saturdays. (1902) 25 Op. Atty.-Gen. 40.

Vol. III, p. 61, sec. 177.

Duties regarding Tariff Act.—Under this section and section 61, providing that the head of each department is authorized to prescribe regulations, not inconsistent with law, for the government of the department, and section 245 that "Assistant Secretaries of the Treasury shall . . . perform such . . . duties in the office of the Secretary of the Treasury as may be prescribed by the Secretary or by law," it has been held that the Secretary of the Treasury could require an Assistant Secretary to "ascertain, determine, and declare" the amount of foreign sugar bounties; that being a duty assigned "the Secretary of the Treasury" by Tariff Act of July 24, 1897, ch. 11, sec. 5, 30 Stat. L. 205, 2 Fed. Stat. Annot. 504, and where an Assistant Secretary has issued a declaration under said section it will be presumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that he was performing a duty in accordance with law, and that the declaration was properly issued. Franklin Sugar Refining Co. v. U. S., (1910) 178 Fed. 743.

Presumption of authority.—In In re Jem Yuen, (1910) 188 Fed. 350, it was held that where an appeal from a deportation order was heard and decided by the acting Secretary of Commerce and Labor, it would be presumed, the contrary not appearing, that the acting secretary was at the time lawfully exercising the secretary's powers, as he was authorized to do by this section.

1909 Supp., p. 129, sec. 5.

Construction.—The language of this Act imports that the persons to which it applies are actually in the departments at the seat of government, or that the performance of duties away from such departments is by direct orders from and under supervision by those departments. (1907) 26 Op. Atty.-Gen. 254.

This section does not apply to employees and subordinates in post offices, pension agencies, customs houses, ordnance establishments, sub-treasuries, navy yards, and quartermasters' establishments. (1907) 26 Op. Atty.-Gen. 254.

The term "department," as used in laws relating to the civil service, is distinguished from "office," "bureau," and "branch;" and subordinates of the several executive departments are distinguished from employees of the last-mentioned governmental agencies. (1907) 26 Op. Atty.-Gen. 209.

Transfer from independent office to a department.—It is lawful for the Civil Service Commission to consent to the transfer of a classified employee from an independent office of the government to a department or another independent office or bureau, although such employee may not have served three years in the office or bureau from which he seeks transfer, as is required by section 5 of clerks and employees of the executive departments. (1907) 26 Op. Atty.-Gen. 209.

The "field force" of an executive department—that is, its classified employees under its immediate control, as inspectors, examiners, and agents, though employed usually or invariably away from the seat of government—are governed by the above-mentioned statutory provision with regard to transfers. (1907) 26 Op. Atty.-Gen. 209.

Philippine commission.—Isthmian canal commission.—The provisions of this section are not applicable to the Philippine Commission or to the Isthmian Canal Commission. (1907) 26 Op. Atty.-Gen. 209.

Employees of forest service.—Classified employees on the rolls of the forest service, Department of Agriculture, in Washington, are required by the terms of this section to serve three years before their transfer to other departments is permissible. (1909) 27 Op. Atty.-Gen. 421.

Waiver of three-year limit.—The Civil Service Commission has authority under clause (a), sec. 8, of Civil Service Rule X., within its discretion and in view of all the circumstances of the case, to waive the three-year limit of time required by this section for service of clerks in one executive department before transfer to another. (1908) 27 Op. Atty.-Gen. 100.

EXTRADITION.

Vol. III, p. 68, sec. 5270.

Construction of treaties.—In the construction and carrying out of extradition treaties the ordinary technicalities of criminal proceedings are applicable only to a limited extent, since an exact correspondence between the laws of the two countries cannot be expected, and the only purpose of extradition is to put the accused on trial under the laws of his own country. U. S. v. Greene, (1906) 146 Fed. 766.

The construction of an extradition treaty, made by the Constitution a part of the supreme law of the land, is for the courts, and they are not bound by the construction placed thereon by the executive or diplomatic branches of the government, or by the construction placed thereon by the foreign country with which the treaty is made. Ex p. Charlton, (1911) 185 Fed. 880.

This section and an extradition treaty between the United States and a foreign country must be construed together to determine the requisites of a formal demand for the surrender of a fugitive, except that a treaty, when later, controls where it is in irreconcilable conflict with the statute. Ex p. Charlton, (1911) 185 Fed. 880.

If one construction of a treaty assures a reasonable opportunity for each government to furnish the other the proofs necessary to justify the continued detention of suspected criminals, while another construction facilitates the escape of fugitives from justice and tends to impede the punishment of crime, the former is to be preferred in the absence of compelling words to the contrary. (1908) 27 Op. Atty.-Gen. 4.

Treaty with Italy.—In Ex p. Fudera, (1908) 162 Fed. 501, it was held that article 1 of the extradition treaty of 1868 between the kingdom of Italy and the United States (Act March 23, 1868, 15 Stat. L. 620, 7 Fed. Stat. Annot. 654), which provides for extradition from one country to the other of persons charged with crime in the demanding country, "provided that this shall be done only upon such evidence of criminality as according to the laws of the place where the fugitive or person so charged shall be found would justify his or her apprehension and commitment for trial if the crime had been there committed," does not warrant the return to Italy of a person there charged with murder, where the only evidence presented of his connection with the offense is hearsay.

In Ex p. Charlton, (1911) 185 Fed. 880, it was held that the court would not declare that the extradition treaty between the United States and Italy, referred to in the preceding note, is abrogated merely because Italy refuses to surrender its subjects committing crimes in the United States and then fleeing to Italy, where the United States has dealt with the treaty as subsisting, and has honored the requisition of the Italian government for the surrender of its citizens, and that the court would not go behind such acts and say that the treaty has been ended.

Treaty with Mexico.—The forty days during which a prisoner may be detained under the terms of article X. of the treaty of February 22, 1899, 31 Stat. L. 1825, 7 Fed. Stat. Annot. 716, with Mexico, "to await the production of the documents upon which the claim for extradition is founded," must be considered as meaning forty days prior to the production of the documents to the state department in the United States, or to the corresponding branch of the Mexican government; and if such documents are thus produced within the forty days, the suspected criminal has no absolute right or release under the treaty, but may be detained for a reasonable additional period to afford time for an investigation into his probable guilt or innocence. (1908) 27 Op. Atty.-Gen. 4.

Treaty with Great Britain.—The treaty of July 12, 1889, art. 3, 26 Stat. L. 1509, 7 Fed. Stat. Annot. 604, between the United States and Great Britain, provides that no person surrendered by or to either country shall be tried for any offenses committed prior to his extradition other than the offense for which he was surrendered. Article 6 provides that the extradition of fugitives under the treaty and the treaty of 1842 (7 Fed. Stat. Annot. 582) shall be carried out in conformity to the laws regulating extradition in force in the surrendering state. The Canadian Extradition Act is said to provide that it does not authorize the issue of an extradition warrant to any state or country in which the person may be tried after extradition for any other offense than that for which he was extradited, unless assurance is first given that he shall not be so tried. R. S. sec. 5275, 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 78, provides for the security against lawless violence of persons extradited into this country, until they have been tried for the offenses for which they have been extradited, etc., and for a reasonable time thereafter. It has been held that one extradited from Canada is not immune from trial for another offense committed after his extradition, and before given opportunity to return to Canada, and that though the Canadian officials might have refused to surrender him without receiving the assurance referred to in the Canadian Act, as, by surrendering him without such assurance, the right of the United States and the state were limited only by the treaty. Ex p. Collins, (1907) 151 Cal. 340, 90 Pac. 827.

Extradition to Porto Rico. — Extradition from a state or territory of the United States to Porto Rico is not authorized by the statute relating to extradition to foreign countries. In re Kopel, (1906) 148 Fed. 505.

Indictment — Description of offense. — An indictment charging a conspiracy to defraud the United States between an officer and agent of the government and his codefendants, which sets out facts showing a corrupt agreement between the defendants and overt acts by means of which the purpose of such agreement was effected and the government defrauded, charges fraud by an agent and participation therein by the other defendants, within the meaning of clauses 4 and 10 of article 1 of the extradition treaty of 1890 (Act March 25, 1890, 26 Stat. L. 1509, 7 Fed. Stat. Annot. 603) between Great Britain and the United States, and is sufficient to warrant their extradition for trial thereunder. U. S. v. Greene, (1906) 146 Fed. 766.

An information in extradition proceedings charging accused with "assault with intent to kill and murder" sufficiently brings the offense within article 10 of the treaty with Great Britain, authorizing extradition of persons charged with "assault with intent to commit murder." U. S. v. Piazza, (1904) 133 Fed. 998.

Complaint — Technicality. — Good faith to the demanding foreign government requires the surrender of the accused in extradition proceedings if there is presented, even in somewhat untechnical form, such reasonable ground to suppose him guilty of crime as to make it proper that he should be tried. Glucksman v. Henkel, (1911) 221 U. S. 508, 31 S. Ct. 704, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 830.

Under article 10 of the extradition treaty with Great Britain of 1842, a complaint for the arrest and examination of an alleged offender is not required to set out the offense with the particularity of an indictment, but is sufficient if it conforms to the requirements of a preliminary complaint under the local law where the accused is found. In re Herskovitz, (1901) 136 Fed. 713. Of similar effect see Ex p. Zentner, (1910) 188 Fed. 344.

Necessity for incorporation of foreign record in complaint. — To give jurisdiction to a United States commissioner of a proceeding to extradite a fugitive from the justice of a foreign state, the record of proceedings before the foreign court, and the depositions of witnesses therein contained, upon which the extradition proceeding is based, need not be attached to the complaint, if they are in the custody and keeping of the one making the complaint, and the commissioner is possessed of the information which they contain, which is sufficient to satisfy him that the proceeding is based upon real grounds. Yordi v. Nolte, (1909) 215 U. S. 227, 30 S. Ct. 90, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 170, affirming 166 Fed. 921.

Upon information and belief. — The irregularity, if any, in making a complaint in extradition proceedings on information and belief, without attaching thereto the record of the foreign court which is the basis of the proceedings, is cured by the production at the hearing of such record, which is sufficient to justify the detention of the accused. Yordi v. Nolte, (1909) 215 U. S. 227, 30 S. Ct. 90, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 170, affirming 166 Fed. 921.

Verification. — A complaint sworn to upon information and belief is sufficient in proceedings for the extradition of a person to a foreign country, where it is supported by the testimony of witnesses who are stated to have deposed, and who therefore must be presumed to have been sworn. Glucksman v. Henkel, (1911) 221 U. S. 508, 31 S. Ct. 704, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 830.

Variance. — A variance in proceedings for the extradition to a foreign country of a person charged with forgery and uttering forged paper, in that the complaint speaks of bills of exchange, while the evidence shows the forged instruments to have been promissory notes, is not fatal, where the instruments are sufficiently identified. The effect of a variance between the complaint and the evidence in proceedings for the extradition of a person to a foreign country is to be decided on general principles, irrespective of the laws of the state where the proceedings are had. Glucksman v. Henkel, (1911) 221 U. S. 508, 31 S. Ct. 704, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 830.

In proceedings to extradite petitioner for forgery alleged to have been committed in a foreign country, a variance between the complaint and the evidence as to the dates of the instruments alleged to have been forged is immaterial. Ex p. Zentner, (1910) 188 Fed. 344.

Identity of offense charged. — While the extradition of a person from a foreign country for trial in the United States and the indictment on which he is tried must be for the same criminal acts, it does not follow that the crime must have the same name in both countries, but it is sufficient if the acts in question are criminal in both countries and are within the terms of the treaty under which the extradition is granted. The persons surrendered by Canada to the United States, under sections 4 and 10 of article 1 of the extradition treaty of 1890 between Great Britain and the United States, to be tried for the crime of "participation in fraud by an agent or trustee," were tried for such crime where the indictment charged them with conspiracy with a disbursing officer of the government to defraud the United States by presenting false and fraudulent claims to such officer and by his allowance and payment of the same from public money in his hands, the acts and transactions charged and proved before the extradition commissioner and under the indictment being the same. Greene v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1907) 154 Fed. 401, affirming (1906) 146 Fed. 803.

Trial for different offenses — Offense committed subsequent to extradition. — A person extradited for a particular offense may be tried for a different offense committed subsequent to the time he was extradited without first being given a reasonable time to return to the country from which he was first extradited. Es p. Collins, (1907) 151 Cal. 340, 90 Pac. 827, wherein it was held that a person extradited on the charge of perjury could be tried on a second indictment for perjury committed on the trial of the charge for which he was extradited. The court, after stating the general rule that a person extradited from a foreign country on one charge could not be indicted for a different offense, said: "But no such considerations apply to the case of an offense committed after the surrender and return of the accused. While it may be the policy of a country in which a person has taken refuge to grant him the right of asylum except as against a specific charge of a crime covered by a treaty of extradition, such country, after it has once extradited him, cannot be concerned in securing for him immunity for new crimes committed after his return to the demanding country. The obligation assumed by the country demanding the surrender is that such surrender will not be used for the purpose of putting the prisoner on trial for any other offense which he may be claimed to have committed before he sought the asylum of the foreign country; but we cannot see that there would be any breach of international faith in compelling him, in common with other persons within the jurisdiction, to assume responsibility for any offense which he may commit after his return. In such case there is no possibility of the extradition proceedings being used as a subterfuge to pursue the accused for an offense other than the one for which he was extradited. In the absence of any authority compelling such conclusion, we are not prepared to hold that a person extradited under a treaty may, after his return, and pending his trial upon the extradition charge, commit any crime, however atrocious, with absolute security against prosecution until he shall have had an opportunity to return to the country from which he was taken."

New indictment for same offense. — Where a petitioner was extradited from Mexico under an indictment charging an extraditable offense, and thereafter the indictment was quashed in the demanding state, it was held that the petitioner was not entitled to a reasonable time to return to Mexico before being called on to answer a new indictment charging the same facts. Es p. Fischl, (1907) 51 Tex. Crim. 63, 100 S. W. 773.

Imprisonment under prior conviction or offense. — The omission of the words "or be punished" from the provision of article 3 of the extradition treaty of July 12, 1889, 26 Stat. L. 1508, 7 Fed. Stat. Annot. 603, with Great Britain, that no person extradited "shall be triable or be tried" for any crime or offense committed prior to his extradition other than the offense for which he was surrendered until he shall have had an opportunity of returning to the country from which he was surrendered, does not justify the imprisonment, upon a former conviction for another and different offense, of a person extradited from Canada for an offense against the United States, until he has had an opportunity to return to Canada — especially where extradition has been refused for the other offense — since this omission is inadequate to overcome the positive provisions of R. S. secs. 5272, 5275, 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 77, 78, and the otherwise manifest scope and object of the treaty, and the earlier Ashburton treaty of 1842, which are to limit imprisonment as well as the trial to the crime for which extradition has been demanded and granted. Johnson v. Browne, (1907) 205 U. S. 309, 27 S. Ct. 539, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 816.

Preliminary examination. — Under this section an alleged fugitive may be arrested under a warrant issued by the committing magistrate on the complaint of a representative of the foreign country, and the committing magistrate can only determine whether a certificate from the Secretary of State, attesting that a requisition has been made by the foreign government, has been issued, whether the offense charged against accused is extraditable under any treaty, whether the person brought before him is the one accused of crime, and whether there is probable cause for holding accused for trial, and the evidence in that respect must be such as, according to the law of the state in which accused is apprehended, is sufficient to commit him for trial. Es p. Charlton, (1911) 185 Fed. 880.

Probable cause. — In order to justify a commissioner in issuing a certificate to the executive authority for the surrender of the accused in extradition proceedings, it is sufficient if the accused is held on competent legal evidence, and if probable cause exists for believing him guilty of the offense charged. The evidence need not be conclusive, nor must the commissioner be absolutely convinced of the guilt of accused. U. S. v. Piazza, (1904) 133 Fed. 998.

Sufficiency of evidence. — A fugitive from the justice of a foreign government is not entitled to his discharge from arrest in extradition proceedings on habeas corpus for insufficiency of evidence, if the commissioner before whom he was examined had before him competent legal evidence on which to exercise his judgment whether the facts shown sufficiently established petitioner's criminality for purposes of extradition. Es p. Zentner, (1910) 188 Fed. 344.

Under the treaty of 1852 (7 Fed. Stat. Annot. 771) of the United States with Prussia and other states of the Germanic Confederation for extradition of criminals, providing that they shall be delivered on such evidence of criminality as according to the laws of the place where the fugitive was found would justify his apprehension and commitment for trial, it is not necessary, to justify extradition, to present evidence sufficient to sustain a conviction; evidence justifying a committing magistrate in holding accused by imprisonment or by bail to await subsequent proceedings being sufficient, and the provisions of a state law that conviction cannot be had on the uncorroborated evidence of an accomplice would have no application. Ex p. Glaser, (1910) 176 Fed. 702, 100 C. C. A. 254.

Where, in extradition proceedings for murder, the evidence, though circumstantial, was so strong that, if produced before a committing magistrate in the state where petitioner was arrested and applied for habeas corpus, as proof of an assassination committed there, it would have been the commissioner's duty to hold accused to await subsequent proceedings, it is sufficient to sustain an order for his return. In re Urzua, (1911) 188 Fed. 540.

In Elias v. Ramirez, (1910) 215 U. S. 398, 30 S. Ct. 131, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 253, reversing (1907) 11 Ariz. 256, 90 Pac. 323, it was held that the evidence was sufficient to justify commitment in extradition proceedings on a charge of forgery of railway wheat certificates purporting to show the true weight of carloads of wheat shipped from the United States to Mexico, where it was shown that the accused was a member of a firm of customs brokers which presented to the Mexican customs authorities certificates showing weights much less than the true weight; that the Mexican government was thereby defrauded of a large amount of import duties; that the accused was the principal, if not the only, beneficiary of the fraud, and that, instead of reparation or explanation, resort was had to flight.

Sanity of accused. — On extradition proceedings for the removal to a foreign country of an alleged fugitive from the justice thereof, evidence of the insanity of accused at the time of the commission of the offense, or of the present sanity of the accused, is improper. Ex p. Charlton, (1911) 185 Fed. 880.

Place. — The preliminary examination of a person sought to be extradited under the treaties of Aug. 9, 1842, 8 Stat. L. 572, 576, 7 Fed. Stat. Annot. 582, and July 12, 1889, 26 Stat. L. 1508, 1510, 7 Fed. Stat. Annot. 603, between the United States and Great Britain, on a conviction of murder, must be had in the state where he was found and arrested, in view of the provision of the 10th article of the earlier treaty, that the alleged fugitive criminal shall be arrested and delivered up only upon such evidence of criminality as, according to the laws of the place where he is found, would justify his apprehension and commitment for trial if the crime had there been committed, and of the proviso in the Sundry Civil Appropriation Act of Aug. 18, 1894, 2 Fed. Stat. Annot. 334, 28 Stat. L. 416, ch. 301, by which it is made the duty of a marshal arresting a person charged with any crime or offense to take him before the nearest Circuit Court commissioner or the nearest judicial officer having jurisdiction, for a hearing, commitment, or taking bail for trial — notwithstanding those parts of the Act of Aug. 12, 1848, ch. 167, 9 Stat. L.

302, and of R. S. sec. 5270, 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 68, which provides for bringing the accused in extradition proceedings before the justice, judge, or commissioner who issued the warrant of arrest. Pettit v. Walshe, (1904) 194 U. S. 205, 24 S. Ct. 657, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 938, affirming (1903) 125 Fed. 572.

Certified copy of requisition. — Failure to produce a certified copy of a requisition from a foreign country before the commissioner in extradition proceedings was held to be cured, where a properly certified copy of the requisition on file in the office of the Secretary of State was submitted to the court at the hearing of a writ of habeas corpus. In re Urzua, (1911) 188 Fed. 540.

Identity. — A finding that the identity of the prisoner with the person whose extradition to a foreign country is sought is made out cannot be said to be erroneous where in addition to a photograph under seal of the foreign magistrate, which represents the prisoner, there are other facts tending to establish such identity. Glucksman v. Henkel, (1911) 221 U. S. 508, 31 S. Ct. 704, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 830.

Offense not included in treaty. — As to offenses not covered by an extradition treaty between two countries, they stand toward each other as though there were no treaty, and either may exercise its discretion as to the surrender of a fugitive on demand of the other; and where such a demand has been acceded to, either under the obligation of a treaty or as an act of comity, the accused is triable in the courts of the country to which he is returned on the charge upon which he was surrendered. Greene v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1907) 154 Fed. 401, affirming (1906) 146 Fed. 803.

To warrant the extradition of a person to Italy under section 7, article 2 of the treaty of March 23, 1868, with that country (15 Stat. L. 630, 7 Fed. Stat. Annot. 654), which provides for the extradition of persons charged with "the embezzlement of public moneys committed within the jurisdiction of either party by public officers or depositors," where the accused was charged with having as treasurer of a hospital embezzled its funds, it was held that the proof must show that the hospital was a public institution, that the accused, as its treasurer, was a public officer or depositor, and that the money taken was public money. Ex p. Ronchi, (1908) 164 Fed. 288.

Jurisdiction of commissioner. — The commissioner's jurisdiction over the case ends after he has certified the result of his findings to the Secretary of State and committed the prisoner to the proper jail. He has no authority to order a prisoner transported out of the judicial district in which he was arrested. (1909) 27 Op. Atty.-Gen. 128.

Demand by foreign government. — No prior demand by a foreign government is necessary before the arrest of a fugitive from the justice of such government in extradition proceedings. Ex p. Zentner, (1910) 188 Fed. 344.

"Request" equivalent to a "demand." — Where an extradition treaty, providing for the surrender of persons committing enumerated crimes, exists between the United States and a foreign government, a "request" by the foreign government for the surrender of a fugitive is a sufficient "demand" for the surrender. Ex p. Charlton, (1911) 185 Fed. 889.

Translation of depositions.—Where certain depositions attached to extradition papers were in the German language, and the translator testified before the commissioner that he had dictated the translation to a typewriter, that he had examined and compared it as written out, and that the translation was correct, there being no claim by petitioner that the translation was in any respect inaccurate, it was held to be no objection to the translation that the typewriter did not also testify with reference thereto. Ex p. Zentner, (1910) 188 Fed. 344.

Ultior purpose in securing extradition.—Evidence of malice or an ulterior purpose on the part of the prosecuting witness at whose instance a criminal prosecution was instituted in a foreign country will not invalidate a commitment of the accused for extradition from this country. In re Herskovitz, (1901) 136 Fed. 713.

Where extradition proceedings for forgery were in the name of the German government under treaty with the United States, it was held that the attitude or motives of the persons alleged to have been defrauded were immaterial. Ex p. Zentner, (1910) 188 Fed. 344.

Surrender of citizens of the United States for trial in foreign country.—The word "persons" in the extradition treaty between the United States and Italy, entered into in 1868, 24 Stat. L. 1001, 7 Fed. Stat. Annot. 654, providing for the surrender of persons charged with enumerated crimes, is sufficiently broad to embrace citizens and subjects of the contracting parties, and a citizen of the United States, who while in Italy commits an offense, and who then flees to the United States, is within the treaty and may be extradited thereunder, though Italy has always construed the word so as to include its citizens and subjects. Ex p. Charlton, (1911) 185 Fed. 880.

Due process of law.—Where an extradition treaty subsists with a foreign government under the Constitution and law of the land, a surrender of an alleged fugitive in pursuance thereof is in accordance with the due process of law requirement of the Constitution. Ex p. Charlton, (1911) 185 Fed. 880.

Review of commissioner's decision on habeas corpus.—Under this section, which vests justices of the Supreme Court, circuit and district judges and commissioners with concurrent jurisdiction to issue warrants and make examinations and commitments in extradition proceedings, the judgment of a commissioner in such a proceeding cannot be reviewed for error by a District Court on a writ of habeas corpus. In re Herskovitz, (1901) 136 Fed. 713.

The court, on habeas corpus for the discharge of an alleged fugitive from the justice of a foreign country, held for removal thereto, may only determine whether the findings of the committing magistrate are based on competent evidence, and whether the foreign government has formally demanded the extradition of the fugitive. Ex p. Charlton, (1911) 185 Fed. 880.

Necessity for certificate of Secretary of State.—Under this section a certificate of the Secretary of State that application for the extradition of the person named has been made by the foreign government is not necessary to the issuance of such warrant, even where, as in case of Russia, the treaty provides for such certificate. In re Schlippenbach, (1908) 164 Fed. 783.

Bail.—A Circuit Court of the United States has power independently of statute to admit to bail in a case of foreign extradition pending examination, but such power should be exercised only under the most pressing circumstances. However, where the plaintiff in an action in New York involving his whole fortune was arrested on an extradition warrant from Canada the day before the trial of his case was to begin, at the instance of the adverse party, it was held that the hardship was such that the court was justified in enlarging him on bail until the trial of his case could be completed. In re Mitchell, (1909) 171 Fed. 289.

What amounts to a charge of crime.—For the purposes of extradition, one who, in his absence, has been convicted in contumacia of a criminal offense in a foreign country, is to be regarded only as charged with, and not convicted of, the offense. Ex p. Fudera, (1908) 162 Fed. 591.

Finality of decision of country on which demand is made.—The question whether or not a fugitive shall be surrendered by a country in which he has sought asylum must of necessity be decided by the government of such country, and its decision, approved by its courts, that the offense charged is within the terms of an extradition treaty between that country and the one making the demand, is final, and the question cannot be again raised in the courts of the latter country after extradition. Greene v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1907) 154 Fed. 401, affirming (1906) 146 Fed. 803.

Authentication of depositions.—Under this section, providing that, where depositions are offered in evidence in an extradition case, they shall be admitted if they are properly authenticated to be received for similar purposes by the tribunals of the foreign country from which accused shall have escaped, and the certificate of the principal diplomatic officers of the United States in such country shall be proof that the depositions are so authenticated, depositions so authenticated are properly admitted, though some of them are not sworn to. Ex p. Glaser, (1910) 176 Fed. 702, 100 C. C. A. 254.

Vol. III, p. 78, sec. 5275.

Prosecution for subsequent offense.—Immunity from trial for an offense committed by a person after his extradition until he has been afforded an opportunity to return to the country whence he was extradited was not given by the provisions of the treaties with Great Britain of Aug. 9, 1842, 8 Stat. L. 576, 7 Fed. Stat. Annot. 582, and July 12, 1889, 26 Stat. L. 1508, 1509, 7 Fed. Stat. Annot. 603, or of R. S. sec. 5275, under which such immunity as to prior offenses only is secured. Collins v. O'Neil, (1909) 214 U. S. 113, 29 S. Ct. 573, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 933, affirming (1907) 151 Cal. 340, 90 Pac. 827, 91 Pac. 397.

Vol. III, p. 78, sec. 5278.

Federal authority paramount.—A state has no sovereign power to surrender fugitives found within its limits to another jurisdiction, and can grant extradition only under the Federal Constitution and statutes. In re Kopel, (1906) 148 Fed. 505.

The power of Congress to extend the extradition laws to all places within the territorial jurisdiction of the United States cannot be denied. In re Gillis, (1905) 38 Wash. 156, 80 Pac. 300.

State governors must rely on federal statutes.—The governor of a state in acting on an application for extradition is bound to follow the procedure specified by this section. Ross v. Crofutt, (1911) 84 Conn. 370, 80 Atl. 90.

Under the Washington statute (Pierce's Code, sec. 2035; Ballinger's Annot. Codes & Stat., sec. 7016) making it the duty of the prosecuting attorney or other prosecuting officer to investigate the grounds of a demand for extradition before the issuing of a rendition warrant, it has been held that the governor is not required to have these officers make such investigation before issuing the warrant, as he acts under the Constitution and laws of the United States. In re Gillis, (1905) 38 Wash. 156, 80 Pac. 300.

State legislation in aid of federal enactments.—The extradition of fugitives from the justice of a state is provided for by Const. U. S., art. 4, sec. 2, providing that, where a person charged in any state with crime shall flee from justice and be found in another state, he shall on demand of the executive of the state from which he fled be delivered up to be removed to that state, and by federal statutes enacted in furtherance of the provision, and a state statute in aid thereof need not be complied with. Thus, where a fugitive was arrested by an officer on information furnished him from the sister state, and on hearing the governor issued his warrant, it was held that the fugitive could not complain that he was not arrested in accordance with a state law providing for the arrest of a person charged in another state with crime. Ex p. Bergman, (1910) 60 Tex. Crim. 8, 130 S. W. 174.

The principles governing international extradition have no application to cases of extradition between states. Knox v. State, (1905) 164 Ind. 226, 73 N. E. 255.

Alaska.—Under the Washington statute (Pierce's Code, sec. 2035; Ballinger's Annot. Codes & Stat., sec. 7016) providing that when a demand is made upon the governor of the state by the executive of any state or territory, in any case authorized by the Constitution and laws of the United States, for the delivery over of any person charged with crime, the governor shall, if satisfied that the demand is conformable to law and ought to be complied with, issue his warrant, etc., it has been held that the governor has authority to surrender a fugitive from justice upon the demand of the governor of the district of Alaska, made pursuant to section 393, Act March 3, 1899, 30 Stat. L. 1328, ch. 429, 1 Fed. Stat. Annot. 396, expressly conferring upon the governor of that district power to make such demand. In re Gillis, (1905) 38 Wash. 156, 80 Pac. 300.

Porto Rico.—Precisely the same power to issue a requisition for the return of a fugitive criminal as is possessed under R. S. sec. 5278 by the governor of any organized territory, is given the governor of Porto Rico by the provisions of the Foraker Act of April 12, 1900, 5 Fed. Stat. Annot. 767, 31 Stat. L. 80, ch. 191, sec. 14, that the laws of the United States not locally inapplicable shall be in force and effect in Porto Rico, and of section 17, 5 Fed. Stat. Annot. 768, that the governor of Porto Rico shall have all the powers of governors of the territories of the United States that are not locally inapplicable. People v. Bingham, (1909) 211 U. S. 468, 29 S. Ct. 190, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 286, affirming (1907) 189 N. Y. 124, 81 N. E. 773, which affirmed 117 App. Div. 411, 102 N. Y. S. 878; In re Kopel, (1906) 148 Fed. 505.

In the District of Columbia the chief justice of the Supreme Court thereof is charged with the same duties that in similar proceedings are imposed upon the governors of the several states. Hayes v. Palmer, (1903) 21 App. Cas. 450.

Fugitive serving a sentence in asylum state.—The governor, otherwise than by exercising his pardoning power, has no power by virtue of the Federal Constitution, or otherwise, to grant an extradition demand issued by the governor of another state for the return of a fugitive from the justice of that state lawfully held in a penal institution under an unexpired sentence. In re Opinion of Justices, (1909) 201 Mass. 609, 89 N. E. 174.

Race prejudice as cause for refusing extradition.—The mere suggestion that the alleged fugitive from the justice of another state, because of his race and color, will not receive a fair and impartial trial in the court of the demanding state, and will not be adequately protected against violence while in the custody of that state, does not require the executive of the state in which he may be found to refuse to surrender him on demand made in conformity with the Federal Constitution and laws, nor furnish a ground for his release on habeas corpus. Marbles v. Creecy, (1909) 215 U. S. 63, 30 S. Ct. 32, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 92.

State and federal courts.—The state courts are bound by the construction of the extradition laws adopted by the Supreme Court of the United States. Dennison v. Christian, (1904) 72 Neb. 703, 101 N. W. 1045.

Respective rights of demanding and asylum states.—To the same effect as the original note, see In re Opinion of Justices, (1909) 201 Mass. 609, 89 N. E. 174.

Who is "a fugitive from justice."—To the same effect as the first paragraph of the original note. Depoilly v. Palmer, (1906) 23 App. Cas. (D. C.) 324; Com. v. Hare, (1908) 36 Pa. Super. Ct. 125.

To be a fugitive from justice within the meaning of the provisions of U. S. Const., art. 4, sec. 2, and R. S. sec. 5278, it is only necessary that the accused, having been in the demanding state when the crime was committed, thereafter leave that state and be found within the territory of another. Appleyard v. Com., (1906) 203 U. S. 222, 27 S. Ct. 122, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 161; In re Strauss, (1903) 126 Fed. 327, 63 C. C. A. 99.

A person indicted the second time for the same offense is none the less a fugitive from justice because, after the dismissal of the first indictment, on which he was originally extradited, he left the state with the knowledge of, or without objection by, the state authorities. Bassing v. Cady, (1908) 208 U. S. 386, 28 S. Ct. 392, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 540.

One who does, within the state, an overt act, which is, and is intended to be, a material step towards accomplishing a crime, and then absents himself from the state and does the rest elsewhere, becomes a fugitive from justice for extradition purposes when the crime is complete, if not before. Strassheim v. Daily, (1911) 221 U. S. 280, 31 S. Ct. 558, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 735; State v. Gerber, (1910) 111 Minn. 132, 126 N. W. 482.

One convicted of an offense against a state, who, before the expiration of that sentence, was delivered to the federal authorities to serve out a prior sentence, would at the end of such prior sentence be a fugitive from justice under the United States Constitution, and could be taken by the state under the direct provisions of this section. People v. Benham, (1911) 71 Misc. 345, 128 N. Y. S. 610.

Section 364 of the Criminal Code of Nebraska (Cobbey's Ann. Code 1901) does not authorize the extradition of a person charged with crime against the laws of another state without proof that the person so charged is a fugitive from the justice of the demanding state. Dennison v. Christian, (1904) 72 Neb. 703, 101 N. W. 1045.

For other cases on the question as to who is a fugitive from justice under the extradition laws, see People v. Baker, (1911) 142 App. Div. 598, 127 N. Y. S. 382; Coleman v. State, (1906) 53 Tex. Crim. 93, 113 S. W. 17.

Actual presence when crime committed.—A person cannot be a fugitive from justice unless he was in the state from which the demand comes when it is charged that the crime was committed. Farrell v. Hawley, (1905) 78 Conn. 150, 61 Atl. 502; Hayes v. Palmer, (1903) 21 App. Cas. (D. C.) 450; O'Malley v. Quigg, (1909) 172 Ind. 350, 88 N. E. 611; People v. Baker, (1911) 142 App. Div. 598, 127 N. Y. S. 382.

In Ex p. Hoffstot, (1910) 180 Fed. 240, affirmed 218 U. S. 665, 31 S. Ct. 222, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 1201, it was held that the petitioner, a resident of New York, indicted in Pennsylvania for conspiracy to bribe members of the Pittsburg city council, could not be extradited, in the absence of some proof that he had been physically present in Pennsylvania when the offense was committed, as otherwise he could not be a fugitive from justice of that state.

Escaped convict.—A person who, after having been convicted of a crime committed within a state, when sought for, to be subjected to the sentence of the court, is found within another state, is a fugitive from justice within the meaning of the extradition statute. Hughes v. Pfanz, (C. C. A. 1905) 138 Fed. 980.

The belief of the accused, when leaving the demanding state, that he had not committed any crime against the laws of that state, does not prevent his being a fugitive from justice within the meaning of the provision of U. S. Const., art. 4, sec. 2, and R. S. sec. 5278. Appleyard v. Massachusetts, (1906) 203 U. S. 222, 27 S. Ct. 122, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 161.

The motive of the accused in leaving the state has no bearing upon the question as to whether he is a fugitive from justice. Ex p. Hoffstot, (1910) 180 Fed. 240, affirmed 218 U. S. 665, 31 S. Ct. 222, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 1201; Com. v. Hare, (1908) 36 Pa. Super. Ct. 125.

One found in another state on institution of prosecution against him, who refuses to return voluntarily, is a fugitive within the extradition law, though he left openly, not in flight or with any intent to avoid arrest; the manner of his leaving being immaterial. Taylor v. Wise, (Ia. 1910) 126 N. W. 1126.

Evidence as to flight from justice.—Independent proof, apart from the requisition papers, that the accused was a fugitive from justice, need not be demanded by the governor of the surrendering state before issuing his warrant of arrest in extradition proceedings. Pettibone v. Nichols, (1906) 203 U. S. 192, 27 S. Ct. 111, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 148.

The statute does not provide for the particular kind of evidence to be produced before the governor, nor how it shall be authenticated, but it must at least be evidence that is satisfactory to his mind. Munsey v. Clough, (1905) 196 U. S. 364, 25 S. Ct. 282, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 515, affirming (1902) 71 N. H. 594, 53 Atl. 1086; Farrell v. Hawley, (1905) 78 Conn. 150, 61 Atl. 502.

Contradictory evidence on the question of the presence or absence of the accused in the state at the time of the commission of the offense will not require his discharge on habeas corpus to review the issuance of a warrant of arrest in interstate extradition proceedings. Munsey v. Clough, (1905) 106 U. S. 364, 25 S. Ct. 282, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 515.

Where there was specific evidence that the petitioner, a resident of New York, participated there in a conspiracy to bribe members of the city council of Pittsburg to select certain banks in Pittsburg, of one of which petitioner was president, as city depositories, and there was substantial evidence from which a jury would be justified in drawing an inference that petitioner was in Pittsburg on a day when some act or acts in furtherance of the conspiracy were performed, it was held that there was sufficient proof that he was a fugitive from justice to justify his extradition to Pennsylvania. Ex p. Hoffstot, (1910) 180 Fed. 240, affirmed 218 U. S. 665, 31 S. Ct. 222, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 1201.

In Hayes v. Palmer, (1903) 21 App. Cas. (D. C.) 450, the appellant was charged with keeping "a gaming table for gambling" and with keeping and managing "a house for gambling." It was held that he did not overthrow the prima facie case of the state by testimony that he had not been in the state on the date named, but had been there "shortly before" and frequently during the summer without showing the exact dates when he was there.

Warrant is prima facie evidence as to flight from justice. — Bassing v. Cady, (1908) 208 U. S. 386, 28 S. Ct. 392, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 540; Marbles v. Creecy, (1909) 215 U. S. 63, 30 S. Ct. 32, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 92; Hayes v. Palmer, (1903) 21 App. Cas. (D. C.) 452; State v. Curtis, (1910) 111 Minn. 240, 126 N. W. 719.

To the same effect as the second paragraph of the original note, see Morrison v. Dwyer, (1909) 143 Ia. 502, 121 N. W. 1064.

It is a question of fact whether the person sought to be extradited is a "fugitive from justice." In re Strauss, (1903) 126 Fed. 327, 63 C. C. A. 99.

Question cannot be raised in demanding state. — Where the accused is personally within the jurisdiction of the demanding state, and there applies to the court for his discharge on habeas corpus, he cannot raise the question as to whether or not he has been, as a matter of fact, a refugee from the justice of that state, within the meaning of the Federal Constitution and the Act of Congress authorizing interstate extradition. In re Moyer, (1906) 12 Idaho 250, 85 Pac. 897; In re Pettibone, (1906) 12 Idaho 264, 85 Pac. 902; In re Haywood, (1906) 12 Idaho 264, 85 Pac. 902.

Indictment — Necessity for. — The executive of a state upon whom demand is made for the arrest and extradition of a fugitive criminal has no power to issue his warrant of arrest for a crime committed in another state, so far as any authority has been conferred upon him by the federal statutes, unless he is furnished with a copy of the indictment or affidavit required by the provisions of this section. Compton v. Alabama, (1908) 214

U. S. 1, 29 S. Ct. 605, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 885, affirming (1907) 152 Ala. 68, 44 So. 885.

Technical sufficiency. — The legal sufficiency of the indictment is not to be determined by the officer granting the requisition warrant. Depoilly v. Palmer, (1906) 28 App. Cas. (D. C.) 324.

It is a matter for the determination of the court having jurisdiction of the crime charged. Hayes v. Palmer, (1903) 21 App. Cas. (D. C.) 450; People v. Baker, (1911) 142 App. Div. 598, 127 N. Y. S. 382; In re Renshaw, (1904) 18 S. D. 32, 99 N. W. 83.

Where extradition proceedings were instituted by Alabama to prosecute petitioner for an alleged homicide committed in that state, under the laws of which it was not essential that the indictment should charge either the time or venue of the offense, it was held that an indictment omitting such elements was not objectionable for that reason in the extradition proceedings. Coleman v. State, (1908) 53 Tex. Crim. 93, 113 S. W. 17.

To the same effect as the first paragraph of the original note, see Harris v. Magee, (Ia. 1911) 129 N. W. 742.

For other cases see Pierce v. Creecy, (1908) 210 U. S. 387, 28 S. Ct. 714, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 1113, affirming (1907) 155 Fed. 663; Strassheim v. Daily, (1911) 221 U. S. 280, 31 S. Ct. 558, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 735; Ex p. Lewis, (Nev. 1911) 115 Pac. 729.

Burden to show insufficiency. — In habeas corpus by prisoners held pursuant to an indictment found in a sister state, the burden is on relators to show that the indictment is insufficient by producing, if necessary, the statute under which it was found; and hence the fact that such statute was not submitted with the requisition papers to the governor under whose warranty relators were arrested will not warrant the presumption that the law of the sister state is the same as that of the forum, under which the indictment would be insufficient. In re Renshaw, (1904) 18 S. D. 32, 99 N. W. 83.

Information. — An information is sufficient basis for extradition. People v. Stockwell, (1904) 135 Mich. 341, 97 N. W. 765.

Sufficiency. — It is not necessary that the information charge precisely the same offense named in the original warrant of arrest, so long as it is based on the same transaction. People v. Stockwell, (1904) 135 Mich. 341, 97 N. W. 765.

Affidavit. — It is not necessary that extradition proceedings under this section shall be based on an indictment, but that a verified complaint or affidavit charging a person with a crime is sufficient to confer jurisdiction on the governor of the state to which the defendant has fled. In re Strauss, (1903) 126 Fed. 327, 63 C. C. A. 99.

Where the requisition is accompanied by a certified copy of an indictment against the fugitive the governor need not consider the sufficiency of the affidavit attached to the requisition. Law v. State, (Ala. 1911) 56 So. 79.

On information and belief. — An affidavit for a requisition in extradition proceedings, made on information and belief, and not predicated on facts within the knowledge of the affiant, is insufficient. People v. City Prison, (1908) 60 Misc. 525, 112 N. Y. S. 492; Ex p. Cheatham, (1906) 50 Tex. Crim. 51, 95 S. W. 1077.

But a complaint, charging a crime sworn to by the county attorney as true without qualification, is a sufficient affidavit as the basis of an extradition proceeding, as against the objection that the complaint was necessarily on information and belief and insufficient. Morrison v. Dwyer, (1909) 143 Ia. 502, 121 N. W. 1064.

Authority of officer administering oath.—In State v. Bates, (1907) 101 Minn. 303, 112 N. W. 260, it was objected that the complaint or affidavit purported to be sworn to before a justice of the peace, but that there was no proof before the court that a justice of the peace in the state of California is authorized to administer an oath, and that the courts of Minnesota cannot presume that the statute law of California is the same as in Minnesota. It was held that it would be implied from the executive authentication that the officer certifying to the jurat of the affidavit was such magistrate as he was therein represented to be.

An affidavit made before a notary public, who under Georgia Code 1895 (vol. 2, p. 982; vol. 3, p. 93) is ex officio a justice of the peace, must be regarded as satisfying the requirement of the provisions of this section, that such affidavit be made before a magistrate, where the governor of Georgia has based his requisition upon such affidavit, and a warrant of arrest has been issued thereon by the governor of the state upon whom the demand for arrest and extradition was made. Compton v. Alabama, (1908) 214 U. S. 1, 20 S. Ct. 605, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 885, affirming (1907) 152 Ala. 63, 44 So. 685.

Record of conviction in lieu of affidavit.—Where a charge of crime made against a person in affidavits filed before a magistrate or a court has culminated in a conviction, the record of such conviction is sufficient evidence in proceedings for his extradition from another state, and the question as to the sufficiency of the affidavits becomes immaterial. Hughes v. Pfanz, (C. C. A. 1905) 138 Fed. 980.

A verified complaint is sufficient as an affidavit required by this section. Morrison v. Dwyer, (1909) 143 Ia. 502, 121 N. W. 1064; State v. Bates, (1907) 101 Minn. 303, 112 N. W. 260; Ex p. Cheatham, (1906) 50 Tex. Crim. 51, 95 S. W. 1077.

Under 2 Ballinger's Ann. Codes & Stat. of Washington, sec. 7017, declaring that when any person shall be found within the state charged with an offense committed in another state, any court or magistrate may on complaint issue a warrant for his arrest, etc., the complaint on which the warrant is issued must show that accused has been legally charged with crime in the demanding state. State v. White, (1905) 40 Wash. 560, 82 Pac. 907.

The question of identity of the person accused cannot be inquired into on habeas corpus where there is no allegation in the pleadings that he is not such person. State v. Bates, (1907) 101 Minn. 303, 112 N. W. 260; Gillis v. Leekley, (1905) 38 Wash. 156, 80 Pac. 300.

Charged with crime.—A fugitive from justice is "charged" with a crime, within the extradition law, only when he is charged lawfully by a person who has knowledge of its commission, or is possessed of information, which he states under oath, leading a reasonable and fair mind to infer its commission. People v. City Prison, (1908) 60 Misc. 525, 112 N. Y. S. 492.

It is only necessary to inquire whether a crime has been charged under the statute of the demanding state as construed by the courts of that state. In re Strauss, (1903) 126 Fed. 327, 63 C. C. A. 99.

A finding on extradition proceedings that an indictment upon which they are based does not charge a crime does not preclude a subsequent trial on the merits in the state where the indictment was found after the accused has been found in that state and arrested. Benson v. Palmer, (1908) 31 App. Cas. (D. C.) 561.

In extradition proceedings, allegations that accused in a specified county and state on a day named obtained a specified sum of money from one named person as agent of another by false pretenses by drawing and delivering to such person a check for that amount on a bank at a specified place, and procured such person as such agent to cash the check by falsely representing that he was financially responsible, and had funds in or credit with the bank, and that the check would be honored, and that such person was deceived thereby, was held to sufficiently charge the offense of obtaining money on false pretenses. Taylor v. Wise, (Ia. 1910) 126 N. W. 1128.

Where an Ohio statute provided that any person who obtained of another anything of value by any false pretense, with intent to defraud, shall be guilty of an offense which, if the value of the property be thirty-five dollars or more, is punishable by imprisonment, an affidavit charging that accused, on a particular day, in M. county, Ohio, unlawfully and falsely pretended to a certain watch company, with intent to defraud it, that he was the owner of a dry goods store in Y., Ohio, which statement was false and known so to be by accused, and by means of such false statement accused obtained from the company jewelry worth $400, was held to sufficiently state an offense, under the Ohio laws, to sustain extradition proceedings. In re Strauss, (C. C. A. 1903) 126 Fed. 327.

It is a question of law whether the person extradited was substantially charged with a crime against the laws of the state demanding his surrender. Munsey v. Clough, (1904) 196 U. S. 364, 25 S. Ct. 282, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 515, affirming (1902) 71 N. H. 594, 53 Atl. 1086; In re Strauss, (1903) 126 Fed. 327, 63 C. C. A. 99; Depoilly v. Palmer, (1906) 28 App. Cas. (D. C.) 324; Dennison v. Christian, (1904) 72 Neb. 703, 101 N. W. 1045; In re Waterman, (1907) 29 Nev. 288, 89 Pac. 291. To the same effect as the original note, see Com. v. Philadelphia County Prison, (1908)

Complaint before committing magistrate.—A person against whom a complaint for a felony has been filed before a committing magistrate, who can only charge or hold for trial before another tribunal, is "charged" with the crime within the meaning of U. S. Const., art. 4, sec. 2, subd. 2, and of R. S. sec. 5278. Matter of Strauss, (1905) 197 U. S. 324, 25 S. Ct. 535, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 774.

Person convicted and sentenced.—In Hughes v. Pflanz, (C. C. A. 1905) 138 Fed. 980, it appeared that the appellant had been convicted of a crime in Indiana and sentenced under the indeterminate sentence law of that state and had escaped from the state before his sentence expired. It was claimed that he was not "charged with crime" within section 5278. The court said: "The term 'charged with crime,' as used in the Constitution and statute, seems to us to have been used in its broad sense, and to include all persons accused of crime. It would be a very narrow and technical construction to hold that after the accusation, and before conviction, a person could be extradited, while after conviction, which establishes the charge conclusively, he could escape extradition. The object of the provisions of the Constitution and statute is to prevent the escape of persons charged with crime, whether convicted or unconvicted, and to secure their return and punishment if guilty. Taking the broad definition of 'charged with crime' as including the responsibility for crime, the charge would not cease or be merged in the conviction, but would stand until the judgment is satisfied. It would include every person accused, until he should be acquitted, or until the judgment inflicted should be satisfied. Any other construction would prevent the return of escaped convicts upon the charge under which they had been sentenced, and defeat in many instances the ends of justice. The relator was convicted of the crime of larceny in Indiana, and sentenced, and the term of sentence has not yet expired. That charge of larceny continues to be a charge against him until the sentence has been performed, and he therefore stands 'charged with crime,' within the meaning of that term as used in the Federal Constitution."

Place of commission.—An affidavit for a requisition, made by the governor of Colorado, alleged that accused obtained from the prosecutor two title deeds purporting to convey lands in Kansas; that she promised to take the deeds to the recorder in the county where the lands described in the deeds were situated, and there record the same, for which purpose the deeds were delivered to her; that she did not record them, but converted them to her own use, to wit, that she left Colorado within a few days after obtaining the deeds for the state of Kansas and there obtained other conveyances to the property and transferred the title to other persons, etc. It was held that the offense stated in the affidavit was committed in Kansas, and was not within the jurisdiction of the courts of Colorado, and hence the affidavit was insufficient to sus-tain the requisition. Ex p. Cheatham, (1906) 50 Tex. Crim. 51, 95 S. W. 1077.

Presumptions.—It is presumed that the acts charged in an indictment found in a sister state, under which the extradition of fugitives from justice is sought, are sufficient to constitute a crime under its laws. In re Renshaw, (1904) 18 S. D. 32, 99 N. W. 83.

The words "treason, felony, or other crimes."—To the same effect as the first paragraph of the original note, see Com. v. Hare, (1908) 36 Pa. Super. Ct. 125.

The word "crime," as used in Const. U. S., art. 4, sec. 2, requiring that a person charged in any state with treason, felony, or other crime, who shall flee from justice and be found in another state, on demand of the executive authority of the state from which he fled, shall be delivered up to be removed to the state having jurisdiction of the crime, embraces not only misdemeanors, but treason and felony as well, being sufficiently broad to include every possible crime committed within the border of the United States. Ross v. Crofutt, (1911) 84 Conn. 370, 80 Atl. 90.

Where a defendant, after conviction in a sister state, fled from the justice of that state, the mere fact that in the judgment of conviction there was imposed a pecuniary fine and sentence to jail was held not to show that he was not guilty of a felony within Const. U. S., art. 4, sec. 2, and the federal statutes relating to extradition, there being nothing to show that under the law of the sister state accused might not have been imprisoned in the penitentiary. Ex p. Bergman, (1910) 60 Tex. Crim. 8, 130 S. W. 174.

"Certified as authentic."—Extradition proceedings are sufficiently authenticated where the record of the prosecution is certified by the justice before whom it is pending, the county clerk certifies to the justice's official character, and the attorney-general certifies that the application for requisition is in due form under the laws of that state, while the governor certifies to the authenticity of the records and that by such papers and records the accused stands charged with a crime. Taylor v. Wise, (Ia. 1910) 126 N. W. 1126.

The question of the authenticity of the complaint is for the governor's own determination, and his certificate to the fact alone is required. Morrison v. Dwyer, (1909) 143 Ia. 502, 121 N. W. 1064.

Presumptions.—The presumption is that one authenticating an indictment, made a part of requisition papers, as governor of the demanding state, was so acting at the time. Kemper v. Metzger, (1907) 169 Ind. 112, 81 N. E. 663.

Where a governor's requisition is issued in extradition proceedings, it will be presumed on habeas corpus in favor of the action of the governor that his requisition was attached to the papers and affidavits on which it was based, and that he stated therein that the annexed papers were duly authenticated in accordance with the laws of the demanding state. Ex p. Cheatham, (1906) 50 Tex. Crim. 51, 95 S. W. 1077.

The purpose of requiring a certificate of authentication of the affidavit charging a crime, attached to a requisition for extradition of a fugitive from justice, is to prevent the governor of the state upon whom the demand is made from being imposed upon by spurious charges of crime, and to advise him of the genuineness of the copy of the indictment or affidavit. State v. Curtis, (1910) 111 Minn. 240, 126 N. W. 719.

Form.—The certificate of authentication need not be in any particular form. It is sufficient if it shows that a copy of an indictment or affidavit annexed to the requisition is authentic. A certificate was held to be sufficient which was in these words: "It appears from the annexed papers, duly authenticated according to the laws of this state." State v. Curtis, (1910) 111 Minn. 240, 126 N. W. 719.

In State v. Bates, (1907) 101 Minn. 303, 112 N. W. 260, the certification was as follows: "It satisfactorily appears, by the annexed and accompanying complaint, in form of an affidavit, filed in and issued out of the justice court of Stockton township, county of San Joaquin, state of California, and warrant of arrest issued out of said court, also affidavits of George F. McNoble, Walter F. Sibley, Joseph D. Simpson, and Hayward Reed (which I certify are authentic and duly authenticated in accordance with the laws of the state of California), that in the due and regular course of judicial proceedings under the laws of this state J. H. Grande stands charged with the crime of forgery." Objection was made that the certification related only to the affidavits of McNoble, Sibley, Simpson, and Reed. The court held that the only reasonable construction of the language used was that the governor certified that all of the documents enumerated by him and upon which he based his demand were authentic, and that his certificate was therefore sufficient.

Proceedings before governor — Right to hearing before governor.—The person demanded in interstate extradition proceedings has no right to a hearing before the governor on the question whether he has been substantially charged with a crime and whether he is a fugitive from justice. Munsey v. Clough, (1905) 196 U. S. 364, 25 S. Ct. 282, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 515; Marbles v. Creecy, (1909) 215 U. S. 63, 30 S. Ct. 32, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 92; Farrell v. Hawley, (1905) 78 Conn. 150, 61 Atl. 502.

Sufficiency of requisition papers.—An extradition requisition reciting that the accused was charged by indictment with a specified crime against the laws of the state, and had become a fugitive from the justice of that state, accompanied by a certified copy of the indictment, makes a prima facie case against the accused as an alleged fugitive from justice, and, in the absence of proof to the contrary, authorizes the executive of the surrendering state to issue his warrant for the arrest and delivery of the alleged criminal to the agent of the demanding state. Marbles v. Creecy, (1909) 215 U. S. 63, 30 S. Ct. 32, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 92. See also Ross v. Croft, (1911) 84 Conn. 370, 80 Atl. 90.

Scope of governor's inquiry.—When requisition is made upon a governor he must determine, first, whether the person demanded is substantially charged with a crime against the laws of the state from whose justice it is alleged he has fled, by an indictment or affidavit properly certified; and, second, whether he is a fugitive from justice from the state demanding him. Dennison v. Christian, (1904) 72 Neb. 703, 101 N. W. 1045. See also Ross v. Croft, (1911) 84 Conn. 370, 80 Atl. 90; Harris v. Magee, (Ia. 1911) 129 N. W. 742.

Discretion of executive as to surrender.—Whether the warrant of arrest shall be issued or not is an executive consideration, and the duty of the governor is absolute whenever the requisition from the demanding state is presented in due form, with the necessary accompanying papers as required by law, to the governor of the state where the accused has taken refuge. The latter is under obligation to issue a warrant for the surrender of the person accused, if he be a fugitive from justice. If the requisition is in proper form he has no authority to determine whether the charge is true. The constitutional provision for extradition is in the nature of a treaty between the states to which the executive of each is bound to give effect. In re Opinion of Justices, (1909) 201 Mass. 609, 89 N. E. 174; Com. v. Hare, (1908) 36 Pa. Super. Ct. 125; Ex p. Denning, (1907) 50 Tex. Crim. 629, 100 S. W. 401; Coleman v. State, (1908) 53 Tex. Crim. 93, 113 S. W. 17.

Motives of governor.—The motives which prompt the chief executive of a state to issue his warrant for the rendition of a prisoner are not proper subjects of judicial inquiry. Such inquiry would be opposed to public policy and the freedom of action of the executive department of government. In re Moyer, (1906) 12 Idaho 250, 85 Pac. 897; In re Pettibone, (1906) 12 Idaho 264, 85 Pac. 902; In re Haywood, (1906) 12 Idaho 264, 85 Pac. 902.

Motive for proceeding.—In Com. v. Philadelphia County Prison, (1908) 220 Pa. St. 401, 69 Atl. 916, affirming (1907) 33 Pa. Super. Ct. 594, the court said: "Assuming that the demanding state has complied with the requirements of the Federal Constitution and the Act of Congress in making the requisition for the accused, it would be equally an unconstitutional exercise of power for the court of the asylum state to inquire into the motives of the prosecution, instituted in conformity with the laws of the demanding state, and release the offender and thereby prevent his extradition for trial in the latter state. The only possible effect of permitting the motives of the private prosecutor to be shown on a habeas corpus extradition proceeding would be to show the guilt or innocence of the accused. If a person is guilty of an offense against the laws of a state, it is no defense for him to allege that the prosecution was inspired by improper motives. It very frequently happens that criminals are brought to punishment only by persons who have motives other than the vindication of the violated law; but it has never been held that such reason was sufficient to invalidate a conviction for a criminal offense. Good faith and courtesy require a state to honor the demand of a sister state for the return of a fugitive from justice."

Executive warrant — Conditions precedent. — It is only necessary, as a condition precedent to the issuing of the governor's warrant, to establish two propositions: first, that the defendant was substantially charged with crime against the laws of another state, and second, that he was a fugitive from the justice of that state. In re Strauss, (1903) 126 Fed. 327, 63 C. C. A. 99.

Copies of affidavit or indictment. — It is not necessary that the executive warrant in extradition proceedings should be accompanied by certified copies of the affidavit or indictment, or that such affidavit or indictment be set out in the warrant. Ex p. Cheatham, (1906) 50 Tex. Crim. 51, 95 S. W. 1077.

Clerical errors. — Where extradition papers showed that the alleged fugitive from justice was charged by affidavit, a recital in the warrant of the governor of the state on which the demand was made that the fugitive was charged by indictment was held to be a mere immaterial clerical error. Ex p. Coleman, (1908) 53 Tex. Crim. 93, 113 S. W. 17.

Recitals. — It is not necessary that the executive warrant in extradition proceedings recite that the affidavit or indictment from the demanding state was presented to the governor of the asylum state by any legal authority from such demanding state. Ex p. Cheatham, (1906) 50 Tex. Crim. 51, 95 S. W. 1077.

It is not necessary that the warrant should contain the express statement that the governor has found that the accused is a fugitive from justice. The fact of the issuing of the warrant upon demand made upon that ground is sufficient to justify the presumption that the governor so found, until that presumption is overthrown by proof to the contrary. Dennison v. Christian, (1904) 72 Neb. 703, 101 N. W. 1046.

In Ex p. Thomas, (1908) 53 Tex. Crim. 37, 108 S. W. 663, it was held that in view of the Code Crim. Pro. of Texas 1896, art. 254, subd. 2, which provides that a warrant of arrest "must state that the person is accused of some offense against the laws of the state, naming the offense," an executive warrant in extradition proceedings which fails to name the offense alleged to have been committed in the foreign state, and is neither accompanied by an indictment nor a complaint disclosing the nature of the offense, is fatally defective.

Is prima facie as to legal prerequisites. — The warrant of the governor, authorizing the extradition of a person charged with an offense in another state, is prima facie evidence that all the essential prerequisites have been observed. Ross v. Crofutt, (1911) 84 Conn. 370, 80 Atl. 90; Kemper v. Metzger, (1907) 169 Ind. 112, 81 N. E. 663; People v. Police Com'r, (1905) 100 App. Div. 483, 91 N. Y. S. 769; Ex p. Bergman, (1910) 60 Tex. Crim. 8, 130 S. W. 174; Matter of Gillis, (1906) 38 Wash. 156, 80 Pac. 300.

On habeas corpus to review the issuance of an extradition warrant by the governor of a state, the accused is concluded by the prima facie case made out by the papers upon which the governor acted, where such accused, upon the hearing in the habeas corpus proceedings, waives the right to introduce further evidence. Munsey v. Clough, (1904) 123 U. S. 964, 25 S. Ct. 282, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 515.

Description of offense. — Where a certified copy of an original information on which extradition proceedings in the demanding state were based was attached to the requisition and charged the petitioner with having separated himself from his wife and minor child, they being destitute and depending wholly upon their earnings for adequate support, contrary to the statute, etc., and throughout the papers such offense was designated as "desertion" and was made a misdemeanor by Pa. Act March 13, 1903 (P. L. 26), a warrant for the arrest and return of petitioner to answer for the crime of "desertion" was not objectionable as failing to set out an offense known to the laws of the demanding state. Ex p. Hose, (Nev. 1911) 116 Pac. 417.

Reviewability after surrender of prisoner. — The warrant of the chief executive of the state surrendering an accused person, whether issued lawfully or unlawfully, has accomplished its purpose and become functus officio as soon as the accused is delivered into the jurisdiction of the demanding state, and the regularity of its issuance thereupon ceases to be a question for the judicial inquiry on application by the prisoner for his discharge, where he is at the time held under due and legal process issued out of a court of competent criminal jurisdiction of the demanding state. In re Moyer, (1906) 12 Idaho 250, 85 Pac. 897; In re Pettibone, (1906) 12 Idaho 264, 85 Pac. 902; In re Haywood, (1906) 12 Idaho 264, 85 Pac. 902.

Executive warrant for receiving prisoner. — A governor's warrant empowering a sheriff to receive defendant from the authorities of another state and convey him hither to be dealt with according to law is sufficient to authorize defendant's production in the court of trial. People v. Stockwell, (1904) 135 Mich. 341, 97 N. W. 765.

Review by federal court. — The power of the federal courts to interfere in interstate extradition proceedings should only be exercised in cases of urgency, where the error is plain and the necessity for federal intervention obvious. In re Strauss, (1903) 126 Fed. 327, 63 C. C. A. 99.

After prisoner reaches demanding state. — In interstate extradition, the prisoner is only held under the extradition process until such time as he reaches the jurisdiction of the demanding state, and is thenceforth held under the process issued out of the courts of that state, and it necessarily follows that there is no longer a federal question involved in his detention. In re Moyer, (1906) 12 Idaho 250, 85 Pac. 897; In re Pettibone, (1906) 12 Idaho 264, 85 Pac. 902; In re Haywood, (1906) 12 Idaho 264, 85 Pac. 902.

Review by state court. — The finding of the governor that the person demanded in an extradition requisition should be surrendered is not necessarily final, but may be pronounced by the courts insufficient to support arrest on conclusive proof that the person demanded was not within the demanding state at the time the crime was alleged to have been committed, and that there was no sufficient evidence to the contrary before the governor. Farrell v. Hawley, (1905) 78 Conn. 150, 61 Atl. 502; Ex p. Cheatham, (1906) 50 Tex. Crim. 51, 95 S. W. 1077.

Question of fact.—The courts will not review the decision of the governor in extradition proceedings upon a question of fact made before him, which the law makes it his duty to decide, and upon which there is evidence pro and con before the governor. Dennison v. Christian, (1904) 72 Neb. 703, 101 N. W. 1045.

Review of courts of demanding state.—The action and conduct of the chief executive of the state in which the accused was found in issuing the executive warrant, and of the executive and ministerial officers acting in aid of his warrant, is a matter for the consideration of the courts of his state, subject to the federal courts in so far as the federal question is involved, and is not a question open to examination or consideration by the courts of a foreign state. In re Moyer, (1906) 12 Idaho 250, 85 Pac. 897; In re Pettibone, (1906) 12 Idaho 264, 85 Pac. 902; In re Haywood, (1906) 12 Idaho 264, 85 Pac. 902.

Questions raised on habeas corpus.—On habeas corpus proceedings instituted by one arrested on requisition, evidence as to the guilt or innocence of the accused is inadmissible, being a question solely for the demanding state. Pierce v. Creecy, (1908) 210 U. S. 387, 28 S. Ct. 714, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 113, affirming (1907) 155 Fed. 663; Depoilly v. Palmer, (1906) 28 App. Cas. (D. C.) 324; Taylor v. Wise, (Ia. 1910) 126 N. W. 1126; Ex p. Denning, (1907) 50 Tex. Crim. 629, 100 S. W. 401. See also under the title HABEAS CORPUS, vol. 3, p. 162.

Scope of inquiry.—The purpose of habeas corpus proceedings, challenging the validity of a warrant of extradition issued by the governor on the requisition of the governor of a sister state, is to review the legality of the action of the governor in issuing the warrant, and not to try the question of relator's guilt or innocence. Harris v. Magee, (Ia. 1911) 129 N. W. 742.

The objection that an extradition requisition contains a clause that the demanding state will not be responsible for any expense attending the arrest and delivery of the alleged fugitive is not available to the accused on habeas corpus to inquire into the legality of the extradition proceedings, but is a matter for the consideration of the executive of the surrendering state when he receives the official demand for the surrender of the alleged fugitive criminal. Marbles v. Creecy, (1909) 215 U. S. 63, 30 S. Ct. 32, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 92.

The jurisdiction of the court on a writ of habeas corpus does not involve any executive function. It is limited to the identification of the person demanded; an inquiry whether the record shows that a crime was substantially charged against him; and whether he is a fugitive from justice. Com. v. Hare, (1908) 36 Pa. Super. Ct. 125. See also Law v. State, (Ala. 1911) 56 So. 79.

Presumptions.—In habeas corpus to secure the release of one in custody under an extradition warrant it is presumable that the governor had sufficient ground for believing that the prisoner was present in the demanding state when the crime was alleged to have been committed. Farrell v. Hawley, (1905) 78 Conn. 150, 61 Atl. 502.

The technical sufficiency of the indictment and the question of the procedure under it are not open to inquiry on habeas corpus to review the issuance of a warrant of arrest in interstate extradition proceedings. Munsey v. Clough, (1904) 196 U. S. 364, 25 S. Ct. 282, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 515; People v. Police Com'r, (1905) 100 App. Div. 483, 91 N. Y. S. 760; Ex p. Coleman, (1908) 53 Tex. Crim. 93, 113 S. W. 17.

Bail.—In Connecticut in habeas corpus to secure the release of one in custody under an extradition warrant, it is within the discretion of the Court of Common Pleas, after remanding the prisoner, to refuse to admit him to bail. Farrell v. Hawley, (1905) 78 Conn. 150, 61 Atl. 502.

In Mississippi there is no statute allowing bail in extradition cases, either pending trial or on appeal. Ex p. Wall, (1904) 84 Miss. 783, 38 So. 628; Ex p. Edwards, (1907) 91 Miss. 621, 44 So. 827.

How party brought into state not inquired into.—To the same effect as the first paragraph of the original note. In re Moyer, (1906) 12 Idaho 250, 85 Pac. 897; In re Pettibone, (1906) 12 Idaho 264, 85 Pac. 902; In re Haywood, (1906) 12 Idaho 264, 85 Pac. 902.

Arranging and carrying out the arrest and deportation of the accused so as to leave him no opportunity to prove before the governor of the surrendering state that he was not a fugitive from justice, or to appeal to some court of that state to prevent his illegal deportation, does not violate the provisions of U. S. Const., art. 4, sec. 2, or R. S. sec. 5278, relating to extradition proceedings. Pettibone v. Nichols, (1906) 203 U. S. 192, 27 S. Ct. 111, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 148.

Civil process.—To the same effect as the Minnesota and New York cases cited in the original note. Rutledge v. Krauss, (1906) 73 N. J. L. 397, 63 Atl. 988.

In State v. Boynton, (1909) 140 Wis. 89, 121 N. W. 887, following Moletor v. Sinnen, (1890) 76 Wis. 308, 44 N. W. 1009, 7 L. R. A. 817, 20 Am. St. Rep. 71, cited in the original note, it was held that one who was brought into the state by extradition proceedings on a criminal charge was not subject to arrest for contempt until he had had an opportunity to return to the state from which he was extradited, though he was at the time he absconded a resident of Wisconsin, and had not since acquired a residence elsewhere, and though the court had prior to his departure from Wisconsin obtained jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the suit in which the judgment was rendered and of his person.

Where the defendant, who was a bona fide resident of another state, was brought into Iowa by extradition proceedings to answer a criminal complaint, and, after giving bail, voluntarily returned for trial, and was acquitted, and intended to return to his home on the first train leaving the place where his trial was had, it was held that he was privileged from the service of civil process before he could so depart. Murray v. Wilcox, (1904) 122 Ia. 188, 97 N. W. 1087.

Where a person was arrested in another state, where he was residing with the relator's wife, and was returned to Michigan upon a requisition, for nonsupport of his own wife, it was held that he was privileged from arrest upon relator's civil suit for alienation of relator's wife's affections, made upon the day that the criminal action was dismissed, and before he had an opportunity to leave the state. Weale v. Clinton Circuit Judge, (1909) 158 Mich. 563, 123 N. W. 31, 16 Detroit Leg. N. 709.

Extraditing twice for same offense. — A second indictment for the same offense may serve as the basis for the second extradition of a person as a fugitive from justice, without violating any rights secured to him by the Federal Constitution or laws, where the first indictment, on which the accused was originally extradited, was dismissed on motion of the state's attorney before the accused was placed in jeopardy. Bassing v. Cady, (1908) 208 U. S. 386, 28 S. Ct. 392, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 540.

Change of government from territorial to state. — Mere transaction from territorial to state government is insufficient of itself to abolish a crime committed against the territorial law, or to preclude the state from obtaining the return of a person to answer therefor by extradition proceedings; but, to prevent such return, it must appear that the offense no longer exists in the state. Ex p. McCarthy, (1909) 56 Tex. Crim. 209, 119 S. W. 682.

Right to appeal to United States Supreme Court. — Habeas corpus proceedings on behalf of a person whose interstate extradition is sought pursuant to the Federal Constitution and laws, and who contends that his detention in custody is unlawful because the indictment, which is its only excuse, is not a charge of crime within the meaning of U. S. Const., art. 4, sec. 2, par. 2, regulating extradition, involve the construction of the Constitution of the United States, within the meaning of the Act of March 3, 1891, 26 Stat. L. 826, ch. 517, sec. 5, 4 Fed. Stat. Annot. 398, governing direct appeals from the Circuit Courts to the Supreme Court. Pierce v. Creecy, (1908) 210 U. S. 387, 28 S. Ct. 714, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 1113, affirming (1907) 155 Fed. 663.

Vol. III, p. 90, sec. 5.

Unsworn statements certified by the United States ambassador and the chargé d'affaires to be authenticated properly and legally so as to be received for similar purposes by tribunals of the country from which the accused has fled are, by the express terms of this section, admissible in evidence in extradition proceedings. Elias v. Ramirez, (1910) 215 U. S. 398, 30 S. Ct. 131, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 253, reversing (1907) 11 Ariz. 256, 90 Pac. 323.

FALSE PERSONATION.

Vol. III, p. 92. [Act of April 18, 1884.]

Obtaining fraudulent credit. — This statute covers the obtaining of some valuable thing by means of fraudulent standing or credit secured by holding out one's self as an officer of the United States. U. S. v. Ballard, (1902) 118 Fed. 757.

Wrongfully obtaining money. — In U. S. v. Farnham, (1904) 127 Fed. 478, it appeared that defendant, while stopping at prosecutor's hotel as a guest, falsely represented himself to the prosecutor as a secret service operative in the employ of the government, and exhibited to the prosecutor a metal badge inscribed "Secret Service, U. S." Ten months thereafter defendant returned and represented himself as a traveling salesman, spending several days at the hotel. The prosecutor believed the defendant to be a Free Mason, and took special care of him during sickness on that account, after which the defendant presented a check which he alleged had been signed by his employer in payment of his salary, and obtained seventy dollars thereon from prosecutor. The check was drawn on a bank which did not exist, was returned unpaid, and the prosecutor declared that he cashed the check because he continued to believe defendant was a secret service operative. It was held that such facts were insufficient to sustain a conviction for pretending to be an employee of the United States, and as such knowingly and feloniously obtaining from another a sum of money, etc., prohibited by this Act.

Valuable thing.—A month's lodging is a valuable thing, within the meaning of this Act. U. S. v. Ballard, (1902) 118 Fed. 757.

Indictment.—In U. S. v. Ballard, (1902) 118 Fed. 757, it appeared that an indictment in the following words of the statute alleged that the defendant "did demand and obtain" a certain thing of value. It was held that it was not necessary in order to sustain the indictment to prove that he both demanded "and" obtained the thing alleged.

FINES, PENALTIES, AND FORFEITURES.

Vol. III, p. 98, sec. 1041.

Effect of death of defendant.—The purpose of a fine imposed in a criminal case is the punishment of the defendant personally for the offense of which he has been convicted, and while the federal statutes provide for the collection of a fine by execution as in case of civil judgments, there is no provision making it a debt, and where a defendant upon whom a fine has been imposed by a federal court dies before the fine has been paid or collected, the cause abates, and the fine cannot be collected from his estate. U. S. v. Mitchell, (1908) 163 Fed. 1014, affirmed (C. C. A. 1909) 173 Fed. 254.

The homestead.—To the same effect as the original note and citing the cases therein mentioned, see U. S. v. Stacey, (1907) 155 Ind. 510.

For another case under this section, see Ex p. Barclay, (1907) 153 Fed. 669.

Vol. III, p. 99, sec. 1042.

Homestead exemption.—This section construed in connection with the section immediately preceding it evidences an intention on the part of Congress to place the United States on an equality with civil contract creditors in the enforcement of judgments in criminal and penal cases, and to give the families of poor convicts the full benefit of the exemption and homestead laws of the states as against such judgments; and in the absence of any statute expressly providing therefor, an execution on a judgment for a fine in favor of the United States cannot be levied on the defendant's homestead in a particular state, although under the state law such homestead is only exempt from contract debts, and not from judgments for torts or in favor of the commonwealth in criminal cases. Allen v. Clark, (C. C. A. 1903) 126 Fed. 738.

Recaption for payment of fine.—Where a prisoner in the penitentiary, after having served the imprisonment part of the sentence, was erroneously discharged on habeas corpus because it was supposed that his incarceration could not be continued for nonpayment of the fine assessed, it was held that the United States, on reversal of such order, could retake and return him to the penitentiary from which he had been released, and hold him therein until he had been lawfully discharged by payment of the fine, or by taking the poor debtor's oath after thirty days additional imprisonment, as authorized by this section. Haddox v. Richardson, (C. C. A. 1909) 168 Fed. 635.

"Jail."—The word "jail," as used in the last sentence of this section does not imply that no prisoner should be held in a penitentiary for nonpayment of a fine or a fine and costs, but was used merely to indicate the place of confinement, and hence a federal prisoner could be properly retained in the same institution where he had served his term of imprisonment for the nonpayment of a fine, or a fine and costs, assessed as a part of the sentence, until the fine was paid, or the prisoner applied to take the poor debtor's oath after the expiration of thirty days from the completion of his term. Haddox v. Richardson, (C. C. A. 1909) 168 Fed. 635.

Maximum term of imprisonment.—To the same effect as the original note, see Ex p. Peeke, (1906) 144 Fed. 1016, affirmed (C. C. A. 1907) 153 Fed. 166.

Vol. III, p. 100, sec. 1047.

Collecting delinquent internal revenue taxes.—Under this section the government may not recover unpaid special taxes and penalties against persons engaged in the business of rectifying, purifying, and refining distilled spirits, for a longer period than five years from the date of suit brought. U. S. v. Smith, etc., Co., (1911) 184 Fed. 532.

Under R. S. sec. 3184, 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 584, providing for the collection of delinquent internal revenue taxes with a penalty of five per cent. thereon and interest at the rate of one per cent. a month, such interest is not a penalty, but is recoverable as interest, and the limitation of five years, prescribed by section 1047 for suits to recover penalties, does not apply to a suit to recover such interest as a part of the debt. U. S. v. Guest, (C. C. A. 1906) 143 Fed. 456.

Violation of Interstate Commerce Acts. — An action to recover damages for discrimination in violation of the Interstate Commerce Act (Act of Feb. 4, 1887, ch. 104, secs. 2, 8, 24 Stat. L. 379, 382, 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 813, 833), providing that for a violation of the terms of the Act the carrier shall be liable to the persons injured for the full amount of damages sustained, and for a reasonable counsel or attorney's fee to be taxed by the court, is within the five-year limitation of this section. Carter v. New Orleans, etc., R. Co., (C. C. A. 1906) 143 Fed. 99.

Vol. III, p. 106, sec. 5296.

"Jail." — See under this title, vol. 3, p. 99, sec. 1042.

Receipt for payment of fine. — See under this title, vol. 3, p. 99, sec. 1042.

FOOD AND DRUGS.

Vol. III, p. 119, sec. 2.

Substances not within Act. — A food product known as "Fruit of the Meadow," composed of leaf lard and beef fat, bathed in salt ice water to take away the fat and lard odor, but not having any ingredient to give it a butter flavor, or coloring matter to give it a

Customs revenue cases. — This section does not apply to customs revenue cases, which are subject to the three-year limitation for similar proceedings "accruing under the customs revenue laws of the United States," which is provided in section 22, Act June 22, 1874, ch. 391, 18 Stat. L. 190, 2 Fed. Stat. Annot. 761. U. S. v. Wittemann, (C. C. A. 1907) 152 Fed. 377.

Vol. III, p. 120, sec. 3.

Barter. — In Ewers v. Weaver, (1910) 182 Fed. 713, it appeared that the plaintiff and his brother were both retail dealers in oleomargarine, and had paid the tax for the first six months of 1910. The plaintiff, having purchased a wholesale shipment of oleomargarine, which had not arrived, borrowed from his brother a package of the same material which the brother had obtained from the same wholesale dealer from whom plaintiff's supply had been ordered. A few days thereafter the plaintiff's shipment arrived, and he returned to his brother the precise amount borrowed of the same product and brand. It was held that such a transaction constituted a barter, and not a sale, and did not subject the plaintiff to the tax imposed on wholesale dealers in oleomargarine.

"Manufacturer." — The actual selling, vending, or furnishing of oleomargarine for use and consumption by others is not one of the necessary components of a manufacturer as contemplated by such Act, so as to require proof of actual selling, vending, or furnishing of some of the product to constitute the offense; the term "manufacturer" as so used being construed to mean one engaged in the business of selling, vending, or furnishing oleomargarine for consumption of others. Vermont v. U. S., (1909) 174 Fed. 792, 98 C. C. A. 500.

The words "any person," as used in the butter appearance, although put up and sold in pound packages, is not taxable as oleomargarine, under this Act, which is intended to apply only to products made in conscious imitation of butter. Braun v. Coyne, (1899) 125 Fed. 331.

third sentence of the first paragraph of this section are not limited to licensed wholesale or retail dealers in oleomargarine, but are comprehensive enough to embrace any or all persons, whether licensed dealers or not, selling, vending, or furnishing oleomargarine to which they have added coloring matter to represent butter. Vermont v. U. S., (1909) 174 Fed. 792, 98 C. C. A. 500.

Evidence. — In Vermont v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1909) 174 Fed. 792, the evidence was held to be sufficient to warrant a conviction of the defendants as manufacturers of oleomargarine for mixing coloring matter therewith to represent butter without having paid the federal tax and obtained the required license, and for selling, vending, or furnishing oleomargarine for use and consumption of others.

Applicability of internal revenue laws. — The Oleomargarine Acts are complete in themselves, only those provisions of the general internal revenue statutes which are expressly enumerated therein being applicable thereto; and therefore a collector is not authorized to exact the penalty of fifty per cent. provided for by R. S. sec. 3176, 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 580, from a dealer for neglecting to make the proper return. Craft v. Schafer, (1907) 153 Fed. 175, 82 C. C. A. 349. See also Grier v. Tucker, (1907) 150 Fed. 658, affirmed (1908) 160 Fed. 611, 87 C. C. A. 513.

Vol. III, p. 121, sec. 4.

Manner of prosecution.—A violation of this section, while not in terms a misdemeanor, is in the nature of a criminal offense and may be prosecuted by information or indictment. U. S. v. Joyce, (1905) 138 Fed. 455.

Indictment.—Where a person is indicted for the unlawful sale of oleomargarine, in violation of this Act, it is sufficient to charge in the words of the Act that the defendant was carrying on the business of a wholesale or of a retail dealer, as the case may be, without having paid the tax required by law. U. S. v. Joyce, (1905) 138 Fed. 457; Hart v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1910) 183 Fed. 368.

An indictment need not set out a statement of the facts which constitute the defendant a manufacturer. Hart v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1910) 183 Fed. 368.

An indictment in the words of this Act was held not to be objectionable for indefiniteness nor for failure to negative that defendant was a manufacturer selling his own product in stamped packages at the place of manufacture, within the exception of the statute. U. S. v. Joyce, (1905) 138 Fed. 455.

Vol. III, p. 122, sec. 5.

Liability on bond.—R. S. sec. 3232, 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 605, provides that no person shall be engaged in or carry on any trade or business of a kind thereafter mentioned until he has paid a special tax therefor in the manner provided. Section 3233, 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 605, provides for registration of persons engaged in such trades, with the internal revenue collector, and sections 3238 and 3239, 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 607, provide that such special taxes shall be paid by stamps denoting the tax, which shall be exhibited in the taxpayer's place of business. It has been held that a bond given by a manufacturer of oleomargarine as authorized by section 5, to secure a compliance with the laws and regulations in regard to the manufacture, removal, and sale of oleomargarine, and providing that the manufacturer shall comply with all the requirements of the law, and regulations "in regard to the manufacture, removal, and sale of oleomargarine," and shall not engage in any attempt to defraud the government of any tax on their manufactures, and shall render a true and correct return, etc., does not secure the manufacturer's liability for the payment of the special tax mentioned above. U. S. v. Elgin Churning Co., (1910) 183 Fed. 878.

Since the tax on oleomargarine is leviable when the substance is manufactured and sold or removed for consumption and use an indictment alleging a manufacture and sale of oleomargarine without payment of the tax, and with intent to defraud the United States of the same and that it should not be paid, in the language of the statute, was not invalid, in the absence of an application for a bill of particulars, for failure to allege the specific means by which defendant attempted or intended to attempt to defraud the United States. Enders v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1911) 187 Fed. 754.

This section creates two classes of manufacturers, one manufacturing oleomargarine itself for sale, and the other those selling oleomargarine for consumption after adding artificial coloration; and hence an indictment against an alleged member of the second class for selling oleomargarine on which the tax was not paid was not defective for failure to contain the averment, applicable only to original manufacture, that the oleomargarine on which the tax was not paid was intended for sale. Enders v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1911) 187 Fed. 754.

Vol. III, p. 122, sec. 6.

Penalty.—The penalty prescribed in this section does not apply to that part of the section prohibiting retailers from selling in quantities exceeding ten pounds, such offense being subject to punishment by a fine of $1,000 without imprisonment, as prescribed by section 18. Ripper v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1910) 178 Fed. 24.

Constitutionality.—The provision of this section that retail dealers must sell in quantities not exceeding ten pounds at any one time violates no constitutional right. Ripper v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1910) 178 Fed. 24.

The words "every person," as used in the last sentence of this section, should be construed to refer solely to manufacturers and dealers mentioned in the first part of the section, so that an indictment for violating such section, failing to charge that accused was either a manufacturer or dealer in oleomargarine, and as such packed produce in a manner violative of the Act, would state no offense. Morris v. U. S., (1909) 168 Fed. 682, 94 C. C. A. 168.

Knowledge.—In Goll v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1908) 166 Fed. 419, it was held that where G. was not shown to have ordered, advised, approved, or had knowledge of a sale of oleomargarine by another not under G.'s control, without being properly printed or branded, G. could not be convicted of the alleged wrongful sale of such substance.

Indictment.—An indictment founded on this section, charging a retail dealer with having violated said section and the regulations prescribed thereunder by failing to pack oleomargarine sold by him as therein required, must describe the package used with reasonable certainty so as to advise the defendant of the particular offense charged, and therefore a general averment that "the said oleomargarine was not then and there packed in new, suitable wooden or paper packages having marked or branded thereon the name and address of him the said L., the words 'pound' and 'oleomargarine,' and the quantity of oleomargarine so sold as aforesaid," but which failed to specify in which respect the package used was unlawful, was held to be insufficient as being too indefinite and uncertain. U. S. v. Lockwood, (1908) 164 Fed. 772.

An indictment under this section charging generally that the defendants did knowingly, wilfully, and unlawfully sell and offer for sale, deliver and offer to deliver, oleomargarine in other form than in new wooden or paper packages marked, stamped, and branded as required by law, without alleging whether the sales were at wholesale or at retail, and in what respect the packages were not in the form prescribed, and what stamps, marks, or brands required by law they did not have thereon, was held to be insufficient. U. S. v. Joyce, (1905) 138 Fed. 457.

But an indictment for unlawfully selling oleomargarine, averring that both of the defendants named therein "unlawfully and knowingly did sell and deliver" at a time and place and to a person named a one-pound package of oleomargarine wrapped in a paper wrapper, without being then and there marked and branded in the manner required by section 6, was held to be sufficient. Goll v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1908) 166 Fed. 419.

Vol. III, p. 123, sec. 8.

The congressional power to levy excises was not exceeded by the enactment of this Act imposing an excise on artificially colored oleomargarine, because that body did not choose to tax natural butter artificially colored. McCray v. U. S., (1904) 195 U. S. 44, 24 S. Ct. 769, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 91.

Due process of law.—The excise on artificially colored oleomargarine does not infringe the constitutional guaranty of due process of law because the effect of the tax may be to suppress the manufacture of that article. McCray v. U. S., (1904) 195 U. S. 44, 24 S. Ct. 769, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 91.

Due process of law is not denied by this section because Congress has not chosen to tax natural butter artificially colored. McCray v. U. S., (1904) 195 U. S. 44, 24 S. Ct. 769, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 91.

The motives or purposes of Congress in enacting the tax imposed by this Act on artificially colored oleomargarine are not open to judicial inquiry in considering the power of that body to enact such legislation. McCray v. U. S., (1904) 195 U. S. 44, 24 S. Ct. 769, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 91.

"Free from artificial coloration."—Oleomargarine containing a small quantity of a vegetable oil, which substantially serves only to give the product the yellow shade which causes it to resemble butter, cannot be regarded as within the proviso in this section imposing a lesser tax on oleomargarine when "free from artificial coloration that causes it to look like butter of any shade of yellow," on the theory that the use of a substance which Congress has, in section 2, recognized as a possible ingredient, cannot be artificial coloration, since this congressional enumeration of ingredients specifically includes color-

Of similar effect, see Moxley v. Hertz, (1910) 216 U. S. 344, 30 S. Ct. 305, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 510; Moxley v. Hertz, (C. C. A. 1911) 185 Fed. 757.

Artificially colored oleomargarine, whose color is imparted in its manufacture by the use of an artificially colored and authorized ingredient, is not within this section imposing, instead of the general tax on oleomargarine prescribed by that section, a lower rate when "free from artificial coloration," because of the provision of section 3 that persons adding to, or mixing with, oleomargarine any artificial coloration shall be held to be manufacturers of oleomargarine. McCray v. U. S., (1904) 195 U. S. 44, 24 S. Ct. 769, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 91.

Oleomargarine whose yellow color is produced by the employment, as an ingredient, of butter which itself is artificially colored, is not "free from artificial coloration," within the meaning of the proviso in this section prescribing a lower rate of taxation for oleomargarine not so colored, although the statute treats butter, whether artificially colored or not, as an authorized ingredient of oleomargarine. McCray v. U. S., (1904) 195 U. S. 44, 24 S. Ct. 769, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 91.

Findings of fact.—A finding that the use of palm oil as an ingredient of oleomargarine was substantially only for coloring purposes was not disturbed on appeal, where it was based on testimony that out of a total of 160 ounces only 1½ ounces were palm oil, and that this quantity imparted the yellow shade which caused the product to resemble butter. Cliff v. U. S., (1904) 195 U. S. 160, 25 S. Ct. 1, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 139.

Vol. III, p. 124, sec. 11.

Waiver of jury trial.—Persons prosecuted by information in a federal District Court under this section may waive the jury to which they are entitled by U. S. Const., Amend. VI., since the mandate of article 3, section 2, clause 3, that "the trial of all crimes, except in cases of impeachment, shall be by jury," does not include such petty offenses, and there is no congressional legislation or rule of public policy requiring a jury in such cases. Schick v. U. S., (1904) 195 U. S. 47, 24 S. Ct. 826, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 101,

Vol. III, p. 125, sec. 13.

Elements of offense.—In order to constitute the offense of neglect or refusal to destroy the stamp from an emptied oleomargarine package, it need only appear that the package had a stamp on it denoting the payment of a tax; that it was emptied of its contents; that it was in defendant's possession in its emptied condition; and that he wilfully neglected or refused to destroy the stamp while the empty package was in his possession; and hence an indictment for such offense is not defective for failure to charge that the package was emptied while in the defendant's possession. Ripper v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1910) 178 Fed. 24. Of similar effect, see Vermont v. U. S., (1909) 174 Fed. 792, 98 C. C. A. 500.

"Emptied" package.—Section 6 of this Act provides that all oleomargarine shall be packed by the manufacturer in packages containing not less than ten pounds, and stamped, and that retail dealers must sell only from original stamped packages, in quantities not exceeding ten pounds, and shall pack the oleomargarine sold by them in suitable packages which shall be marked as prescribed. A regulation made by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue permits retail dealers to take the oleomargarine from the original stamped package in advance of sales and put it up in retail packages, marked and branded as prescribed by law and regulation, and offer the same for sale, provided such prepared retail packages remain till sold in or on the manufacturer's original package; a retail dealer, however, to be subject to a fine if he remove his prepared packages from the original package and sell them separated from and independently of the manufacturer's stamped package. It has been held that a manufacturer's stamped package is not "emptied," within section 13, making it a duty, subject to a fine for violation thereof, of the person in whose hands the package is when emptied, to destroy the stamps thereof, where it still contains a pound package put up by the retailer of its original contents. U. S. v. Knott, (1907) 151 Fed. 925.

Evidence.—In Vermont v. U. S., (1909) 174 Fed. 792, 98 C. C. A. 500, the evidence was held to sustain a conviction of wilfully refusing to remove the stamps from oleomargarine packages on removal of the contents therefrom.

Vol. III, p. 125, sec. 15.

Indictment.—Sections 6 and 10 of this Act provide different stamps, marks, and brands for oleomargarine according as it is of domestic or foreign manufacture, and if the former, if it is to be sold at wholesale or retail. Section 7 requires every domestic manufacturer to paste securely on each package a printed label giving the number of the factory and the district and state, etc.; a warning against the removal of the contents of the package without destroying the stamp, which is made an offense; and section 15 makes it an offense to deface or remove any of the stamps, marks, or brands required by law from such packages. It has been held that an indictment alleging that defendants wilfully, etc., defaced the stamps, marks, and brands upon two certain packages containing oleomargarine, which packages were in their possession for sale, but which failed to show that the stamps removed were such as were prescribed by the statute, was insufficient. U. S. v. Joyce, (1905) 138 Fed. 457.

Vol. III, p. 126, sec. 17.

Indictment.—An indictment which, after averring facts showing defendant to have been a manufacturer of oleomargarine within the statute, charges in the language of the statute that he attempted to defraud the United States of the tax on oleomargarine produced by him, is sufficient, without setting out the particular acts relied on to prove such attempt. Hardesty v. U. S., (1909) 168 Fed. 25, 93 C. C. A. 417.

Where an indictment for an attempt to defraud the United States of a tax on oleomargarine, in violation of this section, contained a general charge in the language of the statute, it was held not to be objectionable for failure to affirmatively allege that the tax was assessable, as the defendant was notified by such general charge that the government intended to prove either that the oleomargarine had been sold, or that it had been removed for sale and consumption, without payment of the tax. Enders v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1911) 187 Fed. 754.

Information.—An information for the forfeiture of an oleomargarine plant, under this section, is sufficient, which charges in the language of the statute that the claimant was engaged in the business of manufacturing oleomargarine, and defrauded and attempted to defraud the United States of the tax on the oleomargarine produced by it, or a part thereof. U. S. v. New Jersey Melting, etc., Co., Manufacturing Apparatus, etc., (1905) 141 Fed. 475.

Evidence.—An indictment charging the defendants with an attempt to defraud the United States of the tax on oleomargarine manufactured by them is sustained by evidence that they were dealers in oleomargarine, that they bought uncolored oleomargarine, colored the same to resemble butter, and repacked it in empty packages before used and stamped as containing the colored product, and that they had previously systematically done the same thing, and sold the article so colored without paying the additional tax required thereon. Hardesty v. U. S., (1909) 168 Fed. 25, 98 C. C. A. 417.

In Enders v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1911) 187 Fed. 754, the evidence was held to be sufficient to sustain a conviction of manufacturing oleomargarine by the addition of artificial coloring, and that the same had been sold or removed for sale and consumption without payment of the required tax with intent to defraud the United States.

Vol. III, p. 127, sec. 20.

Regulations.—The treasury officials may not by regulation so construe this Act as to nullify its provisions as legally interpreted.

Moxley v. Hertz, (C. C. A. 1911) 185 Fed. 757.

Vol. III, p. 127, sec. 1.

Removal of labels and stamp.—In U. S. v. Green, (1905) 137 Fed. 179, it was held that this section does not divest the butter of its interstate commerce character so as to immediately entitle the consignee to remove such marks and labels without liability for violating such Act, the court saying: "Without going into the numerous cases bearing to some extent, even though indirectly, on the question, this court is of the opinion that in making process or renovated butter transported into a state, and remaining therein for use, consumption, sale, or storage therein, subject on arrival in such state to the operation and effect of the laws of such state enacted in the exercise of its police power to the same extent and in the same manner as though such articles had been produced in such state, and declaring that same shall not be exempted from such laws by reason of being introduced into such state in original packages or otherwise, Congress did not intend to confer any power and has not conferred any power on any person to remove the marks, labels, stamps, etc., from process or renovated butter. When the packages are used the marks, stamps, etc., are to be destroyed. New York has passed no law allowing this to be done, and it is not seen that such a law could be passed in the legitimate exercise of the police power of the state. Section 1 of the Oleomargarine Act was not intended to abrogate any penalty imposed for the violation of the penal provisions referred to, or to permit the acts therein forbidden, or to empower a state to make any law interfering with the operation of such laws, unless there should arise a conflict between the laws of the United States and those of the state passed in the legitimate exercise of its police power. It is perfectly clear that to permit the removal of the stamps, marks, labels, etc., on packages of a food product of this character, and specifically authorized by law, while such articles remain an article of interstate commerce, or even thereafter, when we consider the objects and purposes of the law, would not only defeat the objects and purposes of the legislative body as to inspection, etc., but open the doors wide to frauds on the revenue. The placing of the marks, etc., on the packages implies they are to remain."

Vol. III, p. 128, sec. 4. [Butter defined, etc.]

"Absorption" defined.—In the provision of this section defining adulterated butter as including "any butter in the manufacture or manipulation of which any process or material is used with intent or effect of causing the absorption of abnormal quantities of water, milk, or cream," the word "absorption" is not used in the sense of chemical absorption, and any butter is within the definition which contains an abnormal quantity of water, whether by chemical absorption or by incorporation. Coopersville Co-operative Creamery Co. v. Lemon, (1908) 163 Fed. 145, 89 C. C. A. 595.

Intent.—Butter containing an abnormal quantity of water is subject to the tax imposed by this section without regard to the intent of the manufacturer. Coopersville Co-operative Creamery Co. v. Lemon, (1908) 163 Fed. 145, 89 C. C. A. 595.

[Tax on manufacture of adulterated or renovated butter — stamps.]

The removal of stamp and caution notices attached to original packages of renovated butter which is the subject of interstate commerce is a misdemeanor. U. S. v. Green, (1905) 137 Fed. 179.

[Oleomargarine rules and penalties applied to adulterated butter.]

Regulations respecting amount of moisture.—Though Act Cong. Aug. 2, 1886, ch. 840, 24 Stat. L. 209, 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 127, authorized the Secretary of the Treasury to prescribe rules and regulations for carrying it into effect, it did not authorize him to promulgate a rule construing this section declaring that butter should be confiscated if it contained an abnormal quantity of moisture, by providing that it should be confiscated if it contained more moisture than sixteen per cent. U. S. v. 11,150 Pounds Butter, (1911) 188 Fed. 157. Contra, Coopersville Co-operative Creamery Co. v. Lemon, (1908) 163 Fed. 145, 89 C. C. A. 595.

Vol. III, p. 130, sec. 5.

Regulations.—The purpose of this section is to provide for the sanitary inspection and the marking and branding of "process" or "renovated" butter at the place of manufacture, to the end that none shall be shipped from the factory which can in any way be injurious to the health of the consumer, and the section authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to cause such inspection to be made, and to "make all needful regulations for carrying this section into effect." A regulation, however, which prohibits a dealer, receiving or handling such butter after it has been duly inspected, marked, and branded, and shipped from the factory, from obliterating the marks or brands thereon has no relation to such sanitary purpose, and finds no warrant in the statute, being calculated only to prevent fraud on the part of the dealer in his relations with his customers, and there is nothing in the statute which will support an indictment or information for the violation of such regulation. U. S. v. Bohl, (1903) 125 Fed. 625.

Vol. III, p. 131, sec. 6.

Regulations.—This section does not so limit the power of the Internal Revenue Commissioner as to authorize only the making of regulations requiring returns as to the contents of the books required to be kept by wholesale dealers; but he is authorized to adopt a regulation requiring such dealers to make monthly returns showing the packages and pounds of oleomargarine received, the quantity disposed of, and the names and addresses of the consignees. U. S. v. Lamson, (1909) 173 Fed. 673.

The provisions of this section requiring wholesale dealers in oleomargarine to keep books and render returns as required by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and the regulation requiring monthly reports by such dealers, do not make the sufficiency of the returns depend on their conformity to the books, but on their conformity to the facts; such dealers being required to make both their books and returns a correct record of the facts. U. S. v. Lamson, (1909) 173 Fed. 673.

Neither is such a regulation unreasonable because it does not apply to dealers in process, renovated, or adulterated butter. U. S. v. Lamson, (1909) 173 Fed. 673.

Where the names of the purchasers as given in a wholesale dealer's return were wholly or partly fictitious or erroneous, there was a violation of the regulation, though the quantity disposed of was correctly disclosed. U. S. v. Lamson, (1909) 173 Fed. 673.

The requirement of regulations made under this section, that dealers shall "make monthly returns on form 217 . . . showing in detail the number of packages and the number of pounds of oleomargarine received, . . . also the quantity disposed of, with the name and address of each person to whom sold or consigned," does not require a statement in detail of the number of packages and the number of pounds disposed of to each person, and the forms furnished for such returns cannot impose additional requirements to those of the statute or regulations which will have the force of law, and a failure to comply with which will constitute a criminal offense. U. S. v. Lamson, (1908) 162 Fed. 165.

Under the regulations made by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue pursuant to this section, and in force prior to 1907, which require wholesale dealers to make returns showing, among other things, the names and addresses of all persons to whom sales have been made, and that "the recapitulation should be signed by the firm name . . . and the person swearing to the return should sign on the dotted lines below the right hand of the printed affidavit," the oath required is to the recapitulation only, and not to the list of customers contained in the return. U. S. v. Lamson, (1908) 165 Fed. 80.

False oath to return.—This section, requiring wholesale dealers to keep such books and render such returns as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may by regulation require under prescribed penalties for its violation, has no relation to the tax to be assessed on such dealers, and the regulations made thereunder and in force prior to their revision in 1907, in requiring an oath to the returns, do not have the force of law in such sense that a false oath to a return subjects the maker to prosecution for perjury under R. S. sec. 5392, 5 Fed. Stat. Annot. 701. U. S. v. Lamson, (1908) 165 Fed. 80.

Entries in books.—The former revised regulations made by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue in December, 1904, governing the keeping of books and the making of returns by wholesale dealers in oleomargarine, pursuant to this section, do not require the entry on the books of the number of packages and pounds of oleomargarine disposed of at any specified time, and the failure to make such entries on the same day or during the same month when the goods are disposed of is not a criminal offense under section 6. U. S. v. Lamson, (1908) 162 Fed. 165.

Indictment.—Upon a reasonable construction of regulations made under this section the entries required to be made in the books may be made by the agent of the dealer, and an indictment for failure to make such entries should aver that the dealer did not make and did not cause to be made such entries. U. S. v. Lamson, (1908) 162 Fed. 165.

A corporation is a "person" within the meaning of section 6, requiring wholesale dealers in oleomargarine to keep certain books and make certain returns, and providing for punishment by fine and imprisonment "any person who wilfully violates any of the provisions of this section," although section 5 applies in express terms to corporations, and

1909 Supp., p. 137, sec. 1.

Constitutionality.—This Act is within the jurisdiction of Congress, as a proper regulation of interstate commerce. Shawnee Milling Co. v. Temple, (1910) 179 Fed. 517; U. S. v. Seventy-Four Cases Grape Juice, (1910) 181 Fed. 629.

It is not unconstitutional as an attempted exercise by Congress of police power belonging to the states. U. S. v. 420 Sacks Flour, (1910) 180 Fed. 518.

Construction and validity.—See note to McDermott v. State, (1910) 21 Ann. Cas. 1315.

This Act was cited in the following cases: Charles v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1910) 183 Fed. 566; State v. Eckenrode, (Ia. 1910) 127 N. W. 57.

1909 Supp., p. 137, sec. 2.

Certainty and definiteness.—This Act is not void for uncertainty and indefiniteness, in that no standard of grade, quality, or purity is prescribed, but that the determination of the standard is left to the courts, as such objection may be obviated by requiring specific and properly drawn pleadings. U. S. v. 420 Sacks Flour, (1910) 180 Fed. 518.

Conditions precedent.—Although an indictment under the Food and Drugs Act for adulteration or misbranding is not demurrable because it contains no allegation of notice from the Department of Agriculture to the defendant or the result of the examination of the article, and that he was given an opportunity to be heard, as required by section 4 of the Act, since such prosecutions may be maintained by the district attorney under section 5 without the intervention of the department, such allegations and proof are necessary in all cases where the prosecution is instigated by officers or agents of the department; and if it appears on the trial that the case is such, there can be no conviction in the absence of such allegation and proof. U. S. v. Morgan, (1910) 181 Fed. 587.

When proceedings for violation of the Food and Drugs Act by adulteration or misbranding are instituted at the instance of the Department of Agriculture, whether such proceedings are in personam or for a forfeiture of goods under section 10, it would seem that the notice of examination and opportunity to be heard provided for by section 4 are necessary conditions precedent and must be alleged and proved; but under section 5 a district attorney may institute such a proceeding upon complaint of any state health officer or any adequate proof without the action of the agents of the department. U. S. v. Seventy-Four Cases Grape Juice, (1910) 181 Fed. 629.

"Misbranded or adulterated."—Where bottles containing intoxicating liquors were labeled as containing Monogram whiskey, and were marked "Blend," and the alcoholic content was less, and the residuum from 100 cubic centimeters was more, than the standard test prescribed by sections 6 and 7 of this Act, it was held that they were "misbranded and adulterated." State v. Intoxicating Liquors, (1909) 106 Me. 135, 76 Atl. 268.

The officers of a corporation which manufactured a food product, shipped by its manager in interstate commerce, which was adulterated or misbranded, were held to be subject to prosecution therefor where they employed the manager and authorized him to operate the plant and sell the product without restriction, and the previous course of business had been to ship on orders to other states. U. S. v. Mayfield, (1910) 177 Fed. 765.

Shipment induced by government agent.—The fact alone that the only interstate shipment shown of a misbranded food article by the manufacturer was secretly induced by an agent of the Department of Agriculture was held not to be a defense to a prosecution therefor under the Food and Drugs Act, the reasons for the action of such agent not appearing. U. S. v. Morgan, (1910) 181 Fed. 587.

Mere receipt without delivery.—The mere receipt of an adulterated or misbranded drug does not constitute an offense, where claimants have not delivered, or offered to deliver, the drug in unbroken packages; and it appears that the claimants retained the packages in their possession, opened and tested them, and caused the standard of strength, quality, and purity to be plainly stamped on the containers prior to seizure. U. S. v. Five Boxes Asafetida, (1910) 181 Fed. 561.

Brand.—This section and section 10 require that a different brand or mark shall be placed upon an article transported in interstate or foreign commerce from that required by section 3449, R. S., 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 795. (1908) 28 Op. Atty-Gen. 474.

Sale by government officers.—A sale under section 1241, R. S., 7 Fed. Stat. Annot. 1017, by government officers, of drugs and medicines purchased for the use of the army and afterwards condemned as being unfit for use, is as much subject to the provisions of the Food and Drugs Act as a sale by a private person would be under similar circumstances, and would render the officers making the sale liable under that Act, unless the drugs and medicines so sold were labeled in accordance with its provisions. (1908) 26 Op. Atty-Gen. 546.

Regulation of sales.—This Act regulates sales in the District of Columbia and the territories, but does not extend to sales of importations into one state from another so as to extend to and cover the regulation of such sales by a state law. McDermott v. State, (1910) 143 Wis. 18, 126 N. W. 888.

Information.—Since a defendant may not be imprisoned in the penitentiary unless sentenced to confinement for more than a year, no imprisonment in the penitentiary can be imposed for violation of this Act; and hence the institution of proceedings thereunder by information of the district attorney is not a violation of Const. U. S., Amend. 5, providing that no person shall be held to answer for an infamous crime except on presentment or indictment of a grand jury. U. S. v. J. Lindsay Wells Co., (1910) 186 Fed. 248.

In U. S. v. Schurman, (1910) 177 Fed. 581, it appeared that the defendants manufactured and sold in interstate commerce "Dutch tea rusk." The packages were marked "Genuine Dutch Tea Rusk," and stated that the contents were "made in Holland, Mich., by the Michigan Tea Rusk Company, Holland, Mich.;" the word "Holland" where it first occurred in type was so large and prominent as to hold the attention and mislead purchasers into supposing that the article was a genuine importation from Holland. A hearing was had under the rules of the Department of Agriculture, in which respondents claimed that the markings were not misleading, but offered to change the labels as directed by the government, if found otherwise. It was held that since the defendant's violation of Food and Drugs Act prohibiting the branding of an article of food so as to purport to be a foreign product when it was not so was doubtful, leave would not be granted to file an information prior to notice of adverse finding by the department and an opportunity to alter the labels as directed.

Averments that a fluid was labeled "Flavor of Lemon and Citral—A Pure Flavor," and that it did not contain an appreciable quantity of lemon oil which was an essential ingredient of a pure lemon flavor, did not state facts sufficient to show a misbranding because they failed to show that the fluid was labeled a pure flavor of lemon, or that lemon oil was an essential element of a pure flavor of lemon and citral. An averment that the defendant intended that the label "Flavor of Lemon and Citral—A Pure Flavor" should be understood by the public and purchasers to mean a pure flavor or extract of lemon was futile, because the accepted and usual signification of the label is that the article is not a pure flavor or extract of lemon, but that it is a flavor of lemon and citral. An averment that one who branded an article with a label whose accepted and usual signification correctly describes it intended that the public or purchasers should understand that the label had an opposite and unusual significance fails to disclose any misbranding. Nave-McCord Mercantile Co. v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1910) 182 Fed. 46.

Sufficiency of affidavits supporting information.—In U. S. v. Baumert, (1910) 179 Fed. 735, it appeared that an information for violating the pure food law was sworn to on information and belief by the United States district attorney supported by certain letters purporting, but not proved, to have been written or authorized by accused taking issue with the Agricultural Department's claim of violation; also a statement not in the form of an affidavit, by an analyst of the Agricultural Department, to which was attached a notary's certificate that it had been subscribed and sworn to, etc. The paper contained no venue, nor was there any certificate attached to it showing that the person certifying it was a notary or authorized to take and certify oaths and affirmations, and that it was taken and subscribed as required by the laws of the state, etc. It was held that the information was not sufficiently proved to justify the issuance of process.

1909 Supp., p. 137, sec. 3.

Regulations.—It is within the power of the Secretaries of the Treasury, Agriculture, and Commerce and Labor, under this section, to promulgate a rule or regulation which requires that the name of the parent substance shall follow that of the derivative on labels placed on packages containing drugs which come within the provisions of section 8; but in the absence of such a rule no offense would be committed under the Act by the omission, nor could the article for that reason alone be dealt with as misbranded. (1909) 27 Op. Atty-Gen. 143.

1909 Supp., p. 138, sec. 7.

Macaroni, to which a coal tar dye known as "Martius yellow" had been added solely as a coloring matter, was held to contain an "added poisonous . . . ingredient which may render it injurious to health," within the fifth clause of this section, and, when shipped in interstate commerce, to be subject to condemnation and destruction under section 10 of the Act, the evidence showing that such coloring matter is a poison which will kill. U. S. v. 1,950 Boxes Macaroni, (1910) 181 Fed. 427.

Adulteration of liquors.—Where there is no evidence of how the liquors were branded, and no evidence of their "strength, quality, or purity," except that they were colored and slightly sweetened by burnt sugar, they cannot be held to be misbranded or adulterated.

The court cannot take judicial notice that whiskey cannot be colored and sweetened to some slight extent by burnt sugar without exceeding the limits of the standard prescribed by the Pure Food Act. State v. Intoxicating Liquors, (1909) 106 Me. 142, 76 Atl. 267.

Whiskey.—Whiskey, within the purview of this Act, is the product of sound grain, distilled at a low temperature so as to retain in the distillate the congeneric properties of the grain, which give to the liquor, when matured by aging in charred casks, its desirable potable character. Neutral spirits, which are distilled at a high temperature, may be made from different materials and do not contain such properties, and which are not rendered potable by aging, although reduced by water to potable strength and from which most of the fusel oil has been removed, are not whiskey nor a like substance with whiskey. Woolner v. Rennick, (1908) 170 Fed. 662.

Silver coating on candy.—Since the purpose of this Act was to protect the purchaser of food products from having inferior and different articles passed off on him in place of those he desired, and to protect him from injury by prohibiting the addition to foods of substances poisonous or deleterious to health, the words "other mineral substances," under the doctrine of ejusdem generis, includes other mineral substances which are deleterious or detrimental to health of the same nature as those specifically described preceding such words, and hence does not include a thin coating of pure silver covering candy, used principally by confectioners for decorative purposes, and not deleterious or detrimental to health. French Silver Dragée Co. v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1910) 179 Fed. 824.

Horse and mule feed.—Where a substance sold under the name "Corno Horse and Mule Feed" was contained in a package branded "Corno Horse and Mule Feed, Mixture of ground alfalfa, oats, corn, flax, bran, oat and hominy feeds, made by the Corno Mills Company, East St. Louis, Illinois"—followed by a guaranteed analysis, such substance being a compound and so described on the package, it was held that it was not adulterated because it contained a quantity of oat hulls mixed and packed therewith in excess of the amount normally present in oat feed consisting of whole ground oats. U. S. v. One Car Load Corno Horse Feed, (1911) 188 Fed. 453.

Cider vinegar.—Where samples of alleged pure cider vinegar showed only from .11 to .16 glycerin, it was held to be adulterated. U. S. v. One Hundred Barrels Vinegar, (1911) 188 Fed. 471.

Test.—In a libel for forfeiture of alleged adulterated vinegar, it was held that the government was not limited to the standards mentioned in the Agricultural Department bulletin No. 65 and Circular 19, nor to methods of analysis adopted under regulation No. 4, but might make use of any accurate test. U. S. v. One Hundred Barrels Vinegar, (1911) 188 Fed. 471.

Question for jury.—In Shawnee Milling Co. v. Temple, (1910) 179 Fed. 517, it was held that whether flour, bleached by the use of nitrogen peroxide under the Andrews patent, or pursuant to the Alsop process, was flour so treated that inferiority is concealed, or containing added poisonous ingredients which may render it injurious to health, in violation of the pure food law, was a question of fact for determination by a jury, or by the court if a jury is waived.

1909 Supp., p. 139, sec. 8.

Tea Inspection Act.—This Act is not intended as a substitute for the special Tea Inspection Act (Act of March 2, 1897, 29 Stat. L. 604, 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 138), but both statutes are cumulative so far as the importation of tea is concerned. (1907) 26 Op. Atty.-Gen. 166.

Labeling of deteriorated drugs.—Where a drug is not sold under a name recognized in the United States pharmacopœia, a general statement on the label that its quality has deteriorated and that it has been condemned for sale under section 1241, R. S., 7 Fed. Stat. Annot. 1017, would be a sufficient compliance with the Food and Drugs Act, and would show that it was not sold under any professional standard, and could not be deemed either adulterated or misbranded under sections 7 and 8 of that Act. Where a drug is sold under a name recognized by the United States pharmacopœia, a mere general statement of the character of the drug, showing only the fact of its deterioration, is insufficient; and in order that it may not be deemed adulterated, its actual strength, quality, or purity should be stated on the label of each bottle, box, or other container in which the goods are intended to reach the consumer. (1908) 26 Op. Atty.-Gen. 546.

Statement of inside circulars.—This Act merely embraces any statement, design, or device regarding an article which appears on the outside of the package in which the article is offered for sale, whether such statement is printed on or otherwise affixed to the package, or impressed on a separate label affixed to the package, but does not include an advertising circular inclosed with an article inside the carton in which it is offered for sale. U. S. v. American Druggists' Syndicate, (1911) 186 Fed. 387.

Words given ordinary meaning.—The names intended by the pure food law to be used on brands or labels are names readily understood and conveying to the general public definite and familiar ideas as to the character or quality of the article branded, even though such names may be inaccurate in the view of a chemist, or physicist, or an expert in some particular industrial art. (1908) 26 Op. Atty.-Gen. 474.

Neutral spirits.—For the purposes of the pure food law, neutral spirit, or ethyl alcohol, if absolutely pure, would be not only like, but identical, whether it were derived from fruit, from cereals, from sugar cane, or from any other of the many substances which can furnish alcohol. (1907) 26 Op. Atty.-Gen. 216.

Like substances.—Ethyl alcohol cannot, for the purposes of the pure food law, be considered to be a "like substance" to whiskey. The proper definition of the word "whiskey," for this purpose, is a question of law, and the term is to be given its ordinary significance as a word of everyday speech, and should not be understood in any commercial or scientific sense. (1907) 26 Op. Atty.-Gen. 262.

Misleading statements as to curative effects.—False and misleading statements in the labels on a proprietary medicine as to its curative or remedial effects, but which do not import any statement concerning identity, are not "misbranding," within the meaning of section 8. U. S. v. Johnson, (1911) 221 U. S. 488, 31 S. Ct. 627, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 823; U. S. v. American Druggists' Syndicate, (1911) 186 Fed. 387.

Must be misbranded at time of seizure.—A drug is not adulterated or misbranded so as to be subject to condemnation unless adulterated or misbranded at the time of seizure, and hence, where asafoetida below the prescribed test and misbranded was received in interstate commerce and tested and correctly branded before seizure, it was not subject to forfeiture. U. S. v. Five Boxes Asafoetida, (1910) 181 Fed. 561.

The word "label," as used in this Act, which requires packages of drugs shipped in interstate commerce to bear a statement on the label of the quantity or proportion of any alcohol, etc., means a descriptive paper affixed to the package, which must include the statement of how much alcohol, etc., is contained in the package. U. S. v. Sixty-Five Casks Liquid Extracts, (1909) 170 Fed. 449, affirmed (1910) 175 Fed. 1022, 99 C. C. A. 667.

Necessity for labels.—This Act not only requires that drugs shipped in interstate commerce and labeled, shall not be misbranded, but also requires that they shall be labeled with labels conforming to its requirements. U. S. v. Sixty-Five Casks Liquid Extracts, (1909) 170 Fed. 449, affirmed (1910) 175 Fed. 1022, 99 C. C. A. 667.

Derivative.—The word "derivative" in this subsection should be understood in its chemical sense. (1909) 27 Op. Atty-Gen. 143.

Acetphenetidine is to be considered a "derivative" of acetanilide, within the meaning of subsection 2 of section 8, if it is so related to the latter substance that it would be rightly regarded by recognized authorities in chemistry as obtained from the latter "by actual or theoretical substitution," and it is not indispensable that it should be actually produced therefrom as a matter of fact. (1909) 27 Op. Atty-Gen. 143.

"Blend."—The evident intent of the statute was to confine the use of the word "blend" to one kind of mixture and to forbid its use for another; and since, as to whiskey, such mixture must be either composed of two different kinds of whiskey, or of whiskey with one other substance generally mixed with it, namely, ethyl alcohol, it is clear that Congress intended to deny the designation "blend" to a mixture of whiskey and ethyl alcohol. (1907) 26 Op. Atty-Gen. 262.

In what may be termed a "blend" of, or "blended," wines or whiskeys, the two articles mixed must be capable of accurate and sufficient description by a single generic term; they must be substances known by the same name and sufficiently distinctive to afford reasonable warning to purchasers. (1907) 26 Op. Atty-Gen. 216.

Where syrup consisting of refined cane sugar flavored with an extract of maple wood was sold under a label describing it as "Western Reserve Ohio Blended Maple Syrup," the word "blend" indicated that the article was a mixture and imitation, and there was therefore no violation of the Act. U. S. v. Sixty-Eight Cases Syrup, (1909) 172 Fed. 781.

Blend of vinegar and cider.—Vinegar, which was in fact distilled vinegar to which a small quantity of pure boiled apple cider had been added for coloring, which was labeled as "Saratoga Brand vinegar, a blend of pure boiled apple cider and distilled vinegar," was held to be misbranded as misleading the public to believe that it was composed of pure boiled apple cider vinegar and distilled vinegar. U. S. v. Ten Barrels Vinegar, (1911) 186 Fed. 399.

Compounds.—When the words "compound" or "compounded" are used in this Act, it is ordinarily necessary that two substances at least should be mentioned as entering into the combination described, as, for instance, "sherry compounded with port" or "port compounded with sherry," or "compounded port and sherry." It is not, however, universally true that two substances must follow "compound" or "compounded," although it is true that only one substantive can appropriately follow "blend" or "blended." A combination of whiskey with ethyl alcohol, supposing, of course, that there is enough whiskey in it to make it a real compound and not a mere semblance of one, may be fairly called "whiskey," provided the name is accompanied by the word "compound" or "compounded," and a statement of the presence of another spirit is included in substance in the title; it cannot, however, properly be styled "blended whiskey." (1907) 26 Op. Atty-Gen. 216.

Compounds known as articles of food can be sold under their own distinctive name so long as no deleterious matter is put into the product, and the label states where it is manufactured, and it is not an imitation sold under the distinctive name of another article. U. S. v. One Car Load Corno Horse Feed, (1911) 188 Fed. 453.

"Compound" and "blend" distinguished.—The words "compound" or "blend" are substantially synonymous, in ordinary speech, when applied to mixtures or liquids; but the pure food law establishes a distinction of its own between them, based upon the character of the ingredients entering into the mixture. Thus the intent of this Act is that the term "blended sherry," for instance, or "blend of sherries," shall designate a mixture of two or more kinds of sherry; while the titles "compound of port and sherry," or "compounded port and sherry," would appropriately designate a mixture of two substances, unlike in the view of the law, namely, two distinct and different kinds of wine—"unlike" in the sense that diamonds and coal are unlike. So a mixture of two or more different whiskeys, whether their differences arise from the character of the substances from which they are distilled or from the method of distillation used, or even from their several ages and the environment in which they are kept subsequently to distillation, would be appropriately termed a "blend of whiskey," or "blended whiskey," or "blended whiskeys," any one of which would be correct, provided each article entering into the combination, standing alone, could be properly designated as "whiskey." While a mixture of a spirit properly designated "whiskey" with another spirit which, standing alone, could not be properly designated as "whiskey," such as ethyl alcohol, must be labeled or branded as a "compound" or as "compounded." (1907) 26 Op. Atty.-Gen. 216.

Maple syrup.—In U. S. v. Scanlon, (1908) 180 Fed. 485, it appeared that the defendant manufactured syrup from cane sugar, flavored to represent maple syrup by the introduction of an extract from maple wood after it had been chopped down. The syrup was put up in bottles labeled "Western Reserve Ohio Blended Maple Syrup," the words "Ohio" and "Maple Syrup" being in red, and between them the word "Blended," and then below that, in smaller type, the statement, "This syrup is made from the sugar maple tree and cane sugar." It was held that the label was misleading, in that purchasers would ordinarily understand that the article contained in part maple syrup made from the boiled-down sap drawn from live maple trees, and that defendant was therefore guilty of misbranding. The court said: "It is not a question of chemistry in this case, any more than it is with butter. It is a question of what is the popularly recognized definition of maple syrup; and that undoubtedly is, and we do not need the chemists to testify to it, that it is the syrup produced from boiling down the sap that flows in the spring of the year from the live maple tree. It has a certain consistency, and of course a certain specific gravity, which a chemist can tell us about; but those persons who have used it know in a general way when it has a proper consistency and a proper specific gravity, as they certainly do whether it has the proper flavor."

Canned fruit.—In U. S. v. 100 Cases Tepee Apples, (1908) 179 Fed. 985, it appeared that the claimants operated a canning factory in Benton Harbor, Mich., where fruits grown in Michigan, as well as in other states, were canned and prepared for sale. The claimants canned certain "tepee" apples and blackberries grown in Arkansas, sold under a label on which was printed: "Tepee Apples [or Blackberries, as the case might be]. Packed by C. H. Godfrey & Son, Benton Harbor and Watervliet, Michigan." There was evidence that Michigan apples and blackberries were better than those grown in Arkansas. It was held that the labels indicated that the fruit was grown in Michigan, and that claimants were therefore guilty of misbranding.

Honey and corn syrup.—A food product labeled, "Compound: Pure Comb and Strained Honey and Corn Syrup," is not "misbranded" within the meaning of this section merely because the percentage of corn syrup in the compound largely exceeds that of honey. U. S. v. Boeckmann, (1910) 176 Fed. 382.

Compound of molasses and corn syrup.—An article of food put up and sold in cases bearing principal labels describing the contents as a particular brand of molasses, but plainly stating in three separate places that the product is a compound of molasses and corn syrup, and also giving all the other information required by this Act and the regulations thereunder, and such article being in fact a compound of molasses and commercial glucose, is not adulterated or misbranded, within the meaning of this Act; it being shown that it contains nothing deleterious to health, and that under the rulings of the department it is permissible to describe commercial glucose on labels or brands as made from corn syrup. U. S. v. Seven Hundred and Seventy-Nine Cases Molasses, (C. C. A. 1909) 174 Fed. 325.

Blended syrup.—In U. S. v. Sixty-Eight Cases Syrup, (1909) 172 Fed. 781, it appeared that certain cases containing syrup seized by the United States were branded and labeled "Western Reserve Ohio Blended Maple Syrup, guaranteed absolutely pure, shipped by Western Reserve Syrup Company, Cleveland, Ohio." The bottles were labeled and branded "Western Reserve Ohio Blended Syrup, Western Reserve Syrup Company, Cleveland, Ohio, Blenders of Fancy Maple Syrup and Maple Sugar." It was held that, construing all the words of the bottle labels together, the same meaning was intended as in the labels on the cases, namely, that the bottles and the boxes contained blended maple syrup.

Salad oil *prima facie means olive oil, and in the absence of evidence that the term has recently acquired a more general meaning to include other oils, its use without further explanation on packages of cotton seed oil shipped in interstate commerce constitutes a misbranding. Brina v. U. S., (1910) 170 Fed. 373.

Spring water.—Ordinary Croton water drawn from the pipes in New York city, filtered and bottled after the addition of small quantities of mineral salts and carbonic acid gas, is not "spring water," as the term is generally understood, and the labeling of the bottles as spring water constitutes a misbranding within the meaning of the Food and Drugs Act. U. S. v. Morgan, (1910) 181 Fed. 587.

"Oat feed."—Since the term "oat feed," in its ordinary acceptation, does not mean the whole oat grain, either crushed or ground, but instead means that part of the grain which remains after the miller subtracts the portions useful for human food, consisting of nubbins, middlings, hulls, and oat dust, a compound substance sold in packages under the name "Corno Horse and Mule Feed," and described in the package as a "mixture of ground alfalfa, oats, corn, alfalfa, oat and hominy feeds," with the name of the manufacturer and the place of manufacture, followed by an analysis of its contents, was held not to be misbranded in violation of this section because it contained an excess of oat hulls in compound and not the whole ground oats. U. S. v. One Car Load Corno Horse Feed, (1911) 188 Fed. 453.

Constitutionality.—In U. S. v. Charles L. Heinle Specialty Co., (1910) 175 Fed. 299, it was held that this section was not invalid as applied to a wholesaler who sold adulterated or misbranded goods within the state to a dealer under a guaranty of conformity to the Pure Food and Drug Act, with knowledge that such guaranty was exacted to further the sale of the goods in interstate commerce; they having been actually shipped out of the state by the dealer, relying on the guaranty.

Distinct offense created.—This section created, in addition to the offense of manufacturing and dealing in adulterated and misbranded foods and drugs, the distinct and substantive offense of guaranteeing such articles, which offense, however, is not complete until the purchaser deals with the article in a manner otherwise punishable by the Act. (1907) 26 Op. Atty-Gen. 449.

The term "dealer," as used in this section, includes wholesale as well as retail dealers, and both are accordingly protected from prosecution by establishing a guaranty in conformity with the requirements of the Act. (1907) 26 Op. Atty-Gen. 449.

Guaranty relates to identical article only. — The provision that no dealer shall be prosecuted thereunder for shipping in interstate commerce any adulterated or misbranded article of food or drugs when he can establish a guaranty signed by the manufacturer that such article is not adulterated or misbranded, is available to a dealer only when such guaranty relates to the identical article shipped by him, and affords no defense to him where it relates only to a constituent used by him in manufacturing the article shipped. U. S. v. Mayfield, (1910) 177 Fed. 765.

Wholesaler guaranteeing food guaranteed to him by manufacturer.—Where a wholesale dealer in Maryland purchased certain food, found afterwards to be adulterated, from a Pennsylvania manufacturer, receiving the latter's written guaranty as to the purity of the goods, in conformity with this section, and in turn sold the goods to a retail dealer in the District of Columbia under a similar guaranty, it was held that he was completely protected by the guaranty of the Pennsylvania manufacturer from prosecution under this Act. (1907) 26 Op. Atty-Gen. 449.

Constitutionality.—In Hipolite Egg Co. v. U. S., (1911) 220 U. S. 45, 31 S. Ct. 364, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 364, it was held that Congress could lawfully enact the provisions of this section, under which adulterated articles of food, the subjects of interstate commerce, may be confiscated by a proceeding in rem in the federal courts after such articles have reached their destination, and there remain in the hands of the consignee in the original unbroken packages. The court said: "The question here is whether articles which are outlaws of commerce may be seized wherever found; and it certainly will not be contended that they are outside of the jurisdiction of the national government when they are within the borders of a state. The question in the case, therefore, is, What power has Congress over such articles? Can they escape the consequences of their illegal transportation by being mingled at the place of destination with other property? To give them such immunity would defeat, in many cases, the provision for their confiscation, and their confiscation or destruction is the especial concern of the law. The power to do so is certainly appropriate to the right to bar them from interstate commerce, and completes its purpose, which is not to prevent merely the physical movement of adulterated articles, but the use of them, or rather to prevent trade in them between the states by denying to them the facilities of interstate commerce. And appropriate means to that end, which we have seen is legitimate, are the seizure and condemnation of the articles at their point of destination in the original unbroken packages. The selection of such means is certainly within that breadth of discretion which we have said Congress possesses in the execution of the powers conferred upon it by the Constitution."

Jurisdiction.—The provision of this section that proceedings in cases to forfeit adulterated food shall conform as near as may be to proceedings in admiralty does not render such proceedings within the admiralty or maritime jurisdiction of federal courts; the jurisdiction in such proceedings being conferred by the Act itself. U. S. v. Two Barrels Desiccated Eggs, (1911) 185 Fed. 303.

Under this section the jurisdiction of the federal government over interstate shipments of adulterated food continues while the food remains in the original unbroken packages at the point of destination. U. S. v. Two Barrels Desiccated Eggs, (1911) 185 Fed. 302.

Conditions precedent.—The preliminary examination of an article by the Department of Agriculture, and notice to the party from whom the sample is obtained of its adulteration or misbranding, as provided for in section 4, are not conditions precedent to a libel in rem for the forfeiture of articles seized for adulteration or misbranding of articles so shipped while remaining in "original unbroken packages." U. S. r. Sixty-Five Casks Liquid Extracts, (1909) 170 Fed. 449, affirmed (1910) 175 Fed. 1022, 99 C. C. A. 667; U. S. r. Nine Barrels Olives, (1910) 179 Fed. 983; U. S. r. One Hundred Barrels Vinegar, (1911) 188 Fed. 471.

Sufficiency of libel.—This section provides that any article of food that is adulterated or misbranded within the meaning of the Act, and is being transported from one state, territory, district, or insular possession to another "for sale," shall be subject to forfeiture, and that any article of food that is adulterated or misbranded, having been transported and remaining unloaded, unsold, or in the original unbroken packages, shall be liable to be proceeded against in like manner. It has been held that a libel for forfeiture of certain bags of sugar under the latter subdivision of the section, failing to charge that the sugar seized had been transported "for sale," was fatally defective. U. S. v. Forty-Six Packages Sugar, 183 Fed. 642.

A libel to forfeit a shipment of desiccated eggs for violation of this Act was not fatally defective for failure to allege the date when they were shipped in interstate commerce on the theory that the shipment might have been made before the Act took effect or because the property was not sufficiently identified; such objections being available by answer. U. S. v. Two Barrels Desiccated Eggs, (1911) 185 Fed. 302.

Verification of libel.—Want of a sufficient verification of a libel to forfeit food is not ground for exception or demurrer to the substance of the libel. U. S. v. Two Barrels Desiccated Eggs, (1911) 185 Fed. 302.

Burden of proof.—Where a state sought to have liquors that were brought into the state forfeited before delivery to the consignee upon the ground that they were misbranded or adulterated within this Act, it was held that the burden was on the state to prove such misbranding or adulteration. State v. Intoxicating Liquors, (1909) 106 Me. 142, 76 Atl. 267.

Necessity for seizure before forfeiture proceedings.—Since this section providing for proceedings against adulterated and misbranded food transported in interstate commerce for sale or found in the original packages, etc., does not declare the goods ipso facto forfeited by an infraction of the Act, nor expressly authorize an executive seizure before proceedings for forfeiture are instituted, but on the contrary requires the district attorney on receiving a certificate of the facts from the Secretary of Agriculture to commence proceedings without delay for the enforcement of the penalties of the Act, prior executive seizure is not required to sustain forfeiture proceedings by the provision that the proceedings shall conform as near as may be to the proceedings in admiralty. U. S. v. Two Barrels Desiccated Eggs, (1911) 185 Fed. 302; U. S. v. Spraul, (C. C. A. 1911) 185 Fed. 405; U. S. v. One Hundred Barrels Vinegar, (1911) 188 Fed. 471.

This section does not authorize seizure by a private person. U. S. v. Two Barrels Desiccated Eggs, (1911) 185 Fed. 302.

Intervention.—Where on a libel by the government to enforce a forfeiture of certain sugar, for violation of this Act, the court permitted the G. Company to interplead or file a brief, and thereafter permitted the withdrawal of the answer and filing of exceptions, to which the district attorney assented, it was held that he could not thereafter object to the G. Company's right to interplead and file a brief in the case, unless further evidence was offered that it was a party in interest, or the bona fide owner of the sugar seized. U. S. v. Forty-Six Packages Sugar, 183 Fed. 642.

"Having been transported."—The words "having been transported" contemplate a transportation in interstate commerce, and not from one point in a given state, territory, district, or insular possession to another point in the same state, territory, district, or possession. U. S. v. Forty-Six Packages Sugar, 183 Fed. 642.

Shipped for consumption and not for sale.—Where adulterated vinegar was proceeded against under the Food and Drugs Act and it appeared that it had been the subject of interstate commerce and was seized while stored in the original unbroken packages, it was held to be immaterial that the evidence showed that it had been shipped in interstate commerce for consumption, and not for sale in such unbroken packages. U. S. v. One Hundred Barrels Vinegar, (1911) 188 Fed. 471.

Shipment for use by consignee as raw material.—The remedy in rem in the federal courts provided by this section, where any article of food that is adulterated is being transported from one state to another for sale, or, having been transported, remains unloaded, unsold, or in original unbroken packages, may be invoked where adulterated eggs have been shipped into the state, not for sale, but intended solely for use by the consignee in the bakery business. Hipolite Egg Co. v. U. S., (1911) 220 U. S. 45, 31 Ct. 364, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 364; U. S. v. Two Barrels Desiccated Eggs, (1911) 185 Fed. 302.

Shipments from manufacturing agent to owner.—In U. S. v. Sixty-Five Casks Liquid Extracts, (1909) 170 Fed. 449, affirmed (1910) 175 Fed. 1022, 99 C. C. A. 667, it appeared that the claimant was the owner of a secret formula for a proprietary drug preparation, and conducted its business at Wheeling, W. Va., from which place it sold and shipped its preparation in bottles properly labeled. It had the preparation made, however, at Detroit, Mich., from which point it was shipped to the claimant in casks by car lots, and, when received, was bottled and labeled by claimant in Wheeling before being offered for sale. It was held that such shipments were not made in interstate commerce, but only from the manufacturing agents to the owner, and that the casks after their receipt by claimant were not subject to seizure and forfeiture because not labeled under section 10.

Original packages.—Where, after an adulterated or misbranded drug had been transported in interstate commerce and received by the consignee who was the owner, the packages were opened and samples taken that the strength, quality, and purity might be tested, it was held that such sampling did not constitute a breaking of the original packages. U. S. v. Five Boxes Asafetida, (1910) 181 Fed. 561.

Where a liquid in casks is shipped in interstate commerce in carload lots, the cask and not the car is the "original package" within the meaning of this section. U. S. v. Sixty-Five Casks Liquid Extracts, (1909) 170 Fed. 449, affirmed (1910) 175 Fed. 1022, 99 C. C. A. 667.

Forfeiture not dependent upon liability under section 2.—Section 2 makes it a misdemeanor for any person having received adulterated or misbranded drugs from another state to ship the same from one state to another or to deliver the same in unbroken packages for pay or otherwise, or offer to deliver the same to another person so adulterated or misbranded, and section 10 declares that such articles shall be liable to seizure and forfeiture when in the course of being transported from state to state, or when having been transported they remain unloaded, or unsold, or in the original packages. It has been held that such sections are independent of each other, and hence that it is not essential to the forfeiture of adulterated or misbranded drugs, under section 10, that the owner should have been guilty of violating section 2. U. S. v. Five Boxes Asafœtida, (1910) 181 Fed. 561.

Costs in personam may be assessed against the claimant in a proceeding in rem under this section to confiscate adulterated articles of food, the subject of interstate commerce, even if the principles of the admiralty law are made applicable by the provision that the proceedings shall conform as near as may be to the proceedings in admiralty. Hipolite Egg Co. v. U. S., (1911) 220 U. S. 45, 31 S. Ct. 364, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 364.

Mode of review.—A proceeding for the condemnation and forfeiture of an article alleged to be adulterated or misbranded, in which either party is given the right to demand a trial by jury of any issue of fact, where such trial is demanded and had, is reviewable only on writ of error. U. S. v. Seven Hundred and Seventy-nine Cases Molasses, (C. C. A. 1909) 174 Fed. 325.

Effect of Drug and Medicine Act of 1848.—Drugs imported from Italy, although meeting the standard required by the Drug and Medicine Act of 1848, 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 142-143, are still subject to the provisions of the Food and Drugs Act of 1906 regarding adulteration, misbranding, and false labeling, and to any test that may be applied to them by the direction of the Secretary of Agriculture in accordance with section 11 of the latter Act. (1907) 26 Op. Atty-Gen. 311.

Effect of bond.—Where proceedings were instituted for the examination and exclusion of certain alleged adulterated or misbranded olives, it was held that the importer's execution of a bond for possession under such section did not amount to an official declaration that the olives had been found to comply with the Act. U. S. v. Nine Barrels Olives, (1910) 179 Fed. 983.

GAME ANIMALS AND BIRDS.

Vol. III, p. 152, sec. 3.

Constitutionality.—The provisions of this Act prohibiting the shipment or transportation in interstate commerce of game killed in violation of the local laws, and requiring all packages containing game shipped in interstate commerce to be plainly marked showing the name and address of the shipper and the nature of the contents, and making the violation of such provisions a criminal offense, are within the powers of Congress, and constitutional and valid. Rupert v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1910) 181 Fed. 87.

Indictment.—Under the game law of Oklahoma Territory (Wilson's Rev. & Annot. Stat. 1903, secs. 3069, 3078), which permitted the killing of quail between October 15th and February 1st following, but prohibited the shipping of quail from the territory at any time, an indictment charging a violation of this section by knowingly delivering to a carrier for transportation from the territory into another state the dead bodies of quail killed in the territory in violation of its laws, was held to be sufficient where it averred that such quail were killed "with the intent and for the purpose of being shipped and transported out of the territory," although it did not allege the months in which such quail were killed. The same was held to be true of an indictment under section 4 for failing to mark the packages containing the bodies of such quail. Rupert v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1910) 181 Fed. 87.

Vol. III, p. 152, sec. 4.

Constitutionality.—See under the preceding section.

Indictment.—See under the preceding section.

Construction.—This section requires all packages "containing such dead animals, birds, or part thereof, when shipped by interstate commerce, as provided in section 1 of this Act," to be plainly marked, so that the name and address of the shipper and the nature of the contents may be readily ascertained on inspection of the outside of such packages, and makes the violation of such requirements a penal offense. It has been held that the reference in this section to section 1 was a clerical error, such section having no relation to the subject-matter, and section 3 being manifestly intended; that as so construed section 4 is limited in its application to the two classes of shipments enumerated in section 3, first, animals or birds killed in violation of the game laws, and second, animals or birds killed during the open season and "the export of which is not prohibited by law," and that an indictment would not lie under section 4 for a failure to mark a package containing game killed during the open season but the export of which was prohibited by the law of the state where the same was killed. U. S. v. Thompson, (1906) 147 Fed. 637.

Vol. III, p. 152, sec. 5.

Validity of state laws as to interstate shipments.—This section confers on any state the right to enact laws prohibiting the possession of dead game within certain periods, whether taken within or without the state. People v. Hesterberg, (1906) 184 N. Y. 126, 76 N. E. 1032.

In State v. Heger, (1905) 194 Mo. 707, 93 S. W. 252, it was held that the Missouri statute (Laws of 1905, p. 162, sec. 18) prohibiting the sale of game, whether taken within or without the state, is not invalid as a regulation of interstate commerce, in view of this section providing that dead bodies of foreign game animals transported into any state shall, on arrival in the state, be subject to the operation of the laws of the state, enacted in the exercise of its police power.

HABEAS CORPUS.

Vol. III, p. 162, sec. 751.

Petitioner at large on bail.—The jurisdiction of the federal courts in cases of habeas corpus is statutory and can only be exercised where the body of the relator is in the custody of the respondent and is brought into court in response to the writ, and the proceeding will not lie where the relator is at large on bail. Sibray v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1911) 185 Fed. 401.

Scope of the writ.—The power granted by sections 751, 752, 761 is not coextensive with the judicial power of the national government as defined by the Constitution, so as to comprehend all cases within the jurisdiction conferable upon the federal courts, but it is a jurisdiction to be exercised only in cases within the limited jurisdiction conferred upon the courts by other Acts of Congress. Clifford v. Williams, (1904) 131 Fed. 100, quoting and following In re Burrus, (1890) 136 U. S. 591, 10 S. Ct. 850, 34 U. S. (L. ed.) 502.

Right of father to custody of children.—See Clifford v. Williams, (1904) 131 Fed. 100, dismissing a petition for a writ of habeas corpus.

Exercise of the function of *parens patriæ for the determination of the right to the custody of an insane person is not within the jurisdiction of federal courts. Therefore where a proceeding had been brought in a state court of competent jurisdiction, between citizens of different states, to determine the sanity of an alleged insane person, and the right to custody thereof, the federal court pending determination of such proceeding will not review the right to the custody of such incompetent on a writ of habeas corpus alleging that he is restrained of his liberty without due process of law. Hoadly v. Chase, (1904) 126 Fed. 818, affirmed (C. C. A. 1903) 129 Fed. 1005.

In custody of state court—Federal court will exercise discretion.—While the federal court has jurisdiction to issue a writ of habeas corpus to determine the jurisdiction of a state court to deprive a citizen of his liberty, whether such writ should be issued in the exercise of such jurisdiction is a matter to be determined in the exercise of a sound discretion in pursuance of law. Ex p. Martin, (1910) 180 Fed. 209.

Will not interfere with state court.—"It may now be regarded as the settled policy of the federal courts not to interfere by habeas corpus with the prosecution of criminal offenses in the state courts in any instance—other than certain recognized exceptions, of which this case is not one—where the remedy by writ of error may be invoked. . . . It is not a question of power that actuates this attitude on the part of the federal courts, but a rule of comity." Ex p. Chadwick, (1908) 159 Fed. 576, denying a petition for habeas corpus. To the same point, see Ex p. Powers, (1904) 129 Fed. 985; Ex p. Collins, (1907) 154 Fed. 980.

The federal courts will not interfere by habeas corpus with a state in the administration of its criminal law unless fundamental rights specially secured by the Federal Constitution are invaded. Rogers v. Peck, (1905) 199 U. S. 425, 26 S. Ct. 87, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 256.

Relief by habeas corpus is properly refused in a federal Circuit Court to persons in the military service of the United States, held in the custody of state authorities to answer to a charge of homicide which is asserted by them to have been committed in the discharge of their duty, under the Federal Constitution and laws, to apprehend the deceased for a larceny of property from a federal arsenal, where there is conflicting evidence on the question whether or not the deceased had surrendered before the fatal shot was fired. U. S. v. Lewis, (1906) 200 U. S. 1, 26 S. Ct. 229, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 343.

Where the petitioner held for trial in a state court asserted that the statute he was charged with violating was not applicable to the case, and that he was not guilty of the offense charged, the court said: "Where an act, made the basis of a criminal charge under a state law, is not alleged to have been done as an agent of the national government, nor pursuant to authority conferred by it, nor in the exercise of a right by it given, the federal courts cannot properly acquire jurisdiction by the writ of habeas corpus to adjudicate the question whether the accused is guilty or not guilty. This is so whether the disputed question to be decided is one of fact or law. If the highest court of the state denies a right or immunity guaranteed by the Federal Constitution or laws, the Supreme Court may be applied to for relief." Ex p. Crowder, (1909) 171 Fed. 250.

Where petitioner, a citizen and resident of Iowa, was arrested in Oregon for an alleged violation of Laws Oregon 1909, p. 386, regulating and licensing peddlers, and claimed that such ordinance was invalid as violating the commerce clause of the Federal Constitution, he was not entitled to a writ of habeas corpus issued out of the federal court, in the first instance, but should be required to resort to the state courts for relief, and if unsuccessful, to apply ultimately for review by the federal Supreme Court on a writ of error. Ex p. Martin, (1910) 180 Fed. 209.

In the "syllabus by the court," in In re Dowd, (1904) 133 Fed. 747, it was said, in respect of the powers to issue writs of habeas corpus under R. S. secs. 751-755, that "the law of the land which has been established by repeated decisions of the Supreme Court is that this power should not be exercised where the judgment of the state court under which the petitioner is confined is reviewable by appeal or by writ of error. . . . Under these decisions of the Supreme Court, neither the fact that the petition shows that the state court was without any jurisdiction of the proceeding in which its judgment was rendered (New York v. Eno, (1894) 155 U. S. 89, 90, 96, 98, 15 S. Ct. 30, 39 U. S. (L. ed.) 80), nor the fact that the term of the petitioner's imprisonment will expire before a hearing can be had in the ordinary course of proceedings upon the writ of error or appeal (Markuson v. Boucher, (1899) 175 U. S. 184, 20 S. Ct. 76, 44 U. S. (L. ed.) 124), ordinarily withdraws a case from the effect of this general rule."

Petitioner, having been extradited, was placed on trial under the extradition indictment, and having become a witness in his own behalf, after disagreement of the jury, and before the case was finally disposed of, was again indicted for perjury alleged to have been committed on his former trial and was convicted. He appealed to the state Court of Appeal, and applied to the state Supreme Court for discharge on habeas corpus, challenging the state's jurisdiction to try him for any other offense than that for which he was extradited, until he had been either convicted and served his sentence and had a reasonable time to return to his asylum country, or had been acquitted and had a like opportunity. This writ was denied, and a writ of error allowed for review by the Supreme Court of the United States. It was held that, pending the determination of such writ of error, he was not entitled to a discharge on habeas corpus issued out of the federal Circuit Court. Ex p. Collins, (1907) 154 Fed. 980, (1906) 149 Fed. 573.

Federal courts have no power to interfere by habeas corpus with the imprisonment of a person under a judgment of conviction of a crime in a state court, if that court had jurisdiction over the person of the accused, and did not lose such jurisdiction during the trial. Felts v. Murphy, (1906) 201 U. S. 123, 26 S. Ct. 366, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 689; Valentina v. Mercer, (1906) 201 U. S. 131, 26 S. Ct. 368, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 693.

A federal court is without jurisdiction of a habeas corpus proceeding for the discharge of a state prisoner where the only question involved is his identity with an escaped convict, and no diversity of citizenship is alleged. Ex p. Moebus, (1906) 148 Fed. 39.

In a criminal prosecution in a state court where the statute creating the offense is not repugnant to the Federal Constitution, and the court has jurisdiction, its determination with respect to the sufficiency of the charge is controlling in the federal courts on an application by the accused for a writ of habeas corpus after conviction. Erickson v. Hodges, (1910) 179 Fed. 177, 102 C. C. A. 443.

The determination by the highest court of a state that the offense charged in an indictment is one punishable under the laws of the state is conclusive in a subsequent proceeding by the accused in a federal court for release on a writ of habeas corpus. Erickson v. Hodges, (1910) 179 Fed. 177, 102 C. C. A. 443.

A defendant charged with a criminal offense in a federal court, and at large on bail pending a determination of his case by an appellate court, when arrested and held in custody by the authorities of a state, outside of the jurisdiction of the federal courts in which his case is pending, to answer to an indictment in the state court, is not so held in violation of his constitutional rights or contrary to any law of the United States as to entitle him to a discharge by a federal court on a writ of habeas corpus, where neither the United States nor his surety demands such discharge. Ex p. Marrin, (1908) 164 Fed. 631.

A federal court or judge will not ordinarily discharge a prisoner held under process of a state court in violation of the Constitution and laws of the United States in advance of his trial in the state court, unless some exceptional circumstance or emergency exists demanding prompt action. Ex p. Roach, (1908) 166 Fed. 344, denying a petition for the writ. To the same point, see Ex p. Powers, (1904) 129 Fed. 985; In re Wyman, (1904) 132 Fed. 708; In re Ammon, (1904) 132 Fed. 714.

Case of urgency.—A federal court will discharge from imprisonment by a state, on a writ of habeas corpus, a teamster in the employment of the Quartermaster's Department of the army, where such imprisonment is in violation of the Constitution and laws of the United States and prevents the performance of the duties of his employment, on account of "the importance of this department to the troops" and "the slow process and the delay" of carrying the case through the state courts. Pundt v. Pendleton, (1909) 167 Fed. 997.

While "the courts of the United States will not lightly interfere with the action of the state court, and a case must be presented to make action imperative before such action will be taken," where an officer of the Internal Revenue Department was imprisoned for contempt of court for a refusal to testify in a state court or before a grand jury with respect to facts learned by him in his official capacity which he was prohibited from divulging by the regulations of the department, the case is one of urgency, in which a federal court is not required to await the final action of the state courts, but should discharge the prisoner on a writ of habeas corpus. Stegall v. Thurman, (1910) 175 Fed. 813.

Detention on writ of ne exeat from state court.—Except under unusual and extraordinary circumstances a federal court will not issue a writ of habeas corpus for the release of a person held under process issued by a state court in a civil case, on the ground that such court was without jurisdiction in the particular suit, where it had jurisdiction over such suits in general. Mackenzie v. Barrett, (1906) 144 Fed. 954, 76 C. C. 8.

The writ cannot perform the office of a writ of error.—Matter of Gregory, (1911) 219 U. S. 210, 31 S. Ct. 143, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 184; Kaizo v. Henry, (1908) 211 U. S. 146, 29 S. Ct. 41, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 125, citing numerous cases; Felts v. Murphy, (1906) 201 U. S. 123, 26 S. Ct. 366, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 689; Valentina v. Mercer, (1906) 201 U. S. 131, 26 S. Ct. 368, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 693; Ex p. Powers, (1904) 129 Fed. 985; Connella v. Haskell, (1907) 158 Fed. 285, 87 C. C. A. 111.

"Upon habeas corpus the court examines only the power and authority of the court to act, not the correctness of its conclusions." Harlan v. McGourin, (1910) 218 U. S. 442, 31 S. Ct. 44, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 1101.

"Neither Hyde v. Shine, [(1905) 199 U. S. 24, 25 S. Ct. 764, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 97] nor Tinsley v. Treat, [(1907) 205 U. S. 20, 27 S. Ct. 430, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 689] is authority for the proposition that a writ of habeas corpus can be made the basis of a review of the judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction where proceedings were had under a constitutional statute giving the court authority to examine into the charges, and to convict or acquit the accused, when the proceedings show no attempt to exert the jurisdiction of the court in excess of its authority." Harlan v. McGourin, (1910) 218 U. S. 442, 31 S. Ct. 44, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 1101.

Neither irregularities nor error constitute a legal basis for the writ. Thus on habeas corpus to inquire into a detention on an information filed in the police court of the District of Columbia, "we are not concerned with the question whether the information was sufficient, or whether the acts set forth . . . constituted a crime; that is to say, whether the court properly applied the law, if it be found that the court had jurisdiction to try the issues and to render the judgment." Matter of Gregory, (1911) 219 U. S. 210, 31 S. Ct. 44, 143, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 184, citing numerous cases.

Objection that the order for the impaneling of the grand jury was made by a judge of a federal Circuit Court, who although within his circuit was not within the district where the court was located when the trial was had, cannot be raised by habeas corpus. Harlan v. McGourin, (1910) 218 U. S. 442, 31 S. Ct. 44, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 1101.

Upon habeas corpus to inquire into a detention under a conviction in a federal Circuit Court, affirmed by the proper Circuit Court of Appeals, the bill of exceptions cannot be examined with a view to determining whether there was any testimony to support the accusation. Harlan v. McGourin, (1910) 218 U. S. 442, 31 S. Ct. 44, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 1101.

An objection that the indictment in a federal Circuit Court was not properly presented by the grand jury, based on testimony that after the presentation of the original indictment the grand jury were informed by the district attorney that the indictment needed amendment in some particulars, that this amendment was read over in the presence of the grand jury and was incorporated into an indictment which was regularly returned to the court, where it was produced, with the consent of all the grand jurors, if ever available, cannot be first raised on habeas corpus after conviction. Harlan v. McGourin, (1910) 218 U. S. 442, 31 S. Ct. 44, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 1101.

The objection that the original sentence in a federal Circuit Court, before modification on motion of the government's counsel, exceeded the authority of the court, in that it required service at hard labor, is not available on habeas corpus, since, at most, only that part of the sentence of the law is void. Harlan v. McGourin, (1910) 218 U. S. 442, 31 S. Ct. 44, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 1101.

Errors of a federal District Court in sustaining an indictment which fails to charge with sufficient fulness some particular fact cannot be reviewed on habeas corpus to inquire into the legality of an imprisonment under the sentence imposed after a conviction on such indictment. Dimmick v. Thompson, (1904) 194 U. S. 540, 24 S. Ct. 780, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 1110.

That an indictment charged more than one offense, in violation of the laws of the territory where petitioner was convicted, was a mere error of procedure, which did not divest the trial court of its power to render judgment, and was, therefore, not ground for petitioner's discharge on habeas corpus. And in the same case, where petitioner was convicted of two offenses, for each of which he could have been sentenced to seven years' imprisonment, but was sentenced to five years' imprisonment for each offense, the terms to run concurrently, the sentence could not be held void on habeas corpus, because the statute of the territory in which petitioner was convicted required such a sentence to be cumulative. Connella v. Haskell, (1907) 158 Fed. 285, 87 C. C. A. 111.

Where a sentence imposed on petitioner was excessive, he could not obtain his discharge on habeas corpus while serving the portion which the court had power to impose. Connella v. Haskell, (1907) 158 Fed. 285, 87 C. C. A. 111.

A Circuit Court of Appeals cannot issue a writ of habeas corpus as an original and independent proceeding, although under R. S. sec. 716, 4 Fed. Stat. Annot. 498, and section 12 of the Circuit Court of Appeals Act of 1891, 4 Fed. Stat. Annot. 430, which sections are consolidated in Judicial Code, sec. 262 ante, p. 241, it may issue such writ in cases when necessary for the exercise of a jurisdiction already existing. Whitney v. Dick, (1906) 202 U. S. 132, 26 S. Ct. 584, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 963. Prior to that decision it was held that the power of the Circuit Court of Appeals was thus restricted in Ex p. Moran, (1906) 144 Fed. 594, 75 C. C. A. 396.

When the court has no jurisdiction. — "No court may properly release a prisoner under conviction and sentence of another court, unless for want of jurisdiction of the cause or person, or for some other matter rendering its proceedings void." Kaizo v. Henry, (1908) 211 U. S. 146, 29 S. Ct. 41, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 125.

Disobeying the law governing the selection of grand jurors does not affect the jurisdiction of the court so as to justify the release by habeas corpus of a person convicted under an indictment found by such jurors. Matter of Moran, (1906) 203 U. S. 96, 27 S. Ct. 25, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 105.

The business of issuing 'and redeeming trading stamps is not so manifestly outside the range of judicial consideration, under District of Columbia R. S. sec. 1177, making it a crime to engage in any manner in any gift enterprise business in the district, as to justify relief by habeas corpus to a person convicted of that offense, on the theory that the trial court was without jurisdiction. Matter of Gregory, (1911) 219 U. S. 210, 31 S. Ct. 143, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 184.

The failure to specify a building in the order of the Supreme Court of the territory of Oklahoma fixing Lawton as the place where the District Court should be held in and for the county of Comanche, there being at the time of making the order and at the time of trial no county or court buildings in such county, did not go to the jurisdiction of such District Court so as to justify relief by habeas corpus in favor of a person convicted of crime therein who made no showing of any opportunities lost because no building was named. Matter of Moran, (1906) 203 U. S. 96, 27 S. Ct. 25, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 105.

The federal courts will not release, on habeas corpus, a person convicted of murder in the first degree in a state court, on the theory that that court lost its jurisdiction to proceed in the trial because it charged the jury, in accordance with the admission of counsel for the accused, that the only question for their consideration was the degree of murder of which the accused was guilty. Valentina v. Mercer, (1906) 201 U. S. 131, 26 S. Ct. 368, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 693.

Vol. III, p. 167, sec. 753.

"Section 753 contains no grant of power, but is a restriction upon the power of the federal courts, prohibiting the issuance of the writ of habeas corpus in behalf of a prisoner in jail, except under the prescribed conditions enumerated in that section. To meet the conditions existing at the time of South Carolina's attempt to nullify the laws of the United States, and deal with officers of the national government under its criminal laws for acts done in the performance of official duties, Congress enacted . . . Act of March 2, 1833, ch. 57, sec. 7, 4 Stat. L. 634. This law has been recast in the Revised Statutes, and the body of it, with changed phraseology, now constitutes section 753; and as already indicated, there is in it no grant of power, so that it must now be construed with reference to its position, following sections 751 and 752, in order to give it any definite and clear meaning, unless we assume that by implication it confers power to grant writs of habeas corpus in the excepted cases enumerated." Clifford v. Williams, (1904) 131 Fed. 100.

"The jurisdiction of courts of the United States to issue writs of habeas corpus is limited to cases of persons alleged to be restrained of their liberty in violation of the Constitution or of some law or treaty of the United States, and cases arising under the law of nations." Carfer v. Caldwell, (1906) 200 U. S. 293, 26 S. Ct. 264, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 488.

"Imprisonment in jail appears to be the first condition recited in that section [753] and is the controlling condition governing all of the cases which, by reason of the exceptions, the federal courts are permitted to take cognizance of." Hence it was held that the federal Circuit Courts have no jurisdiction to determine a controversy between persons who are residents of different states as to the right of custody of their infant child, who was neither restrained of her liberty nor imprisoned. Clifford v. Williams, (1904) 131 Fed. 100.

Confinement in another federal district.—Where the chief officer of the Chinese exclusion laws for a state, in his return to a writ of habeas corpus directed to him, has admitted that the Chinese persons in whose behalf the writ was issued are detained by him, and has obtained a stipulation waiving their production in court, the court has jurisdiction to inquire into the legality of their detention, although they may in effect be confined in another district of the state. Ex p. Fong Yim, (1905) 134 Fed. 938.

Act done or omitted in pursuance of an order, process, or decree.—Under this section a federal Circuit Court had power to discharge on habeas corpus a railway ticket agent, who, acting under and in obedience to an order of a federal Circuit Court which enjoined, as being repugnant to the Federal Constitution, the enforcement by the state corporation commission and the attorney-general of state legislation reducing rates, was imprisoned under a conviction in a state court for disobeying such legislation. Hunter v. Wood, (1908) 209 U. S. 205, 28 S. Ct. 472, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 747.

In State v. Laing, (1904) 133 Fed. 887, 66 C. C. A. 617, (1903) 127 Fed. 213, petitioners under imprisonment on a charge of murder for the justifiable killing of a man whom they, as members of a posse comitatus, were attempting to arrest under a warrant from a federal court upon an indictment for resisting its officers, were discharged upon habeas corpus by a federal Circuit Court.

Act done in performance of duty.—A federal court or judge has power to issue a writ of habeas corpus on petition of the United States for the purpose of an inquiry into the cause of detention of a prisoner held by a state to answer to a criminal charge, where it is alleged by the petitioner that the act charged as a crime was committed by the prisoner in the performance of his duty as a soldier of the United States; and it has authority to determine summarily as a fact whether or not such allegation is true, and if found to be true to discharge the prisoner on the ground that the state is without jurisdiction to try him for such act. U. S. v. Lipssett, (1907) 156 Fed. 65.

This section confers jurisdiction on federal courts to release on habeas corpus an officer of the United States held in custody for an act done or omitted under authority vested in him by the law of the United States, though there is no Act of Congress covering the particular case. Thus where petitioner, in his official capacity as assistant United States district attorney, procured the production of State court records before a federal grand jury under an ordinary subpoena duces tecum, and thereafter held possession of such records, as such attorney, he was not subject to punishment for contempt of the state court for failure to return such records on demand, since "whatever duty the relator owed to take care of said records or to return them to their lawful custodian was a duty incumbent upon him as an officer of the court." In re Leaken, (1905) 137 Fed. 680, discharging petitioner from custody.

"In violation of . . . a law . . . of the United States."—"The acts of the legislature of a territory are not laws of the United States." Connella v. Haskell, (1907) 158 Fed. 285, 87 C. C. A. 111.

A person imprisoned under a conviction in a court of Oklahoma territory was not entitled to his release on habeas corpus, under this section, because the grand jurors were summoned from the body of the county, which resulted in the selection as such jurors of persons who were not electors nor residents of the territory, since the Federal Constitution does not control the method of selection, and if any laws were violated by this method they were territorial enactments, which are not laws of the United States. Matter of Moran, (1906) 203 U. S. 96, 27 S. Ct. 25, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 105. See also Ex p. Moran, (1906) 144 Fed. 594, 75 C. C. A. 396. For a like case see Connella v. Haskell, (1907) 158 Fed. 285, 87 C. C. A. 111.

Interstate rendition proceedings.—Affirming a refusal of a federal Circuit Court to discharge on habeas corpus a person held in custody in Idaho to await a trial for murder there, the court said: "No obligation was imposed by the Constitution or laws of the United States upon the agent of Idaho to so time the arrest of the petitioner, and so conduct his deportation from Colorado, as to afford him a convenient opportunity, before some judicial tribunal sitting in Colorado, to test the question whether he was a fugitive from justice, and as such liable, under the Act of Congress, to be conveyed to Idaho for trial there." Pettibone v. Nichols, (1906) 203 U. S. 192, 27 S. Ct. 111, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 148.

A person held in actual custody by a state for trial in one of its courts under an indictment for a crime against its laws will not be released on habeas corpus by a federal Circuit Court because the methods by which his personal presence in the state was secured may have violated the provisions of article 4, section 2, of the Federal Constitution, or R. S. sec. 5278, 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 77, relating to extradition proceedings. Pettibone v. Nichols, (1906) 203 U. S. 192, 27 S. Ct. 111, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 148; Moyer v. Nichols, (1906) 203 U. S. 221, 27 S. Ct. 121, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 160.

In Ex p. Moebus, (1905) 137 Fed. 154, it was held that a petition for a writ of habeas corpus did not state a case for federal interference on the ground of irregularity in extradition proceedings, in view of the rule of the Supreme Court that a large measure of credence and conclusiveness must be accorded to proceedings before the governor in such cases.

Fifth amendment.—Compelling the accused to stand up and walk before the jury, and stationing the jury during a recess so as to observe his size and walk, even if contrary to the Fifth Amendment to the Federal Constitution, do not affect the jurisdiction of the court so as to justify relief by habeas corpus. Matter of Moran, (1906) 203 U. S. 96, 27 S. Ct. 25, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 105.

A federal court has no power on a writ of habeas corpus to discharge a prisoner confined for contempt by a state court for refusing to answer questions as a witness, on the ground that his answers might incriminate him; the provision of the Fifth Amendment being a limitation solely on the powers of the national government and its courts and officers. Ex p. Munn, (1905) 140 Fed. 782.

Fourteenth amendment. — Due process of law. — Relief by habeas corpus should not be accorded by a federal court to a person held in custody by the state authorities under an order of commitment entered by a state court after a jury had returned a verdict of not guilty by reason of insanity, although the prisoner may be so held in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment, since he should be left to his remedy by writ of error from the federal Supreme Court to review the final action of the highest court of the state. Urbahart v. Brown, (1907) 205 U. S. 179, 27 S. Ct. 459, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 760, reversing (1905) 139 Fed. 846.

A petitioner for habeas corpus was not deprived of his liberty without due process of law by being convicted of crime upon a trial where the court failed to see to it that the testimony, which he was too deaf to hear, was repeated to him through the ear trumpet which he had with him. Felts v. Murphy, (1906) 201 U. S. 123, 26 S. Ct. 366, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 689.

The federal courts have no jurisdiction to release, by habeas corpus, a person held in the custody of the state authorities to answer for a contempt in refusing to appear and testify before a legislative investigating committee, either because such a committee cannot sit in vacation, or because the subject for investigation is excluded from the jurisdiction of the legislature by the provision of the state constitution for the separation of legislative, executive, and judicial powers, as no question of due process of law is presented. Carfer v. Caldwell, (1906) 200 U. S. 293, 26 S. Ct. 264, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 488.

The Federal Constitution does not guarantee to citizens the right to a jury trial, except in the courts of the United States; nor does the fact that a prisoner, convicted and sentenced for a criminal offense in a state court, was not given a jury trial, nor entitled to one under the state statute, entitle him to be discharged on a writ of habeas corpus by a federal court, on the ground that his conviction was without due process of law. Ex p. Brown, (1905) 140 Fed. 461.

A petition for a writ of habeas corpus, which shows on its face that the petitioner, since his extradition from another state, has been confined in a penitentiary for five years upon no other process of commitment than the governor's warrant, states a case of deprivation of rights under the Constitution of the United States, which authorizes and requires a federal court to take jurisdiction, at least to the extent of requiring the person against whom the restraint is alleged to answer. Ex p. Moebus, (1905) 137 Fed. 154.

"Full faith and credit clause" in Constitution. — Where, after the remarriage of plaintiff's divorced wife, and her removal to another state, taking with her an infant daughter awarded to her custody in divorce proceedings, another order was made in such proceedings awarding custody of the child to plaintiff, the refusal of his former wife to comply with such decree, and her obtaining a decree of adoption in the state of her domicile, without proof that the courts in such state had refused to recognize plaintiff's decree, did not confer jurisdiction on the federal Circuit Court in the state of the wife's domicile to issue a writ of habeas corpus to determine plaintiff's right to the custody of the child, on the ground that full faith and credit had been denied to plaintiff's decree awarding him the custody of the child. Clifford v. Williams, (1904) 131 Fed. 100.

State statute violating state constitution. — A federal court has no power to inquire into the legality of the detention of a state prisoner on a writ of habeas corpus, on the ground that it is in violation of the state constitution. Ex p. Brown, (1905) 140 Fed. 461.

Case involving a treaty. — The federal courts have jurisdiction to determine in habeas corpus proceedings the right of a Chinese merchant domiciled in this country to enter from China, or of members of his family whose right is incidental to his own, where the remedy by appeal to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor has been exhausted, and the right of entry denied. Ex p. Fong Yim, (1905) 134 Fed. 938.

Vol. III, p. 173, sec. 755.

When writ need not be awarded. — Where it appears from the petition for habeas corpus that the case is not one which would justify the exercise of federal authority, it may be dismissed, and the court is not required to either award a writ or issue an order to the respondent to show cause. Ex p. Collins, (1906) 151 Fed. 358; Erickson v. Hodges, (1910) 179 Fed. 177, 102 C. C. A. 443.

"Notwithstanding its somewhat peremptory language, it has been repeatedly held that it does not require an issuance of the writ instantanely, upon application, but that the court has a reasonable discretion as to the time and mode it will adopt to determine in any instance if it be a proper one for the granting of the writ," and in its discretion the court may make an order on the officer alleged to have petitioner in his custody to show cause on a day certain why the writ should not be issued. Ex p. Collins, (1907) 154 Fed. 980.

In jurisdictions where appeals have been provided for in habeas corpus cases, it has come to be the rule, either as one of law or of practical administration, that a judge is not required to consider an application for a writ which has been denied by another judge, but may remit the petitioner to his remedy by appeal. Ex p. Moebus, (1906) 148 Fed. 39.

When the petition for a writ of habeas corpus shows that the petitioner is not legally entitled to it, the writ should not be issued, but the application for it should be denied, and the petition should be dismissed. In re Dowd, (1904) 133 Fed. 747.

Vol. III, p. 174, sec. 761.

A jury trial is not necessary in order to determine the facts of the case. U. S. v. Lipsett, (1907) 156 Fed. 65, a case more fully cited under this title, vol. 3, p. 167, sec. 753.

Vol. III, p. 176, sec. 764.

The right of appeal to the Supreme Court is now restricted to cases described in Judicial Code, sec. 238, ante, p. 231. See In re Lennon, (1893) 150 U. S. 393, 14 S. Ct. 123, 37 U. S. (L. ed.) 1120, and the last sentence in section 14 of the Circuit Court of Appeals Act of 1891, 4 Fed. Stat. Annot. 431. It is further regulated by the Act of March 10, 1908, ch. 76, 35 Stat. L. 40, 1909 Supp. Fed. Stat. Annot. 293. Appeals in other cases are to be taken to the Circuit Court of Appeals as provided in Judicial Code, sec. 128, ante, p. 195.

See, for example, Motherwell v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1901) 107 Fed. 437 sub nom.; Tucker v. Alexandroff, (1902) 183 U. S. 424, 22 S. Ct. 195, 46 U. S. (L. ed.) 264.

As to direct appeal to the Supreme Court where a constitutional question is involved, see Dimmick v. Tompkins, (1904) 194 U. S. 540, 24 S. Ct. 780, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 1110, and note to section 5 of the Circuit Court of Appeals Act of 1891, infra, title JUDICIARY, vol. 4, p. 398.

Vol. III, p. 179, sec. 766.

Acquittal pending habeas corpus. — Where, after the issuance of a writ of habeas corpus out of a federal court to review petitioner's arrest for violation of a state statute, he was tried and acquitted in the state court, such trial and acquittal were null and void, and therefore constituted no ground for dismissal of the writ. Ex p. Martin, (1910) 180 Fed. 209.

A reprieve by the governor of a state, postponing, until a fixed date, the execution of a death sentence, evidently granted to permit the prisoner to appeal to the federal Supreme Court from the order of a District Court denying habeas corpus, is not a proceeding "against the person so imprisoned," etc., within the meaning of this section.

HAWAIIAN ISLANDS.

Vol. III, p. 183. [Joint resolution to provide for annexing the Hawaiian Islands to the United States.]

Title to military reservation at Kahauiki. — By the joint resolution of Congress accepting the cession of the Hawaiian Islands and the transfer to the United States of the ownership of all public lands therein, and by acquiring by purchase from individuals the leases held by them covering the lands comprising the military reservation at Kahauiki, Oahu Island, the United States acquired complete title to that reservation. (1904) 25 Op. Atty-Gen. 225.

Federal courts following construction of local statutes by Hawaiian courts. — The federal courts will follow the construction given by the courts of the government of Hawaii to local statutes. Kealoha v. Castle, (1908) 210 U. S. 153, 28 S. Ct. 684, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 998.

Jurisdiction of crime in Honolulu harbor. — There is nothing in the Hawaiian Organic Act which expressly or impliedly deprives the federal courts of their jurisdiction under R. S. sec. 5339, 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 231, to punish a murder committed on board a ship lying in the harbor of Honolulu. Wynne v. U. S., (1910) 217 U. S. 234, 39 S. Ct. 447, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 748.

Vol. III, p. 190, sec. 10.

Contempt proceedings.—Enforcement by contempt proceedings of an administrator's official duty to pay a creditor a dividend is not within the prohibition in this section against imprisonment for debt. Matter of Ahi, (1908) 19 Hawaii 233.

Imprisonment for debt.—The writ of ne exeat is not now available in Hawaii in an action of assumpsit to prevent a defendant from going away from the territory or to compel him to give security for the payment of the judgment that may be recovered. The execution of the writ would subject the defendant to imprisonment for debt contrary to the provisions of this section. Oahu Lumber, etc., Co. v. Ding Sing, (1904) 15 Hawaii 413.

Limitations.—See Kunewa v. Kaanaana, (1907) 18 Hawaii 252.

Vol. III, p. 195, sec. 45.

Construction.—The provision of this section that "each law shall embrace but one subject, which shall be expressed in its title," should be liberally construed. The title may be broader than the Act, provided it is not delusive: the Act may cover different matters, provided they have a natural connection and are fairly embraced in one subject. A provision limiting civil jury trials, unless by consent, to the first sixty days of each term in the first circuit, may properly be included in an Act purporting in its title to amend a certain section of the Revised Laws "relating to terms of the Circuit Courts," the other provisions of which Act relate to the length, adjournment, and extension of the terms in the several circuits. Ahmi v. Buckle, (1905) 17 Hawaii 200.

Section violated.—In Dole v. Cooper, (1903) 15 Hawaii 297, it was held that an Act entitled "An Act providing for the organization and government of counties and districts, and the management and control of public works and institutions therein," was invalid as to so much thereof as purported to create a territorial board of public institutions and to transfer to it matters theretofore belonging to the territorial superintendent of public works, and with which the counties were to have nothing to do—in view of section 45.

So in Territory v. Oahu County, (1904) 15 Hawaii 365, it was held that so much of Act 31, Laws of 1903, known as the County Act, as provides new features in territorial taxation not incidental to county organization or government, was void under the provision of section 45, and that such void portion was such an essential feature as to vitiate the whole Act.

Enactment by reference.—See Matter of Tom Pong, (1906) 17 Hawaii 566.

Vol. III, p. 196, sec. 52.

Dividing the biennial period. — The provision in section 52 that appropriations shall be made biennially does not prevent the legislature from dividing the biennial period into two parts, namely, six months before and eighteen months after the inauguration of county government, for the purpose of making different appropriations for each of those parts. In re Boyd, (1903) 15 Hawaii 361.

Vol. III, p. 197, sec. 54.

Items not necessary for current expenses. — The legislature may include in an appropriation bill passed at an extra session called under the provisions of this section an item which is not for "necessary current expenses of carrying on the government," provided the matter covered by the appropriation is one for which an appropriation may rightfully be made. In re Queen's Hospital, (1904) 15 Hawaii 514.

Section applied. — In In re Hawaiian Star Newspaper Assoc., (1904) 15 Hawaii 532, it appeared that the legislature failed at its regular session in 1903 to provide for the necessary expenses of the government for the succeeding biennial period. In its extra session, immediately after, it passed complete appropriation bills for the first six months of the biennial period and bills providing for a portion of the necessary expenses of the last eighteen months, but failed to provide for perhaps a half of the necessary expenses for those eighteen months on the supposition that those expenses would be borne by counties under an Act which turned out to be void. It was held that the expenses so unprovided for could be paid out of the last appropriation bills by the treasurer with the advice of the governor, under section 54, and that "the last appropriation bills," within the meaning of that section, were those of 1901 and not the six months bills of 1903.

Vol. III, p. 197, sec. 55.

Municipal corporations. — The provisions of this section prohibiting the granting of private charters and special franchises do not apply to municipal corporations. Emmeluth v. Oahu County, 908) 19 Hawaii 171.

License of social club. — In view of the provision of section 55, "nor shall spirituous or intoxicating liquors be sold except under such regulations and restrictions as the territorial legislature shall provide," a failure on the part of the legislature, if any there be, to provide for licenses for social clubs would not be a defense for selling without license as provided by law. Territory v. Pacific Club, (1905) 16 Hawaii 507.

Garnishment of senators' salaries. — A territorial statute by which the salary of a territorial senator is subject to garnishment for the payment of his debts is not in conflict with this section. See Kong v. Chillingworth, (1909) 19 Hawaii 428.

Limitation of bonded indebtedness. — The limitation in section 55 of bonded indebtedness of a subdivision of the territory to a certain percentage of the assessed value of taxable property of such subdivision refers to property taxable by such subdivision, and therefore a county without the power of taxation has no power to issue bonds. Robinson v. Baldwin, (1908) 19 Hawaii 9.

Power of superintendent of public works over public lands.—This section gives the superintendent of public works the same limited power of disposing of lands described in the proviso of section 262, R. L. of Hawaii, that the minister of the interior formerly had, and controls section 73 of the same Act in that regard. Pratt v. Holloway, (1906) 17 Hawaii 539.

Suspension of officer.—In In re Austin, (1903) 15 Hawaii 114, it was held that the governor had not authority to suspend an officer who, by the terms of this section, must be appointed and may be removed by the governor by and with the advice and consent of the senate, and who is to hold for four years unless sooner removed.

Repeal.—The provisions of the Hawaiian

Audit Act (Laws of 1898, Act 39) relating to the suspension of the auditor were repealed by implication by the provisions of this section, which are not only inconsistent therewith but indicate an intention to cover the whole subject. In re Austin, (1903) 15 Hawaii 114.

This section was cited in Ninomiya v. Kepoikai, (1903) 15 Hawaii 273.

Vol. III, p. 205, sec. 81.

Power of judges in chambers.—The power of the Hawaiian judges at chambers in proceedings not incident or ancillary to some cause pending before a court, conferred by the Hawaiian laws in force at the passage of the Organic Act, was preserved by the provision of section 81 of that Act, continuing in force the previous laws of Hawaii concerning "the civil courts and their jurisdiction and procedure." Carter v. Gear, (1905) 197 U. S. 348, 25 S. Ct. 491, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 787, affirming (1904) 16 Hawaii 242.

Misdemeanors committed on naval reservations.—The territorial District Courts have jurisdiction of misdemeanors committed on land reserved for naval purposes. Territory v. Carter, (1908) 19 Hawaii 198.

Creation of board of commissioners of insanity.—The Hawaiian statute (Act 140) creating a board of commissioners of insanity is not in violation of this section of the Organic Act. Matter of Atcherley, (1909) 19 Hawaii 535.

Vol. III, p. 206, sec. 84.

Disqualification of judges.—A judge is not disqualified under this section from sitting at the trial of a cause upon the facts in issue by reason of having sustained a demurrer to the plaintiff's declaration, which ruling was reversed by the appellate court. Matsuura v. Hawaii County, (1908) 19 Hawaii 197.

A justice is not disqualified from sitting in a cause in which a corporation is a party by the fact of a relative by affinity or consanguinity within the third degree holding shares of stock in the corporation, the justice having no pecuniary interest in the issue of the case either directly or through such relative. Ewa Plantation Co. v. Holt, (1907) 18 Hawaii 509.

This section does not prevent a circuit judge who had ordered a nonsuit, which was set aside by the Supreme Court, from entertaining a motion for a change of venue based on the ground that an impartial jury cannot be obtained in the circuit in which the action is pending. Spreckles v. De Bolt, (1905) 16 Hawaii 476.

An order remanding an equity cause to a judge of the Circuit Court with direction to receive evidence on an issue raised by amended pleadings filed after the close of the original hearing before said judge, and in support of which evidence was offered and rejected, does not direct a "new trial" and is not within the inhibition of this section disqualifying a judge from sitting "on an appeal, or new trial, in any case in which he may have given a previous judgment." Hitchcock v. Humphreys, (1902) 14 Hawaii 1.

For other cases under this section, see also Matter of Davis, (1904) 15 Hawaii 377; Bierce v. Hutchins, (1907) 18 Hawaii 374.

Vol. III, p. 206, sec. 86.

Record must show federal question.—The failure of the record to show that any federal question was raised or suggested before the assignment of error in the federal Supreme Court precludes the maintenance of a writ of error from that court under this section to review a judgment of the Hawaiian Supreme Court. Honolulu Rapid Transit, etc., Co. v. Wilder, (1908) 211 U. S. 145, 29 S. Ct. 46, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 124.

Jurisdiction to naturalize.—The Circuit Courts of the territory of Hawaii have power to naturalize. Territory v. Morita Kaizo, (1906) 17 Hawaii 295.

Vol. III, p. 208, sec. 91.

Sites for federal buildings.—The President is authorized, under this section, to take such of the public lands of Hawaii as he deems proper for the uses and purposes of the United States. Thus the Secretary of the Treasury may, if authorized by the President, accept a site for a federal building in Honolulu acquired in exchange for public land in Hawaii and assume the custody and control thereof, no objection thereto arising under section 3736, R. S. (6 Fed. Stat. Annot. 122), or otherwise. (1903) 24 Op. Atty-Gen. 600.

Sale without authorization of Congress.—In (1905) 25 Op. Atty-Gen. 522, it was held that the sale of a steam tug by the superintendent of public works of Hawaii, which vessel became the property of the United States upon the annexation of the Hawaiian Islands in 1898, not having been authorized by Congress, as provided in section 91, was void.

For another case under this section, see Territory v. Kerr, (1905) 16 Hawaii 363.

Vol. III, p. 209, sec. 95.

Licenses for fishing boats.—The Hawaiian statute (Act 96, S. L. 1907) requiring a license fee of five dollars for a fishing boat with a beam of thirty inches or more is not in conflict in this section. Territory v. Matubara, (1909) 19 Hawaii 641.

For other cases under this section, see Matter of Fukunaga, (1904) 16 Hawaii 306; Kapiolani v. Territory, (1907) 18 Hawaii 460.

For a case under this section, see Kapiolani v. Territory, (1907) 18 Hawaii 460.

Vol. III, p. 210, sec. 100.

Repeal.—The provision of this section which authorizes the naturalization as citizens of the United States of persons who had resided in Hawaii for five years prior to its taking effect, without a previous declaration of intention, was repealed by the Naturalization Act of June 29, 1906, ch. 3592, 34 Stat. L.

596, 1909 Supp. Fed. Stat. Annot. 365, which establishes a uniform rule of naturalization throughout the United States, repealing all inconsistent Acts, and requires a declaration of intention in all cases except of persons who have served in the army or navy. U. S. v. Rodiek, (C. C. A. 1908) 162 Fed. 469.

Vol. X, p. 92, sec. 3. [Review by Supreme Court of the United States.]

Effect not retroactive.—This section as amended did not have the effect of altering the law as previously established by judicial decisions any more than as established by statute or usage; nor did it have the effect of reversing the law as established by decisions properly made after the establishment of territorial government but before the amendment, any more than it had the effect of reversing decisions made previously, or any more than an amendment if made to the Federal Constitution permitting appeal, upon other than federal questions from the state Supreme Courts to the federal Supreme Court, would have the effect of requiring those courts to hold differently thereafter from what they had previously contrary to decisions of the federal Supreme Court. Rubenstein v. Hackfeld, (1906) 18 Hawaii 126.

The words "amount involved," as used in this section, mean the actual amount in dispute between the parties. Thus where there was a dispute as to the proper assessment for purposes of taxation it was held that the amount involved was the taxes on the difference between the assessment as made and the assessment as claimed by the taxpayer. In re Ewa Plantation Co., (1908) 19 Hawaii 72.

Final judgment.—The mere entry upon the minutes by the clerk of the Supreme Court of the territory of a decision overruling exceptions taken under Rev. Laws Hawaii 1905, sec. 1862 et seq., which did not bring up the whole case, and called upon the reviewing court merely to pass upon specific questions raised by the bill, was held not to make such decision a final judgment, so as to be subject to review in the federal Supreme Court. Cotton v. Hawaii, (1908) 211 U. S. 162, 29 S. Ct. 85, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 131.

Not applicable to case determined before Act passed.—In Notley v. Brown, (1908) 208 U. S. 438, 28 S. Ct. 385, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 559, it was held that a writ of error directed on its face to the supposed judgment of the Supreme Court of the territory of Hawaii, disposing of exceptions on non-federal grounds prior to this Act enlarging the appellate jurisdiction of the federal Supreme Court over the territorial court, could be sustained on the theory that a final judgment in the case was not rendered until after the passage of that Act, when judgment on the verdict was entered in the trial court in connection with a nunc pro tunc entry, since such judgment must necessarily have been entered after the judgment which the writ sought to review. It was also held that jurisdiction of a writ of error directed, on its face, to a supposed judgment of the Supreme Court of the territory of Hawaii, disposing of exceptions on non-federal grounds prior to this Act, could be taken by treating the writ as addressed to a later judgment of that court, quashing a writ of error to the trial court, which judgment was not formally entered until long after the writ of error from the federal Supreme Court was sued out, where to regard the entry as relating back to the time when the opinion of the court was announced would, if the same rule be applied to the nunc pro tunc entry of the judgment of the trial court, require an affirmance of the judgment of the territorial Supreme Court on the ground that the writ of error to the trial court was not sued out in time.

Effect of rehearing after passage of Act.—A judgment of the Hawaiian Supreme Court did not become final before the enactment of the Act of March 3, 1905, and hence not reviewable in the federal Supreme Court under that Act, where, although the opinion was filed prior to that enactment, a petition for rehearing was duly filed and entertained by the court, and was not denied until after the passage of such statute. Bierce v. Waterhouse, (1911) 219 U. S. 320, 31 S. Ct. 241, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 237. Compare Harrison v. Mogoon, (1907) 205 U. S. 501, 27 S. Ct. 577, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 900.

Order not appealed from.—The order of a territorial Supreme Court, reversing the order of the court below, granting a new trial, cannot be reviewed by the federal Supreme Court on a writ of error directed alone to a later decision in the same case, overruling exceptions, the record of which cannot be regarded as embracing the proceedings had below in respect to the matter of a new trial. Cotton v. Hawaii, (1908) 211 U. S. 162, 29 S. Ct. 85, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 131.

Jurisdictional amount.—A writ of error from the Supreme Court of the United States to the Hawaiian Supreme Court, to review a judgment sustaining an assessment for taxation, will not lie under this section where the amount of the tax assessed is less than the jurisdictional amount prescribed by the section. Honolulu Rapid Transit, etc., Co. v. Wilder, (1908) 211 U. S. 145, 29 S. Ct. 46, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 124.

HOMICIDE.

Vol. III, p. 231, sec. 5339.

Crime committed on land ceded for federal building.—In Battle v. U. S., (1908) 209 U. S. 36, 28 S. Ct. 422, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 670, affirming (1907) 154 Fed. 540, it was held that a murder committed upon land bought by the United States in the city of Macon, Georgia, on which it was building a post office and courthouse, and over which the state had ceded jurisdiction, was made an offense against the United States, justiciable in the federal courts, this section making it a capital offense to commit murder within any fort, arsenal, dock yard, or in any other place or district of country under the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States.

Crime in Honolulu harbor.—A murder committed on board a ship lying in the harbor of Honolulu is cognizable in the District Court of the United States for the territory of Hawaii, under this section, as committed in a haven or arm of the sea within the admiralty and maritime jurisdiction of the United States, and "out of the jurisdiction of any particular state." Wynne v. U. S., (1910) 217 U. S. 234, 30 S. Ct. 447, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 748.

Effect of Organic Act of Hawaii.—There is nothing in the Hawaiian Organic Act (Act of April 30, 1900, ch. 339, 31 Stat. L. 141, 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 186) which expressly or impliedly deprives the federal courts of their jurisdiction under section 5339, to punish a murder committed on board a ship lying in the harbor of Honolulu. Wynne v. U. S., (1910) 217 U. S. 234, 30 S. Ct. 447, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 748.

Indian reservation within a territory.—The murder of one negro by another within the limits of an Indian reservation in a territory is committed within a place or district under the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States, within the meaning of this section defining and punishing the crime of murder, as amended by the Act of Jan. 15, 1897, ch. 29, 29 Stat. L. 487, 2 Fed. Stat. Annot. 357, and extended by section 2145 (3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 387) to the Indian country, when not within the exceptions made by section 2146 (3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 388), which by reason of the race of the accused and deceased do not apply. Pickett v. U. S., (1910) 216 U. S. 459, 30 S. Ct. 265, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 566.

Jurisdiction over land not open for settlement.—In Ex p. Moran, (1906) 203 U. S. 105, 27 S. Ct. 25, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 105, it was held that land now embraced within the limits of Comanche county, Oklahoma, had become part of that territory on Aug. 4, 1901, so as to make a murder committed therein on that date an offense against the territorial rather than the federal statutes, although the land had not then been opened for settlement.

This section was cited in U. S. v. Hart, (1908) 162 Fed. 192.

Vol. III, p. 234, sec. 5341.

Wilfully.—The word "wilfully," as used in this section defining manslaughter, is synonymous with "intentionally" or "designedly." O'Barr v. U. S., (1909) 3 Okla. Crim. 319, 105 Pac. 988.

Instructions.—An instruction defining manslaughter under this section which omits the word "wilfully" is improper. O'Barr v. U. S., (1909) 3 Okla. Crim. 319, 105 Pac. 988.

In a prosecution for homicide, an instruction that the term "wilfully" as used in this section, defining manslaughter as the unlawful and wilful killing of another without malice, means a killing done wrongfully and with evil intent, committed by an act which a person of reasonable knowledge and ability must know to be contrary to duty, and that while that act must be done with evil design and knowingly, a killing under circumstances showing a reckless disregard for the life of another, and the reckless and negligent use of means calculated to take the life of another, would be a wilful killing, as defined, was held to be proper. Roberts v. U. S., (1903) 126 Fed. 897, 61 C. C. A. 427.

This section was cited in U. S. v. Hart, (1908) 162 Fed. 192.

Vol. III, p. 235, sec. 5344.

Sufficiency of indictment.—An indictment charging a violation of the statute and rules, in that, of the life preservers supplied and kept on a steamship for use of passengers thereon, upward of nine hundred were unsuitable, inefficient, and useless, and not in accordance with the statutory requirement, was held not to be bad because it did not also charge a failure to supply the requisite number of good life preservers; the furnishing to a passenger of a useless life preserver being as much a violation of the law as a failure to furnish him with any. U. S. v. Van Schaick, (1904) 134 Fed. 593.

Duties created by inspector's rules.—Inspector's rule 5, section 15, requiring masters of steam vessels to keep the fire apparatus thereon in complete working order, and to post station bills and exercise the crew in their duties in connection therewith, is within the power conferred on the board by R. S. sec. 405, 6 Fed. Stat. Annot. 10, and valid. It does not purport to create offenses, but merely to prescribe duties; but a breach of it, resulting from a master's misconduct, negligence, or inattention, causing death, is manslaughter, because so provided by Congress in R. S. sec. 5344. U. S. v. Van Schaick, (1904) 134 Fed. 592.

Violation of navigation laws.—While it is not primarily the duty of the master, under the statutes and inspectors' regulations, to equip a vessel with life preservers or fire apparatus, it is his duty before navigating to exercise care to know whether the ship has such equipment, and whether it is apparently sufficient and in accordance with law, and afterwards to exercise some care respecting its maintenance, the extent of such care being dependent on his opportunities to examine the appliance and perceive its condition; other duties, relating to the posting of station bills for the crew, and their exercise in fire drills and the use of appliances, are imposed directly upon the master by rule 5, section 15, of the inspectors' rules and regulations; and his neglect of any of such duties, whereby the life of any person is destroyed, renders him subject to indictment.

and prosecution for manslaughter under section 5344. U. S. v. Van Schaick, (1904) 134 Fed. 593.

"Violation of law."—The owner of a steamship who fails to comply with the statute requiring it to be equipped with life preservers and proper fire appliances, either by supplying none or by supplying those that are unsuitable, inefficient, and useless, and do not conform to the inspectors' rules, is guilty of a "violation of law," and subject to prosecution under this section, where such violation results in the death of a person; and in either case the offense is one which may be aided and abetted by a third person who "caused and procures" the omission, and such person may properly be charged in the indictment as a principal. U. S. v. Van Schaick, (1904) 134 Fed. 592.

Corporation.—A corporation owner of a steam vessel may be guilty of the offense stated in this section, which provides that "every owner . . . through whose fraud, connivance, misconduct, or violation of law the life of any person is destroyed, shall be deemed guilty of manslaughter, and upon conviction thereof . . . shall be sentenced to confinement at hard labor," etc., notwithstanding the fact that it cannot be subjected to the punishment imposed; and such fact does not affect the right of the government to prosecute individuals, under said section, who aid and abet the corporation in the commission of the crime. U. S. v. Van Schaick, (1904) 134 Fed. 592.

HOSPITALS AND ASYLUMS.

Vol. III, p. 252, sec. 4810.

Not limited to places where no hospitals exist.—The authority of the Secretary of the Navy under this section to procure at suitable places proper sites for navy hospitals, and to cause necessary buildings to be erected thereon, is not limited to the establishment of hospitals at places where none exist. (1908) 27 Op. Atty-Gen. 31.

Vol. III, p. 256, sec. 4824.

Authority of governor of home.—Under this section and section 4835, the governor of the Soldiers' Home, to maintain discipline, may promulgate such special orders as he deems proper, including an order forbidding the inmates to frequent a public place where they are permitted to obtain liquor, or are afforded degrading and immoral amusements, or exposed to improper temptations. Rowan v. Butler, (1908) 171 Ind. 28, 85 N. E. 714.

Vol. III, p. 259, sec. 4825.

Liability to action for tort.—The National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, being a charitable institution engaged as an agency of the federal government in the discharge of a governmental function, is not subject to suit in an action sounding in tort to recover damages for the alleged unlawful and wrongful or negligent acts of its officers in diverting and polluting the waters of a spring situated on lands of another, the power "to sue and be sued in courts of law and equity" conferred on the corporation by section 4825 being limited to matters within the scope of the other corporate powers with which it is vested. Lyle v. National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, (1909) 170 Fed. 842.

Eligibility of managers. — The question whether a congressman can be appointed a member of the board of managers of the Soldiers' Home, and become local manager of one of the homes, is wholly a matter for the decision of Congress itself. There is no constitutional objection to the election of a member of Congress as a member of the board of managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteers, although such an election would seem to be contrary to sound public policy. (1907) 26 Op. Atty.-Gen. 457.

IMMIGRATION.

Vol III, p. 298, sec. 1.

Contract laborers. — In Botis v. Davies, (1909) 173 Fed. 996, it appeared that the petitioner, who was a Greek boy then sixteen years old, wrote to a distant relative in Chicago to know if the latter would give him employment if he came to the United States, and receiving an affirmative answer he came; his father paying his passage. On his arrival the relative gave him work at fifteen dollars per month and board, where he remained for fourteen months, and then bought a horse and wagon and started in business for himself as a fruit peddler. He had no contract for employment before he came, and no wages were mentioned, and he would have come merely on the relative's promise to give him a home until he found employment. It was held that he did not come as a "contract laborer" within the meaning of this Act.

Farm laborers. — The bringing of an alien into the United States under contract to work on a farm as a laborer, under the direction of others, is within the prohibition of this section. U. S. v. Parsons, (C. C. A. 1904) 130 Fed. 681.

No exception in favor of states. — See under this title, 1909 Supp., p. 104, sec. 4.

Effect of Act of March 3, 1903. — See under this title, vol. 3, p. 304, sec. 1.

Vol. III, p. 301, sec. 5.

Learned profession. — Expert accountants are not members of a recognized learned profession within the meaning of the exception in this Act. In re Ellis, (1903) 124 Fed. 637.

Vol. III, p. 304, sec. 1.

Effect of Act of March 3, 1903. — Act Cong. March 3, 1903, ch. 1012, 32 Stat. L. 1213, 10 Fed. Stat. Annot. 102, amending and reenacting the immigration laws pre-existing, and providing for the repeal of all other conflicting provisions, re-enumerated all the excluded classes of aliens specified in this section, with some additions, but specifically omitted the clause relating to contract laborers excluded under Act Cong. Feb. 26, 1885, ch. 164, 23 Stat. L. 332, 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 298. The Congressional Record (page 3205), as to the passage of the Act of 1903, showed that the omission was intentional, but that Congress thereby intended to leave intact the contract labor laws as they previously existed. It was held that the omission to provide for the deportation of contract laborers in the Act of 1903 did not repeal the provisions of Acts Cong. Feb. 26, 1885, ch. 164, 23 Stat. L. 332, and March 3, 1891, ch. 551, 26 Stat. L. 1084, relative thereto. In re Ellis, (1903) 124 Fed. 637. See also (1907) 26 Op. Atty.-Gen. 180.

A native of Porto Rico who was an inhabitant of that island at the time of its cession to the United States by the treaty with Spain, of April 11, 1899, 30 Stat. L. 1754, 7 Fed. Stat. Annot. 814, is not, upon her arrival at the port of New York, an alien immigrant, within the meaning of the Act of Congress of March 3, 1891, providing for the detention and deportation of alien immigrants likely to become public charges. Gonzales v. Williams, (1904) 192 U. S. 1, 24 S. Ct. 177, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 317.

Vol. III, p. 305, sec. 3.

Exception of states.—The only exception made in the contract labor laws in favor of states is contained in this section and section 6 of the Act of March 3, 1903, ch. 1012, 32 Stat. L. 1213, 10 Fed. Stat. Annot. 104, in reference to advertisements printed and published in foreign countries, stating the inducements they offer for immigration. (1907) 26 Op. Atty.-Gen. 181.

Vol. III, p. 310, sec. 10.

Immigrants defined.—This section applies only to the entry into the United States of immigrants, who, according to standard definitions of the term, are persons removing into the country for the purpose of permanent residence, and the penalty imposed on the master of a vessel for neglecting to detain on his vessel any "alien who may unlawfully come to the United States" on such vessel, or to return him to the port from which he came, must be construed in the light of such general purpose, and limited in its application to cases of alien immigrants. Moffitt v. U. S., (1904) 128 Fed. 375, 63 C. C. A. 117.

Extent of shipowner's duty.—Shipowners who have wrongfully brought aliens into the United States, and have received them back on board the vessel for deportation, are not made absolute insurers of the return of the immigrants to the port from whence they came, by this section punishing as a misdemeanor the "neglect" to detain the persons so received, or to return them to that port; but nothing more is required than a faithful and careful effort to carry out the duty so imposed. Hackfeld v. U. S., (1905) 197 U. S. 442, 25 S. Ct. 456, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 826, reversing (1903) 125 Fed. 596, 60 C. C. A. 425, and overruling Warren v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1893) 58 Fed. 559. Followed in Hackfeld v. U. S., (1905) 141 Fed. 9, 72 C. C. A. 265.

Evidence of violation of section.—In Moffitt v. U. S., (1904) 128 Fed. 375, 63 C. C. A. 117, it appeared that the defendant was indicted under this section for neglecting to detain on the steamship of which he was master an alien not entitled to land in the United States, by reason of which neglect the alien escaped and landed in the United States. On the trial the following facts were shown by an agreed statement: When defendant's ship was anchored off shore at a Mexican port a number of native peddlers came on board to sell their wares. When one of them came on deck to go ashore he found that the vessel had started and proceeded some distance. Defendant refused his request that he be taken back and landed, but promised to stop and leave him on the return trip, and thereupon put him at work, but without placing him on the crew list. On arriving at San Francisco an immigration officer notified defendant not to land the Mexican without permission, but the latter stated he did not wish to land, but wanted to be taken back home, and he was not confined. Just before the vessel sailed, however, he left it without the consent or knowledge of defendant or any of his officers, and had not returned when she left the port. It was held that such facts were not sufficient to warrant the defendant's conviction, the alien not being an immigrant within the meaning and intent of the Act, whom defendant was required to put in irons or keep under guard to secure his return on the vessel, and there being no evidence or claim that defendant did not act in good faith.

Habeas corpus.—Whether the executive officers of the government, in deporting an alien immigrant, are proceeding according to law, is a judicial question, which may be inquired into on habeas corpus. Lavin v. Le Fevre, (C. C. A. 1903) 125 Fed. 693.

To what country deported.—Under this and the following section providing that all aliens unlawfully coming into the country shall, if practicable, be immediately sent back on the vessel by which they were brought in, and that any alien unlawfully coming into the country may be returned as provided by law at any time within a year thereafter, where alien immigrants unlawfully came into the country from France, and after being temporarily absent in British Columbia, returned within a year of their arrival from France, it was held that they were properly deported to France. Lavin v. Le Fevre, (1903) 125 Fed. 693, 60 C. C. A. 425.

Remission of fines.—The Secretary of Commerce and Labor has no power to remit a fine imposed by a United States court upon a steamship company for its failure to detain and return to the country whence they came aliens whose deportation has been ordered under this section. (1908) 26 Op. Atty.-Gen. 624.

Vol. III, p. 311, sec. 11.

Limitation.—Where a proceeding for the deportation of an alien as authorized by this section was not begun by the seizure of the alien within one year next after his last entry into the United States, as required by section 11, the proceeding was barred. In re Russomanno, (1904) 128 Fed. 528.

To what country deported.—See under this title, vol. 3, p. 310, sec. 10.

Vol. III, p. 313. [Decision excluding alien final unless reversed by Secretary of the Treasury.]

Conclusiveness of decision.—The decision of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, affirming the denial by the immigration officers, after examination, of the right of a person of Chinese descent to enter the United States, is no less conclusive on the federal courts under this section in habeas corpus proceedings when citizenship is the ground on which the right of entry is claimed than when the ground is domicile, and the belonging to a class excepted from the Exclusion Acts. U. S. v. Ju Toy, (1905) 198 U. S. 253, 25 S. Ct. 644, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 1040.

Due process of law.—The constitutional guaranty of due process of law is not infringed by the provision of this Act making the decision of the appropriate department on the right of a person of Chinese descent to enter the United States conclusive on the federal courts in habeas corpus proceedings, in the absence of any abuse of authority even where citizenship is the ground on which the right of entry is claimed. U. S. v. Ju Toy, (1905) 198 U. S. 253, 25 S. Ct. 644, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 1040.

Citizens of the Philippine Islands coming to the United States from foreign ports are not required to pay the head tax prescribed by this section. (1904) 25 Op. Atty-Gen. 131.

Alien diplomatic officials.—This section applies as well to alien officials coming into the United States on diplomatic missions as to aliens who are private individuals and come here for other purposes. The duty thus imposed is not a tax upon the officials of foreign governments, but is merely a charge imposed upon the transportation company for every passenger brought into the United States by it. (1905) 25 Op. Atty-Gen. 370.

Validity of department regulations regarding head tax.—In Stratton v. Oceanic Steamship Co., (1905) 140 Fed. 829, 72 C. C. A. 241, it was held that a regulation requiring the master or owner of a vessel bringing an alien to a port of the United States for the professed purpose of proceeding directly therefrom to foreign territory, to deposit the amount of the head tax with the collector before such alien shall be permitted to land, the same to be refunded on proof satisfactory to the immigration officer in charge of said port that such alien has passed by direct and continuous journey through and out of the United States, was not an amendment or addition to the statute, but was a reasonable and lawful regulation for the purpose of protecting the United States from fraud and loss, and within the power conferred on the commissioner. See also (1904) 25 Op. Atty-Gen. 109.

Vol. X, p. 103, sec. 2.

Alien residents.—An alien who in good faith has acquired and maintains his residence in the United States, on his return from a temporary absence in a foreign country is not an alien immigrant within the meaning of the immigration statutes, but has the right to leave and re-enter the United States with the same freedom as a resident who is also a citizen. In re Buchsbaum, (1905) 141 Fed. 221; Rodgers v. U. S., (1907) 152 Fed. 346, 81 C. C. A. 454; U. S. v. Nakashima, (1908) 160 Fed. 842, 87 C. C. A. 646. Contra, U. S. v. Williams, (1911) 186 Fed. 354.

Where an alien arrived by water at the port of New York and was subject to deportation, as belonging to one of the classes of aliens whose entry is prohibited, it was held to be no defense to his deportation that he had three years before arrived in the United States by water, and had remained for four months, during which he bought a farm, took out his first naturalization papers, and since his second arrival he had contracted marriage in the United States. In re Kleibs, (1904) 128 Fed. 656.

Insanity developed after debarkation.—Under this section, where an alien deserted from the vessel on which he was brought to the United States, but there was no evidence that he was either insane, epileptic, a pauper, or a person likely to become a public charge, when the vessel arrived in port, or at any other time when he was on board, nor until a month later, when he was arrested, and when he first gave evidence of insanity, it was held that the master was not chargeable with bringing an alien not entitled to land into the United States. Waterhouse v. U. S., (1908) 159 Fed. 876, 87 C. C. A. 56.

Lithographic artists.—In (1907) 26 Op. Atty-Gen. 284, it was held that two lithographic artists, who came to the United States in pursuance of a contract of employment entered into with the American Lithographic Company, of New York, their passage being prepaid by that company, and who had been excluded upon the ground that their admission would be in violation of this section relating to contract labor, should be admitted, it being shown beyond reasonable doubt that there was not a sufficient number of lithographic artists in the country to meet the demands of business.

Burden of proof.—The effect of the payment of the passage of an alien by another is to throw upon the alien the burden of proof that he is not liable to exclusion for the reasons mentioned in this section, or as a contract laborer under the Act of Feb. 26, 1885. 23 Stat. L. 322, 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 298. (1907) 26 Op. Atty-Gen. 199.

Vol. X, p. 103, sec. 3.

Repeal.—This section in so far as it placed no limitation on the length of the holding of a female alien for prostitution for which the holder might be prosecuted, was repealed by Act Feb. 20, 1907, ch. 1134, sec. 32, 34 Stat. L. 911, 1909 Supp. Fed. Stat. Annot. 178, requiring that the offense of holding must have been committed within three years after the alien entered the United States. Ex p. Lair, (1910) 177 Fed. 789.

Element of offenses.—To warrant the conviction of a defendant charged with a violation of this section where the charge is that of holding a woman so imported by the defendant and another for the purposes of prostitution, it must be shown that the defendant, either alone or in connection with such other, knowingly and wilfully imported, or caused to be imported, such woman for the purposes of prostitution, and thereafter, to effect the object of such illegal importation, knowingly and wilfully held such woman for such purposes. It is not necessary that the defendant should have detained such woman by physical force, but it is sufficient to constitute a holding within the meaning of the statute if such woman was detained for the purpose of prostitution by physical means applied to her either directly or indirectly by defendant, or by threats, express or implied, directly made to her by defendant, or by commands made to her directly or indirectly by defendant, and calculated and operating to restrain her freedom of action and will. To warrant a conviction for attempting to hold the same proof is required, except that it is not necessary that the means used should have been successful. U. S. v. Giuliani, (1906) 147 Fed. 594.

Construction of statute.—A person is not liable for penalty under this and the following section, unless in addition to assisting, encouraging, or soliciting, it is also charged that the immigration is "by reason" of an offer, solicitation, promise, or agreement to or with him, or that the immigration has been in order that the immigrant may perform labor or service by reason of an offer, solicitation, promise, or agreement to or with him. Darnborough v. Benn, (C. C. A. 1911) 187 Fed. 580.

Transportation paid by state.—A state may prepay the passage of an alien immigrant out of its public funds, provided he is qualified in other respects, the advertisement being lawful, and neither the state, nor its officers, nor anyone else having otherwise solicited or encouraged the immigration. The status of such an immigrant would be the same as that of any other alien lawfully admitted to this country. (1907) 26 Op. Atty.-Gen. 199. See also (1907) 26 Op. Atty.-Gen. 181.

"Person."—The word "person" in this section does not include a state, but it does include an officer of a state professing to act under its authority. (1907) 26 Op. Atty.-Gen. 199.

Alien residents temporarily absent.—In U. S. v. Aultman Co., (1906) 143 Fed. 922, affirmed 148 Fed. 1022, 79 C. C. A. 457, it was held that this section did not apply to a man who entered the United States as an immigrant from Germany when young and remained continuously domiciled and working in this country for twelve or more years, although without becoming naturalized, and who then went temporarily into Canada, where he had been for two weeks when the contract alleged to be in violation of the statute was made.

Promise to father of immigrant.—Where the immigration of an alien minor was procured by reason of an agreement with him through his father, who was the owner of his services, no promises or offers save those made to him "through his father" as the person entitled to his services being shown, his immigration was not obtained by means of any promise or agreement "with him," and was therefore not a violation of the statute. Darnborough v. Benn, (C. C. A. 1911) 187 Fed. 580.

Vol. X, p. 104, sec. 5.

Nature of action for recovering of penalty.—The penalty incurred under this section may be recovered by a civil action of debt brought by the United States. Hepner v. U. S., (1909) 213 U. S. 103, 29 S. Ct. 474, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 720.

Payment of transportation.—The payment of an alien's transportation to enable him to come to the United States, though one of the acts declared unlawful by section 4 of this Act, is not an act for which a penalty is incurred under this section unless it amounts to an assistance, encouragement, or solicitation of the alien's immigration with knowledge, etc., or in order that the alien may perform labor or service by reason of an offer, solicitation, promise, or agreement to or with him. Darnborough v. Benn, (C. C. A. 1911) 187 Fed. 580.

Direction of verdict.—The trial court may direct a verdict in favor of the government plaintiff in an action of debt to recover the penalty incurred under sections 4 and 5 of this Act for inducing an alien to migrate to the United States for the purpose of performing labor there, where it appears by undisputed testimony that the defendant has committed the offense out of which the cause of action arises. Hepner v. U. S., (1909) 213 U. S. 103, 29 S. Ct. 474, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 720.

Vol. X, p. 104, sec. 6.

Advertisement by state.—It is lawful for a state to advertise its inducements to immigration, and to set forth, as part of such advertisement, the scale of wages generally prevailing within its territory. The status of immigrants induced to come to this country by reason of such advertisements would be the same as that of any other aliens lawfully admitted to the United States. (1907) 26 Op. Atty.-Gen. 181; (1907) 26 Op. Atty.-Gen. 199.

The contribution of money by individuals to a state fund, to be used by the state in advertising its inducements to immigrants, which advertisement could not lawfully be published by private persons, and to repay the passage of aliens attracted by such advertisement, though without promise of employment, express or implied, would amount to encouraging or assisting immigration in the form prohibited by this section and render the parties contributing liable to the

This section is constitutional.—Oceanic Steam Nav. Co. v. Stranahan, (1909) 214 U. S. 320, 29 S. Ct. 671, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 1013, affirming (1907) 155 Fed. 428; International Mercantile Marine Co. v. Stranahan, (1909) 214 U. S. 344, 29 S. Ct. 678, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 1024, affirming (1907) 155 Fed. 428.

Enforcement by administrative rather than judicial officers.—The provision in this Act empowering the Secretary of the Treasury (now Secretary of Commerce and Labor) to exact a money penalty for bringing into the United States an alien afflicted with a loathsome or dangerous contagious disease, in violation of this section, when the official medical examination at the port of arrival shows that the alien was suffering from the disease at the time of embarkation, the existence of which might have been detected by a competent medical examination then made, as the statute requires, does not render such statute open to the objection that it defines a criminal offense, and authorizes a purely administrative officer to determine whether the defined crime has been committed, and if so, to

Vol. X, p. 105, sec. 10.

Due process of law.—Making the official medical examination at the port of arrival conclusive for the purpose of imposing the penalty enforceable by refusing clearance papers until paid, which is authorized by section 9, supra, for violating its provisions by bringing into the United States an alien afflicted with a loathsome or contagious disease from which he was suffering at the time of embarkation, the existence of which might have been detected by means of a competent medical examination then made, does not render such statute repugnant to U. S. Const., Fifth Amendment, as taking property without due process of law. Oceanic Steam Nav. Co. v. Stranahan, (1909) 214 U. S. 320, 29 S. Ct. 671, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 1013, affirming (1907) 155 Fed. 428; International Mercan-

penalties provided by section 5. (1907) 26 Op. Atty.-Gen. 199.

"Promise of employment."—The words "promise of employment" in this section are used in a broad sense, meaning not merely an offer of employment which, by acceptance, would create a contract enforceable against some definite person or persons, but any form of words which might be reasonably understood as holding out to a possible immigrant the prospect of assured employment. (1907) 26 Op. Atty.-Gen. 199.

Effect upon immigrants.—There is nothing in this Act, or in any previous Act, which would authorize the exclusion of alien immigrants because the immigration was induced by advertisement, or even by solicitation or promise of employment, unless there was an enforceable contract existing at the time of application for admission requiring them to render service as laborers. (1907) 26 Op. Atty.-Gen. 199.

inflict a punishment. Oceanic Steam Nav. Co. v. Stranahan, (1909) 214 U. S. 320, 29 S. Ct. 671, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 1013, affirming (1907) 155 Fed. 428; International Mercantile Marine Co. v. Stranahan, (1909) 214 U. S. 344, 29 S. Ct. 678, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 1024, affirming (1907) 155 Fed. 428.

Rules controlling enforcement.—The enforcement of the exaction of one hundred dollars which the Secretary of the Treasury (now Secretary of Commerce and Labor) is authorized by this section to impose for violations of its provisions against bringing into the United States aliens afflicted with loathsome or dangerous contagious diseases, is not necessarily governed by the rules controlling in criminal prosecutions merely because such exaction is a penalty. Oceanic Steam Nav. Co. v. Stranahan, (1909) 214 U. S. 320, 29 S. Ct. 671, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 1013, affirming (1907) 155 Fed. 428; International Mercantile Marine Co. v. Stranahan, (1909) 214 U. S. 344, 29 S. Ct. 678, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 1024, affirming (1907) 155 Fed. 428.

Construction of word "final."—In the provision of this section making the decision of the board of special inquiry based upon the certificate of the examining medical officer final as to the rejection of aliens affected with a loathsome, dangerous contagious disease, the word "final" is not used in such broad sense as to deprive an alien so rejected of the right of appeal unqualifiedly given by section 25 of this Act, or of the right to invoke the provisions of section 37, relating to the wife and children of a naturalized alien, in a case to which such section is applicable. Rodgers v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1907) 167 Fed. 381.

Vol. X, p. 107, sec. 15.

Construction of section.—This section and rule 24 of the immigration regulations prescribe a penalty of ten dollars for each alien on board a vessel entering a port of the United States concerning whom the master has either not furnished a list or manifest, or has furnished one which does not contain the information required by sections 12, 13, and 14 of this Act, and a collector of customs has no authority to impose a fine or to collect a sum of less than that amount for each such violation of the statute. (1905) 25 Op. Atty-Gen. 336.

The proper method of enforcing collection of a penalty imposed for a violation of sections 12, 13, and 14 of this Act, where payment is refused, is by a prosecution for the offense or an action to recover the penalty. (1905) 25 Op. Atty-Gen. 336.

Vol. X, p. 108, sec. 18.

"Landing from vessel."—The words "landing from vessel," as used in this section, mean "to go ashore," the landing being complete the moment the vessel is left and the shore is reached. Niven v. U. S., (1909) 169 Fed. 782, 95 C. C. A. 248.

Sailors.—This section does not apply to seamen landed and placed in a hospital because of illness, who were unable to return to their home port with the vessel as intended. Niven v. U. S., (1909) 169 Fed. 782, 95 C. C. A. 248.

Sailor deserting.—The ordinary case of a sailor deserting while on shore leave is not comprehended by the provisions of this section, notwithstanding the omission therefrom of the word "immigrant," which had followed the word "alien" in the earlier Acts. Taylor v. U. S., (1907) 207 U. S. 120, 28 S. Ct. 53, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 130, affirming 152 Fed. 1, 81 C. C. A. 197.

The fact that an alien seaman deserting while on shore leave was a stowaway under order of deportation does not bring the case within the provisions of this section, making it the duty of any officer in charge of any vessel bringing an alien to the United States to adopt precautions to prevent the landing of such alien at any time or place other than that designated by the immigration officers, and punishing him if he lands or permits to land any alien at any other time or place. Taylor v. U. S., (1907) 207 U. S. 120, 28 S. Ct. 53, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 130, affirming 152 Fed. 1, 81 C. C. A. 197.

Where there was no evidence that any one connected with a vessel from which an alien escaped into the United States permitted or in any way connived at the alien's desertion, neither the master nor the agents of the vessel were guilty of an offense under section 18. Waterhouse v. U. S., (1908) 159 Fed. 876, 87 C. C. A. 56.

Minor children of naturalized father.—The status, as aliens, of children born in a foreign country of alien parents is not changed by the naturalization of their father as a citizen of the United States by taking out his second papers while the children are detained in custody as immigrants at Ellis Island, and they remain subject to exclusion under the immigration laws for a dangerous contagious disease contracted before their embarkment, such children not being affected by R. S. sec. 2172, 5 Fed. Stat. Annot. 209, which provides that the minor children of persons duly naturalized "if dwelling in the United States" shall be considered as citizens thereof. U. S. v. Williams, (1904) 132 Fed. 894.

Vol. X, p. 108, sec. 20.

Right to hearing.—Where an alien had deserted from the crew of a vessel on which he was brought into the United States, and had been at large in the country for a month before he developed insanity, when he was arrested and ordered deported by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, it was held that the secretary's decision was not conclusive on the alien; the secretary, as an executive officer, being without power within the time limited by statute to order the deportation of an alien without giving him an opportunity to be heard on the questions involving his right to remain in the United States. Waterhouse v. U. S., (1908) 159 Fed. 876, 87 C. C. A. 56.

Meaning of term "transportation."—In U. S. v. Hamburg American Line, (1908) 159 Fed. 104, 86 C. C. A. 294, it was held that the term "transportation," as used in this section, should be given its ordinary meaning, viz., carriage from one place to another, and that the phrase "cost of inland transportation" therefore only includes the cost of carrying the alien from the inland place where he was found to the port of deportation, and that the government was therefore not entitled to recover under such section from the steamship company bringing the deported alien into the United States any part of the traveling expenses of an officer sent to bring the alien to the port of deportation.

Finality of decision.—The direction of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor that an alien should be deported on the vessel by which he was brought to the United States is not conclusive on the officers and agents of the vessel, neither of whom has been a party to the proceedings before the secretary. Waterhouse v. U. S., (1908) 159 Fed. 876, 87 C. C. A. 56.

Limitation.—Under this section which provides that any alien who shall come into the United States "in violation of law" may be deported at any time within two years after arrival, and section 21 which provides that the Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall deport aliens found in the United States "in violation of this Act" within three years after landing, a "deportation" for entering in violation of any prior law can only be made within two years, which means the actual deportation, and not merely the commencement of proceedings. Botis v. Davies, (1909) 173 Fed. 996.

Vol. X, p. 109, sec. 21.

Limitation.—The time fixed in this section was held to govern the deportation of an alien who landed March 3, 1907. U. S. v. Redfern, (1910) 180 Fed. 506.

Vol. X, p. 109, sec. 22.

Validity of department regulations regarding head tax.—See under this title, vol. 10, p. 102, sec. 1.

Vol. X, p. 110, sec. 25.

Res adjudicata.—Pearson v. Williams, (1906) 202 U. S. 281, 26 S. Ct. 608, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 1029, affirming (1905) 136 Fed. 734, 69 C. C. A. 386, set out in the original note.

Conclusiveness of findings.—The rule that the finding of immigration inspectors that a person apprehended for deportation is a Chinese person not entitled to enter the United States, when affirmed by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, is final, does not prevent a citizen of the United States from invoking the protection of the courts to secure his right to live within the boundaries of his own country, guaranteed by the Constitution. Ex p. Lung Wing Wun, (1908) 161 Fed. 211.

Information of right to appeal.—Under this section and rule 7 of the regulations established thereunder by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, an immigrant who, on examination by a board of special inquiry, has been denied the right to enter the United States, has the right to be informed that he has a right of appeal therefrom, and the fact that he has been so informed must be entered of record in the minutes of the board's proceedings, and withholding of that right precludes finality in the decision of the board which may in such case be reviewed by the courts on a writ of habeas corpus. Rodgers v. U. S., (1907) 152 Fed. 346, 81 C. C. A. 454.

Questions of fact.—Congress has by the immigration statutes lawfully conferred upon executive officers final and exclusive jurisdiction to hear and determine whether any particular individual is an alien or a citizen in so far at least as such determination depends upon conclusions which may be reached upon disputed questions of fact. Ex p. Watchorn, (1908) 160 Fed. 1014; U. S. v. Sprung, (C. C. A. 1910) 187 Fed. 903, reversing (1909) 182 Fed. 330.

Habeas corpus.—In Chin Yow v. U. S., (1908) 208 U. S. 8, 28 S. Ct. 201, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 369, it was held that habeas corpus should be granted by the federal courts to a Chinese person, claiming to be a citizen of the United States, who had arbitrarily been denied such a hearing and opportunity to prove his right to enter the United States as the Exclusion Acts demand, and had been placed in custody of a steamship company, to be returned to China, pursuant to the decisions of the Commissioner of Immigration and the Department of Commerce and Labor.

Deserting seaman.—This section does not render the owner of a vessel liable for the tax upon an alien seaman who deserts after reaching this country, in the absence of any evidence that the officers of the vessel had reason to suppose that the seaman made the voyage with the intention of so gaining admission, or that such intention in fact existed. U. S. v. International Mercantile Marine Co., (1909) 171 Fed. 841, 96 C. C. A. 420.

1909 Supp., p. 162, sec. 2.

Construction.—The immigration statutes should be strictly construed. Redfern v. Halpert, (C. C. A. 1911) 186 Fed. 160.

This and other sections of this Act regulating the immigration of aliens into the United States, and providing for the deportation of alien prostitutes and such as become public charges within three years, etc., were a re-enactment and extension of Act Cong. March 3, 1903, ch. 1012, 32 Stat. L. 1213, 10 Fed. Stat. Annot. 102, and prior legislation on the same subject enacted in the light of the construction placed on the prior acts by the courts. Looe Shee v. North, (1909) 170 Fed. 566, 95 C. C. A. 646.

The construction of the provision of this section for the deportation of aliens likely to become a public charge to include persons likely to become criminals does not conflict with the provision for exclusion of an alien convicted of crime. U. S. v. Williams, (1910) 175 Fed. 274.

Passage paid by state.—The payment of passage money of immigrants by a state with its funds is not prohibited by this section, but its payment with funds contributed by any society or association renders the immigrant liable to exclusion, even though the payment be made through the agency of the state or its officers, and although the immigrant would otherwise be entitled to admission. The same prohibition does not extend, however, to the payment of passage money by individuals, whether directly through the agency of a state, provided their action is, and is shown to be, in good faith individual, and not attended by such combination or concert of action as would make it substantially the act of an association or a society. (1907) 26 Op. Atty-Gen. 199.

Burden of proof.—While the payment of an immigrant's passage out of state funds does not itself require his exclusion, yet such payment operates to throw upon the immigrant the burden of showing that he does not come within any of the otherwise excluded classes, such as paupers, etc., specifically excluded by the Act. (1907) 26 Op. Atty-Gen. 410.

Under this section a person whose passage is paid by another must be prepared to show, not merely that he does not come within any of the categories of immigrants to be excluded, but also that his passage was not paid, directly or indirectly, by a corporation, association, society, municipality, or foreign government. (1907) 26 Op. Atty-Gen. 199.

Promise of employment by state officer.—An alien who arrived at New Orleans from Cuba on Aug. 5, 1907, his passage money having been paid by an agent of the Louisiana State Board of Agriculture and Immigration out of funds appropriated by that state, the agent having assured the alien of employment upon his arrival, which assurance operated as a material, if not the principal, inducement to his immigration, the expectation being that the employer would loan the alien the sum so advanced for the reimbursement of the state, was held not to be entitled to admission to the United States. (1907) 26 Op. Atty-Gen. 410.

Contract of employment unnecessary.—The classes of aliens excluded by this section include "aliens solicited or induced to immigrate by reason of offers or promises, even if there is no contract of employment." (1907) 26 Op. Atty-Gen. 410.

F. S. A. Supp.—71

"Likely to become a public charge."—The provision in this section for the deportation of aliens "likely to become a public charge" is not limited to likelihood to become a pauper, but extends to likelihood to become periodically inmates of prisons as a result of crime. U. S. v. Williams, (1910) 175 Fed. 274.

Children of naturalized parents.—Under Act March 2, 1907, ch. 2534, sec. 5, 34 Stat. L. 1229, 1909 Supp. Fed. Stat. Annot. 68, providing that a child born without the United States of alien parents shall be deemed a citizen by virtue of the naturalization of the parent taking place during the minority of the child, provided that the citizenship of such child shall begin when he begins to reside permanently in the United States, until a minor child of a naturalized parent has begun to reside permanently in the United States he is an alien, and he cannot begin to so reside if he belongs to a class of aliens debarred from entry, and the naturalization of a father will not permit his minor child born abroad, and remaining in the country of his nativity until after the naturalization, to come into the United States if prohibited from entering by Act Feb. 20, 1907, ch. 1134, 34 Stat. L. 898, excluding from admission into the United States persons belonging to enumerated classes. U. S. v. Rodgers, (C. C. A. 1911) 185 Fed. 334, affirming (1910) 182 Fed. 274.

Married women.—Where the relator was married to her husband in Cuba, and he had already entered the United States and was employed, earning daily wages sufficient to prevent himself and his wife from becoming public charges, and both were strong, healthy, and intelligent, it was held that the relator was also entitled to enter. U. S. v. Redfern, (1910) 180 Fed. 500.

Prostitute—wife of citizen.—Where an alien female was found practicing prostitution in the United States within three years after her entry, it was held that she was subject to deportation though her status at the time of entry as the wife of a citizen of the United States entitled her to enter. Looe Shee v. North, (1909) 170 Fed. 566, 95 C. C. A. 646.

Evidence of prostitution.—Evidence that an alien female was found practicing prostitution within three years after her entry was held to be evidence that she was a prostitute when she entered the United States, and was therefore subject to deportation as provided by this Act. Looe Shee v. North, (1909) 170 Fed. 566, 95 C. C. A. 646.

Aliens not destined for United States.—The immigration laws apply only to aliens applying for landing within the United States as their destination, so that an alien listed on a ship's manifest and ticketed for Halifax, on being refused admission to enter Canada, not having disavowed any intention to land there, and not having questioned the jurisdiction of the Dominion government in directing his deportation, was not entitled to his release on habeas corpus from the custody of the officers of the steamship while temporarily in port in the United States.

pending his deportation to the place from whence he came in accordance with the direction of the Dominion. U. S. v. Fielding, (1909) 175 Fed. 290.

Deportation of contract laborers.—Neither Immigration Act March 3, 1903, ch. 1012, 32 Stat. L. 1213, 10 Fed. Stat. Annot. 102, nor this section authorizes the deportation as a contract laborer of an alien who entered the United States before the later Act took effect; the former containing no provision whatever in that regard, and the latter, while making such provision, also expressly providing, in section 28, that it shall not be construed to affect "any act, thing, or matter . . . done or existing" at the time of its taking effect, but that the same shall be governed by prior laws, which are continued in force for that purpose. Botis v. Davies, (1909) 173 Fed. 996.

An alien upon promise to employ him on arrival in this country at stipulated wages in a definite occupation, made by one who advanced him money for his passage, secured by mortgage on his property, and who accompanied him on his journey, came to this country, went to work for such person at the stipulated wages and designated occupation, repaid the advance out of his wages, and continued in the employment of the person who made the promise and advance for a year. It was held that he was a contract laborer, expressly excluded by this section. Ex p. George, (1910) 180 Fed. 785.

Criminals.—Proof that an alien, prior to his immigration, committed a single act of fornication or adultery in the country from which he emigrated, was held to be insufficient to justify his deportation as an alien having been convicted of or having admitted committing a felony or other crime or misdemeanor involving moral turpitude. U. S. v. Sibray, (1910) 178 Fed. 144.

Conviction of crime in foreign country after admission.—The provisions of this section excluding from admission persons "who have been convicted of or admit having committed a felony or other crime or misdemeanor involving moral turpitude," and of section 20 requiring the deportation of any alien who shall enter the United States in violation of law, do not authorize the deportation of an alien because of his conviction of a felony in the country from which he came after his admission into the United States. Ex p. Koerner, (1909) 176 Fed. 478.

Superintendent of lumbering company.—An alien induced to come to the United States by promise of employment as superintendent of a lumbering company, conditioned that he must be a competent woodsman, logger, and mill man, and must be a first-class mechanic, does not come within the provisions of this section, provided the agreement does not require him to perform manual labor. The provisions of the statute are limited to manual labor, skilled or unskilled. (1909) 27 Op. Atty.-Gen. 383.

Hawaii.—In (1909) 27 Op. Atty.-Gen. 479, it was held that the President was authorized to sign a blank form of letter addressed to officers of the United States abroad commending to their favorable consideration an agent of the Hawaiian government, who was being sent to the Azores and Madeira to make arrangements for the transportation of immigrants from those islands to Hawaii, their passage being prepaid by the Hawaiian government, and their immigration being induced solely by a representation of the resources of Hawaiian Islands and the industrial conditions existing there, without any offer or promise of employment being made to any of them, such persons to have perfect freedom of action in choosing their places of residence and vocations.

Chinese.—The provisions of this section excluding alien immigrants afflicted with certain diseases, etc., are applicable to Chinese immigrants otherwise entitled to admission. Ex p. Lee Sheer Wing, (1908) 164 Fed. 506; Loee Shee v. North, (C. C. A. 1909) 170 Fed. 566; Ex p. Li Dick, (1909) 174 Fed. 674.

Validity as to maintenance of prostitute.—Ex p. Gouyet, (1909) 175 Fed. 230; Ex p. Lair, (1910) 177 Fed. 789, both cases following Keller v. U. S., (1909) 213 U. S. 138, 29 S. Ct. 470, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 737, set out in the original note.

Congress has power to prohibit the importation of aliens for immoral or undesirable purposes, and to punish any person who shall import, or attempt to import, an alien for prohibited purposes. Ex p. Gouyet, (1909) 175 Fed. 230.

Effect of marriage to citizen.—An alien prostitute who entered the United States and was found an inmate of a house of ill fame and practicing prostitution within three years after landing, having been since lawfully married to a native born citizen of the United States, is to be deemed a citizen, and cannot be deported under the immigration laws for her conduct precious to her marriage. (1909) 27 Op. Atty.-Gen. 507.

But the Secretary of Commerce and Labor has authority to consider the evidence connected with the marriage of an alien prostitute to a citizen of the United States, and, subject to the principle that the validity of the marriage is to be determined by the law of the place where the contract is made, may deport the woman if the facts justify the conclusion that the ceremony was entered into merely for the purpose of evading the immigration law, and with no intention on the part of the parties to live together as husband and wife. (1909) 27 Op. Atty.-Gen. 578.

Woman previously domiciled in United States.—In a prosecution for the importation of an alien woman for the purpose of prostitution, in violation of this section, it is not a defense that such woman had previously been domiciled for a time in the United States and had departed therefrom with the intention of returning. U. S. v. Villet, (1909) 173 Fed. 500.

Venue.—The offense of importing a female alien for prostitution in violation of this section is committed and is complete the moment the immigrant is landed in the United States, at which point the offense is triable under Const., art. 3, sec. 2, cl. 3, declaring that the trial of all crimes except cases of impeachment shall be held in the state where the crime has been committed, and the Sixth Amendment, declaring that accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial in the state and district wherein the crime has been committed. Ex p. Lair, (1910) 177 Fed. 789.

1909 Supp., p. 164, sec. 4.

Construction of statute.—This section being penal in its nature must be strictly construed. Grant Bros. Constr. Co. v. U. S., (Ariz. 1911) 114 Pac. 955.

Evidence.—On a trial of an action against a defendant charged with having prepaid the transportation of a contract laborer into the United States in violation of sections 4 and 5, a proposed manifest for the immigrant on the form prescribed under section 12 of the Act, filled out by a third person before sailing of the vessel, and which was not used, but

Indictment.—In Ex p. Lair, (1910) 177 Fed. 789, an indictment charged that petitioner, in connection with another, at Chicago, in the eastern division of the northern district of Illinois, unlawfully, etc., imported into the United States for prostitution, and unlawfully, etc., did hold from Jan. 1, 1906, until July 15, 1907, pursuant to such illegal importation, in a house of prostitution in Chicago, for the purpose of prostitution, an alien named P., then a citizen of France, within three years after her entry, and that she came to and entered the United States within three years prior thereto. It was held that such allegations charged the offense of holding and harboring a female alien for the forbidden purpose within three years after entry, and not her illegal importation for such purpose.

which contained a statement that the immigrant's passage was paid by the defendant, was held to be incompetent as evidence against him, as the declaration of a third person not made in his presence. Regan v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1910) 183 Fed. 293.

Measure of proof required.—In an action brought under sections 4 and 5, the government has the burden of proving the violation of the Act by the defendant beyond a reasonable doubt. Regan v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1910) 183 Fed. 293.

1909 Supp., p. 164, sec. 5.

Criminal prosecutions or criminal action for penalty.—Congress, by providing in this section for a civil action for the recovery of a penalty for a violation of section 4, did not preclude a prosecution by indictment to enforce such penalty. U. S. v. Stevenson, (1909) 215 U. S. 190, 30 S. Ct. 35, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 153.

Intent.—To warrant the recovery of the penalty prescribed by this section for encouraging immigration of alien contract laborers, there must have been a conscious violation of the Act. Grant Bros. Constr. Co. v. U. S., (Ariz. 1911) 114 Pac. 955.

Jury questions.—Whether a construction company for which alien contract laborers were imported in violation of sections 4 and 5 had such knowledge of the unlawful acts as to warrant assessment of a penalty was held under the evidence to be a jury question. Grant Bros. Constr. Co. v. U. S., (Ariz. 1911) 114 Pac. 955.

Costs.—A successful party in a suit under this section for penalties for encouraging immigration of alien contract laborers is entitled to costs. Grant Bros. Constr. Co. v. U. S., (Ariz. 1911) 114 Pac. 955.

Evidence.—In an action under this section for penalties for encouraging immigration of alien contract laborers, evidence of statements made by the associates and employees of one with whom the defendant contracted was held to be admissible to show the acts done under the contract, though the evidence also tended to show defendant's knowledge of the unlawful acts. Grant Bros. Constr. Co. v. U. S., (Ariz. 1911) 114 Pac. 955.

Likewise it was held that a decision of a board of special inquiry of the federal immigration service respecting the status of the particular aliens was properly received in evidence. Grant Bros. Constr. Co. v. U. S., (Ariz. 1911) 114 Pac. 955.

1909 Supp., p. 165, sec. 6.

No exceptions in favor of state.—This section contains no exceptions in favor of a state in reference to specific promises of employment to individual immigrants, nor any requirements that the promises of employment, in order to work exclusion, must be the sole inducement to exclusion, (1907) 26 Op. Atty.-Gen. 410,

1909 Supp., p. 165, sec. 8.

Venue.—The offense of bringing into and landing in the United States an alien not lawfully entitled to admission, made a misdemeanor by this section, can be prosecuted only in the district where such alien is landed, and the fact that the person who unlawfully brought in a child under sixteen years of age, unaccompanied by one or both of her parents, afterward took such child to another district, does not confer jurisdiction on the court in such district. U. S. v. Capella, (1909) 169 Fed. 890.

1909 Supp., p. 166, sec. 10.

Finality of decision.—Where, on the arrival of an alien, he was examined by the medical officer of the United States public health and marine service, who certified that he was "afflicted with idiocy," and thereafter a board of special inquiry decided on such certificate that the alien was not entitled to enter and directed that he be deported, it was held that the decision of the board was a conclusive finding as to the existence of the physical disability and that the applicant was within section 2 providing that all idiots shall be excluded. U. S. v. Rodgers, (1910) 182 Fed. 274, affirmed (C. C. A. 1911) 185 Fed. 334.

1909 Supp., p. 166, sec. 12.

Manifest.—Where an alien endeavored in Europe to secure passage to New York, and was told that if he purchased a ticket to Halifax and wished to continue to New York he could do so without extra charge, and was thereupon ticketed by the steamship officers and entered on the manifest as destined to Halifax, N. S., when, in fact, his destination was New York, it was held that such acts by the officers of the steamship would constitute a violation of section 12 requiring the master of a vessel to deliver to the immigration officers at the port of arrival a list or manifest made at the time and place of embarkment, stating the name, nationality, etc., and the final destination, as well as the seaport for landing in the United States, of each alien destined to land therein. U. S. v. Fielding, (1909) 175 Fed. 290.

Hawaii.—A territorial government, such as Hawaii, is not a municipality or a quasi-municipality. (1909) 27 Op. Atty-Gen. 479.

1909 Supp., p. 169, sec. 19.

Construction of statute.—This section provides that if the owner of any vessel bringing an alien not entitled to enter shall make any charge for the return of such alien, or shall take any security from him for the payment of such charge, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor. It has been held that such provision applies only to acts done within the United States, since to construe it as applicable to acts occurring wholly within foreign territory would render it violative of international law. U. S. v. Nord Deutscher Lloyd, (1911) 186 Fed. 391.

"Taking security."—Under this section an indictment alleging that the defendant at Bremen collected return passage from certain proposed immigrants who were within the excluded classes, and held the money as security for a charge to be made for deportation, did not charge the taking of the money as security within the United States, since to retain money taken in a foreign country was not a continuous repetition of the "taking" within the United States by reason of the fact that the aliens were brought to the United States and ordered deported because not entitled to enter. U. S. v. Nord Deutscher Lloyd, (1911) 186 Fed. 392.

"Charge."—It has been held that the word "charge," as used in this section, does not import a continuing act, but means an overt act, by which the charging party manifests his purpose to demand the money charged from the person charged, excluding the subsequent relations which are consequences of the act, and that an indictment is fatally defective which fails to allege that the forbidden "charge" was made with the intent to apply the amount so collected to the return of the aliens under deportation. U. S. v. Nord Deutscher Lloyd, (1911) 186 Fed. 391.

Nature of proceedings.—A proceeding for the deportation of an alien is not criminal in its character, and an order of deportation is not a punishment for crime so as to entitle the alien to the constitutional guaranties and safeguards accorded to a citizen accused of crime. Sire v. Berkshire, (1911) 185 Fed. 967, 971; Ladaux v. Berkshire, (1911) 185 Fed. 971.

Not retroactive.—Where an alien lawfully entitled to enter under the Act of 1903, then in force, not being within one of the prohibited classes, arrived on Feb. 14, 1905, and was arrested on July 29, 1910, and ordered deported as a person practicing prostitution in the United States, the steamship company by which she was brought to the United States was not liable under the Act of 1907 for the cost of her deportation from the port of entry, since the provision of that Act for deportation at the expense of the steamship companies should be construed as prospective and only applicable to aliens brought to the United States after its adoption, since if otherwise construed it would be unconstitutional as depriving such companies of their property without due process of law. U. S. v. North German Lloyd Steamship Co., (1911) 185 Fed. 158.

Right to counsel.—Where an alien in deportation proceedings did not deny her alienage nor that at the time of her arrest she was engaged in immoral business, and it appeared that she was represented by counsel on a hearing before the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, the deportation was pursuant to due process of law, though she was not permitted to consult an attorney before she was first examined by the immigration officers. Sire v. Berkshire, (1911) 185 Fed. 967; Ladaux v. Berkshire, (1911) 185 Fed. 971.

"Entering in violation of law."—An alien who falsely represents himself to be a citizen, and by such artifice and fraud secures admission to the United States, is guilty of "entering in violation of law," within the meaning of this section. Williams v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1911) 186 Fed. 479.

Expiration of time.—Under Act Cong. March 3, 1903, ch. 1012, 32 Stat. L. 1213, 10 Fed. Stat. Annot. 109, and this section, providing for the deportation of aliens unlawfully in the country within three years after landing, deportation need not be completed within that time, the government having the whole of the last day of the three years in which to make the arrest, and prescription being interrupted by the arrest, the government is entitled to a reasonable time in which to carry out the sentence of deportation. U. S. v. Redfern, (1910) 180 Fed. 506. See also U. S. v. International Mercantile Marine Co., (1911) 186 Fed. 689.

In Matsumura v. Higgins, (C. C. A. 1911) 187 Fed. 601, it appeared that the petitioner, a Japanese alien, was convicted of importing an alien prostitute into the United States, sentenced to imprisonment, and on investigation by the Acting Secretary of Commerce and Labor was found to belong to the excluded class and ordered deported. It was held that since domiciliary rights could not grow for the benefit of petitioner during the period of his incarceration, the deportation writ was in abeyance during such period, and on its expiration was subject to immediate execution, though petitioner then had been in the United States more than three years.

Likely to become public charge—involving moral turpitude.—In Ex p. Saraceno, (1910) 182 Fed. 955, it appeared that the petitioner, having immigrated to the United States in 1899, returned to Italy in January, 1909, and was followed about four months thereafter by his wife and children. He remained there until September, 1910, when he returned to the United States alone. He was a barber by trade and had followed that occupation in New York during his residence there, was twenty-nine years of age, and had twenty-five dollars when he landed. He intended to go to his brother, and was not subject to any mental or physical disability. On his examination it was shown that he had been twice arrested during his former residence in New York, and on the second occasion was convicted of carrying a concealed weapon and sentenced to imprisonment for fifteen days, his offense being a misdemeanor under the New York law. It was held that petitioner was not a person likely to become a public charge, or a person convicted of an offense involving moral turpitude, and was not subject to deportation on either of such grounds.

Clandestine entry at border port.—A Chinese alien entering the United States from Canada surreptitiously in the night, avoiding inspection and examination at a designated place of entry, enters in violation of section 36, and, like any other alien so entering, is subject to arrest on a warrant issued by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor and to be deported to Canada or to China, the "country whence he came," under the provisions of sections 20 and 21 of the Act, without regard to the provisions of the Chinese Exclusion Acts. And it is no defense that he is a domiciled merchant in the United States entitled to enter under such Acts; the deportation in such case being without prejudice to his right to subsequently apply for admission in a lawful way. Ex p. Li Dick, (1909) 174 Fed. 674.

Chinese Exclusion Act.—This and the following section do not affect the previous special provisions of Chinese Exclusion Act of Sept. 13, 1888, ch. 1015, secs. 7 and 13, 25 Stat. L. 477, 479, 1 Fed. Stat. Annot. 770, 772, for deporting Chinese laborers, especially since section 43 of the Immigration Act provides that the Act should not affect existing laws relating to Chinese exclusion, and the Chinese Exclusion Act furnishes an exclusive remedy for deporting Chinese laborers. Wong You v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1910) 181 Fed. 313, reversing order 176 Fed. 933.

Living in adultery after entry.—That an alien is living in adultery within the United States is not ground for deportation, such conduct being solely within the police power of the state. U. S. v. Sibray, (1910) 178 Fed. 144.

Country to which deported.—Under the immigration laws providing for the deportation of aliens not entitled to enter the United States, to the country whence they came when they illegally entered the United States, regardless of their nativity, except aliens intending to enter the United States for the convenience of their voyage, the Secretary of Commerce and Labor has no discretion as to the place to which an alien must be deported; and hence a warrant attempting to deport an alien to a country other than that from whence he came is illegal and void. U. S. v. Redfern, (1911) 186 Fed. 603.

Attendants.—The Secretary of Commerce and Labor is empowered by sections 20 and 21 to select attendants to accompany aliens ordered to be deported, where they are mentally or physically diseased in such a manner as to require attendance and care during the voyage. The steamship or transportation companies by which such aliens came to this country are required to receive the attendants so selected at the same time that they receive the aliens to be deported, and convey them, with the aliens, to the foreign places of destination. The steamship companies are required to furnish such attendants transportation to and from the alien's destination and to defray all expenses incident to such employment. (1907) 26 Op. Atty.-Gen. 381.

Alien resident temporarily absent.—Under this section which authorizes the deportation of any alien who has entered the United States in violation of law at any time within three years after entry, the fact that an alien entering is a resident of the United States and left temporarily is immaterial, and the legality of the last entry is to be determined as though there had been no previous entry, with the right to deport within three years thereafter if such entry is unlawful. Ex p. Petterson, (1908) 166 Fed. 537; Ex p. Hoffman, (1910) 179 Fed. 839, 103 C. C. A. 327; Sibray v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1911) 185 Fed. 401, reversing (1910) 178 Fed. 144, 150; U. S. v. Sprung, (C. C. A. 1910) 187 Fed. 903, reversing (1909) 182 Fed. 330. Contra, Redfern v. Halpert, (C. C. A. 1911) 186 Fed. 150.

In U. S. v. Hook, (1908) 166 Fed. 1007, it appeared that the petitioner, a Canadian by birth and citizenship, entered the United States in 1901 and was an inmate of houses of prostitution in various cities until 1905, when she went to Philadelphia to care for an invalid sister. She remained there two years, when she resumed life as a prostitute, and in the fall of 1907 went back to Canada, where she stayed four days, when she returned to the United States and continued her misconduct until she was arrested. It was held that the three-year period within which she was subject to deportation dated from her return from Canada, and that she was therefore unlawfully within the country.

In U. S. v. Williams, (1911) 187 Fed. 470, it appeared that an alien of the excluded classes, having been in the United States more than three years, shortly before his arrest as an alien not entitled to enter, while in Niagara Falls, passed from the American to the Canadian side to view the falls, and, after staying there an hour or more, came back to New York, and shortly thereafter was arrested. It was held that his return to the United States after going into Canada constituted a re-entry, after which he was subject to deportation.

A judgment of acquittal in a criminal prosecution of an alien for falsely claiming citizenship, entered on a directed verdict, is not a bar to proceedings for his deportation, under this section, for having obtained admission to the United States in violation of law by falsely representing himself to be a citizen. Williams v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1911) 186 Fed. 479.

Review by courts.—There is no provision in Immigration Act March 3, 1903, ch. 1012, § 32 Stat. L. 1213, 10 Fed. Stat. Annot. 102, nor Act Feb. 20, 1907, ch. 1134, 34 Stat. L.

898, 1909 Supp. Fed. Stat. Annot. 161, making the decision of the immigration officers conclusive as to the right of an alien domiciled in this country to remain, and where such decision involves a question of law as well as of fact it will be reviewed by the courts. Botis v. Davies, (1909) 173 Fed. 996.

In proceedings for the deportation of alien immigrants, while the courts are bound by the findings of the Executive Department they cannot properly refuse relief where on the admitted facts it appears as a matter of law that the person sought to be deported is not within the inhibition of the statute. Ex p. Watchorn, (1908) 160 Fed. 1014; Ex p. Petterson, (1908) 166 Fed. 536; Ex p. Koerner, (1909) 176 Fed. 478; Davies v. Manolia, (1910) 179 Fed. 818, 103 C. C. A. 310.

Habeas corpus.—Where an alien seeking to enter the United States is ordered deported by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, a district judge has no jurisdiction to set aside such order on habeas corpus, unless the secretary violated the statute in respect to all of the grounds on which the deportation is based. U. S. v. Williams, (1910) 175 Fed. 274.

Where an alien not entitled to enter the United States was held under an illegal warrant directing his deportation to a country other than whence he came, it was held that he was entitled to a release on habeas corpus, under the rule that a prisoner is entitled to his liberty where the sentence is illegal. U. S. v. Redfern, (1911) 186 Fed. 603.

Where neither the application for the warrant of arrest nor any of the papers on which it was issued were shown to an alien or her counsel during the hearing, and before the passing of an order for deportation, as required by immigration rule 35e, it was held that she was entitled to a writ of habeas corpus to determine the validity of her detention. Ex p. Avakian, (1910) 188 Fed. 688.

On habeas corpus to determine the legality of the detention of an alien in deportation proceedings, the only question for review is the legality of the alien's detention on the return day of the writ, and matters subsequent thereto are not proper in a traverse to the return. Ex p. Avakian, (1910) 188 Fed. 688.

Warrant.—Neither the Immigration Act nor the promulgated regulations require that a warrant of arrest in deportation proceedings shall state the alleged grounds on which deportation will be demanded. U. S. v. Williams, (1910) 175 Fed. 274.

A warrant of arrest of an alien for deportation, charging that he had been induced or solicited to migrate to this country by an offer or promise of employment or in consequence of an oral agreement to perform unskilled labor in this country, was held to be sufficient, especially where unobjected to on the hearing and criticised for the first time after deportation was ordered and collaterally on a writ of habeas corpus. Ex p. George, (1910) 180 Fed. 785.

A warrant for the deportation of an alien charged to be unlawfully in the country is not insufficient because signed by the Assistant Secretary of Commerce and Labor instead of the Secretary. U. S. v. Redfern, (1910) 180 Fed. 506.

A deportation warrant charged that the alien was a member of the excluded classes, in that he was a contract laborer and had been induced to migrate by an offer or promise of employment under an agreement to perform manual labor in the United States. It was held that the charge was sufficiently set forth in the warrant. Ex p. Michele, (1911) 188 Fed. 449.

Necessity of hearing.—Where a warrant of arrest, under which proceedings for the deportation of an alien were instituted, conducted, and concluded, charged alone a violation of this Act, but the proof and findings of the inspector before whom the hearing was had showed that the accused arrived in this country in 1906, it was held that such proceedings did not authorize a warrant of deportation by the Department of Commerce and Labor for violation of Act March 3, 1903, ch. 1012, 32 Stat. L. 1213, 10 Fed. Stat. Annot. 102, then in force, without a hearing on such charge, and that a person taken into custody on a warrant so issued was entitled to discharge on a writ of habeas corpus. Davies v. Manolis, (C. C. A. 1910) 179 Fed. 818.

Marriage to citizen after deportation order.—Where, after an alien had been ordered deported because she was afflicted with a contagious disease, she married a citizen, it was held that she was not thereby relieved from the order of deportation, under R. S. sec. 1994, 1 Fed. Stat. Annot. 786, providing that any woman married to a citizen of the United States, and who might herself be lawfully naturalized, shall be deemed a citizen. Ex p. Kaprielian, (1910) 188 Fed. 694.

Conviction of crime in foreign country after admission.—See under this title, 1909 Supp., p. 162, sec. 2.

Class of transportation of attendant.—A regulation of the department which provides that "attendants will accompany aliens to official destination, and will, when proceeding abroad, be required to travel under the same conditions as the alien," is appropriate, if in nearly all cases the usefulness of the attendants would be seriously impaired unless they went in the same class as the alien; but the second part of the regulation, providing that all attendants "when returning shall travel second class," is not binding upon the vessel owners. If the attendant in going has traveled in a class in which he would not naturally travel, by reason of the necessity for his constant attendance upon the disordered alien, his ticket may be changed on the return trip. If there are a variety of cases properly admitting of the separate classification of the two persons, the Department of Commerce and Labor cannot determine arbitrarily to what class the attendant is to be consigned. The steamship company, on the other hand, cannot nullify the law by insisting that attendants travel in the steerage when they are not needed there and are persons who could not be reasonably expected to accept employment upon such conditions. (1907) 26 Op. Atty.-Gen. 381.

"Expense incident to such service."—The phrase "expense incident to such service," as used in the proviso of this section, is all the expense directly and incidentally caused by the fact that such service has been required. This includes the return trip of the attendant and also his compensation. The expression "all the expenses incident to the employment and detail of attendants" comes under the same head. (1907) 26 Op. Atty.-Gen. 381.

Fair trial.—An alien was arrested on Sept. 19, 1909, and was accorded a hearing before the immigration officers on the next day, when she was informed of her right to be represented by counsel, but, waiving such right, she was sworn and examined at length.

She was again examined by the officers a few days later, when she was represented by counsel, who also examined three other witnesses before the officers, and she was again examined before one of the immigration inspectors on Nov. 23, 1909. It was held that she was accorded a fair trial before the department, which precluded a review of their conclusions of fact, reached on conflicting evidence, by the courts. De Bruler v. Gallo, (C. C. A. 1911) 184 Fed. 566.

Former jeopardy.—Const., Amend. 5, providing that no person shall be subject for the same offense to be twice put in jeopardy of life or limb, applies only to criminal proceedings, and hence has no application to proceedings for the deportation of an alien. Sire v. Berkshire, (1911) 185 Fed. 967; Ladaux v. Berkshire, (1911) 185 Fed. 971.

Constitutionality.—The provision of the Immigration Act declaring that an alien woman who subsequent to landing commits a specified offense shall be deported is a proper exercise of police power, but the provision that the cost of her deportation shall be imposed on another person who had nothing to do with the commission of such offense is not an exercise of such power. U. S. v. North German Lloyd Steamship Co., (1911) 185 Fed. 158.

Review by court.—After an order of deportation has been entered in deportation proceedings against an alleged undesirable alien, the only issue reviewable on a writ of habeas corpus is whether the alien had been given a fair hearing by executive officers on an order to show cause why she should not be deported, and it is therefore error to refer the proceeding to a commissioner to take testimony on a new issue as to the alien's alleged marriage and whether her husband was a citizen. De Bruler v. Gallo, (C. C. A. 1911) 184 Fed. 566.

dians are the wards of the United States, acting through executive officers pursuant to regulations promulgated under the authority of the President, pursuant to R. S. secs. 463, 465, yet in the absence of such regulations defining what conduct of Indians shall be deemed reprehensible and subject them to correction, it does not rest in executive discretion to administer corrective punishment as to members of a tribe having a treaty with the United States covenanting that bad Indians shall not be punished by the United States except pursuant to laws defining their offenses and prescribing the punishments therefore. In re Bi-A-Lil-Le, (1909) 12 Ariz. 150, 100 Pac. 450.

Vol. III, p. 348, sec. 2057.

Conditions of bond.—That the bond required from and given by an Indian agent contains provisions not required by any statutory provision does not affect its validity, where its conditions are not in violation of law, and it is entered into voluntarily by both principal and surety. U. S. Fidelity, etc., Co. v. U. S., (1907) 150 Fed. 550, 80 C. C. A. 446.

Criminal prosecution as bar to civil action.—The conviction and imprisonment of an Indian agent for malfeasance in office is not a bar to a subsequent suit by the United States, on his bond to recover the amount of public money misappropriated or unaccounted for by him. U. S. Fidelity, etc., Co. v. U. S., (1907) 150 Fed. 550, 80 C. C. A. 446.

Action on bond.—In an action on an Indian agent's bond, a transcript of the books and proceedings of the Treasury Department is admissible, though it contains some items of credit or debit concerning which it is not competent evidence. U. S. v. Pierson, (C. C. A. 1906) 145 Fed. 814.

It is not, however, evidence of the receipt by the agent of moneys that did not come to his hands through the ordinary channels of the department. U. S. v. Pierson, (C. C. A. 1906) 145 Fed. 814.

Where, in an action on the bond of an Indian agent, the transcript of the books and proceedings in the Treasury Department contained a debit and credit statement of the account and a showing of the items in dispute, it was held not objectionable because it also contained explanatory memoranda showing the grounds of the rulings of the accounting officers concerning the items rejected, and, in some instances, the evidence on which they relied. U. S. v. Pierson, (C. C. A. 1906) 145 Fed. 814.

In an action on a bond of a United States Indian agent, a transcript from the books and proceedings of the Treasury Department is not conclusive of the claims of the government; the court being authorized to allow disallowed items on facts either appearing on the face of the transcript or established by extraneous evidence. U. S. v. Pierson, (C. C. A. 1906) 145 Fed. 814.

Disbursement of funds.—Where, because the members of one of two bands of Indians had committed certain depredations, the federal authorities withheld from them the greater portion of the annuity to which they would otherwise have been entitled, and the Indian agent was instructed to disburse to each member of the offending band $1.93, and to each of the other band $11.20, it was held that such agent had no authority to divide all of the money equally between the members of both bands, because of their threatening attitude, with the consent of the members of the unoffending band, and that his act in so doing rendered him and his sureties liable as for a diversion of the funds. U. S. v. Pierson, (C. C. A. 1906) 145 Fed. 814.

Vol. III, p. 356, sec. 8. [Officers and others presenting false vouchers to forfeit all claims, etc.]

Action on bond of Indian agent.—This section, which provides that the presentation by an Indian agent of vouchers, accounts, and claims, containing material misrepresentations of fact in regard to the amounts due and paid shall not constitute an accounting, and making it the duty of the accounting officers of the government to reject such vouchers, does not impose a penalty, nor render an action to recover the indebtedness resulting from the rejection of such accounts one for the recovery of a penalty, but merely prescribes a statutory rule of accounting, which becomes a part of the contract of a surety for an Indian agent, to which his obligation is subject, and it is no defense to such an action on the agent's bond that vouchers so rejected contained correct and true items of expenditure; the agent having the right on their rejection to furnish true vouchers for all items for which he was entitled to credit. U. S. Fidelity, etc., Co. v. U. S., (1907) 150 Fed. 550, 80 C. C. A. 446.

Vol. III, p. 359, sec. 2086.

Indians absent from their reservation without permission from the United States had no individual rights to the annuities promised to their tribes by treaty, and paid at the tribal agency conformably to the Act of Aug. 30, 1852, 10 Stat. L. 41, ch. 103, from which this section was taken in part, and which forbade payment to be made to any attorney or agent, and required it to be made directly to the Indians themselves or to the tribe per capita, "unless the imperious interest of the Indian or Indians or some treaty stipulation shall require the payment to be made otherwise, under the direction of the President." Sac Indians v. Sac Indians, (1911) 220 U. S. 481, 31 S. Ct. 473, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 552, affirming 45 Ct. Cl. 287.

Vol. III, p. 367, sec. 2103.

Contract for services.—A contract with an Indian not a citizen of the United States, for the payment of money in consideration of services to be rendered to the said Indian relative to lands of his tribe which he proposes to enter as allotments, falls within the provisions of this section, and where not executed and approved as required by the said section is void. Smith v. Martin, (1911) 28 Okla. 836, 115 Pac. 866.

Vol. III, p. 370, sec. 2107.

Attorney's agreement with other attorney for part of contingent fee.—An agreement by attorneys having a contract for a contingent fee with Indians, approved by the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, as required by R. S. sec. 2103, 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 367, to pay other attorneys, who had assisted in its procurement, a part of the fee, and creating an equitable lien therefor upon the fee when received, was held not to be an assignment of the contract within the meaning of this section, prohibiting assignments of such contracts except under certain conditions. Gordon v. Gwydir, (1910) 34 App. Cas. (D. C.) 508.

Vol. III, p. 373, sec. 2116.

Effect of Act of March 1, 1889.—Act of March 1, 1889, ch. 333, sec. 6, 25 Stat. L. 784, 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 397, repealed all laws previously existing intended to prevent the Chickasaw Nation from lawfully making leases for mining coal for a period not exceeding ten years. It has been held that leases executed by the national secretary of the Chickasaw Nation, in October, 1890, for the mining of coal and other minerals, were valid, so far as they authorized the mining of coal for a period not exceeding ten years. McBride v. Farrington, (1906) 149 Fed. 114, 79 C. C. A. 56, affirming (1904) 131 Fed. 797.

Invalidity of lease.—A lease of Indian lands to a white man without the consent of the Indian agent and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and without authorization by Act of Congress or treaty regulation, is void. Coe v. Low, (1904) 36 Wash. 10, 77 Pac. 1077.

Vol. III, p. 374, sec. 2118.

Injuries to personal or property rights.—By this section and sections 2119 and 2124 the executive branch of the government is bound to protect Indians residing on a reservation in the possession and occupancy of their land; but this affords no remedy to the Indian for an injury to his personal or property rights, and for such remedy he must go to some court of competent jurisdiction. Smith v. Mosgrove, (1908) 51 Ore. 495, 94 Pac. 970.

Right of Indian to lay off towns.—See under this title, vol. 3, p. 447, sec. 16.

Vol. III, p. 376, sec. 2126. [Dead timber may be cut, etc.]

Selection of trees by government agent.—Where the United States, through its agents, selected logging superintendents, who were intrusted with the supervision of the cutting of timber on an Indian reservation, and the duty of determining the particular trees which came within the definition of "dead and down timber," which duty required the exercise of judgment and discretion, and such judgment and discretion were honestly exercised, it was held that the government was bound thereby, and could not charge one to whom it contracted to sell the logs after they should be cut and banked with liability beyond the contract price, on the ground that some of the logs which were cut and banked, and which the purchaser took possession of under his contract, were cut from living green trees. U. S. v. Bonness, (1903) 125 Fed. 485, 60 C. C. A. 321.

Vol. III, p. 382, sec. 2139.

The words "Indian country," as used in this section, do not, standing alone, embrace territory in which, at the time the Indian title has been extinguished, and over which, with its inhabitants, the jurisdiction of the state for all purposes of government is full and complete. Dick v. U. S., (1908) 208 U. S. 340, 28 S. Ct. 399, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 520.

Former Cass Lake reservation.—The introduction of intoxicating liquors within the former Cass Lake Indian reservation, though sold by a white man upon lands purchased from the heirs of a deceased allottee, is a violation of article 7 of the treaty of Feb. 22, 1855, 10 Stat. L. 1165, with the Chippewa Indians, and of section 2139, R. S., as amended. (1905) 25 Op. Atty-Gen. 416.

Manner of proceeding.—In case of violation of this section, proceedings may be taken under the section as amended, and under section 2140. (1905) 25 Op. Atty-Gen. 416.

Vol. III, p. 384, sec. 1.

Constitutionality.—In Matter of Heff, (1905) 197 U. S. 488, 25 S. Ct. 506, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 848, it was held that a conviction could not be had under this statute for selling liquor to an Indian, the sale not being on a reservation, and the Indian having been made a citizen and subject to the civil and criminal laws of the state.

But in Hallowell v. U. S., (1911) 221 U. S. 317, 31 S. Ct. 587, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 750, it was held that a conviction of an Indian of the offense of introducing intoxicating liquor into the Indian country and into an Indian allotment while the title to the same is held in trust by the government may be had under this Act, although the defendant Indian is a citizen of the United States and entitled, under the Acts of Aug. 7, 1882, 22 Stat. L. 341, ch. 434, sec. 7, and Feb. 8, 1887, 24 Stat. L. 388, ch. 119, sec. 6, 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 496, to the rights, privileges, and immunities of such citizens, and to the benefit of the laws, civil and criminal, of the state in which his allotment is situated, and upon which the offense is alleged to have been committed. And in U. S. v. Sutton, (1909) 215 U. S. 291, 30 S. Ct. 116, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 200, reversing (1908) 165 Fed. 253, the Supreme Court held that Congress could enact so much of this section as makes criminal the introduction of intoxicating liquor upon an allotment within the limits of the Yakima Indian reservation, in the state of Washington, made and patented to the Indian allottees under the Act of Feb. 8, 1887, 24 Stat. L. 388, ch. 119, 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 494, by which the title is held in trust by the government, and is not alienable by the allottee without the consent of the United States, since, under the provisions with respect to Washington of the Enabling Act of Feb. 22, 1889, 25 Stat. L. 677, ch. 180, sec. 4, 7 Fed. Stat. Annot. 121, jurisdiction and control of Indian lands remain in the United States. See also U. S. v. Boss, (1906) 160 Fed. 132; U. S. v. Hall, (1909) 171 Fed. 214; Gearlds v. Johnson, (1911) 183 Fed. 611.

The provision of article 9 of the agreement made May 1, 1893, with the Nez Perce tribe of Indians, confirmed by Act Aug. 15, 1894, 28 Stat. L. 330, ch. 290, that allottees of such tribe, whether under the care of an Indian agent or not, shall be subject for a period of twenty-five years "to all the laws of the United States prohibiting the sale or other disposition of 'intoxicants to Indians,'" can apply only to Indians who received their allotments and acquired their rights of citizenship pursuant to such agreement, and cannot affect the status of one who had previously acquired such rights and had become subject to state laws, so as to give force and validity as to him to the unconstitutional Act of Jan. 30, 1897, 29 Stat. L. 506, ch. 109, making it a crime to sell liquor to Indian allottees. Ex p. Viles, (1905) 139 Fed. 68.

Repeal as to Oklahoma.—Since by the enabling Act by which Oklahoma was admitted into the Union, Act Cong. June 16, 1906, ch. 3335, 34 Stat. L. 267, 1909 Supp. Fed. Stat. Annot. 632, the state was left with jurisdiction of the introduction of intoxicating liquors from Oklahoma into that part of the state known as Indian Territory, and was authorized to control the sale of liquor through its own courts, this section was no longer in force in that part of Oklahoma formerly known as Indian Territory after its admission as a state so as to prevent the introduction therein of liquor from Arkansas in the interstate commerce. U. S. v. U. S. Express Co., (1910) 180 Fed. 1006.

The Pueblo Indians of New Mexico are not wards of the government, nor are they in charge of an Indian superintendent or agent, nor are they Indians over whom the government through its department exercises guardianship, within the meaning of this section penalizing the sale or gift of intoxicants to such Indians. U. S. v. Mares, (1907) 14 N. M. 1, 88 Pac. 1128.

"Indian country."—Since the allotment of lands in severalty to all of the Indians on the Uintah Indian reservation in Utah, subject to the provisions of Act Feb. 8, 1887, ch. 119, 24 Stat. L. 388, 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 496, and the restoration of the remainder of the lands of the reservation to the public domain, no part of such lands is "Indian country," within the meaning of the Act Jan. 30, 1897, ch. 109, 29 Stat. L. 506; and a prosecution cannot be maintained thereunder for introducing intoxicating liquor thereon, even on a portion which was subsequently reserved by executive order for agency and school purposes. U. S. v. Boss, (1906) 160 Fed. 132.

Appeal by government.—The decision of a federal District Court sustaining a demurrer to an indictment for introducing liquor into the Indian country is reviewable in the federal Supreme Court by writ of error, under the Act of March 2, 1907, 34 Stat. L. 1247, ch. 2564, 1909 Supp. Fed. Stat. Annot. 292, where the question whether the indictment charges any offense against the United States involves the validity of this section as applied to the facts stated. U. S. v. Sutton, (1909) 215 U. S. 291, 30 S. Ct. 116, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 200, reversing (1908) 165 Fed. 253.

Carlisle students.—This section extends to Indian students at the Carlisle school, which is maintained at the expense of the government under the direction of the Interior Department. U. S. v. Belt, (1904) 128 Fed. 168.

Knowledge or intent.—It is no defense to a prosecution for a violation of this section for the defendant to assert that he did not know that the person to whom he sold was an Indian. U. S. v. Stofello, (1904) 8 Ariz. 461, 76 Pac. 611.

Vol. III, p. 387, sec. 2145.

Murder.—The murder of one negro by another within the limits of an Indian reservation in a territory is committed within a place or district under the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States, within the meaning of R. S. sec. 5339, 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 231, defining and punishing the crime of murder, as amended by the Act of Jan. 15, 1897, 29 Stat. L. 487, ch. 29, 2 Fed. Stat. Annot. 357, and extended by this section to the Indian country, when not within the exceptions made by section 2146, which by reason of the race of the accused and deceased do not apply. Pickett v. U. S., (1910) 216 U. S. 456, 30 S. Ct. 265, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 566.

Larceny.—Larceny committed in an Indian reservation in the territory of Oklahoma by one not an Indian is a crime against the laws of the United States and cognizable by the District Courts of the territory while exercising the jurisdiction vested in the Circuit and District Courts of the United States. Brown v. U. S., (1906) 146 Fed. 975, 77 C.

C. A. 173, affirming (1904) 13 Okla. 512, 75 Pac. 291.

Incest.—The provisions of this and the following section are not affected by any subsequent legislation except by Act March 3, 1885, 23 Stat. L. 385, 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 388, which makes certain enumerated crimes committed by an Indian against the person or property of another Indian within a territory, either within or without a reservation, subject to punishment in accordance with the laws of such territory. Act March 3, 1887, ch. 397, sec. 4, 24 Stat. L. 635, 1 Fed. Stat. Annot. 709, which defines and prescribes the punishment for the crime of incest, is not therefore in force within an Indian reservation where both parties to the alleged act are Indians and there is no law making such act a crime. Ex p. Hart, (1907) 157 Fed. 130.

Oklahoma.—To the same effect as the original note, see Brown v. U. S., (1906) 146 Fed. 975, 77 C. C. A. 173, affirming (1904) 13 Okla. 512, 75 Pac. 291.

Vol. III, p. 388, sec. 9.

Construction of statute.—This section uses the term "arson" in its common-law meaning and is in effect an extension of the provisions of R. S. sec. 5385, 1 Fed. Stat. Annot. 457, punishing the offense of arson within a fort, dockyard, etc., to the same offense committed by an Indian on a reservation; and an indictment charging an Indian with the burning of a "building" on a reservation, not averred to have been a dwelling house, nor occupied as such, does not state an offense thereunder. U. S. v. Cardish, (1906) 143 Fed. 640.

Conclusiveness of judgment.—Where an Indian was indicted in a federal court within the district of Oregon for an offense committed on an Indian reservation, and was convicted and sentenced on a plea of not guilty, it was held that the judgment constituted a conclusive adjudication that he was a nonallotted Indian, and therefore triable in the federal court, and hence that he could not obtain his discharge on habeas corpus on the ground that both he and his victim were allotted Indians, and that the federal court had no jurisdiction to try him. Ex p. Savage, (1908) 158 Fed. 205.

Crime on allotted lands within reservation.—Land within the Tulalip Indian reservation, in the state of Washington, allotted and patented in severalty, pursuant to the treaty with the Omahas of March 16, 1854, 10 Stat. L. 1043, and the treaty of Point Elliot of Jan. 22, 1855, 12 Stat. L. 927, which provide for a conditional alienation only, is not, by reason of such allotment and patent, excepted from the reservation, so as to defeat the exclusive jurisdiction of the federal courts under this section of crimes committed on such land by one Indian upon the person of another. U. S. v. Celestine, (1909) 215 U. S. 278, 30 S. Ct. 93, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 195.

Refers to Indians maintaining tribal relations.—This section, providing that Indians committing certain crimes within the limits of an Indian reservation shall be subject to the same laws, and be tried in the same courts, and be subject to the same penalties as all other persons committing said crimes within the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States, when construed in connection with the other sections of the Act of which it is the concluding section, which show its purpose to be to make certain appropriations for the benefit of the Indian Department, fulfil treaty stipulations, provide for depredation claims, for schools, and other miscellaneous matters connected with the Indian service, refers only to Indians sustaining tribal relations, and does not deprive the state courts of jurisdiction over crimes committed by Indians who either have never sustained or have severed all tribal relations. State v. Howard, (1903) 33 Wash. 250, 74 Pac. 382; State v. Smokalem, (1905) 37 Wash. 91, 79 Pac. 603.

Proof of tribal relations.—In a prosecution for murder, the jurisdiction of the court was challenged on the ground that the defendant and deceased were Indians; that the crime was committed on a reservation, and that the proof did not show that defendant had severed his tribal relations. While the first two points were sustained by evidence, the defendant's own testimony as to the latter was that he was not by birth a member of the tribe on whose reservation the crime was committed; nor did he show that he had in any other manner become allied with that tribe, or that he ever lived within the limits of the reservation, but that he had lived for a number of years with members of his own family, among white people, and away from any Indian tribe or reservation. It was held to show that the defendant sustained no tribal relation. State v. Howard, (1903) 33 Wash. 250, 74 Pac. 382.

Record.—Where, on scire facias on a forfeited recognizance, the record did not disclose that the accused was an Indian or that he stole the property charged from another Indian, it was held that he was not subject to this section. Hollister v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1906) 145 Fed. 773.

Jurisdiction challenged on appeal.—In a prosecution of an Indian for murder, the jurisdiction of the state courts on the ground that the defendant and deceased were both Indians, and that the crime was committed within the limits of an Indian reservation, and that there was no proof that defendant had severed his tribal relations, can be challenged for the first time on appeal. State v. Howard, (1903) 33 Wash. 250, 74 Pac. 382.

Indictment.—Under this section extending all criminal laws to all Indians, excepting offenses committed upon a reservation by one Indian against another, it is not necessary that a state indictment against one Indian, for an offense against another, charge, and that the state prove, that the offense was committed off a reservation, since it is not necessary, in a state prosecution, to negative the federal jurisdiction, nor for the state to prove more than that the offense was committed within the country. State v. Buckaroo Jack, (1908) 30 Nev. 325, 96 Pac. 497.

Evidence.—That a homicide occurred at a house about a quarter of a mile from an Indian day school was held to be insufficient to show that it occurred on a reservation. State v. Buckaroo Jack, (1908) 30 Nev. 325, 96 Pac. 497.

Burden of proof.—The burden is on an Indian, accused by the state of an offense against another Indian, to show that the offense was committed on a reservation, so as to give the federal courts exclusive jurisdiction, under the express terms of this section. State v. Buckaroo Jack, (1908) 30 Nev. 325, 96 Pac. 497.

Vol. III, p. 389, sec. 5.

Jurisdiction of offense of rape.—See under this title, vol. 3, p. 496, sec. 6.

Vol. III, p. 390, sec. 2147.

Agent cannot evict lessee.—To the same effect as the original note, see Stephens v. Quigley, (C. C. A. 1903) 126 Fed. 148.

Authority of military.—Under this section and the section immediately following the military department has no authority to hold a person apprehended for being unlawfully in the country indefinitely as a prisoner, nor to destroy property so found. U. S. v. Crook, (1875) 179 Fed. 391.

Vol. III, p. 390, sec. 2148.

Nature of proceeding for recovery of penalty.—The penalty provided by this section can only be recovered in a civil action, and not as a fine in a criminal proceeding. U. S. v. Baker, (1903) 4 Ind. Ter. 544, 76 S. W. 103.

When penalty accrues.—Under this section in connection with R. S. secs. 2147 and 2149, it has been held that the penalty imposed by this section is incurred when the return is made after removal under R. S. sec. 2149. U. S. v. Baker, (1903) 4 Ind. Ter. 544, 76 S. W. 103.

Vol. III, p. 390, sec. 2149.

Confinement after removal.—This section only authorizes the removal of troublesome persons from a reservation, and does not imply authority to detain them in confinement after such removal. In re Bi-A-Lil-Le, (1909) 12 Ariz. 150, 100 Pac. 450.

Alderman of incorporated town.—Under this section the commissioner, prior to the Act Cong. May 27, 1902, ch. 888, 32 Stat. L. 245, 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 486, prohibiting the removal of certain citizens from the Indian Territory, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, was authorized to remove a person from the Indian Territory who, in his judgment, was detrimental to the welfare of the Indians, though he was an alderman of an incorporated town in the territory. Ex p. Carter, (1903) 4 Ind. Ter. 539, 76 S. W. 102.

Removal of collectors.—The Commissioner of Indian Affairs is authorized, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, to cause collectors to be excluded and removed from a tribal Indian reservation on days when payments are being made to the Indians, if in his judgment the presence of collectors therein at such times is detrimental to the peace and welfare of the Indians; and this although the reservation be within a state and the Indians be the holders, under trust patents issued to them pursuant to Act Feb. 8, 1887, ch. 119, 24 Stat. L. 388, 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 494, of allotments adjacent to the reservation, and be, therefore, citizens of the United States and the state. Rainbow v. Young, (C. C. A. 1908) 161 Fed. 835.

Vol. III, p. 408, sec. 31. [Constitution and criminal laws of the United States applicable.]

The full faith and credit clause of the Constitution of the United States applies to Indian Territory courts. Tootle v. McClellan, (1907) 7 Ind. Ter. 64, 103 S. W. 766.

Vol. III, p. 415, sec. 41.

Construction.—This section does not affect the power under R. S. sec. 1014, 2 Fed. Stat. Annot. 321, and Act of May 28, 1896, ch. 252, sec. 19, 29 Stat. L. 184, 4 Fed. Stat. Annot. 79, of a United States commissioner, appointed for a district in a state, to issue a warrant for the arrest of a person in such district for an offense committed in the Indian Territory against the laws of the United States. Douglass v. Stahl, (1903) 71 Ark. 236, 72 S. W. 568.

Vol. III, p. 422, sec. 4. [Arkansas criminal law and procedure in force.]

Determination of punishment by jury.—Since this section puts in force Mansf. Dig. of the Gen. Laws of Arkansas, sec. 2283, providing that the jury on rendering a verdict of guilty must affix the punishment if the amount thereof is not determined by law, one on trial for crime punishable by fine not exceeding a specified sum, and by imprisonment for not less than a specified time, nor for more than a specified time, is entitled to have the jury determine the punishment on their finding him guilty. Taylor v. U. S., (1906) 6 Ind. Ter. 350, 98 S. W. 123.

Vol. III, p. 422, sec. 4. [In conflicting cases United States laws to prevail, larceny excepted.]

Receiving stolen goods.—While by this section Congress put in force chapters 45 and 46 of Mansfield's Digest of the Laws of Arkansas (ch. 19, 20, Ind. Ter. Ann. Stat. 1899), relative to criminal law and procedure, and such chapters are exclusive of all other laws, yet where the laws of the United States have provided for the punishment of an offense, defining it and prescribing the punishment, as in case of R. S. sec. 5357, 6 Fed. Stat. Annot. 761, relative to receiving stolen goods, such laws will govern and be in force in the Indian Territory. Bise v. U. S., (1904) 5 Ind. Ter. 602, 82 S. W. 921.

Vol. III, p. 423, sec. 4. [Appeals.]

Constitutionality.—The provision that no appeal shall be allowed from a commissioner's court in civil cases where the "judgment" does not exceed twenty dollars, is violative of the constitutional provision guaranteeing the right of trial by jury where the value in controversy exceeds twenty dollars. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Phelps, (1903) 4 Ind. Ter. 706, 76 S. W. 285.

Vol. III, p. 424, sec. 8.

Effect of Act of Jan. 30, 1897.—This section was not impliedly repealed by the Act of Congress of Jan. 30, 1897, 29 Stat. L. 506, ch. 109, 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 384. U. S. v. Buckles, (1906) 6 Ind. Ter. 319, 97 S. W. 1022.

Still in force.—This section is still in force in Indian Territory and has been since its enactment. Burch v. U. S., (1907) 7 Ind. Ter. 284, 104 S. W. 619.

Sale by agent.—Where an agent solicited orders in Indian Territory for the sale of intoxicating liquors, and forwarded the order to his principal, a nonresident, who shipped the liquors pursuant to the orders to the buyers therein named, the agent, whether he collected the purchase price or not, violated the statute. Taylor v. U. S., (1906) 6 Ind. Ter. 350, 98 S. W. 123.

Presumptions.—On a prosecution for introducing liquor into Indian Territory, an instruction that the possession of liquor in the territory was prima facie evidence of the introduction of the same by the party in whose possession it was found was held to be error. The court should have instructed that if the jury found beyond a reasonable doubt that defendant was in possession of liquor within the territory the law presumed him guilty of having introduced it, unless he could show otherwise by a reasonable, truthful explanation. Ellis v. U. S., (1906) 6 Ind. Ter. 291, 97 S. W. 1013.

Indictment.—An indictment alleged that accused "did . . . introduce" from without the limits of the Indian Territory intoxicating liquors. It was held that the indictment charged the offense denounced by this section, and not the offense denounced by the Act of Congress of Jan. 30, 1897, 29 Stat. L. 506, ch. 109, 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 384, making it an offense for a person to "introduce or attempt to introduce" any intoxicating liquors into the Indian country, for the word "introduce" in the indictment is synonymous with the words used in the Act of 1895. U. S. v. Buckles, (1906) 6 Ind. Ter. 319, 97 S. W. 1022.

An indictment charging in one count that the accused sold intoxicating liquors within the Indian Territory to a person named, and in a second count that he furnished intoxicating liquor to the person named, is not bad as charging two distinct offenses. Taylor v. U. S., (1906) 6 Ind. Ter. 350, 98 S. W. 123.

Vol. III, p. 426, sec. 11.

Jurisdiction.—Under Act June 10, 1896, ch. 398, 29 Stat. L. 339, 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 431, conferring on the Dawes Commission the power of determining applications to be enrolled as members of one of the tribes of Indians, and providing that appeal may be had from it to the District Court, and Act July 1, 1898, ch. 545, 30 Stat. L. 591, 3 Fed. Stat.

Annot. 467, allowing appeal in certain cases direct to the United States Supreme Court, the Court of Appeals of the Indian Territory has no jurisdiction of an appeal from the District Court from an order as to taxation of costs in such a case. Chickasaw Nation v. Roff, (1903) 4 Ind. Ter. 535, 76 S. W. 101.

Vol. III, p. 431. [Applications for citizenship.]

Constitutionality.—The legislation authorizing the commission to the Five Civilized Tribes to determine citizenship in the Five Nations is constitutional. Dukes v. Goodall, (1904) 5 Ind. Ter. 145, 82 S. W. 702; Dick v. Ross, (1905) 6 Ind. Ter. 85, 89 S. W. 664.

Effect of application for enrolment.—The application for enrolment under this Act, notwithstanding the fact that applicants were already on the rolls, was a waiver of the conclusiveness of the rolls in their cases, the Act providing that the commission shall hear and determine the application of all persons who may apply to them for citizenship in any of said nations. (1907) 26 Op. Atty.-Gen. 127.

Right to enrolment.—In (1907) 26 Op. Atty.-Gen. 127, it appeared that K. and L., children of white parents who had become affiliated with the Choctaw Nation by an act of the Choctaw council, and thereby granted all rights, privileges, and immunities of the Choctaw citizens, were born in the Choctaw Nation, have always resided there as its recognized citizens, and their names appear upon various tribal rolls. They applied to the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes under this Act and were enrolled, and no appeal was taken by the nation. It was held that they are clearly entitled to enrolment.

Parties.—Since Indian lands apportioned to the Indians of the Chickasaw and Choctaw Nations are still public lands, and are not held by the allottees in their individual capacity as tenants in common, prior individual Indian allottees, members of the Chickasaw and Choctaw Nations, are not necessary parties to suits brought to determine citizenship rights of others, as authorized by this Act. Dukes v. Goodall, (1904) 5 Ind. Ter. 145, 82 S. W. 702.

[Present tribal rolls confirmed.]

Construction of paragraph.—This paragraph has reference to a previous denial or failure of the tribal authorities to act, and not to action or nonaction of the commission. (1907) 26 Op. Atty.-Gen. 127.

Vol. III, p. 439, sec. 2.

Scope of statute.—The provision of this section that when in any suit in the courts of the Indian Territory it should appear that the property of any tribe would be affected such tribe should be brought in as a party, applies only to suits relating to membership in the tribes and the right to tribal lands or funds, and does not have the effect of abolishing the general exemption of the tribes from civil suits. Adams v. Murphy, (1908) 165 Fed. 304, 91 C. C. A. 272, reversing (1907) 7 Ind. Ter. 395, 104 S. W. 658.

Vol. III, p. 439, sec. 3. [Jurisdiction of United States courts, etc.]

Purchaser pending suit.—In a suit under this section the general rule applies that a stranger cannot, by a conveyance or transfer of possession from the defendant pendente lite, acquire any rights which are not subject to the judgment subsequently rendered in the suit, whether or not he is made a party thereto; and where such a purchaser or transferee is brought in by an amended complaint it is not necessary to allege that his membership in the tribe has been disallowed. Hargrove v. Cherokee Nation, (1904) 129 Fed. 186, 63 C. C. A. 276.

[Defense of noncitizen holding under lease, etc.]

Nature of action.—The provisions in this Act for the recovery of value of improvements placed on lands belonging to certain Indian tribes, or members thereof, by persons in possession under contracts executed prior to Jan. 1, 1898, did not change the character of an action by a member of one of those tribes of forcible detainer from a law action to a suit in equity. Sharrock v. Kreiger, (1906) 6 Ind. Ter. 466, 98 S. W. 161.

Rental value.—The term "rental value," as used in this section, means the sum mentioned in the rental contract up to the year 1900, the time when it was intended by the statute that all leases should terminate, and after that whatever was fair and reasonable for the use and occupation of the premises. Swinney v. Kelley, (1903) 5 Ind. Ter. 12, 76 S. W. 303.

Vol. III, p. 440, sec. 5.

Sufficiency of notice.—Under this section proper notice by the person bringing the action is sufficient, although an Indian nation is afterward joined as party plaintiff. Har- grove v. Cherokee Nation, (C. C. A. 1904) 129 Fed. 186; Price v. Cherokee Nation, (1904) 5 Ind. Ter. 518, 82 S. W. 893.

Vol. III, p. 441, sec. 6.

Substitution of parties.—A suit under this Act to dispossess an intruder on lands owned by an Indian tribe or nation, although brought by a member of the tribe, as permitted by the Act, when the tribe fails or refuses to bring it, is based primarily on the right of the tribe, and the court may properly permit it to be substituted as plaintiff, and to allow the name of the original plaintiff to be stricken out, with his consent. Brought v. Cherokee Nation, (C. C. A. 1904) 129 Fed. 192.

Complaint.—In Price v. Cherokee Nation, (1904) 5 Ind. Ter. 518, 82 S. W. 893, a complaint in an action of ejectment by a Cherokee Indian against a citizen of the United States, in which plaintiff sought to recover land and the improvements thereon, under various acts of the Cherokee national council, set out in the complaint, was held to state a cause of action.

Verification of complaint.—It is sufficient compliance with the requirement of this Act that a "sworn complaint" shall be filed if the complaint is verified by the authorized attorney of the tribe or nation which is plaintiff, who states that the facts alleged are within his knowledge. Brought v. Cherokee Nation, (C. C. A. 1904) 129 Fed. 192.

Vol. III, p. 442, sec. 11.

Curtsey.—In Sanders v. Sanders, (Okla. 1909) 117 Pac. 338, it was held that a citizen of the Creek Nation in possession of lands of said nation, who filed thereon before the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes, under this Act, and died April 28, 1900, without receiving her certificate of allotment therefor, was seized of no estate of inheritance, and that curtesy therein did not attach.

Descent and distribution.—The allotment of a citizen of the Creek Nation set apart to her under this Act, who died in possession thereof prior to Act Cong. March 1, 1901, ch. 676, 31 Stat. L. 861, without receiving her certificate of allotment therefor, was distributable to her heirs under patent therefor to them subsequently issued according to the laws of descent and distribution of the Creek Nation, as provided in sections 6 and 7 of such Act. Sanders v. Sanders, (Okla. 1909) 117 Pac. 338.

Vol. III, p. 443, sec. 13.

Authority of Secretary of Interior.—An instrument dated July 9, 1901, purporting to be a mineral lease from a Delaware Indian of certain lands in the Indian Territory, was held to be void at its inception, as the power to make such a lease was, at that time, vested exclusively in the Secretary of the Interior. This authority was taken from the Secretary of the Interior by section 73 of the Act of July 1, 1902, 32 Stat. L. 727, and it is now impossible for him to give validity to the lease, either in whole or in part. (1904) 25 Op. Atty-Gen. 168.

Validity of leases.—By treaty of 1855, 10 Stat. L. 1116, a certain district within the Indian Territory was set off to the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, to be held in common, under the control of the tribal organizations in the district of its own jurisdiction. By Act of the Chickasaw national legislature, passed in 1886 (Laws Chickasaw Nation, p. 188) any resident citizens (not less than three) were authorized to form a corporate company to engage in developing coal mines. This Act was amended Sept. 24, 1887 (Laws Chickasaw Nation, p. 190), so as to include petroleum, natural gas, and asphaltum. Reservation of all lands containing deposits of such minerals was made by Act Cong. June 28, 1898, ch. 517, sec. 13, 30 Stat. L. 498, which required payment of royalties for the benefit of the Indians; and the Chickasaw statute also provided that after the formation of the company, and on compliance with such statute, the corporation was authorized to contract with capitalists to develop and work the mines. It was held that such Acts impliedly authorized the leasing of coal and oil lands allotted to such Indians for a limited period for the tribal or individual benefit of such Indians, and that such leases were not void on their face. McBride v. Farrington, (1904) 131 Fed. 707, affirmed (C. C. A. 1906) 149 Fed. 114.

Vol. III, p. 446, sec. 15. [Owner of improvements to deposit appraised value, etc.]

Improvements.—This section did not terminate the interest of a Creek Indian in a town lot, unimproved by him, but improved by one to whom he had leased the lot. W. O. Whitney Lumber, etc., Co. v. Crabtree, (1907) 7 Ind. Ter. 635, 104 S. W. 862.

Obligation to restore possession to lessor.—The provision in this Act which gives the owner of improvements on a lot in the Indian Territory a preferred right to purchase the same after it shall have been appraised does not affect the obligation of a white man, who was at the time of its passage in possession of a lot under a lease from an Indian, to restore possession to the lessor on the termination of the lease in accordance with its terms. Fraer v. Washington, (1903) 125 Fed. 280, 60 C. C. A. 194.

Vol. III, p. 447, sec. 16. [Royalties and rents to be paid into treasury—to credit of tribe.]

Retrospective operation of Act.—The collection of royalties due and owing to the lessors of coal mines in the Choctaw Nation for coal mined under valid leases prior to this Act was not prohibited by the provisions of section 16, making it unlawful for any person after the passage of such Act to demand or receive any such royalty, or for any one to pay any such royalty to any individual. Southwestern Coal Co. v. McBride, (1902) 185 U. S. 499, 22 S. Ct. 763, 46 U. S. (L. ed.) 1010, affirming (1906) 104 Fed. 1007, 43 C. C. A. 683.

Vol. III, p. 448, sec. 16. [Retention of lands, etc., until allotment.]

Illegitimate children.—The first proviso of this section does not authorize a citizen to hold lands as a prospective allotment for an illegitimate child. Walker v. Roberson, (1908) 21 Okla. 894, 97 Pac. 609.

Lease before allotment.—Under this proviso it was held that a lease of lands mentioned in this section by an Indian to a citizen of the United States was good until the allotment took place. Choctaw, etc., R. Co. v. Bond, (1906) 6 Ind. Ter. 515, 98 S. W. 335.

Right of Indian to lay off towns.—This section provides that any citizen in possession of such lands as would be his reasonable share of the lands of his nation or tribe may rent them until allotment has been made, and section 23 provides that individuals may rent their proportionate share of tribal lands until allotments are made. R. S. sec. 2118, 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 374, provides that every person who makes a settlement on any land belonging to any Indian tribe, or surveys it, or attempts to designate boundaries, shall be subject to a certain penalty, and the Curtis Act (Act of June 28, 1898, ch. 517, 30 Stat. L. 495, 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 439), provides for the laying off of towns under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior. It has been held that inasmuch as section 2118 was intended to prevent white men from settling Indian lands, and the provision of the Curtis Act in regard to laying off towns applies only to the laying off and incorporation of a legal subdivision, a Chickasaw Indian in possession of his prospective allotment has a right to lay out a town and rent lots on such allotment, no political or legal subdivision being created. U. S. v. Lewis, (1903) 5 Ind. Ter. 1, 76 S. W. 299.

Complaint.—Under this section a complaint in an action for rent should show that the plaintiff is a citizen and that the lands come within the proviso. Hubbard v. Chism, (1904) 5 Ind. Ter. 95, 82 S. W. 686.

Vol. III, p. 448, sec. 17.

Subsequent birth of child.—A member of the Creek tribe of Indians, who in violation of sections 17, 18, held possession of land in excess of that to which he, his wife, and minor children were entitled as allotments, acquired no rights thereto for the benefit of a child subsequently born to him, as against a Creek citizen who had prior to the birth of such child filed upon such land. Walker v. Roberson, (1908) 21 Okla. 894, 97 Pac. 609.

Vol. III, p. 448, sec. 18.

Jurisdiction.—Under this section and other Acts conferring exclusive jurisdiction upon the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior to determine all matters relative to the appraisement and allotment of lands, the commission had jurisdiction, exclusive of the courts, to determine a question as to whether one should be enrolled as a citizen of the Cherokee Nation and whether he should participate in the distribution of the property of the Cherokee tribe. Dick v. Ross, (1905) 6 Ind. Ter. 85, 89 S. W. 664.

Vol. III, p. 449, sec. 21. [Enrolment of Cherokees, etc.]

Right to go behind roll.—In (1907) 26 Op. Atty-Gen. 171, it appeared that one G., a white man, intermarried into the Cherokee Nation in 1873, and his name appeared on the Cherokee authenticated tribal roll of 1880. He applied to the Commission of the Five Civilized Tribes in 1901 for enrolment, which application was finally denied Feb. 9, 1907, upon the authority of the case of Red Bird v. U. S., (1906) 203 U. S. 76, 27 S. Ct. 29, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 96, he having abandoned his wife in 1878. Section 667 of the Cherokee Constitution also provides that every intermarried person who abandons his wife shall thereby forfeit every right and privilege of citizenship in that nation. It was held that the applicant was entitled to enrolment under section 21, which specifically directs the Commission "to enroll all persons now living whose names are found on said roll."

Names placed on tribal rolls by fraud.—The only names which this section declares shall be eliminated from the tribal rolls are those placed thereon by fraud or without authority of law. (1907) 26 Op. Atty-Gen. 127.

The authority given the commission to eliminate from the tribal rolls those placed thereon by fraud or without authority of law is expressly limited to "any other rolls," meaning any other than the roll of 1880, which was confirmed. (1907) 26 Op. Atty-Gen. 171.

Vol. III, p. 451, sec. 23.

Unlawful detainer.—A lease of agricultural Indian land being void and terminated on Jan. 1, 1900, by this section a lessee under such a lease cannot after such date maintain unlawful detainer against his subtenant holding over. Owens v. Eaton, (1904) 5 Ind. Ter. 275, 82 S. W. 746.

Denying landlord's title.—In such an action one who enters as sublessee of such land may deny title of the person under whom he entered. Owens v. Eaton, (1904) 5 Ind. Ter. 275, 82 S. W. 746.

Right of Indian to lay off towns.—See under this title, vol. 3, p. 447, sec. 16.

Vol. III, p. 451, sec. 25.

Extent of jurisdiction.—Inquiry into the validity of the method by which certain amendments to the constitution of the Cherokee Nation were adopted, or revision of the political or administrative action of that nation, was not authorized by this section, empowering the Delaware Indians residing in the Cherokee Nation to bring suit in the Court of Claims for the purpose of determining the contractual rights of the Delawares in Cherokee national lands and funds. Delaware Indians v. Cherokee Nation, (1904) 193 U. S. 127, 24 S. Ct. 342, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 646, (1903) 38 Ct. Cl. 455.

Vol. III, p. 452, sec. 26.

Laws relating to marriage.—Under this section the Cherokee statute relating to marriage with one not a citizen and who moves away cannot be enforced by the federal courts. McAllister v. Edgerton, (1901) 3 Ind. Ter. 704, 64 S. W. 583.

Vested rights.—A woman's rights as widow and heir under the Cherokee statute of descent, having vested on death of her husband, are not affected by the subsequent repeal of the statute by this section. Nivens v. Nivens, (1903) 4 Ind. Ter. 574, 76 S. W. 114.

Vol. III, p. 454, sec. 29. [ALLOTMENT OF LANDS.]

Contract to sell.—Under the provision of this section "that all contracts looking to the sale or incumbrance of any of the land of an allottee, except the sale heretofore provided, shall be null and void," and Act of July 1, 1902, ch. 1362, 32 Stat. L. 642, 10 Fed. Stat. Annot. 150, providing that allotted land shall not be affected by any deed, debt, or obligation contracted prior to the time when such land may be alienated under the Act, a contract by one not an Indian citizen before allotment to buy land is void; such person having no authority to purchase or sell Indian lands before allotment and the expiration of the period of restrictions upon alienation. Kelly v. Harper, (1907) 7 Ind. Ter. 541, 104 S. W. 829. See also Sayer v. Brown, (1907) 7 Ind. Ter. 675, 104 S. W. 877; Lewis v. Clements, (1908) 21 Okla. 167, 95 Pac. 769.

Vol. III, p. 456, sec. 29. [MEMBERS' TITLES TO LANDS.]

Approval of Secretary of Interior.—The Secretary of the Interior is authorized to approve the patents executed by the principal chief of the Choctaw Nation and the governor of the Chickasaw Nation for the lands allotted to the members of those tribes of Indians in accordance with the provisions of this Act, and his approval thereof is essential to constitute such patents a transfer of the allottees of such title as was intended by the Act. (1905) 25 Op. Atty-Gen. 460.

Vol. III, p. 458, sec. 29, sixth par. [It is agreed, etc.]

Validity of regulations by Secretary of Interior.—In U. S. v. McMurray, (1910) 181 Fed. 723, it was held that regulations by the Secretary of the Interior were void which required lessees of coal and asphalt lands to mine on each lease 3,000 tons the first year, 4,000 tons the second, 7,000 tons the third, 8,000 tons the fourth, and 15,000 tons the fifth and each succeeding year, or pay the royalties on such quantities if not mined, and prescribing that a failure to do so would subject the lease to cancellation.

Vol. III, p. 469. [Continuance of authority — no enrolment unless citizen.]

Rights of intermarried whites.—See under this title, vol. 3, p. 449, sec. 21.

Vol. III, p. 485. [Commission to five civilized tribes — Creek roll — rules for descent.]

Descent and distribution.—Chapters 49 and 155, Mansf. Dig. (Ind. Ter. Annot. Stat. 1899, ch. 21, 58), entitled "Descent and Distribution," and "Wills and Testaments," respectively, as modified by Acts of Congress (Act May 2, 1899, ch. 182, 26 Stat. L. 81; Act June 30, 1902, ch. 1323, 32 Stat. L. 500), were in force in the Creek Nation on the 13th day of November, 1905. In re Brown, (1908) 22 Okla. 216, 97 Pac. 613.

Where a child was born to citizens of the Creek Nation on May 6, 1901, died in November, 1901, was enrolled by the commission on Oct. 8, 1902, allotment selected on April 28, 1904, and patent issued to his heirs on Oct. 10, 1904, it was held that the Arkansas law of descent and distribution embodied in chapter 49, secs. 2522-2545 of Mansfield's Digest (Ind. Ter. Annot. Stat. 1899, secs. 1820-1843), nominated the heirs of such deceased child and fixed the shares and portions the heirs derived in such allotment. Shulthis v. MacDougal, (1907) 162 Fed. 331.

Time section took effect.—The provision of this section repealing the provisions of the original agreement made by the Creeks, in so far as it provided for descent and distribution according to the Creek law of descent and distribution, and substituting therefor chapter 49 of Mansfield's Digest (Ind. Ter. Annot. Stat. 1899, ch. 21), did not, by virtue of the joint resolution of Congress, take effect until July 1, 1902. De Graffenreid v. Iowa Land, etc., Co., (1908) 20 Okla. 687, 95 Pac. 624.

Dower.—The noncitizen widow of an allottee of a quarter section of land of the Creek Nation, whose husband died in June, 1906, was held to be entitled to dower in his estate, and until it was assigned to her was entitled to remain and possess the home or house of her late husband, together with the farm thereto attached, free from all rent. Hawkins v. Stevens, (1908) 21 Okla. 849, 97 Pac. 567.

Vol. III, p. 491. [Further application of homestead laws to Indians — patented lands held in trust.]

Ejectment.—An Indian patentee of public land, who was entitled to present and exclusive possession thereof, though the land was held in trust for him by the United States for a period of twenty-five years, at the end of which time he would acquire the fee, could maintain ejectment therefor alone without joining the United States; his title being sufficient to support a possessory action. Frazee v. Piper, (1908) 51 Wash. 278, 98 Pac. 760.

Restriction on alienation.—Where an Indian held under this section, extending the homestead privilege to Indians, but inhibiting the alienation of land patented thereunder for a period of twenty-five years after patent, an attempted sale within that period was void. Frazee v. Piper, (1908) 51 Wash. 278, 98 Pac. 760.

Laws governing issuance of patent.—Though an Indian entered upon public land under Act Cong. March 3, 1875, ch. 131, 18 Stat. L. 402, 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 490, extending the privileges of the homestead laws to Indians who have abandoned their tribal relations, and prohibiting alienation until five years after patent is issued, but was not entitled to make final proof until after the enactment of this section continuing the homestead privilege but extending the prohibition of alienation to twenty-five years, it was held that the patent was issuable under the latter Act so that the twenty-five years' prohibition of alienation applied to such land. Frazee v. Piper, (1908) 51 Wash. 278, 98 Pac. 760.

Vol. III, p. 492, sec. 1, note.

Construction of statute.—Under the general Indian Allotment Act of 1887, a continuing power was vested in the President, which was not exhausted by the first order for allotments. U. S. v. Fairbanks, (1909) 171 Fed. 337, 96 C. C. A. 229.

Vol. III, p. 493, sec. 2.

Right to allotment.—Where the mother of P., a Walla Walla Indian, married an Iroquois, and P., who was born within the Walla Walla region, was a minor when her mother again married a French Canadian, but never severed her tribal relations, which were subsequently expressly recognized by a general Indian council, it was held that the marriage of her mother did not deprive P. of the right to select lands held for allotment in the Umatilla Indian reservation for herself and her children. Smith v. Bonifer, (1907) 154 Fed. 833, affirmed (1909) 166 Fed. 846, 92 C. C. A. 604.

In La Clair v. U. S., (1910) 184 Fed. 128, it was held that the plaintiffs were not debarred from the right to receive allotments on the Yakima reservation by the fact that their parents had received allotments on the Puyallup reservation as heads of families, and that the plaintiffs were named in the patents as members of such families.

Recovery of lands from divorced wife.—In Morrisett v. U. S., (1904) 132 Fed. 891, it appeared that the plaintiff, an Indian of the Walla Walla tribe, selected and claimed the allotment to him of 160 acres of land in the Umatilla reservation as the head of a family consisting of himself and his wife. He alleged that through the misrepresentation of his wife that she was a single woman, eighty acres of the tract so selected was allotted to her, and the remainder only to him as a single person. His wife afterwards obtained a divorce. It was held that the extra allotment of eighty acres to which the plaintiff was at the time entitled under the law resulted from his status as a married man, and that after he had lost such status, presumably through his own fault, he had no standing in equity to recover from his wife the land which, if allotted to him, would have been on her account, if not in her right.

Allotment to adopted members of tribe.—In La Clair v. U. S., (1910) 184 Fed. 128, it appeared that the plaintiffs, who were formerly members of the Puyallup tribe of Indians, but were of Yakima half blood, were invited by the Yakimas to become members of that tribe for the purpose of sharing in the allotment of the lands of their reservation in severalty, which they did, having been formally adopted by the tribe in accordance with its customs. The Indian agent and the allotting agent were fully advised of such action, which was taken with their approval, and with full knowledge of the facts recommended the plaintiffs for allotments, and their recommendation was approved by the Secretary of the Interior, and patents were issued to the plaintiffs, which recited that they were Indians "residing on the Yakima Indian reservation," who had been allotted land therein. None of plaintiffs had received allotments elsewhere. The lands have since been for the most part resided upon and improved by the allottees, and have become valuable. It was held that the things done were all that were required to make plaintiffs members of the Yakima tribes, and that, even if official ratification of the adoption was required, the action of the department amounted to such ratification.

Person born after Act passed.—The fact that a member of an Indian tribe was born after the passage of this Act or of the Nelson Act of 1889 (Act Jan. 14, 1889, ch. 24, 25 Stat. L. 642), does not exclude such persons from the right to an allotment under either of such Acts. U. S. v. Fairbanks, (C. C. A. 1909) 171 Fed. 337.

Vol. III, p. 494, sec. 5. [Patent to issue, etc.]

Taxation.—To the same effect as the original note, see U. S. v. Thurston County, (1906) 143 Fed. 287, 74 C. C. A. 425, reversing (1905) 140 Fed. 456.

Validity of restrictions on alienation.—Restrictions placed by Act of Congress upon the alienation by Indians of lands allotted to them in severalty, and embodied in the patents issued for such lands, are pursuant to a general and beneficent policy of the government for the protection of the Indians, and are valid. Nelson v. John, (1906) 43 Wash. 483, 86 Pac. 933.

Conveyance of Indian lands.—Where a conveyance by an Indian of land allotted to him was void because the title remained in the United States, the fact that subsequently the Indian obtained a patent and could convey did not inure to the benefit of the purchaser; the rule that where a vendor having no title sells and title subsequently procured by him inures to the benefit of the purchaser, not applying where such sale was prohibited by law. Starr v. Long Jim, (1909) 52 Wash. 138, 100 Pac. 194.

Right to maintain trespass.—Although the government by this Act holds in trust the legal title to land allotted in severalty to an Indian, the latter, who is in the rightful possession of the land and has the beneficial use therein, may recover damages for an unlawful trespass upon it. Smith v. Mosgrove, (1908) 51 Ore. 495, 94 Pac. 970.

White persons as "heirs."—The term "heirs," as used in the first paragraph of this section, includes white persons adopted as members of a tribe of Indians. Reed v. Clinton, (1909) 23 Okla. 610, 101 Pac. 1055.

Jurisdiction of state courts.—So long as the United States recognizes the national character of the Indians and that they are under the protection of treaties and laws of Congress, their property is outside the operation of state laws, and the state courts have no jurisdiction over controversies concerning the titles to Indian allotments while the same are held in trust by the United States. Smith v. Mosgrove, (1908) 51 Ore. 495, 94 Pac. 970.

Title and control.—Under this Act the United States retains title and control over the allotted lands during the trust period without any right in the allottee, except to occupy and cultivate the lands under a paper or writing showing that at a particular time in the future, unless extended by the President, the allottee would be entitled to a patent for the fee. U. S. v. Gardner, (1904) 133 Fed. 285, 66 C. C. A. 663; Bond v. U. S., (1910) 181 Fed. 613.

Effect of allotment.—An Indian allottee by accepting an allotment does not cease to be a ward of the government, but still remains in a condition of pupilage and dependency; the determination of all disputes concerning the allotment, its occupancy and possession, and the general control of the Indian remaining within the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior. Bond v. U. S., (1910) 181 Fed. 613.

Right of United States to maintain suit.—The United States may maintain a suit in its own name to cancel a deed to allotted Indian lands, although made under an order of court, if the sale was in violation of the statutory restrictions on alienation. U. S. v. Bellm, (1910) 182 Fed. 161. See also U. S. v. Dooley, (1906) 151 Fed. 697.

Cancellation of patents.—Where the Interior Department by its officers and agents has recognized the right of Indians to allotments of land as members of a tribe, after full investigation, with full knowledge of the facts and without fraud, and allotments have been made and patents issued to the allottee, the department is without authority to subsequently cancel such patents because of a change in its interpretation of the law; nor is there any equity which warrants a court in canceling the patents at suit of the government, the allotment being satisfactory to the tribe from whose lands they were made. La Clair v. U. S., (1910) 184 Fed. 128.

Title of allottee.—The selection of and the filing upon an allotment of land are the inception of the title of the Indian allottee or his heirs, and when the patent, which is only the evidence of title, is issued, it relates back to the inception of the title. Hooks v. Kennard, (1911) 28 Okla. 457, 114 Pac. 744.

Construction of proviso.—The proviso to this paragraph does not contemplate that the President may extend the period of twenty-five years as to all trust patents issued to Indian allottees of land, but only that such extension may be made in particular cases, in the discretion of the President. (1905) 25 Op. Atty.-Gen. 483.

Power to will.—It has been held that an allottee under this Act who died within the twenty-five year period had no power to devise his interest in the land allotted. In re House, (1907) 132 Wis. 212, 112 N. W. 27.

Dower.—The widow of an Indian to whom an allotment of lands in severalty had been made, as authorized by this Act, is entitled to dower in such lands. Wheeler v. Petite, (1907) 153 Fed. 471.

Effect of citizenship.—The conferring of the rights of citizenship upon an Indian allottee does not authorize him to alienate or lease the land allotted to him, or to make any contract in relation thereto in violation of this section. Williams v. Steinmetz, (1905) 16 Okla. 104, 82 Pac. 986.

Vol. III, p. 495, sec. 5. [Laws of descent and partition.]

Construction.—The statute of Kansas relating to descent (Gen. Stat. 1889, ch. 33, secs. 20, 21, 29), which by this section is made to govern the descent of lands allotted in severalty to the members of certain tribes in Indian Territory, provides that if an intestate leaves neither husband, nor wife, nor issue, his estate shall go to his parents, and, if his parents be dead, shall be disposed of in the same manner as if they, or either of them, had outlived the intestate and died in the ownership and possession of the portion thus falling to their share, or to either of them, and that "children of the half blood shall inherit equally with children of the whole blood." It has been held that the word "children," as so used, should be construed as meaning "kindred," and that under such provision, where an Indian woman, whose parents were dead, died unmarried and without issue, but leaving a half-brother, he inherited her land, to the exclusion of her uncles and cousins. Finley v. Abner, (C. C. A. 1904) 129 Fed. 734.

Minnesota.—Under this Act where the allottee of land in Minnesota dies after his trust patent has issued, his allotment descends to his heirs, as provided by the laws of that state, to be ascertained by the probate court of the county in which the lands are located. U. S. v. Park Land Co., (1911) 188 Fed. 383.

Washington.—Under the laws of descent of Washington which by this section are made applicable to allotted and patented Indian lands therein, the estate of a Puyallup Indian, allotted land under a patent from the United States which contained restrictions on alienation, and provided for forfeiture upon neglect to till the soil or on return to a nomadic life, was an inheritable estate in the lands on his death in 1888. Little Bill v. Swanson, (1911) 117 Pac. 481.

Right to partition land.—In U. S. v. Bellm, (1910) 182 Fed. 161, it was held that the proviso in this paragraph of section 5, adopting the laws of descent of Kansas, was merely for the purpose of providing a rule by which the heirs should be determined, and that the partition statutes were adopted only so far as they provided for a division of the land in case the heirs could not agree to hold it in common; that there was no intention of abrogating the trust in any case, and that the clause "except as herein otherwise provided" excluded the application of a provision of a state partition statute authorizing a sale of the land where it could not be advantageously divided; and that such a sale of land in the Indian Territory, although under an order of court based on the Kansas statute, was null and void.

Vol. III, p. 496, sec. 6.

When citizenship attaches.—An Indian allottee on the receipt of his first patent must be deemed within the provision of section 6 that, "upon the completion of said allotments and the patenting of the lands to said allottees," each allottee shall have the benefits of, and be subject to, the laws of the state where he resides, in view of the further grant of citizenship which that section extends to every allottee, and of the fact that the issue of the final patent provided for by section 5 was to be delayed for twenty-five years, when it was to be issued to the first patentee or his heirs. Matter of Heff, (1905) 197 U. S. 488, 25 S. Ct. 506, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 848.

Effect of granting citizenship.—The grant of citizenship to the Indians was intended for their protection, and was not a renunciation by the United States of the authority which it had always exercised to adopt such measures as in its judgment were wise for the protection of the Indian in his rights. U. S. v. Allen, (1910) 179 Fed. 13, 103 C. C. A. 1.

Effect on laws of descent.—Under the various provisions of this Act providing for the allotment of Indian lands, the laws of descent of the state apply to these lands. Guyatt v. Kautz, (1905) 41 Wash. 115, 83 Pac. 9.

Jurisdiction of state courts.—The provision in this section and other sections of this Act, providing for the allotting of lands constituting an Indian reservation to the Indians in severalty, and the issuing of patents to the allottees therefor, and further providing that, upon the completion of said allotments and the issuing of patents to each of the allottees constituting the tribe, each allottee shall have the benefit of and be subject to the laws, both civil and criminal, of the state in which he may reside, upon completion of the allotments and the issuing of patents to each of the allottees, confers jurisdiction on the state courts to try and punish an allottee for any violation of the laws of the state, though the offense committed be one against the person or property of an Indian or other person within the limits of an Indian reservation. Es p. Savage, (1908) 158 Fed. 205; In re Now-geshuck, (1904) 69 Kan. 410, 76 Pac. 877.

After public land has been allotted to an Indian under this Act he is not subject to prosecution for violating Act of Cong. Jan. 15, 1897, ch. 29, sec. 5, 29 Stat. L. 487, 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 389, prohibiting the commission of rape within the limits of an Indian reservation, but which contains no express provision that it should be applicable to Indians residing on allotted lands, but is subject to the laws of the state in which the crime was alleged to have been committed. U. S. v. Kiva, (1903) 126 Fed. 879.

Restrictions upon alienation contained in patents issued to Indian allottees of lands in severalty, as required by different Acts of Congress, were not repealed by this section.

Nelson v. John, (1906) 43 Wash. 483, 86 Pac. 933.

Federal control of proceeds of land after citizenship.—A patent issued to an Indian allottee, pursuant to the treaty of Sept. 30, 1854, authorizing the President to assign land to Indians with such restrictions on the power of alienation as he may impose, stipulated that neither he nor his heirs should sell the tract without the consent of the President. Regulations approved by the President provided that the proceeds of timber taken from allotted lands should be deposited in a national bank subject to check of the Indian owner of the allotment, countersigned by the Indian agent. It has been held that, though an allottee becomes a citizen under this section, his power to dispose of the proceeds received from the sale of his timber is subject to the approval of the Indian agent. Tomkins v. Campbell, (1906) 129 Wis. 93, 108 N. W. 216.

Alaska Indians.—Under this Act those Indians or half-breeds in Alaska who have voluntarily taken up their residence separate and apart from any tribe of Indians, and have adopted the habits of civilized life, become thereby citizens of the United States by naturalization. In re Minook, (1904) 2 Alaska 200.

Government control of liquor traffic not disturbed.—Contra to the original note, see Matter of Heff, (1905) 197 U. S. 488, 25 S. Ct. 506, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 848, set out in note to this title, vol. 3, p. 384, sec. 1.

Who become citizens.—When lands composing an Indian reservation have been allotted and patented in severalty among the members of the band or tribe of Indians occupying such lands, each and every allottee becomes a citizen of the state wherein such reservation is located, and subject to the laws thereof. Moore v. Nah-con-be, (1905) 72 Kan. 169, 83 Pac. 400.

Taxation.—Land allotted under an Indian treaty which exempts such land from levy, sale, or forfeiture until the state legislature shall, with the consent of Congress, remove the restriction, can no longer escape taxation after the Indian patentee has become a citizen under this section, which in addition to the grant of citizenship provides that Indians to whom allotments have been made shall have the benefit of, and be subject to, the laws, both civil and criminal, of the state or territory in which they may reside, and the ten years during which Congress, by the Act of March 3, 1893, 27 Stat. L. 612, 633, ch. 209, postponed the operation of the provision of Wash. Laws 1889, 1890, p. 499, granting the power of alienation "in like manner and with like effect as any other person may do under the laws of the United States and of this state," and removing all restrictions in reference hereto, have expired. Goudy v. Meath, (1906) 203 U. S. 146, 27 S. Ct. 48, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 130, affirming (1905) 38 Wash. 126, 80 Pac. 295.

Vol. III, p. 500, sec. 3.

Action for use and occupation.—An Indian may recover, in an action for mesne profits, the rental value of lands allotted to him by the United States government, from a person who has used and occupied the same under a lease that is void because not sanctioned and approved by the officers of the Interior Department. Phillips v. Reynolds, (1907) 79 Neb. 626, 113 N. W. 234.

Approval by Secretary of Interior.—This section does not authorize the leasing of the lands embraced within an Indian allotment, unless it is made to appear to the Secretary of the Interior that the allottee cannot, by reason of age or other disability, personally and with benefit to himself occupy or improve his allotment or any part thereof. Williams v. Steinmetz, (1905) 16 Okla. 104, 82 Pac. 986.

The statutory requirement that leases made by Indian allottees of the Cherokee and other civilized tribes in the Indian Territory should be subject to approval by the Secretary of the Interior before being effective confers on the secretary only the power of approval or disapproval, and gives him no authority to initiate or make a lease, or to change or ignore its provisions, and his approval of an assignment of a lease, made without the consent of the lessor, in direct violation of its conditions, does not validate such assignment. Midland Oil Co. v. Turner, (1910) 179 Fed.

74, 102 C. C. A. 388, modifying (1909) 167 Fed. 646.

Where a party holds a lease of Indian lands which has been approved by the proper officers of the Interior Department, such lease containing a provision that the party holding the lease will not, at any time during the period for which the said lands and premises are leased, sublet the same to any person without the consent thereto of the party of the first part and the approval of the same by the Secretary of the Interior, a subleasing of the same without the consent of the Secretary of the Interior is void, and conveys no right by such subleasing, and the sublease cannot be enforced. The doctrine of estoppel between landlord and tenant does not apply. Reeves v. Sheets, (1905) 16 Okla. 342, 82 Pac. 487.

A lease of an Indian allotment which has not been approved by the Secretary of the Interior is absolutely null and void; and where a party under such a lease plants the land to corn and cultivates it, and the cattle of the allottee, in connection with the cattle of another, break down the fence and destroy such corn, the lessee cannot recover for the value of his share thereof. The lease having been made in violation of a positive statute, the law will grant him no relief. Williams v. Steinmetz, (1905) 16 Okla. 104, 82 Pac. 986.

Vol. III, p. 501, sec. 5.

Jurisdiction of state courts to determine descent.—Where, in the proceedings for the settlement of the estate of an Indian allottee, there being other property than the land which warranted administration, the parties, by stipulation and mutual consent, submitted to the state court the question whether S. was heir of the decedent, it was held that the court had jurisdiction to determine the question, though the judgment did not transfer the title to, or disturb the possession of, the allotted land held by the United States in trust for decedent and his heirs; the government being entitled to recognize, or refuse to recognize, the order as conclusive or prima facie evidence of the fact. Smith v. Smith, (1909) 140 Wis. 599, 123 N. W. 146.

Legitimacy of issue.—Though Act Cong. Feb. 8, 1887, ch. 119, 24 Stat. L. 390, 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 496, declares Indians receiving allotments in severalty thereunder to be citizens of the United States, subject to the laws of the state in which they live, and Act Cong. March 3, 1885, ch. 319, 23 Stat. L. 340, makes the state law of alienation and descent applicable to such allotments, yet, under the direct provisions of this section the issue of a male and female Indian, who cohabited as husband and wife according to the custom of Indian life, is deemed legitimate, to determine the descent of land. Kalyton v. Kalyton, (1903) 45 Ore. 116, 74 Pac. 491, 78 Pac. 332; In re House, (1907) 132 Wis. 212, 112 N. W. 27; Smith v. Smith, (1909) 140 Wis. 599, 123 N. W. 146.

Vol. III, p. 503, sec. 1.

Repeal.—In so far as this Act conferred jurisdiction upon the courts to determine questions of heirship and descent as they may affect allotted lands during the trust period it was repealed by implication by the Act of June 25, 1910, ch. 431, 36 Stat. L. 855, making the Secretary of the Interior a special tribunal to determine such questions and declaring that his decision shall be "final and conclusive," thus making the jurisdiction conferred upon him exclusive. Bond v. U. S., (1910) 181 Fed. 613; Pel-Ata-Yakot v. U. S., (1911) 188 Fed. 387.

Retrospective effect.—An invalid retrospective effect is not given to the provision of this section authorizing Indians claiming to be entitled to an allotment of land to prosecute, in the proper federal Circuit Court, any action in relation to their right thereto, by construing such Act to include a suit by an Indian to obtain an allotment to which she claims she was, at the time of the passage of such Act, entitled, under the Allotment Act of March 3, 1885, 23 Stat. L. 340, ch. 319, and to have canceled the alleged improper allotment of such land to another. Hy-Yu-

Tee-Mil-Kin v. Smith, (1904) 194 U. S. 401, 24 S. Ct. 676, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 1039, affirmed (1902) 119 Fed. 114, 55 C. C. A. 216.

Exclusive federal jurisdiction.—State courts were not given jurisdiction of controversies necessarily involving a determination of the title, and, incidentally, of the right to the possession of Indian allotments while the same were held in trust by the United States, by the provision of the Act of Aug. 15, 1894, 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 504 note, 28 Stat. L. 286, ch. 290, delegating to the federal Circuit Courts the power to determine such questions, since the purpose of that Act to continue the exclusive federal control over disputes concerning allotments which, prior to that Act, could only have been decided by the Secretary of the Interior, is manifested by its provision that a judgment or decree in any such controversy shall be certified by the court to the Secretary of the Interior, and by the provision of this section that in such suits "the parties thereto shall be the claimant as plaintiff and the United States as party defendant." McKay v. Kalyton, (1907) 204 U. S. 458, 27 S. Ct. 346, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 566, reversing (1904) 45 Ore. 116, 74 Pac. 491, 78 Pac. 332.

Under this section the United States Circuit Courts had jurisdiction of a suit by the only child of a deceased Indian to recover lands allotted to him in the Umatilla reservation under Act March 3, 1885, ch. 319, 23 Stat. L. 341, which provided that the lands allotted thereunder should be held in trust by the United States for the sole use and benefit of the allottee, "or in case of his decease, of his heirs, according to the laws of the state of Oregon," although it was alleged that the lands were withheld by complainant's stepmother under a claim of dower therein. Patawa v. U. S., (1904) 132 Fed. 893.

The District Court of the territory of Oklahoma had jurisdiction of suits brought therein by persons of Indian blood or descent to establish their rights to allotments, pursuant to this section. Young v. U. S., (1910) 176 Fed. 612.

Scope of action.—In an action brought by a person claiming the right to an allotment of land on an Indian reservation against the United States to establish such right, as authorized by this section the jurisdiction of the court is not restricted to a determination of the right of the plaintiff to any allotment; but, where a particular tract is claimed, the right of any adverse claimant may also be litigated, and for that purpose he may, and should, be joined as a party defendant. U. S. v. Fairbanks, (1909) 171 Fed. 337, 96 C. C. A. 229.

Joinder of actions.—Where several claimants of allotments sued jointly to establish their rights to separate allotments in a District Court of the territory of Oklahoma, it was held that a demurrer to their petition was properly sustained by the District Court, where one of the grounds of the demurrer was a misjoinder of causes of action. Young v. U. S., (1910) 176 Fed. 612.

Parties.—The United States cannot be regarded as a necessary party to a suit brought under the Act of Aug. 15, 1894, 28 Stat. L. 286, 305, ch. 290, prior to the amendatory Act of Feb. 6, 1901, 31 Stat. L. 760, ch. 217, to determine the respective rights of two Indians, each claiming under the Allotment Act of March 3, 1885, in view of the provision of the Act under which the action was brought, that the judgment or decree of the court in favor of any claimant to an allotment upon being properly certified to the Secretary of the Interior, shall have the same effect as if the allotment had been allowed and approved by the Secretary. Hy-Yu-Tee-Mil-Kin v. Smith, (1904) 194 U. S. 401, 24 S. Ct. 676, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 1039, affirmed (1902) 119 Fed. 114, 55 C. C. A. 216.

The jurisdiction of suits by Indians, involving their right to lands allotted under any law or treaty, conferred on the Circuit Courts of the United States by this section, is exclusive, but in all such actions the United States must be made a party defendant as therein provided. Parr v. U. S., (1904) 132 Fed. 1004.

Decision of land department.—In an action brought under this section, which gives to a person in whole or in part of Indian blood or descent the right to bring such action to establish the right to an allotment of land by virtue of an Act of Congress, which he claims to have been unlawfully denied him, the decision of the Land Department, upon the question whether or not the plaintiff when a person of mixed blood was recognized as a member of the tribe entitled to the benefit of the Act, will not in all cases be followed, since in case of an adverse ruling such rule would leave the plaintiff without the remedy which it was the purpose of the statute to give him. Waldron v. U. S., (1905) 143 Fed. 413.

Appointment of receiver.—Under this section the courts have power to appoint a receiver for the lands involved in a suit where a proper showing therefor is made. Smith v. U. S., (1905) 142 Fed. 225.

Selection of specific land necessary before suit.—This section contemplates the selection of specific land for allotment by the claimant before the institution of a suit, upon which the judgment or decree may operate as a complete allotment. Reynolds v. U. S., (1909) 174 Fed. 212, 98 C. C. A. 220.

Right to share in tribal property.—Originally the test of the right of individual Indians to share in tribal lands and other tribal property was existing membership in the tribe; but this rule has been so broadened by Act March 3, 1875, ch. 131, sec. 15, 18 Stat. L. 420, 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 490, and Act Feb. 8, 1887, ch. 119, sec. 6, 24 Stat. L. 390, 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 496, and other Acts, as to place individual Indians who have abandoned tribal relations once existing, and have adopted the customs, habits, and manners of civilized life, upon the same footing in respect of this right as though they had maintained their tribal relations. Oakes v. U. S., (1909) 172 Fed. 305, 97 C. C. A. 139.

Vol. III, p. 505, sec. 7.

Approval of Secretary of the Interior.—Under this section the approval of the Secretary of the Interior is necessary to the validity of any conveyance, whether by an adult or a guardian. U. S. v. Leslie, (1909) 167 Fed. 670.

Effect on trust.—Where lands were allotted to an Indian citizen under the Allotment Act of 1877, restraining alienation for twenty-five years, it was held that this section did not vacate the trust of such lands held by the United States, but that on the sale of the lands, with the consent of the Secretary of the Interior, by the heirs of the deceased allottee, the trust attached to the proceeds, which was only payable to such heirs under rules prescribed by the Interior Department. National Bank of Commerce v. Anderson, (1906) 147 Fed. 87, 77 C. C. A. 259.

Lien of judgment.—A judgment of the District Court against an adult Indian is not a lien upon his inherited lands situated in the county where such judgment is rendered.

Beall v. Graham, (1907) 75 Kan. 98, 88 Pac. 543.

Illegitimate child.—Where a child was born out of wedlock to an Indian woman to whom Indian reservation lands were allotted, and such child survived her, it was held that he was her heir at law. Beam v. U. S., (1907) 153 Fed. 474, affirmed (C. C. A. 1908) 162 Fed. 260.

Exemption from taxation.—The proceeds of the sales of allotted lands by the Indian heirs of the allottees under this section, which have been deposited by direction of the Secretary of the Interior in a bank selected by the commissioner of Indian affairs to the credit of the heirs in proper proportions, subject to their checks only when approved by the agent or officer in charge, are held in trust by the United States for the same purposes as were the lands, and are exempt from taxation by any state or county for the same reason. U. S. v. Thurston County, (1906) 143 Fed. 287, 74 C. C. A. 425, reversing (1905) 140 Fed. 456.

Vol. III, p. 510. [No appropriation hereafter for sectarian schools.]

The declaration of policy that the government shall make "no appropriation whatever for education in any sectarian school," contained in the various Indian Appropriation Acts, has reference only to gratuitous appropriations of public moneys, and has no application to appropriations made to fulfil obligations under the Sioux treaty of April 29, 1868, 15 Stat. L. 635, 637, or to expenditures of the income of the trust fund set apart by the Act of March 2, 1889, 25 Stat. L. 888, 894, 895, ch. 405, sec. 17, for the use of the Sioux Nation, in part consideration of cessions of lands to the United States. Quick Bear v. Leupp, (1907) 30 App. Cas. (D. C.) 151, affirmed (1908) 210 U. S. 50, 28 S. Ct. 690, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 954.

Vol. III, p. 517, sec. 2.

Cattle issued for stockraising purposes.—Under the Act of Congress ratifying agreements made with Indian tribes in Montana, including the Blackfeet, which provides inter alia for the issuance of cattle to such Indians for stockraising purposes, and that all such cattle and their increase shall bear the brand of the Indian Department, and shall not be sold, exchanged, or slaughtered except by consent of the agent in charge, an Indian to whom such cattle are issued acquires only a conditional ownership for the purposes stated in the Act, and it is the right and duty of the United States to protect such ownership, for which purpose it may maintain an action in a federal court in behalf of an Indian from whom cattle so issued have been unlawfully taken; and such right is not affected by the fact that an Indian in whose behalf such an action is brought is a woman who is married to a white man, and has thereby become a citizen of the United States, but who remains on the reservation with her tribe—it being expressly provided by this section that such marriage and citizenship shall not "impair or in any way affect the right or title of such married woman to any tribal property or interest therein." McKnight v. U. S., (1904) 130 Fed. 659, 65 C. C. A. 37.

Vol. III, p. 517. [Children of white man and Indian woman to have rights of mother.]

Children of woman not recognized by tribe as member.—This section does not embrace the children of a mother who was living at the time of its passage and was not then recognized by the tribe as one of its members. Oakes v. U. S., (1909) 172 Fed. 305, 97 C. C. A. 139.

Vol. X, p. 121, sec. 1.

Constitutionality.—This section fixed the punishment for the offenses as provided by the laws of South Dakota at the time the Act was passed, and is not objectionable as delegating to the state authority to fix the punishment in the future for such federal offenses. Hollister v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1906) 145 Fed. 773.

Vol. X, p. 138, sec. 2. [Act of April 26, 1904.]

Authority of Secretary of Interior.—In (1905) 25 Op. Atty.-Gen. 532, it was held that the courts for the northern district of Indian Territory had no jurisdiction or power to decree partition and sale of an inherited Indian allotment covered by a patent, without the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, whose authority to approve or disapprove such sales is not disturbed by this section.

Vol. X, p. 139, sec. 12.

Appeal from courts in Indian Territory.—Subsequent to March 3, 1905, appeals and writs of error and proceedings therefor and therein to review the decisions of the United States courts of the Indian Territory were governed by this section and the practice in the national courts, and not by the statutes of Arkansas or the practice in its courts. Laurel Oil, etc., Co. v. Galbreath Oil, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 1908) 165 Fed. 162.

Vol. X, p. 141. [Errors in allotments and patents to be corrected.]

Scope of statute.—This Act was not intended to render the general statute of limitations inapplicable by retaining jurisdiction over the lands during the whole of the trust period, except in the cases specified, and a suit by the United States to cancel such patents on other grounds is subject to the limitation of six years from the date of their issuance imposed by Act March 3, 1891, ch. 561, sec. 8, 26 Stat. L. 1099, 6 Fed. Stat. Annot. 526, on suits generally to cancel patents. La Clair v. U. S., (1910) 184 Fed. 128.

Vol. X, p. 150, sec. 12.

Repeal.—The provision in this section as to the twenty-one-year restriction was superseded as to full-blooded Indians by section 19 of the Act of April 26, 1906, 34 Stat. L. 137, 144, 1909 Supp. Fed. Stat. Annot. 199, which forbids full bloods to alienate, sell, dispose of, or encumber in any manner any of the lands allotted to them for the period of twenty-five years after the passage and approval of that Act, unless the restrictions be removed by Congress prior to the period indicated. (1907) 26 Op. Atty.-Gen. 351.

The words "alienable" and "inalienable," used to restrict the disposition of lands in sections 12, 15, and 16 of this Act, include disposition by will. Hayes v. Barringer, (C. C. A. 1909) 168 Fed. 221, affirming (1907) 7 Ind. Ter. 697, 104 S. W. 937.

Vol. X, p. 150, sec. 15.

Mechanics' liens.—In Keel v. Ingersoll, (1910) 27 Okla. 117, 111 Pac. 214, it was held that where a building is situated in the Indian Territory upon the homestead allotment of a Chickasaw Indian, whose restrictions upon her power to alienate said allotment have not been removed, and said building was erected before the admission of the state, in the absence of an agreement between the parties to the contrary, the building attaches to the estate of the allottee in the land, and becomes part of the realty, and by reason of this section no materialman's lien can attach to it, since the only estate of the allottee in the land to which the building can and does attach is one that can neither be alienated by her nor subjected to any lien.

Control for sale of surplus allotment.—See under this title, vol. 3, p. 455, sec. 29.

Vol. X, p. 150, sec. 16.

Alienation of land.—By reason of Act of Cong. June 28, 1898, ch. 517, sec. 29, 30 Stat. L. 507, 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 453, and by this section, it has been held that a sale by a full-blood Choctaw Indian to a white man of a portion of her allotment before the removal of restrictions upon her power to alienate and an agreement to convey same when her restrictions are removed is void; and that notes executed by such Indian to the purchaser for the purpose of indemnifying him against loss in the event she fails to convey said land after her restrictions are removed are also void; and recovery thereon cannot be had, although the purchaser paid the purchase price of the land at the time of the sale. Howard v. Farrar, (1911) 28 Okla. 490, 114 Pac. 695. See also Simmons v. Whittington, (1910) 27 Okla. 356, 112 Pac. 1018.

Vol. X, p. 151, sec. 22.

The word "person," as used in this section, includes members, citizens, and freedmen. Hancock v. Mutual Trust Co., (1909) 24 Okla. 391, 103 Pac. 566.

Alienation by heirs.—Lands allotted, homestead and surplus, under the provision of this section, in the name of a deceased member of the Choctaw tribe of Indians, are alienable by his heirs after lawful selection, prior to the lapse of one, three, or five years, and prior to the issuance of a certificate or patent. Hancock v. Mutual Trust Co., (1909) 24 Okla. 391, 103 Pac. 566.

Vol. X, p. 151, sec. 23.

Jurisdiction of court over Secretary of Interior.—The fact that the legal title to allotable Indian lands is still in the government does not defeat the jurisdiction of a court over a suit to compel the Secretary of the Interior to undo, as wholly unwarranted and unauthorized by law, his action in summarily erasing from the approved rolls of citizenship in the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations the name of one who has received an allotment certificate and is in possession of the land. Garfield v. U. S., (1908) 211 U. S. 249, 29 S. Ct. 62, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 168, affirming (1907) 30 App. Cas. (D. C.) 177.

Burden of proof.—In an action of ejectment by an allottee of the Chickasaw tribe of Indians, where the plaintiffs, in support of their title, show that the lands in controversy were allotted to them and certificates of allotment issued to them therefor, and that said certificates have never been canceled, and where the defendants' only defense to the action is that their grantor selected said lands as his allotment before the same were allotted to plaintiffs, but admit that the selection of said lands as allotment for their grantor has been canceled by the Secretary of the Interior, the burden is upon defendants to show facts rendering the order of cancellation invalid in order to overcome the presumption of plaintiffs' right to possession of the lands arising from the certificates of allotment to them, and obtaining by reason of section 23. Sorels v. Jones, (1910) 26 Okla. 569, 110 Pac. 743.

Supp. Fed. Stat. Annot. 190, to review the judgments of the citizenship court. (1907) 26 Op. Atty.-Gen. 127.

Constitutionality.—This and the following two sections, establishing a Choctaw and Chickasaw citizenship court for the purpose of determining citizenship in such tribes, and providing the procedure therein, are constitutional. Wallace v. Adams, (1905) 6 Ind. Ter. 32, 88 S. W. 308.

Jurisdiction.—In (1907) 26 Op. Atty.-Gen. 127, it appeared that R. and T. were children of a white father by his third wife, a white woman, his first and second wives having been Choctaws. Both parents and these children lived in the Choctaw Nation and were recognized and regarded as Choctaw citizens. The children were enrolled by the Choctaw Committee on Citizenship in 1892. Their application to the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes for enrolment under the Act of June 10, 1896, 29 Stat. L. 321, 339, 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 430, was denied, which decision was reversed by the United States court in the Indian Territory, and its judgment affirmed by the Supreme Court, (1899) 174 U. S. 445, 469, 19 S. Ct. 722, 43 U. S. (L. ed.) 1041. Subsequently, on appeal by the Nation under the Act of July 1, 1902, 32 Stat. L. 641, 646-649, their application was denied by the Choctaw and Chickasaw citizenship court. It was held that the citizenship court had jurisdiction and that its judgment was final.

Effect as to persons not parties.—A decree of the Choctaw and Chickasaw citizenship court in a test case against ten persons who had been admitted to citizenship or enrolment by the United States courts in the Indian Territory, vacating, for certain irregularities, the judgments of those courts, was held to be binding on a person similarly situated who was not made a party, but who did not avail himself of his privilege, under the Act of July 1, 1902, to transfer his individual case from the territorial court to the citizenship court, but chose to abide the outcome of the case against the ten representatives of his class. Wallace v. Adams, (1907) 204 U. S. 415, 27 S. Ct. 363, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 547, affirming (C. C. A. 1906) 143 Fed. 716.

Duty of transferring cause to citizenship court.—The annulment by the Choctaw and Chickasaw citizenship court of a judgment of the United States court for Indian Territory affirming a favorable decision of the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes, upon an application for enrolment as a citizen, as provided in the Act of June 10, 1896, 29 Stat. L. 339, 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 431, so far deprived the applicant of a favorable judgment as to devolve upon him the duty of transferring his cause to the citizenship court for hearing therein, as provided in section 31, in order to protect and preserve his claimed rights. (1904) 25 Op. Atty.-Gen. 152.

Vol. X, p. 155, sec. 32.

Jurisdiction.—This Act contemplated that the citizenship court should have a revisory jurisdiction of all judgments of the United States courts in the Indian Territory admitting persons to citizenship on appeal from the judgments of the commission, whether the applicants were on the tribal rolls or not. (1907) 26 Op. Atty.-Gen. 127.

Summarily erasing name from citizenship roll.—The Secretary of the Interior is without authority to erase from the approved rolls of citizenship in the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, without notice or hearing, the name of one who has received an allotment certificate and is in possession of the land. Garfield v. U. S., (1908) 211 U. S. 249, 29 S. Ct. 62, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 168, affirming (1907) 30 App. Cas. (D. C.) 177.

Vol. X, p. 156, sec. 33.

Constitutionality of Act.—Congress could constitutionally empower the Choctaw and Chickasaw citizenship court, created by this section, to review and annul, for irregularities, the judgments of the United States courts of the Indian Territory in Indian citizenship cases, although by the terms of the Act of June 10, 1896, 29 Stat. L. 339, 340, ch. 398, those judgments had become final. Wallace v. Adams, (1907) 204 U. S. 415, 27 S. Ct. 363, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 547, affirming (C. C. A. 1906) 143 Fed. 716.

1909 Supp., p. 190, sec. 1.

Review of judgment of citizenship court.—See under this title, vol. 10, p. 154, sec. 30.

1909 Supp., p. 191, sec. 2.

Children of Choctaw freedmen.—The children of Choctaw freedmen who were minors living March 4, 1906, are entitled to enrolment. (1907) 26 Op. Atty.-Gen. 127.

1909 Supp., p. 192, sec. 3.

Construction of statute.—The language of this section constitutes a legislative interpretation of article 9 of the treaty of Aug. 11, 1866, and supersedes pro tanto that treaty. Garfield v. U. S., (1909) 34 App. Cas. (D. C.) 70.

The Secretary of the Interior, after due notice and a hearing, has authority to reverse his action in enrolling the names of persons claiming to be members of the Cherokee Nation and to cancel allotment certificates issued to them, where such action was taken before the expiration of the time fixed by Congress for the completion of the rolls, notwithstanding the provision in this section which reads as follows: "But this provision shall not prevent the enrollment of any person who has heretofore made application to the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes, or its successor, and has been adjudged entitled to enrollment by the Secretary of the Interior. Garfield v. U. S., (1909) 34 App. Cas. (D. C.) 70.

1909 Supp., p. 194, sec. 10.

Construction of section.—The provisions of this section in regard to the control of the tribal schools and the lands and property pertaining thereto by the Secretary of the Interior, and the use of the tribal funds for the purpose of defraying the necessary expenses of such schools, is purely a governmental and administrative matter, involving no taking of the property of the nation. (1907) 26 Op. Atty.-Gen. 340.

The purpose of Congress in sections 10 and 11 of this Act was to give the Secretary of the Interior exclusive control, within limitations stated, of the revenues of the Five Civilized Tribes, including the Seminole Nation. (1907) 26 Op. Atty.-Gen. 340.

1909 Supp., p. 195, sec. 11.

Control of finances.—The Secretary of the Treasury may safeguard all disbursements on behalf of the Seminole Nation now authorized and require that all Seminole warrants issued after Jan. 1, 1907, shall be approved by the United States inspector for the Indian Territory and paid by the United States Indian agent, instead of being paid by the treasurer of the nation. (1907) 26 Op. Atty.-Gen. 340.

1909 Supp., p. 198, sec. 18.

Suit to cancel patents or deeds.—A suit by the United States for the use of the Creek Nation of Indians to cancel patents or deeds to town lots belonging to said nation in its tribal capacity and sold by the United States for its benefit under Act March 1, 1901, ch. 676, sec. 10, 31 Stat. L. 864, on the ground that such deeds were obtained by fraud for less than the price at which lots were authorized by such Act to be sold, and to recover such lots for the tribe, is within the authority given by this section, which authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to bring suit in the name of the United States for the use of any of the Five Civilized Tribes "for the collection of any moneys or recovery of any lands claimed by any of said tribes." U. S. v. Rea-Read Mill, etc., Co., (1909) 171 Fed. 501.

Prosecution by private counsel.—The provision of this section authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to bring suit in the name of the United States for the use of any of such tribes for the collection of any moneys or the recovery of any lands claimed by it, and "to pay from the funds of the tribe interested the costs and necessary expenses incurred in maintaining and prosecuting such suits," is within the power of Congress, and under such authority the secretary may employ private counsel to conduct such suits; the United States having no interest therein as a suitor. And in any event a defendant in such a suit cannot be heard to object that it was not brought by a law officer of the government. U. S. v. Rea-Read Mill, etc., Co., (1909) 171 Fed. 501.

Right of Congress to impose restrictions.—The lands of the Seminole Nation having been granted to it merely in its corporate capacity as a nation, the United States government may, as a condition of their allotment in severalty and the extinguishment of its own ultimate interest therein, impose the restrictions upon their alienation provided by this section. (1907) 26 Op. Atty-Gen. 340.

Bond given by lessee of Indian lands.—It is competent for the Secretary of the Interior to require by rules and regulations that all payments under a lease shall be made to an Indian agent, and that the lessee shall give a bond to the United States to secure the performance of the lease, and in such case the United States may maintain an action against the lessee and his surety on the bond for breach of such conditions. U. S. v. Comet Oil, etc., Co., (1911) 187 Fed. 674.

Taxation.—Under this section providing that "all lands upon which restrictions are removed shall be subject to taxation, and the other lands shall be exempt from taxation as long as the title remains in the original allottees," and Act May 27, 1908, ch. 199, sec. 4, 35 Stat. L. 313, 1909 Supp. Fed. Stat. Annot. 233, which provides that "all land from which restrictions have been or shall be removed shall be subject to taxation and all other civil burdens as though it were the property of other persons than allottees of the Five Civilized Tribes," the exemption from taxation does not exist any longer, in any case, than the time during which the land is inalienable. U. S. v. Shock, (1911) 187 Fed. 862.

1909 Supp., p. 199, sec. 20.

Jurisdiction of Secretary of Interior.—Leases of allotments of Indian minors in the Indian Territory, confirmed and approved by the trial courts of that territory since April 26, 1906, are not subject to the approval or disapproval of the Secretary of the Interior, but the orders of the courts confirming and approving them are final. Morrison v. Burnette, (1907) 154 Fed. 617, 83 C. C. A. 391.

1909 Supp., p. 200, sec. 22.

Constitutionality.—The rights of the Creek Indians in the Indian Territory who were made citizens of the United States by the Act of March 3, 1901, ch. 868, 31 Stat. L. 1447, with all of the rights, privileges, and immunities of such citizens, were not unconstitutionally impaired by this section, extending the prohibition against the alienation of allotted lands by the allottee or his heirs without the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, created by the supplemental Creek agreement of June 30, 1902, ch. 1323, 32 Stat. L. 500, beyond the five-year limitation therein expressed. Tiger v. Western Invest. Co., (1911) 221 U. S. 286, 31 S. Ct. 578, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 738, reversing (1908) 21 Okla. 630, 96 Pac. 602.

Effect upon alienation of land.—The prohibition against the alienation of allotted lands by the allottee or his heirs, without the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, created by the supplemental Creek agreement of June 30, 1902, ch. 1323, 32 Stat. L. 500, was continued, as to conveyances by full-blooded Indian heirs, beyond the five-year limitation therein expressed by this section, which, after empowering adult heirs of a deceased Indian of either of the Five Civilized Tribes to convey their inherited lands, provided that "all conveyances made under this provision by heirs who are full-blooded Indians are to be subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior," and in section 29 repealed all inconsistent legislation. Tiger

v. Western Invest. Co., (1911) 221 U. S. 286, 31 S. Ct. 578, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 738, reversing (1908) 21 Okla. 630, 96 Pac. 602; U. S. v. Shock, (1911) 187 Fed. 862.

This section had the effect of removing the restrictions on alienation imposed by section 19 of this Act on lands allotted to Indians of the full blood on their descent to either adult or minor heirs of less than full blood, and on such descent the lands become alienable and therefore taxable. U. S. v. Shock, (1911) 187 Fed. 862.

A deed to an undivided interest in the allotment of a citizen of the Creek Nation, set apart to her under Act of June 28, 1898, ch.

517, 30 Stat. L. 495, and who died in possession thereof prior to Act of March 1, 1901, ch. 676, 31 Stat. L. 861, made, executed, and delivered by heirs of said allottee after the expiration of five years from the ratification of the agreement with the Creek Nation contained in said Act of March 1, 1901, and after Act of April 26, 1906, ch. 1876, 34 Stat. L. 145, is valid. Sanders v. Sanders, (Okla. 1909) 117 Pac. 338.

The term "inherited."—See Shulthis v. McDougal, (1909) 170 Fed. 529, 95 C. C. A. 615, affirming (1907) 162 Fed. 331, set out in the original note.

1909 Supp., p. 201, sec. 24.

Effect on existing allotments.—This section is prospective in its operation, and does not authorize the highway officials of the state to take and condemn without compensation a strip one rod on each side of the section line traversing the allotment of a full-blood Indian, whose land was allotted prior to the passage of the Act. Good v. Keel, (Okla. 1911) 116 Pac. 777.

1909 Supp., p. 221, sec. 2, cl. fourth.

Restrictions on alienation.—While the title of the Osage Indians to their lands in Oklahoma, acquired from the Cherokee Nation, pursuant to the treaty with such nation of July 19, 1866, 14 Stat. L. 804, was in fee simple, such title was in the tribe, and did not vest in the individual members, and it was within the power of Congress to provide for their allotment in severalty, to prescribe the manner of their conveyance to the allottees, and to impose restrictions upon their alienation by the allottees. U. S. v. Aaron, (1910) 183 Fed. 347.

Right of United States to enforce restric- tions on alienation by suit.—The United States may maintain a suit to set aside a conveyance of lands allotted to an Indian of the Osage tribe in Oklahoma, in violation of the restrictions imposed by Congress on their alienation. U. S. v. Aaron, (1910) 183 Fed. 347.

Restriction of alienation follows land.—The provision in this clause against alienation is impersonal to the allottee, and runs with the land, and is effective against alienation after the land has descended to the heirs of the allottee. U. S. v. Aaron, (1910) 183 Fed. 347.

1909 Supp., p. 225, sec. 8.

Necessity for approval of Secretary of Interior.—The approval of a deed by the Secretary of the Interior is essential to the validity of the deed, and without it the grantee acquires no title. U. S. v. Aaron, (1910) 183 Fed. 347.

1909 Supp., p. 232, sec. 1.

Right of United States to enforce restrictions.—The plan of the United States government in dissolving the Five Civilized Tribes of Indians and distributing their land in severalty was a great governmental project, having for its object the social and industrial advancement of the Indians, and the various Acts pertaining thereto must be construed in consonance with such purpose and not merely as real estate transactions. The relation of government to the Indians is not to be measured by the law governing the ordinary relation of guardian and ward, nor are the limitations imposed on the alienation of land governed by the strict rules of law relating to grantor or grantee, but the United States, by virtue of its peculiar relationship to the Indians and to prevent the policy to be worked out through such legislation from being defeated, may enforce such restrictions on alienation in the courts although retaining neither a legal nor an equitable estate in the lands after the allotment. U. S. v. Allen, (C. C. A. 1910) 179 Fed. 13, reversing (1907) 171 Fed. 907.

The sixty days specified in this section refers entirely to the status of lands as specified and fixed by this section, and the other sections take effect as of the date of the approval of the Act, unless some other date is specified. (1909) 27 Op. Atty-Gen. 530.

Sale by probate court.—By reason of this section and sections 2 and 6 of this Act the restrictions on the alienation of the allotments of minor Indians of the Creek tribe of Indians, having less than half Indian blood, are removed, and allotments of such allottees may be sold under the order and supervision of the probate courts of the state. Jefferson v. Winkler, (1910) 26 Okla. 653, 110 Pac. 755.

Minors.—A minor within the meaning of that term as used in this section and sections 2 and 6 of this Act includes males under the age of twenty-one years and females under the age of eighteen years, and the marriage of such minor does not confer upon him or her the authority to sell his or her allotted lands independent of the jurisdiction and supervision of the probate courts of the state. Jefferson v. Winkler, (1910) 26 Okla. 653, 110 Pac. 755. See also Kirkpatrick v. Burgess, (Okla. 1911) 116 Pac. 764.

Power of Congress to extend period of prohibited alienation.—It is within the power of Congress to enlarge the period within which an Indian allottee is prohibited from alienating his land beyond that imposed when the allotment was made, so long as the land is held by the allottee, although in the meantime he may have been made a citizen. U. S. v. Allen, (C. C. A. 1910) 179 Fed. 13, reversing (1909) 171 Fed. 907; U. S. v. Shock, (1911) 187 Fed. 870.

1909 Supp., p. 233, sec. 4.

Taxation.—This section is valid, and under and by virtue thereof lands of all allottees of the Five Civilized Tribes of Indians, from which restrictions have been or shall be removed, are subject to taxation under the general laws of the state equally with the property of all other persons. English v. Rich- ardson, (1911) 28 Okla. 408, 114 Pac. 710; Gleason v. Wood, (1911) 28 Okla. 502, 114 Pac. 703; Choate v. Trapp, (1911) 28 Okla. 517, 114 Pac. 709; Alexander v. Rainey, (1911) 28 Okla. 518, 114 Pac. 710. See also under this title, 1909 Supp., p. 199, sec. 19.

1909 Supp., p. 234, sec. 6.

Parties.—The allottee is not an indispensable party to a suit brought by the United States under the authority conferred by this Act to set aside a deed, lease, or contract made by an Indian allottee in violation of the statutory restrictions on alienation. U. S. v. Allen, (C. C. A. 1910) 179 Fed. 13, reversing (1909) 171 Fed. 907.

1909 Supp., p. 235, sec. 6, last paragraph.

Construction of statute.—This paragraph is more than a saving clause, and when real in connection with the part of the section appropriating $50,000 to cover the expenses incurred in litigation regarding allotments is an implied grant of power to maintain such suits, and such power extends to suits relating to allotments which were freed from restrictions by section 1 of the Act in respect to conveyances or contracts previously made. U. S. v. Allen, (C. C. A. 1910) 179 Fed. 13.

1909 Supp., p. 235, sec. 9.

Construction of statute.—This section provides that all allotted lands of enrolled full-blood Indians of the Five Civilized Tribes, and enrolled mixed bloods or three-quarters or more Indian blood "shall not be subject to alienation . . . prior to April 26, 1931, except that the Secretary of the Interior may remove such restrictions." It further provides that "nothing herein shall be construed to impose restrictions removed from land by or under any law prior to the passage of this Act." It has been held that the latter provision does not apply to the supplemental agreement with the Creek Indians approved June 30, 1902, ch. 1323, 32 Stat. L. 500, under which the restrictions on alienation of surplus allotments expired Aug. 8, 1907, but only to restrictions theretofore removed by the Secretary of the Interior, under authority of law, and to restrictions removed by Act of Congress theretofore passed, not for the purpose of imposing but of removing restrictions imposed by prior legislation; that under the first provision all allotments, whether of homestead or surplus lands, made to enrolled full bloods and mixed bloods of three-quarters or more Indian blood are not alienable nor taxable until the restrictions thereby imposed have been removed. U. S. v. Shock, (1911) 187 Fed. 870.

Taxation of lands inherited from allottees.—The provision of this section that "the death of an allottee of the Five Civilized Tribes shall operate to remove all the restrictions upon the alienation of said allottees' land" is qualified by the further provision, first, that the full-blood heirs of such allottee cannot dispose of their interest in such inherited lands without the approval of the court having jurisdiction of the settlement of the estate of the deceased allottee, and second, if the deceased allottee be of one-half or more Indian blood, leaving children surviving him born since March 4, 1906, the homestead remains inalienable during the life or lives of such children, or until April 26, 1931, unless restrictions are sooner removed by the Secretary of the Interior. In view of such provisions, the interests of such full-blood heirs and the homesteads of deceased allottees of one-half or more Indian blood leaving children born since March 4, 1906, are not alienable or taxable until such restrictions are removed, but all other interests in such inherited lands are subject to taxation. U. S. v. Shock, (1911) 187 Fed. 870.

Effect of statute.—This section applies to conveyance of interest of heirs of deceased allottee, whether such death occurred before or after May 27, 1908. Harris v. Gale, (1911) 198 Fed. 712. Compare (1909) 27 Op. Atty-Gen. 530.

Approval of Secretary of Interior.—The approval of the Secretary of the Interior was not necessary to the validity of the deed of full-blood Indian heirs executed Sept. 16, 1909, whose ancestor died August, 1907, the approval of the court having jurisdiction of the settlement of the ancestor's estate being all that is required by section 9. MaHarry v. Eatman, (Okla. 1911) 116 Pac. 935.

1909 Supp., p. 239. [Kaw or Kansas and Osage Indians, etc.]

Sale of surplus lands.—The provision of this Act which authorizes the Secretary of the Interior, pursuant to rules and regulations prescribed by him, to sell the "surplus lands" of any member of the Osage tribe of Indians, and requires his approval before any such sale has validity, is applicable to the lands of deceased allottees. U. S. v. Aaron, (1910) 183 Fed. 347.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT.

Vol. III, p. 536, sec. 439.

Authority to approve leases of Indian lands.—Under this section the Secretary of the Interior may delegate to the Assistant Secretary authority to approve leases of Indian lands and assignments thereof, and so long as such authority remains unrevoked the approval of the Assistant Secretary is equivalent to that of the Secretary. Turner v. Seep, (1909) 167 Fed. 646, modified on another point (1910) 179 Fed. 74, 102 C. C. A. 368.

Vol. III, p. 537, sec. 441.

Indians.—Under this section and sections 463, 2058, 2149, R. S., 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 337, 349, 390, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs is authorized, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, to cause collectors to be excluded and removed from a tribal Indian reservation on days when payments are being made to the Indians, if in his judgment the presence of collectors therein at such times is detrimental to the peace and welfare of the Indians; and this although the reservation be within a state and the Indians be the holders, under trust patents issued to them pursuant to Act Feb. 8, 1887, ch. 119, 24 Stat. L. 388, 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 494, of allotments adjacent to the reservation and, therefore, citizens of the United States and the state. Rainbow v. Young, (1908) 161 Fed. 835, 88 C. C. A. 653.

For cases citing this section, see Cosmos Exploration Co. v. Gray Eagle Oil Co., (1903) 190 U. S. 309, 23 S. Ct. 692, 24 S. Ct. 860, 47 U. S. (L. ed.) 1064; U. S. v. Hitchcock, (1907) 205 U. ## INTERNAL REVENUE.

Vol. III, p. 556, sec. 321.

Authority of commissioner.—This section, while relating generally to "matters pertaining to the assessment and collection of internal revenue," does not authorize a limitation of the duties of internal revenue officers and agents in special matters otherwise provided by law. (1908) 26 Op. Atty-Gen. 517.

Regulations as evidence.—On the trial of persons charged with a violation of the internal revenue laws, the instructions, rules, and regulations prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, as authorized by statute, are admissible in evidence where pertinent to the issues. Sprinkle v. U. S., (1905) 141 Fed. 811, 73 C. C. A. 285,

Applicability to agents of a state.—See under this title, vol. 3, p. 605, sec. 3232.

Vol. III, p. 563, sec. 3149.

Effect of vacancy in office of collector.—A vacancy occurring in the office of collector of internal revenue, and the appointment of a successor, would seem to have the effect, under this section, of vacating the offices of the deputy collectors. (1907) 26 Op. Atty-Gen. 363.

Appointment of deputies.—This section seems to require that a deputy collector of internal revenue should be appointed by the collector in commission, by an instrument in writing under his hand. (1907) 26 Op. Atty-Gen. 363.

Vol. III, p. 573, sec. 3164.

Witness in state court.—A collector or deputy collector of internal revenue cannot be compelled by a court to disclose as a witness before the court or a grand jury the names of persons in whose places of business special tax stamps are posted, or the places in which the same are posted; his information on the subject being obtained in an official capacity, and primarily from the records of his office, copies of which he is forbidden to furnish by the lawful regulations of the Treasury Department, as against public policy. In re Lamberton, (1903) 124 Fed. 446.

Vol. III, p. 573, sec. 3166.

Probable cause as a defense.—In an action against an internal revenue officer for a wrongful seizure of property which has been returned to the claimant intact, proof of probable cause for such seizure is a complete defense, and may be made, although the court in rendering judgment for the claimant in a proceeding for the forfeiture of the property failed to make the certificate of probable cause provided for by R. S. sec. 970, 2 Fed.

Stat. Annot. 287; and where the proof shows that the defendant made the seizure by direction of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, based upon information received from his special agents which justified a suspicion that the plaintiff was violating the law, the court is warranted in charging the jury as matter of law that there was a probable cause. Agnew v. Haymes, (C. C. A. 1905) 141 Fed. 631.

Vol. III, p. 574, sec. 3167.

Witness in state court.—Under the regulations of the Internal Revenue Department, promulgated with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, providing that officers of the department "will decline to testify as to facts contained in the records, or coming to their knowledge in their official capacity; and this prohibition is hereby extended to include also internal revenue storekeepers and gaugers and agents," a storekeeper and gauger stationed at a distillery has no right to divulge information in regard to the business of the distiller obtained by him solely in his official capacity as an internal revenue officer, even when called as a witness in a state court. Stegall v. Thurman, (1910) 175 Fed. 813.

Vol. III, p. 575, sec. 3169, cl. seventh.

Intent.—On the trial of a government storekeeper and gauger at a distillery charged under this section with having negligently and designedly permitted a violation of the law by another person by leaving the door of a cistern room unlocked, in consequence of which distilled spirits were unlawfully removed therefrom, proof that the room was negligently left open or unlocked is sufficient to warrant a conviction, and it is not essential that it should have been with intent that the spirits should be removed. Mason v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1908) 162 Fed. 23.

Not applicable to Oleomargarine Act.—Schafer v. Craft, (1906) 144 Fed. 907; Grier v. Tucker, (1907) 150 Fed. 658; Craft v. Schafer, (C. C. A. 1907) 153 Fed. 175.

Vol. III, p. 584, sec. 3184.

Limitation of action.—Under this section providing for the collection of delinquent internal revenue taxes, with a penalty of five per cent. thereon and interest at the rate of one per cent. a month, such interest is not a penalty, but is recoverable as interest, and the limitation of five years, prescribed by

R. S. sec. 1047, 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 100, 4 Fed. Stat. Annot. 865, for suits to recover penalties, does not apply to a suit to recover such interest as a part of the debt. U. S. v. Guest, (C. C. A. 1906) 143 Fed. 456, affirmed 150 Fed. 121.

Vol. III, p. 586, sec. 3187.

Concurrent remedies.—The remedy afforded by this section was not superseded by the Act of July 20, 1868, 15 Stat. L. 125, 167, ch. 186, sec. 106, which was substantially re-enacted by R. S. sec. 3207, 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 592. Blacklock v. U. S., (1908) 208 U. S. 75, 28 S. Ct. 228, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 396, affirming (1906) 41 Ct. Cl. 89.

Vol. III, p. 587, sec. 3190.

Rights of third persons.—A sale of property by an internal revenue officer under a distraint warrant for the collection of a tax does not cut off the title of a third person who does not owe the tax and against whose property the warrant is not directed, and the true owner may assert his title and right of possession by replevin against the purchaser after the officer has made the sale and transferred possession, and has thus completed his official acts with respect to the property. A sale of property by a collector under a distraint warrant is clearly distinguishable from a sale of property seized and condemned in forfeiture proceedings for violation of the customs or internal revenue laws, and passes only the interest of the tax debtor. Sheridan v. Allen, (C. C. A. 1907) 153 Fed. 563, modifying (1906) 145 Fed. 963.

Vol. III, p. 590, sec. 3199.

The deed is only prima facie evidence.—Under this section providing that the collector's deed of sale of land for internal revenue taxes against the owner shall be prima facie evidence of the name of the person for whose taxes the land was sold, of the name of the purchaser, of the real estate purchased, and of the price paid, the deed is not prima facie evidence as to other recitals. Stewart v. Fergusson, (1903) 133 N. C. 276, 45 S. E. 585.

Proof of title under collector's deed.—Rev. Stat. sec. 3182, 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 583, requires the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to make assessments of all taxes under the Internal Revenue Act; section 3183, 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 584, directs that returns by persons liable for taxes shall be made by a certain date; section 3188, 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 586, provides that on failure to pay the taxes the collector may levy or by warrant may authorize the deputy collector to levy on all property, except such as is exempt, belonging to the delinquent; and section 3197, 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 589, requires the collector, on sale of property for taxes, to give the purchaser a certificate of purchase. It has been held that a purchaser claiming land under a sale for internal revenue taxes against the owner cannot sustain his title under a collector's deed where he fails to show, independently of the mere recitals in the records or in the deed, that a return was made by the person liable to be assessed, that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue had made the assessment, that a warrant of distraint had issued, or that a certificate of purchase had been given to him. Stewart v. Fergusson, (1903) 133 N. C. 276, 45 S. E. 585.

Not applicable to Oleomargarine Act.—Grier v. Tucker, (1907) 150 Fed. 658.

Vol. III, p. 597, sec. 3220.

Conclusiveness of award.—An allowance by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for the refund of a tax illegally collected is not the simple passing of an ordinary claim by an ordinary accounting officer, but an award upon which an action may be brought, and which is conclusive unless impeached for fraud or mistake. Edison Electric Illuminating Co. v. U. S., (1903) 38 Ct. Cl. 208.

Reconsideration of claim determined by Supreme Court.—In (1906) 25 Op. Atty.-Gen. 605, it was held that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue had no power, under this section, to reopen and allow the claim of a steamship company for taxes voluntarily paid under a mutual mistake of law, as the judgment of the Supreme Court (200 U. S. 488, 26 S. Ct. 327, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 569), in sustaining the ruling of the commissioner that the company had no legal claim against the government, deprived the commissioner of jurisdiction to again entertain the claim.

Taxes voluntarily paid.—The Commissioner of Internal Revenue has no power, under this section, to refund taxes voluntarily paid without protest, under a mutual mistake of law. The rule is firmly established and unqualified that protest is indispensable to the right to recover taxes claimed to have been illegally exacted. (1908) 26 Op. Atty.-Gen. 472.

Persons liable.—Act Cong. June 13, 1898, 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 776, imposing an internal revenue tax on certain legacies, required the executor to sign a statement to the collector and to pay the tax to him, and section 30 gave the Commissioner of Internal Revenue control of the assessment. R. S. secs. 3182, 3183, 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 583, required the collector to pay the tax into the treasury, and declared that on the death of the collector all lists should be transferred to his successor; and Act Cong. Feb. 8, 1899, 6 Fed. Stat. Annot. 614, declared that an action against such collector should not abate by his death, but that his successor should be substituted as defendant. It has been held that where the collector wrongfully received an inheritance tax on bequests which were not taxable, on his death the liability to refund was enforceable against his successor in office, it being the duty of the commissioner to pay any judgment rendered against the collector as provided by section 3220. Armour v. Roberts, (1907) 151 Fed. 846.

Vol. III, p. 599, sec. 3221.

Defense to action on bond.—This section confers upon the owner of distilled spirits deposited in a warehouse a legal right which is enforceable in the courts, and is not dependent on the discretionary action of the Secretary of the Treasury, and therefore a destruction of spirits in a warehouse by accidental fire may be set up as a defense to an action by the government on a distiller's bond to recover the taxes thereon. Freeman v. U. S., (1907) 157 Fed. 195, 84 C. C. A. 643.

Spirits lost after seizure by an internal revenue officer, through the latter's mere negligence, were not lost by reason of "casualty" within this section. U. S. v. Siak, (1910) 176 Fed. 885, 100 C. C. A. 355.

Vol. III, p. 600, sec. 3224.

Suit to restrain collection of personal property tax.—Both under this section and on general principles of equity an injunction suit cannot be maintained to restrain the collection by town authorities of a personal property tax; there being an adequate remedy at law to be had by paying the tax and bringing an action to recover it, and it being contrary to public policy to tie up the collection of taxes. Nye v. Washburn, (1903) 125 Fed. 817.

Vol. III, p. 601, sec. 3226.

Effect of application to refund.—A written application to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to refund a sum expended in the voluntary purchase of revenue stamps from a collector, to be affixed to a conveyance, though it may be sufficient to justify favorable action by the commissioner, under R. S. sec. 3220, 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 597, is not the equivalent of an appeal to him from an adverse decision by the collector, which, under sections 3226–3228, is essential to the maintenance of a suit for the recovery of internal taxes alleged to have been erroneously or illegally assessed or collected. Chesebrough v. U. S., (1904) 192 U. S. 253, 24 S. Ct. 262, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 432.

Remedy when claim rejected.—If a claim is rejected by the commissioner a judicial remedy is given the party by an action against the collector. If the claim is allowed by the commissioner and payment refused by the accounting officers, a suit may be brought directly against the government in the Court of Claims. Edison Electric Illuminating Co. v. U. S., (1903) 38 Ct. Cl. 208.

Appeal as condition precedent.—The provision in this section that no suit shall be maintained to recover back any internal revenue tax claimed to have been illegally or erroneously collected until an appeal shall have been taken to the commissioner and a decision had therein, unless such decision shall have been delayed more than six months, is not merely a statute of limitations, but prescribes an absolute condition precedent, which is not waived by a failure to plead it, and without compliance with which a suit cannot be maintained; but where, before payment of the tax, a claim for its abatement was presented to the commissioner in accordance with the rules of the department, and rejected, the same was equivalent to an appeal, and an appeal after payment on the same grounds was not necessary to authorize a suit. De Bary v. Dunne, (1908) 162 Fed. 961.

Where an appeal for a rebate of the tax, taken after its assessment, but before its payment, in accordance with the regulations of the department, has been adversely decided by the commissioner on the merits, a second appeal after payment of the tax is not required before bringing suit. Schwarzchild, etc., Co. v. Rucker, (1906) 143 Fed. 656.

Splitting causes of action.—In Johnson v. Herold, (1907) 161 Fed. 593, it was held that a manufacturer of surgical supplies, which purchased internal revenue stamps from time to time under protest for use on articles made and sold by it, might maintain different actions against successive collectors to recover the amounts paid to each, and different actions against the same collector, when required to prevent the bar of limitations, or when they related to different classes of articles, and the questions involved might be different, and that a recovery in one such suit was not a bar to the prosecution of the others pending, where no motion was made to consolidate.

Duress.—The purchase of documentary stamps at various times without protest, and the affixing of such stamps to manifests of cargoes on vessels bound to foreign ports, cannot be deemed to have been under duress, so as to sustain a recovery from the United States of the amount of the illegal tax so collected, because clearance papers for vessels so bound could not be procured without delivery to the collector of the district of the stamped manifests, without which clearance papers the vessels would be prevented from sailing, or would be liable, under R. S. sec. 4197, 7 Fed. Stat. Annot. 45, for the penalty therein prescribed. U. S. v. New York, etc., Mail Steamship Co., (1906) 200 U. S. 488, 26 S. Ct. 327, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 569, reversing (1903) 125 Fed. 320.

Assessment list as evidence.—In the assessment of special taxes the officers of the internal revenue act in a quasi-judicial capacity, and in an action to recover such taxes the introduction in evidence of the assessment list, regular in form, makes a prima facie case for the government. Western Express Co. v. U. S., (1905) 141 Fed. 28, 72 C. C. A. 816.

Vol. III, p. 603, sec. 3227.

Effect of Act of March 3, 1887.—Act of March 3, 1887, ch. 359, sec. 1, 24 Stat. L. 505, 2 Fed. Stat. Annot. 80, providing generally for the bringing of suits against the United States, and limiting such suits to six years after the right accrued, did not supersede R. S. secs. 3226, 3227. Christie-St. Commission Co. v. U. S., (1903) 126 Fed. 991; Christie-St. Commission Co. v. U. S., (1905) 136

Proviso not compulsory.—The proviso in this section is permissive only, and does not compel a claimant to bring suit within two years and six months after taking appeal in any case, but he may at his election await the decision of the commissioner, and, if adverse, bring suit within two years thereafter. Merck v. Treat, (1909) 174 Fed. 388, 98 C. C. A. 606.

Limitations.—Actions brought under this section are exclusively subject to the limitations imposed by this and the following section. Christie-St. Commission Co. v. U. S., (1904) 129 Fed. 506, affirming (1905) 136 Fed. 326, 69 C. C. A. 464.

Sufficiency of protest.—See Johnson v. Herold, (1907) 161 Fed. 593.

Fed. 326, 69 C. C. A. 464, affirming (1904) 129 Fed. 506.

The running of the statute is not suspended during the pendency of the appeal before the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. Christie-St. Commission Co. v. U. S., (1904) 129 Fed. 506, affirmed (1905) 136 Fed. 326, 69 C. C. A. 464.

Vol. III, p. 603, sec. 3228.

Time statute begins to run.—Under this and the preceding section it is held that on the expiration of six months after an appeal to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue without its having been cited upon, a right of action accrues and becomes barred after two years. Christie-St. Commission Co. v. U. S., (1903) 126 Fed. 991; Christie-St. Commission Co. v. U. S., (1905) 136 Fed. 326, 69 C. C. A. 464, affirming (1904) 129 Fed. 506; Schwarzchild, etc., Co. v. Rucker, (1906) 143 Fed. 656.

Vol. III, p. 605, sec. 3232.

Applicability to agents of a state.—The dispensing and selling agents of a state which, in the exercise of its sovereign power, has taken charge of the business of selling intoxicating liquors, are fairly within the scope of sections 3232, 3244, 2040, under which an excise tax is to be collected from all sellers of intoxicating liquors. South Carolina v. U. S., (1905) 199 U. S. 437, 26 S. Ct. 110, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 261, affirming (1904) 39 Ct. Cl. 257.

Vol. III, p. 607, sec. 3240.

Certified copy of record as evidence.—A certified copy by the Collector of Internal Revenue for the state of Georgia, from the records of his office, showing the names of all the persons who have paid special taxes within his district, is admissible evidence for the purpose of showing that a particular person has paid the special taxes as a retail liquor dealer. Huckabee v. State, (1910) 7 Ga. App. 677, 67 S. E. 837. See also State v. Dowdy, (1907) 145 N. C. 432, 58 S. E. 1002.

Vol. III, p. 608, sec. 3242.

Delivery at customer's residence.—One who has paid a special tax entitling him to retail liquor at his regular place of business does not violate this section by delivering liquor to a customer at the latter's residence, though the sale be completed there. Benbrook v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1911) 186 Fed. 153.

Vol. III, p. 609, sec. 16.

Purposes of law.—While the cardinal purposes of the provisions of the internal revenue law imposing taxes on dealers in liquors is the raising of revenue for the United States, the federal courts may properly, in the exercise of the powers vested in them, rigidly enforce the penalties provided for a violation of such law, for the secondary purpose of aiding in the enforcement of the laws of a state regulating or prohibiting the sale of liquors. In re Charge to Grand Jury, (1908) 162 Fed. 736.

Place of sale.—In Jones v. U. S., (1909) 170 Fed. 1, 95 C. C. A. 213, it was held that a retail liquor dealer who has his internal revenue tax paid stamp duly posted in his place of business is not subject to prosecution for carrying on business without paying the special tax therefor because of the shipment of a quantity of liquor from his stock on an order received by mail by an express company C. O. D. to the purchaser at another place. In such case the sale is completed and the property passes when the goods are delivered to the carrier; the collection and transmission of the price being merely an incident of the express business.

Retail dealers—Members of illegal clubs.—Under the statute law of Georgia which makes it unlawful for any person to sell or barter either directly or indirectly or to keep or furnish at any public place, or to keep on hand at any place of business, intoxicating liquors, a municipal corporation cannot lawfully license or charter a so-called "locker club" which, in fact, sells or furnishes liquors to its members, and such illegal charter is no protection to its members, each one of whom, who by his money, name, or patronage contributes to its support and maintenance, is a retail liquor dealer within the internal revenue law of the United States, subject to special tax as such and to the penalty imposed for carrying on the business without payment of such tax where a single tax stamp only is taken out in the name of the club. In re Charge to Grand Jury, (1908) 162 Fed. 736.

Vol. III, p. 614, sec. 3244, cl. third.

Construction of statute.—The phrase "through continuous closed vessels and pipes until the manufacture thereof is complete" refers to the exception, to wit, "other than by original and continuous vessels and pipe until the manufacture is complete," and not to "every person who rectifies, purifies, or refines distilled spirits or wines by any process." U. S. v. Twitchell Co., (1911) 184 Fed. 525.

"Rectifiers."—In U. S. v. Smith, etc., Co., (1911) 184 Fed. 532, it appeared that the defendants manufactured fluid extract of ginger by pouring distilled spirits on ginger root. After drawing off the fluid, the distilled spirit remaining in the dregs was separated therefrom by the distillation, and this product, less in quantity and lower in grade than that previously placed in the receptacle with the ginger root, was re-used in repeating the process and in the manufacture of medicinal preparations. It was held that the defendant was a person engaged in the business or occupation of rectifying, purifying, and refining distilled spirits and subject to internal revenue taxation imposed by this section. To the same effect see U. S. v. Hance, (1911) 184 Fed. 528.

Flavoring extracts, composed of from forty to fifty per cent. alcohol, three per cent. flavoring principle, and the remainder water, the quantity of alcohol being no greater than is required to hold the flavoring principle in solution, which are not made, sold, or used, or capable of being used, as a beverage, but which are chiefly used in flavoring soda water syrups, the quantity of extract used in each glass of the beverage being about three or four drops, are not "beverages" or "liquors" within the meaning of this section, and the manufacturer is not subject to special tax thereunder as a rectifier or wholesale or retail dealer in liquors. Allen v. Liquid Carbonic Co., (1909) 170 Fed. 315, 95 C. C. A. 11.

Making of ginger ale paste.—In U. S. v. S. Twitchell, Co., (1911) 184 Fed. 525, it appeared that the defendant manufactured a ginger ale paste used for making ginger ale. The paste was manufactured by placing a quantity of ginger in a percolator and adding alcohol. The oleoresin thus obtained from the ginger containing unnecessary alcohol was distilled and the alcohol separated. This alcohol was of a low grade, and was charged with ginger essence so as not to be commercially salable and could not be used except in repeating the process of extracting oleoresin from ginger root and in the manufacture of flavors. It was held that the defendant in so distilling the alcohol was engaged in the business of rectifying, purifying, and refining distilled spirits within this section.

Vol. III, p. 615, sec. 4.

Place of sale.—In De Bary v. Dunne, (1909) 172 Fed. 940, it appeared that the plaintiffs, who were wholesale liquor dealers in New York city, paid the special internal revenue tax there and kept imported wines on storage with McC. & Co. at Portland, Oregon, from which jobbers in that city and vicinity were supplied. The plaintiffs delivered to McC. & Co. a list of dealers to whom they were authorized to deliver wines from the stock on storage when requested to do so by such dealers, not exceeding a certain number of cases in any one month. The persons or firms on such credit list, when desiring to purchase wines of plaintiff, delivered to McC. & Co. a written order for the number of cases desired, and if the maximum limit to which the purchaser was entitled for the current month had not been exceeded McC. & Co. immediately delivered the goods without consulting plaintiffs, and reported the sale to them at New York, from whence an invoice for the goods at the current price would be shipped to the buyer and the price remitted to plaintiffs in New York. There was no contract that the accredited purchasers should buy any particular quantity per month, or any at all. It was held that sales made under such arrangements were made in Portland and not in New York, and that the plaintiff was therefore subject to the payment of a federal wholesale liquor dealer's tax in Oregon.

Express companies.—In Western Express Co. v. U. S., (1905) 141 Fed. 28, 72 C. C. A. 516, it appeared that the local agents of an express company in a prohibition state took orders from persons desiring beer and forwarded the same to breweries in another state. The breweries delivered the beer to the company for shipment to the agent who sent the order, charging the price to the company, and having no knowledge of the local customer. On its receipt the agent stored the beer in the company's warehouse until it was called for, and then delivered it to the customer, collecting the price and the express charges, and accounting to the company for the same. He sometimes also sent orders which had not been requested, and delivered the beer to persons who thereafter applied for it. No receipts were taken from persons to whom beer was delivered, and their names did not appear on the company's books. When beer was not called for it was returned to the breweries, and the company given credit therefor. The company received nothing except the usual charges for transportation. It was held that the company was not merely a carrier nor a commercial broker in the transaction, but was, in effect, a commission merchant, and as such was subject to special tax under this section as a dealer in malt liquors at each of the agencies where such business was carried on.

Druggist.—Under this section and section 3248, 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 630, it was held that where a druggist, without paying the internal revenue tax on retail liquor dealers, sold a medicinal preparation which was eighty-eight per cent. proof spirits, more than sufficient to preserve the medicinal properties of any herbs, roots, or drugs contained therein, he was a retail liquor dealer within such sections. U. S. v. Morfew, (1905) 136 Fed. 491.

Ownership not essential.—To render one who "sells or offers for sale" malt liquors subject to special tax as a dealer in malt liquors, under this section, his ownership of such liquors is not essential. Western Express Co. v. U. S., (1905) 141 Fed. 28, 72 C. C. A. 516.

Applicability to agents of a state.—See under this title, vol. 3, p. 605, sec. 3232.

Casks.—See under this title, vol. 2, p. 656, sec. 3287.

Vol. III, p. 622, sec. 3246.

"Apothecaries."—A distiller of alcohol from oleoresin, obtained from ginger root in the manufacture of a ginger ale paste, which alcohol so obtained is again used in obtaining ginger extract by percolation, is not engaged in business as an "apothecary," and is not exempt from liability for the internal revenue taxation as a rectifier, purifier, or refiner of distilled spirits by this section, exempting apothecaries from liability to taxation for the distillation of spirits used exclusively in the preparation of medicines. U. S. v. S. Twitchell Co., (1911) 184 Fed. 525; U. S. v. Hance, (1911) 184 Fed. 528; U. S. v. Smith, etc., Co., (1911) 184 Fed. 532.

Vol. III, p. 630, sec. 3248.

"Bay rum" is a fragrant spirit, obtained by distilling the leaves of the pimento acris with rum, or by mixing the volatile oil procured from the leaves by distillation with alcohol, water, and acetic ether. It is also defined as an aromatic liquid obtained by distilling the leaves with the bayberry, or by mixing various oils, as the oils of myrica, or orange peel, and of pimenta, with alcohol. It has been held that it is neither a "distilled spirit," as that term is defined by this section, nor a "product of distillation" within section 3254, providing for internal revenue taxation of products of distillation as distilled spirits. Roche v. Jordan, (1909) 175 Fed. 234.

Vol. III, p. 632, sec. 48.

Forfeiture after sale—redemption of stamps.—In Harkins v. Williard, (1906) 146 Fed. 703, 77 C. C. A. 129, it appeared that a distiller sold certain casks of unstamped spirits to the plaintiff, which were then in the government warehouse, and on March 10, 1902, the plaintiff paid the tax on the spirits, but before the attachment of stamps the spirits were seized on the same day for violation of the internal revenue law by the distiller, discovered March 4, 1902, after which the spirits were forfeited to the government and sold. It was held that as this section requires the payment of the tax by the distiller and the issuance of stamps to him, the plaintiff was not entitled to recover from the United States the internal revenue tax so paid.

Bay rum.—See under this title, vol. 3, p. 630, sec. 3248.

Vol. III, p. 634, sec. 3257.

Burden of proof.—In a proceeding by information for the forfeiture of property under this section and section 3281, as being used by one carrying on the business of a distiller without giving bond and attempting to defraud the government of the tax on spirits distilled by him, the burden of proof rests on the United States to establish the facts alleged, and every reasonable intendment and effect must be given to answers filed by third persons who claim the property as their own. U. S. v. One Engine, (1910) 179 Fed. 698, 103 C. C. A. 43.

Vol. III, p. 638, sec. 3260.

Defenses set up by sureties.—A distiller's official or annual bond binds the sureties for the payment of the tax on all the spirits distilled by the principal during its term, and they are not relieved from such liability by the execution of a warehousing bond covering certain of such spirits, which is not a substituted, but a cumulative, security. U. S. v. Richardson, (1904) 127 Fed. 893.

On a seizure and sale of distilled spirits under the internal revenue law for nonpayment of the tax thereon, the proceeds are applicable on such tax, and, if sufficient, extinguish the same; and in an action by the government on a distiller's bond to recover a tax on spirits an answer containing allegations under which the defendant is entitled to prove such a state of facts is not demurrable. U. S. Fidelity, etc., Co. v. U. S., (1907) 158 Fed. 804, 85 C. C. A. 426, affirming (1906) 144 Fed. 866.

Negligence of revenue officer.—This section not only contemplates that the distiller shall comply with all the law relating to distilleries, and pay all penalties and fines imposed on him for violation of its provisions, but also that he shall pay taxes on spirits distilled within the required fifteen days, and hence, in an action on a distiller's bond for failure to pay taxes on spirits within such time, it was no defense that the spirits were seized by a revenue officer under a distress warrant and lost through the officer's negligence; the breach of the bond being the distiller's failure to pay the taxes within the time, or to warehouse the spirits according to law. U. S. v. Sisk, (1910) 176 Fed. 885, 100 C. C. A. 355.

A surety on a distiller's bond is not relieved from liability for the tax upon spirits lost in a distillery warehouse, by the fact that at the time of the loss the warehouse was in the possession of the collector, who had seized it for an alleged violation of law, and that the loss was through the negligence of the custodian; his remedy in such case being by an appeal to the Secretary of the Treasury for an abatement of the tax, under R. S. sec.

3221, 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 599. U. S. v. Guest, (C. C. A. 1906) 143 Fed. 456, affirmed 150 Fed. 121.

Spirits lost in warehouse.—The sureties on a distiller's bond are not liable, in the first instance, for taxes on spirits which were lost after being placed in a warehouse, and thus brought within the express terms of the warehousing bond, whatever their ultimate liability may be should the remedy by suit on the latter bond prove unavailing. U. S. v. Guest, (C. C. A. 1906) 143 Fed. 456, affirmed 150 Fed. 121.

Declaration on bond.—In U. S. v. Zemel, (1905) 137 Fed. 889, it appeared that a declaration on an indemnity bond, the condition of which was that the principal should in all respects comply with the requirements of law and regulations in relation to the duties of distillers, was demurred to on the grounds that the breach of said condition assigned did not set forth with sufficient certainty the law and the regulations of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue alleged to have been violated, or the law under which such regulations were made, or that any such regulations were made. It was held that not only should the Act prescribing the penalty be set forth with reasonable certainty, but also the Act authorizing said commissioner to make regulations and the fact that they were made by him thereunder, as well as the specific regulation or regulations thus authorized and made, which were violated.

Credit for proceeds of sale.—Where the government made an assessment against a distiller of the tax on spirits made from material used and not reported, and a portion of such spirits were found, seized, and sold, and the tax on such part paid from the proceeds, it was held that the surety on the distiller's bond, when charged with liability for the assessment, is entitled to credit for the part of the tax so paid, but not for the remainder of the proceeds of the sale. U. S. v. National Surety Co., (1907) 157 Fed. 174, 84 C. C. A. 622.

Vol. III, p. 647, sec. 3271.

Possession.—The joint custody and control of a bonded warehouse by the federal storekeeper and the warehouse proprietor, as provided by sections 3271-3275, does not constitute such change of possession of the liquor stored therein as to destroy the presumption of ownership thereof by the distiller. Hannis Distilling Co. v. Berkeley County Ct., (1907) 62 W. Va. 442, 59 S. E. 1051.

Branding of spirits—legality of regulations. — Circular No. 33, issued by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue May 10, 1910, instructing subordinates in his department that "all forms of distilled spirits from which the substances congeneric with ethyl alcohol have been removed for practical purposes altogether, and which have been heretofore marked as 'pure neutral, or cologne spirits,' will be marked 'alcohol,' under which the marking of any distilled product as 'spirits' has been discontinued, is in violation of this section, which provides that 'all distilled spirits shall be drawn from the receiving cisterns into casks or packages, . . . and the particular name of such distilled spirits as known to the trade, that is to say, high wines, alcohol, or spirits, as the case may be, shall be marked or branded on the head of such cask or package;' it being shown that one distinct product of alcohol in distillation is known to the trade as "spirits," while another product is known as "alcohol," the distinction being so well known and established that their being so marked does not constitute a misbranding, and therefore the provision therefor is not by implication repealed by Food and Drugs Act June 30, 1906, ch. 3915, 34 Stat. L. 768, 1909 Supp. Fed. Stat. Annot. 137. Union Distilling Co. v. Bettman, (1908) 181 Fed. 419.

Casks. — The term "cask" is generally understood to be a receptacle for liquids, either larger or smaller than the usual barrel, and, as employed in the statute respecting the manufacture and sale of spirituous liquors, pertaining to wholesale dealers, has a well-recognized import as a vessel containing not less than twenty, ten, or five gallons, wine measure. Williams v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1907) 158 Fed. 30.

Vol. III, p. 658, sec. 3289.

Each mark and stamp required therefor by law. — R. S. sec. 3323, as amended by Act Cong. July 16, 1892, ch. 196, 27 Stat. L. 200, 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 638, declares that every package of distilled spirits containing five wine gallons or more, filled on the premises of a local dealer, shall be marked, branded, and stamped by such wholesale liquor dealer in such manner and under such rules and regulations as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may prescribe, etc., and declares that every rectifier or wholesale dealer who refuses or wilfully neglects so to mark, brand, or stamp his liquors shall be fined, etc. It has been held that such Act only authorizes the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to designate the kind and character of the mark and stamp to be affixed to the packages, and hence that the marks and stamps so prescribed are marks and stamps "required by law," within section 3289. U. S. v. Seven Barrels Whisky, (1904) 131 Fed. 806.

Information. — In U. S. v. Three Packages Distilled Spirits, (1907) 152 Fed. 580, an information for a forfeiture of distilled spirits for violation of this section was held to be bad on demurrer, as not sufficiently definite to disclose to the court or claimant the precise nature of the act charged to be a violation of the statute.

Regulations as evidence. — See under this title, vol. 3, p. 556, sec. 321.

Conspiracy. — An indictment will lie under R. S. sec. 5440, 2 Fed. Stat. Annot. 247, for conspiracy to remove distilled spirits on which the tax had not been paid, in violation of this section, although it is charged that the purpose of the conspiracy was accomplished. Scott v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1908) 165 Fed. 172.

Vol. III, p. 672, sec. 3297.

The term "alcohol," as used in this section, embraces the various grades of alcohol as reclassified in Internal Revenue Circular No.

723, and referred to therein as pure, neutral, or cologne spirits, and as commercial alcohol. (1909) 27 Op. Atty-Gen. 226.

Vol. III, p. 678, sec. 3309.

Evidence. — Where, in a suit to recover an assessment on unreported spirits alleged to have been distilled from 2,774 gallons of fruit, the defendant stipulated that he had received such amount of fruit, but wholly failed to account either for the destruction of the fruit or of the spirits alleged to have been distilled therefrom, it was held that a finding in favor of the government was justified. U. S. v. Cole, (1904) 134 Fed. 697.

Assessment prima facie evidence.—In a suit based on an internal revenue assessment made under this section, providing that if the commissioner finds that a distiller has not accounted for all spirits produced by him, he shall make an assessment for the difference at the rate of ninety cents per every proof gallon, the assessment is prima facie evidence of its validity. U. S. v. Cole, (1904) 134 Fed. 697.

Vol. III, p. 680, sec. 6.

Assessment of distiller for deficiency of production.—Under this section which requires a distiller to pay internal revenue tax on spirits to the amount of at least eighty per cent. of the capacity of his distillery as estimated according to law, he cannot be relieved from the payment of any part of such tax because the materials used by him are of such inferior quality nor condition that they will not produce such percentage; but where he is a fruit distiller within the proviso to this section an assessment for the deficiency cannot be made against him unless the notice of such deficiency thereby required shall have been given him by the commissioner within six months after receipt of his monthly report, and an assessment made without such notice is void. U. S. v. Ball, (C. C. A. 1908) 163 Fed. 504.

Vol. III, p. 685, sec. 3318.

Indictment.—R. S. sec. 3244, 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 616, defines a wholesale liquor dealer to be a person who sells or offers for sale foreign or domestic distilled spirits or wines in quantities not less than five wine gallons at a time. It has been held that where an indictment charged a defendant as a wholesale liquor dealer with sending out two casks of distilled spirits without making the required entries in his record book, required to be kept by section 3318, the indictment sufficiently charged that the casks contained each not less than five wine gallons. Williams v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1907) 158 Fed. 30.

In charging an offense under this section it is not necessary to allege in the indictment that the defendant is both a rectifier and a wholesale liquor dealer, nor is it necessary, in such a prosecution, to charge or prove to whom the spirits were sold and the place where sent. Williams v. U. S., (1906) 17 Okla. 28, 87 Pac. 647.

Instructions on trial.—In Williams v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1907) 158 Fed. 30, it appeared that the accused was indicted for wilfully and unlawfully refusing and neglecting to make in his record book, kept as a wholesale liquor dealer, any entry or entries concerning two particular casks of spirits at the time they were sent out. The court charged that if defendant failed or neglected to provide a book in such form as prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and sold as a wholesale liquor dealer any kind of distilled spirits, and failed at the time of sending out his stock and before the same was removed from his premises, to enter in such book the date when and the name and place of business of the person or firm to whom such spirits were to be sent, with the kind and quantity of such spirits, he was guilty as charged. In another paragraph the court stated that if the defendant in good faith went to the deputy revenue collector for the district and requested instruction as to the keeping of his records, and was instructed to keep them on a sheet of paper until he could procure the prescribed form book, and he in good faith relied on such instruction and so kept his record, he was not guilty. It was held that the accused by the latter instruction received the full benefit of his claim of good faith, and could not complain of any contradiction in such instructions.

Burden of proof.—Since a plea of not guilty puts in issue every fact essential to constitute the offense charged, and the benefit of reasonable doubt in favor of accused extends to every matter offered in evidence for as well as against him, an instruction in a prosecution of a wholesale liquor dealer for violating the internal revenue law in failing to make proper records of sales, that it was incumbent on defendant to show that he made the entries in a book prescribed by the internal revenue department, or that he made them on a sheet of paper, etc., was erroneous. Williams v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1907) 158 Fed. 30.

Vol. III, p. 688, sec. 3323.

Penalty not exclusive.—The penalty imposed by this section is not exclusive and does not prevent the United States from enforcing a forfeiture of the goods under R. S. sec. 3289, as amended by Act of July 16, 1892, ch. 196, 27 Stat. L. 200, 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 658. U. S. v. Seven Barrels Whisky, (1904) 131 Fed. 806.

Casks.—See under this title, vol. 3, p. 656, sec. 3287.

Vol. III, p. 689, sec. 3324.

Intent.—A conviction may be had, under this section, making it a felony to empty a cask of distilled spirits without then and there effacing and obliterating the stamps, marks, and brands thereon, though the defendant's act was inadvertent and negligent, and did not involve actual felonious intent. U. S. v. Gallant, (1910) 177 Fed. 281.

Failure of employee to destroy stamp as ordered.—The conviction of a defendant of a violation of this section by failing to remove the stamp from a barrel which contained distilled spirits when such barrel was emptied, which constitutes a felony, and requires the imprisonment of the defendant in the penitentiary for a term of not less than one year, will not be sustained on evidence that, on the sale of a single barrel by defendant, he expressly directed an employee to empty it of the liquor remaining therein and to destroy the stamp before delivering the barrel to the purchaser and that the failure of the employee to obey such order was unknown to him. U. S. v. Rogers, (1908) 164 Fed. 520.

Vol. III, p. 701, sec. 3334.

Forfeiture of stamps.—Where stamped liquors were forfeited for a violation of the internal revenue law, the forfeiture included the stamps as well as the property. Harkins v. Williard, (1906) 146 Fed. 703, 77 C. C. A. 129.

Application of proceeds.—The proceeds of a sale of spirits forfeited to the United States for violation of the internal revenue law belong exclusively to the government, and cannot be applied to the payment of the tax thereon. Harkins v. Williard, (1906) 146 Fed. 703, 77 C. C. A. 129.

Vol. III, p. 704, sec. 6.

Intent.—The criminality involved in the re-use of a bottle containing whiskey bottled in bond, without removing and destroying the stamps, does not depend on its being knowingly and wilfully done, the offense being complete if the bottle is re-used without destroying the stamps. U. S. v. Guthrie, (1909) 171 Fed. 528.

Sufficiency of evidence.—Where accused was one of three persons, each of whom held a retail liquor dealer's special tax stamp for a saloon in which government officers found a bottle which had been refilled with spirits without destroying the internal revenue stamps previously affixed thereto, in violation of this section, but there was no evidence that the bottle was refilled by accused, or by his procurement, or by any one acting for him, it was held that he could not be convicted of violating such Act. Duff v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1911) 185 Fed. 101.

Acts of agents.—A seller of whiskey is guilty of violating this section, prohibiting the re-use of bottles containing whiskey bottled in bond, without the removal and destruction of the stamp, though the refilling of the bottle, without destroying the stamp, is the act of the seller's bartender or agent acting within the scope of his employment. U. S. v. Guthrie, (1909) 171 Fed. 528.

L. 938, on the ground that plaintiff was not subject to such taxes, should set out the transactions on account of which they were assessed. Haight, etc., Co. v. McCoach, (1905) 135 Fed. 894.

Vol. III, p. 730, sec. 3.

Rules and regulations regarding rebates.—The rules and regulations prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue on April 28, 1902, providing for claims for rebate of taxes paid on manufactured tobacco and snuff, as authorized by this section, are not objectionable for unreasonableness. Powell v. U. S., (1905) 135 Fed. 881.

Noncompliance with rules.—A bankrupt's trustee was not entitled to recover rebates of internal revenue on tobacco and snuff manufactured by the bankrupt, as authorized by this section, where there was evidence tending to show that the bankrupt's claim was fraudulent and there was a failure to comply with the rules and regulations prescribed therefor by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. Powell v. U. S., (1905) 135 Fed. 881.

Vol. III, p. 730, sec. 4.

Rules and regulations adopted in accordance with this section which made it an absolute prerequisite to the recovery of the rebate that the proofs offered the executive officers should be satisfactory to them were held to be invalid as applied to this case. U. S. v. Hyams, (C. C. A. 1906) 146 Fed. 15.

Conditions precedent.—A strict compliance with a clause in instructions on the back of a blank proof for tobacco rebate, requiring the witnesses at the time of taking the inventory each to count the packages of the several denominations mentioned in the inventory, keep a separate account of the same on separate sheets of paper, make computations, etc., was held not to be a condition precedent to the claimant's right to the rebate authorized by this section. Hyams v. U. S., (1905) 139 Fed. 997, affirmed (1906) 146 Fed. 15, 76 C. C. A. 523.

Evidence.—Where in a suit for tobacco rebate, as authorized by this section, claimant presented four witnesses, who testified explicitly to the amount of tobacco claimed for, and such testimony was uncontradicted, the mere fact that the government claimed that the space in the stores was obviously inadequate for holding the amount of tobacco testified to was held to be insufficient to show that the claim was fraudulent. Hyams v. U. S., (1905) 139 Fed. 997, affirmed (1906) 146 Fed. 15, 76 C. C. A. 523.

Review by Circuit Court.—In proceedings to recover a tobacco rebate as authorized by this section, the whole claim having accrued since the passage of the Tucker Act (Act Cong. March 3, 1887, ch. 359, 24 Stat. L. 605, 2 Fed. Stat. Annot. 88), as amended by Act June 27, 1898, ch. 503, 30 Stat. L. 494, a rejection of the claim by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue is reviewable by the Circuit Court under such Act. Hyams v. U. S., (1905) 139 Fed. 997, affirmed (1906) 146 Fed. 15, 76 C. C. A. 523.

Vol. III, p. 746, sec. 3392.

Cigars repacked in new boxes.—Where cigars are repacked in other and new boxes they become liable to the same tax which was imposed when they were first packed. American West Indies Trading Co. v. U. S., (1910) 45 Ct. Cl. 498.

Vol. III, p. 747, sec. 3394.

Wholesale value or price.—This section classifies cigars and cigarettes for internal revenue duty, and imposes a stamp tax of fifty-four cents per thousand on cigarettes weighing not more than three pounds to the thousand, and the wholesale value or price of which is not more than two dollars per thousand, including the tax, and, if the value exceeds such sum, then they are required to carry a tax of $1.08 per thousand. It was held that where a person manufactured cigarettes and sold them at wholesale at his store-room in reasonable quantities to any one who might apply, at two dollars per thousand, the fact that the larger part of the cigarettes manufactured by him were purchased by his son at two dollars per thousand and sold by him at wholesale with cigarettes of other manufacture for more than such price did not make the "wholesale price or value" of the cigarettes more than two dollars per thousand, and hence the manufacturer was not subject to an assessment prescribed by section 3371, 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 732, for insufficient stamping. Epremiann v. Ward, (1909) 169 Fed. 691.

Taxation of national bank circulation.—A national bank whose outstanding circulating notes amount to less than five per cent. of its capital is not exempted from the payment of the half-yearly duty imposed by R. S. sec. 5214, 5 Fed. Stat. Annot. 155, upon the average amount of its notes in circulation, by the provision of section 3411, that the outstanding circulation of any bank, association, corporation, company, or person shall be free from taxation when reduced to an amount not exceeding five per cent. of its capital, although the latter section is, by section 3417, 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 762, expressly made applicable to national banking associations, since it was so made applicable, as clearly appears from the legislation from which its provisions were drawn, in order to give national banks representing state banks the benefit of the presumption of loss or inability to retire the circulation of the state bank when ninety-five per cent. thereof had been actually retired. Merchants' Nat. Bank v. U. S., (1909) 214 U. S. 33, 29 S. Ct. 593, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 899, affirming (1906) 42 Ct. Cl. 6.

Payee affixing stamp of the execution of paper.—Where a note was executed in Massachusetts, and apparently payable there, the affixing of an internal revenue stamp to it by the payee after its execution was held to be not a material alteration, under the holding of the Massachusetts courts that these sections, prohibiting the admission in evidence of such documents when not stamped, applied only in the federal courts. Rowe v. Bowman, (1903) 183 Mass. 488, 67 N. E. 636.

Not applicable to state courts.—Rowe v. Bowman, (1903) 183 Mass. 488, 67 N. E. 636; Davis v. Evans, (1903) 133 N. C. 320, 45 S. E. 643.

Liability of telegraph company for failure to transmit unstamped message.—A telegraph company agreeing to transmit a telegraph message to which the sender had not attached the revenue stamp required by this section, notwithstanding that the Act prohibited under penalty a company from transmitting a message without an adhesive stamp being affixed, was not liable for the negligent or intentional failure to transmit and deliver the same. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Young, 1902) 138 Ala. 240, 36 So. 374.

The subsequent repeal of sections 7 and 18, prohibiting a telegraph company from transmitting a message without the required adhesive stamp being affixed, did not validate a contract whereby a company agreed to transmit a message to which no stamp had been affixed by the sender. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Young, (1902) 138 Ala. 240, 36 So. 374.

Proof of written contract.—Under the provisions of sections 7 and 14 of this Act, which required charter parties to be stamped, and made unstamped instruments which were within its provisions incompetent as evidence, an action could be maintained for breach of an unstamped charter party which was executed while such provisions were in force, and which was subject to tax thereunder, for want of competent evidence of the contract. Wheaton v. Weston, (1903) 128 Fed. 161.

Vol. III, p. 772, sec. 13.

Intent.—The provision of this section making notes, etc., invalid if not stamped, did not render such an instrument invalid unless the stamp was omitted with fraudulent intent. Rowe v. Bowman, (1903) 183 Mass. 488, 67 N. E. 636.

A notary's certificate of acknowledgment attached to a declaration of homestead was held to be subject to a stamp tax under this section. Sackett v. McCaffrey, (C. C. A. 1904) 131 Fed. 219.

Validating unstamped conveyance.—The satisfaction of a judgment for the recovery of the stamp tax which, under the War Revenue

Act of June 13, 1898, is to be levied, collected, and paid upon the execution of a conveyance, must be deemed the equivalent of the payment of the price of the stamps under section 13 of that Act, as amended by the Act of March 2, 1901, validating unstamped instruments on making the prescribed payment in view of R. S. sec. 3216, 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 595, providing that all judgments and moneys recovered for taxes, costs, forfeitures, and penalties shall be paid to collectors as internal taxes are required to be paid. U. S. v. Chamberlin, (1911) 219 U. S. 250, 31 S. Ct. 155, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 204.

Vol. III, p. 773, sec. 14.

Repeal.—The repeal of the Act requiring certificates to be stamped did not authorize the subsequent admission in evidence of an instrument containing an unstamped certificate of acknowledgment which was subject to the tax when made. Sackett v. McCaffrey, (C. C. A. 1904) 131 Fed. 219. Contra, Ohio River Junction R. Co. v. Pennsylvania Co., (1909) 222 Pa. St. 573, 72 Atl. 271.

Decisions of state courts.—Decisions of state courts that instruments, though unstamped, as required by section 14, were admissible in evidence, were held to have no application to federal courts. Sackett v. McCaffrey, (C. C. A. 1904) 131 Fed. 219.

Intent in omitting stamp.—It was only where a stamp had been omitted from an instrument with intent to evade this Act that it was rendered inadmissible in evidence, and the burden of proving such fraudulent intent was on the party objecting to the admission of the instruments. Ohio River Junction R. Co. v. Pennsylvania Co., (1909) 222 Pa. St. 573, 72 Atl. 271.

State functions.—Since stamps required to be affixed to a notary's certificate of acknowledgment to a declaration of homestead, under this section, were required to be furnished by the person for whose benefit the instrument was furnished, such tax was not objectionable on the ground that the notary, in taking the acknowledgment and indorsing his certificate, was exercising a function of the state government not subject to federal taxation. Sackett v. McCaffrey, (C. C. A. 1904) 131 Fed. 219.

Use of unstamped instrument not prejudiced where sufficient other evidence.—Armstrong v. Mayer, (Neb. 1901) 95 N. W. 483.

Presumptions.—Where a contract or conveyance is offered in evidence, executed during the period when revenue stamps were required, and such instrument has the required stamp, it is entitled to go in evidence, and, in the absence of direct proof to the contrary, the presumption will prevail that it was stamped at the proper time, by the proper person, and in the proper sum. Glaser v. Glaser, (1903) 13 Okla. 389, 74 Pac. 944.

Vol. III, p. 776, sec. 31.

Collection of stamp tax.—Express statutory authority for an action by the United States to recover the stamp tax which, under section 6 of this Act, was to be levied, collected, and paid upon the execution of a conveyance, was given by section 31 of that Act, making applicable all administrative, special, or stamp provisions of law, including the laws in relation to the assessment of taxes not heretofore specifically repealed, which must comprehend the authority conferred by R. S. sec. 3213, 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 594, to sue for and recover taxes in the name of the United States in any proper form of action, before any federal Circuit or District Court for the district within which the liability is incurred, or where the party from whom such tax is due resides. U. S. v. Chamberlin, (1911) 219 U. S. 250, 31 S. Ct. 155, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 204.

Vol. III, p. 784, sec. 30.

Distribution under compromise.—Where a writing offered as the will of a decedent was not admitted to probate, but contested proceedings therefor were compromised, as authorized by the statutes of Massachusetts, and the estate was distributed in accordance with the compromise decree, such compromise was held to be deemed the will under which the property passed, for the purposes of this section. McCoy v. Gill, (1907) 156 Fed. 985.

The term "clear value," as used in this section, was held to convey the idea of definite or certain value, something in no sense speculative. Lynch v. Union Trust Co., (C. C. A. 1908) 164 Fed. 161, affirming (1906) 148 Fed. 49.

Use of life tables.—Where, at the time certain internal revenue inheritance taxes were assessed on the value of a life estate, such estate had been already terminated by the death of the life tenant, it was held to be improper to use life tables to determine the value of such life estate. Kahn v. Herold, (1906) 147 Fed. 575.

Vol. III, p. 787, sec. 3.

Vested.—The right given to a beneficiary by a will to receive a stated share of the net income from the entire residuary estate of the testator, left in trust until the time fixed for its distribution, is not a "legacy" or "distributive share," within the meaning of such terms as used in War Revenue Act June 13, 1898, ch. 448, sec. 29, 30 Stat. L. 464, 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 784; and under section 3, which provides that no tax shall be assessed under said section 29 in respect of any contingent beneficial interest which shall not become absolutely vested in possession or enjoyment prior to July 1, 1902, the only interest of the legatee in such income which was subject to taxation was the amount thereof actually received by him prior to said July 1, 1902, provided such amount was ten thousand dollars, or more. Lynch v. Union Trust Co., (C. C. A. 1908) 164 Fed. 161, affirming (1906) 148 Fed. 49.

In Title Guarantee, etc., Co. v. Ward, (1908) 164 Fed. 459, it appeared that a testator who died in March, 1901, devised and bequeathed his residuary estate to trustees, to hold and manage the same during the lives of the two surviving children of the testator who should be the youngest at the time of his death, and for so much longer as permissible

Voluntary payment.—Where, at the time certain executors paid an internal revenue inheritance tax on a life estate under protest, they had no knowledge that the life tenant had died and that the life estate had therefore terminated, the payment was not voluntary so as to preclude a recovery thereof. Kahn v. Herold, (1906) 147 Fed. 575.

Interest not vested in possession or enjoyment.—The interest of a residuary legatee, conditioned on his attaining a certain age, could be deemed taxable under this Act before the happening of the contingency, in view of the express provisions of sections 29 and 30 as to "possession or enjoyment" and "beneficial interest" and "clear value," and of the absence of any express language exhibiting an intention to tax a mere technically vested interest in a case where the right to possession or enjoyment is subordinated to an uncertain contingency. Vanderbilt v. Eidman, (1905) 196 U. S. 480, 25 S. Ct. 331, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 563.

under the laws of the state. The trustees were directed to set apart a sufficient sum to produce a certain amount of income to be paid to the widow during her life, and to pay the income from the remainder in equal parts to the four children of the testator or to their issue or devisees in case of their death, subject as to a part thereof to certain charges to pay off liens on the property. At the termination of the trust the corpus of the estate was to be divided equally between the four children or the devisees, legatees, assigns, or legal heirs, of any deceased. It was held that each of the four children took at once a vested estate in one-fourth part of the testator's residuary estate, having the immediate right to dispose of the same by deed or will, and to enjoy a part of the income, subject to no contingency, possession of the corpus alone being deferred, that such gifts took effect at once "in possession or enjoyment," and became subject to the legacy tax imposed by War Revenue Act June 13, 1898, ch. 448, sec. 29, 30 Stat. L. 464, 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 783 note, and that the taxes paid thereon were not recoverable under Act June 27, 1902, ch. 1160, sec. 3, as having been assessed on contingent interests which had become vested prior to July 1, 1902.

For other cases see Fidelity Trust Co. v. U. S., (1910) 45 Ct. Cl. 362; Union Trust Co. v. Lynch, (1906) 148 Fed. 49; Westhus v. Union Trust Co., (C. C. A. 1908) 164 Fed. 795; Chouteau v. Allen, (C. C. A. 1909) 170 Fed. 412.

Vested in enjoyment but not in possession.—Where legatees had full and absolute control of the disposition of their share of the residue, and each was entitled to all the income accruing therefrom after the testator's death, the legacies were vested in "enjoyment," though not in possession. Ward v. Sage, (C. C. A. 1911) 185 Fed. 7.

Contingent interest.—Where the interest of certain legatees in the corpus of the estate was contingent only, terminable by death before reaching thirty-five years of age, with no power to designate a successor, the shares of the corpus of legatees who had not reached the required age at testator's death on June 23, 1902, were not subject to internal revenue tax imposed by War Revenue Act June 13, 1898, ch. 448, secs. 29, 30, under the rule that any interests vested in possession or enjoyment were saved from the repeal of the Act by Act Cong. April 12, 1902, ch. 500, secs. 7, 8, 32 Stat. L. 97. Ward v. Sage, (C. C. A. 1911) 185 Fed. 7.

In Land Title, etc., Co. v. McCoach, (1904) 129 Fed. 901, 64 C. C. A. 333, reversing 127 Fed. 381, it appeared that a testator who died in March, 1901, by his will bequeathed his residuary estate in trust, the income to be paid to his wife during her life, with remainder to his children living at the time of her death, and the lawful issue of any deceased child or children; such issue taking only the share their parent would have taken if living. It was held that the remainder so created was not vested, not being limited to "persons in esse and ascertained" but was contingent, being limited to persons who could not be ascertained until the death of the wife, and that such bequests were not subject to the legacy tax imposed by section 29 of the War Revenue Act of June 13, 1898, ch. 448, since repealed, the wife being still living at the time of the taking effect of the amendment, by section 3 of this Act, exempting from the tax "any contingent beneficial interest not absolutely vested in possession or enjoyment" prior to July 1, 1902.

The interest of an heir in personal property left by an intestate is wholly contingent until the estate becomes distributable under the laws of the state by the expiration of the time for the proving and payment of claims, and where such time did not expire until after July 1, 1902, the share of an heir was not subject to legacy tax provided for by War Revenue Act June 13, 1898, ch. 448, sec. 29, imposed on any contingent beneficial interest which should not become absolutely vested in possession or enjoyment prior to said July 1, 1902. Farrell v. U. S., (1909) 167 Fed. 639.

The interest of a daughter in her father's estate, which, by the terms of his will, she was not to take unless she survived her mother, was contingent, and not vested, and did not become subject to legacy tax, under section 29 of the War Revenue Act of June 13, 1898, ch. 448, where her mother was living July 1, 1902, after which time contingent beneficial interests vested in possession or enjoyment were exempted from the tax by this section. Philadelphia Trust, etc., Co. v. McCoach, (C. C. A. 1904) 129 Fed. 906, reversing 127 Fed. 386.

"Imposed."—A legacy tax under War Revenue Act June 13, 1898, ch. 448, sec. 29, was not "imposed" within the meaning of the saving clause of the repealing Act of April 12, 1902, ch. 500, sec. 8, 32 Stat. L. 97, until its assessment, and there remained no power to make a valid assessment after July 1, 1902, when the repealing act took effect. Farrell v. U. S., (1909) 167 Fed. 639.

Limitation of action.—R. S. sec. 3228, 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 603, limiting the time for presenting claims for the refunding of internal revenue taxes illegally collected, has no application to a claim for the refunding of legacy taxes paid on contingent interests, which did not become vested prior to July 1, 1902, which are required to be refunded by this section, irrespective of their legality or whether they were voluntarily paid or not; and a failure to present the claim within the time limited by such section will not bar an action thereon. Thacher v. U. S., (1906) 149 Fed. 902. See also (1907) 26 Op. Atty. Gen. 194.

The jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Treasury, under this Act, is not exclusive. Fidelity Trust Co. v. U. S., (1910) 45 Ct. Cl. 363.

Vol. III, p. 793, sec. 1.

The necessity of protest or notice to sustain the recovery of a stamp tax illegally collected on manifests of cargoes on vessels bound to foreign ports is not removed by the provisions of this section authorizing the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to redeem or make allowance for internal revenue stamps in any manner "wrongfully collected." U. S. v. New York, etc., Mail Steamship Co., (1906) 200 U. S. 488, 26 S. Ct. 327, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 569.

Stamps destroyed because sale enjoined by state court.—Where the manufacturer destroyed the stamps on boxes of cigars in his own warehouse because he was enjoined from selling the same in those boxes by a state court for infringement of trademark, his case does not come within the statute. American West Indies Trading Co. v. U. S., (1910) 45 Ct. Cl. 488.

Finality of decision of commissioner.—Where there is no disputed question of fact, and a decision of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue rests entirely upon his construction of the statute, it is not final; and if adverse to the claimant, the court has jurisdiction of a case seeking a refund for internal revenue stamps destroyed. American West Indies Trading Co. v. U. S., (1910) 45 Ct. Cl. 488.

Vol. III, p. 795, sec. 3449.

Construction of statute.—This section is highly penal in character and should be strictly construed. U. S. v. Twenty Boxes Corn Whisky, (1904) 133 Fed. 910, 67 C. C. A. 214, affirming (1902) 123 Fed. 135.

Intent.—In a prosecution for the violation of this section no question of fraud or fraudulent intent is involved. U. S. v. Liquor Dealers' Supply Co., (1907) 156 Fed. 219.

False designation.—When spirituous liquors contained in bottles are packed in barrels and shipped and the barrels are marked "groceries," such shipment is a violation of section 3449. U. S. v. Liquor Dealers' Supply Co., (1907) 156 Fed. 219.

Concealing name or brand.—This section applies solely to shipments of liquors under other than the proper name or brand known to the trade, as designating the kind and quality of the liquor, and not to a shipment concealing the name or brands required by the regulations of the Internal Revenue Department to be put upon all vessels containing liquors. U. S. v. Sandefuhr, (1906) 145 Fed. 49.

The remedy given by this section is not exclusive.—Blacklock v. U. S., (1908) 208 U. S. 75, 28 S. Ct. 228, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 396.

Vol. III, p. 795, sec. 3450.

Repeal as to oleomargarine.—This section and section 3453 were repealed, so far as concerns the tax on oleomargarine, by Act Aug. 2, 1886, ch. 840, sec. 17, 24 Stat. L. 209, 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 126, providing a more limited forfeiture for attempts to defraud the government of the oleomargarine tax. U. S. v. One Bay Horse, (1904) 128 Fed. 207.

Time of forfeiture.—Under the provision of this section declaring that animals used for the removal of spirits with intent to de-

Acquittal of criminal offense as bar.—Where a defendant was acquitted in a criminal prosecution for causing to be transported certain casks containing bottled beer falsely marked as containing bottled soda water, such acquittal was held to be a bar to the subsequent maintenance of an action by the United States to forfeit the property and recover a penalty imposed for the same act imposed by R. S. sec. 3449. U. S. v. Seattle Brewing, etc., Co., (1905) 135 Fed. 597.

Marks by government officers.—This section has no application to marks or brands placed on packages by government officers. Woolner v. Rennick, (1908) 170 Fed. 662.

This statute does not apply to all persons.—U. S. v. Twenty Boxes Corn Whisky, (1904) 133 Fed. 910, 67 C. C. A. 214, affirming (1902) 123 Fed. 135, set out in the original note.

Shipments of unmarked packages.—U. S. v. Twenty Boxes Corn Whisky, (1904) 133 Fed. 910, 67 C. C. A. 214, affirming (1902) 123 Fed. 135, set out in the original note.

"Glass; this side up with care."—U. S. v. Twenty Boxes Corn Whisky, (1904) 133 Fed. 910, 67 C. C. A. 214, affirming (1902) 123 Fed. 135, set out in the original note.

fraud the government shall be forfeited, etc., forfeiture takes place immediately upon commission of the act, though the title of the United States is not perfected until judicial condemnation, but upon such condemnation the completed title of the United States relates back to the time of the commission of the prohibited act, and avoids all intermediate sales, even to purchasers in good faith. Piloher v. Faircloth, (1903) 135 Ala. 311, 33 So. 545.

Vol. III, p. 799, sec. 3455.

Addition of nontaxable articles.—Substances which are not in themselves taxable under the laws of the United States are not embraced in the words "anything else," as used in this section, providing for a seizure, forfeiture, and penalty for selling packages which contain, at the time of sale, anything else than the contents when the same were lawfully stamped by a revenue officer, even where there is no intent to defraud, and for a much heavier penalty where there is such fraudulent intent. Thus the sale of a barrel of whiskey to which has been added, after such barrel has been properly stamped by a revenue officer, burnt sugar or caramel, as coloring matter, does not authorize its seizure and forfeiture to the United States. U. S. v. A. Graf Distilling Co., (1908) 208 U. S. 196, 28 S. Ct. 264, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 452.

Evidence of changing contents after stamping.—Where, on an information to forfeit certain liquors on the ground that distilled spirits of a different quality had been put into the barrels after they were originally stamped and branded, in violation of this section, it was conceded that the claimant was entitled to reduce the proof by the addition of water, and the uncontradicted evidence showed that the spirits contained in the packages had been reduced in proof between twelve and fourteen degrees, after they had been gauged and stamped, by the addition of water, in conformity with the law and in the presence of a government gauger, it was held that the discrepancy in the percentage of the alcohol contained in the liquor was insufficient to form a basis for an inference that the change was occasioned by the addition of "other spirits of a different quality." Three Packages Distilled Spirits v. U. S., (1904) 129 Fed. 329, 63 C. C. A. 263, reversing (1903) 125 Fed. 52.

Product made under similar conditions as evidence.—In a proceeding by the United States under this section for the forfeiture of whiskey contained in the distiller's original barrels, but alleged to be other than that contained in such barrels when they were branded and marked by the gauger, it was competent for the government to introduce in evidence tabulated analyses of samples of the whiskey in such barrels showing the per cent. of its congenic properties and for comparison similar analyses of whiskey taken from a large number of barrels produced by the same distillery under the same process, out of material in the same proportions, and of substantially the same grade, placed in barrels of the same character of wood, treated in the same manner, and stored in the same warehouse under practically the same conditions as to moisture and temperature, much of such whiskey having been made in the same year, some in different years, and a portion on the same day as some of the seized whiskey, and the testimony being given by expert chemists who made the analyses. Corbin v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1910) 181 Fed. 296.

Burden of proof.—In a proceeding by the United States under this section for the forfeiture of whiskey contained in the original distiller's barrels, but in which it is alleged that the whiskey is other than that contained in the barrels when they were branded and marked by the gauger, and that the claimants in whose possession the barrels were found received the same in such substituted condition with intent to defraud, the burden rests on the government to prove that they were in that condition when so received, and such fact cannot be inferred from the fact that they were in such condition when seized. Corbin v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1910) 181 Fed. 296.

Information.—An information for a forfeiture of distilled spirits for violation of this section was held to be bad on demurrer, as not sufficiently definite to disclose to the court or claimant the precise nature of the act charged to be a violation of the statute. U. S. v. Three Packages Distilled Spirits, (1907) 152 Fed. 580.

Variance.—Where an information for the forfeiture of certain packages of liquors alleged that, after the barrels had been inspected, gauged, and stamped, something else than the contents which were therein when said barrels and packages were so lawfully stamped, branded, and marked, to wit, distilled spirits of a different quality, had been placed therein in violation of this section, it was held that evidence that at the time the proof of the liquors was reduced by the addition of water, after the packages had been stamped, some caramel matter had been put into the packages to deepen the color, was not within the information, and therefore inadmissible. Three Packages Distilled Spirits v. U. S., (1904) 129 Fed. 329, 63 C. C. A. 263, reversing (1903) 125 Fed. 52.

Vol. III, p. 802, sec. 3459.

Notice.—Where goods, seized by a collector for violation of R. S. sec. 3453, 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 797, are attached while in his hands by the marshal on process issued in proceedings for their forfeiture, and a bond for their release is thereafter given by the claimant under this section, the proviso to the section requiring notice of the pendency of the proceedings in court to be given to the parties executing the bond, is inapplicable, such notice being intended to take the place of an actual seizure by the marshal where the goods have been returned to the claimant under the bond before such seizure has been made, and unnecessary where the attachment has been made, and the proceeding in rem is pending when the bond is given. U. S. v. 59,650 Cigars, (1906) 146 Fed. 130, 76 C. C. A. 556, affirming (1905) 138 Fed. 166.

Vol. III, p. 803, sec. 3460.

Mules used to remove spirits.—Under the provision in this section that in all cases of seizure of any goods, wares, or merchandise subject to forfeiture under the internal revenue laws, the collector shall proceed to have such goods, wares, and merchandise listed and appraised, and sell the same at auction, etc., the phrase "goods, wares, and merchandise" is sufficiently broad to include a team of mules used for the removal of spirits with intent to defraud the government, in violation of section 3450, 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 795. Pilcher v. Faircloth, (1903) 135 Ala. 311, 33 So. 545.

Vol. III, p. 804, sec. 3462.

All the requirements for search warrants.—This section, authorizing federal circuit and district judges and commissioners of the Circuit Courts to issue search warrants, does not express all the requisites of an affidavit for such warrant. An affidavit merely alleging that the officer had good reason to believe, and did believe, that the accused was unlawfully engaged in manufacturing oleomargarine on the premises described, and praying the issuance of a warrant, is fatally defective for failure to state facts from which the officer issuing the warrant might determine the existence of probable cause. Ripper v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1910) 178 Fed. 24.

Vol. III, p. 805, sec. 3464.

Spirits purchased for the National Soldiers' Home at Washington, D. C., are purchased "for the use of the United States," within the meaning of this section, and may be with- drawn from bonded warehouses without payment of internal revenue tax. (1905) 25 Op. Atty.-Gen. 449.

1909 Supp., p. 248, sec. 1.

The term "alcohol," as used in this section, embraces the various grades of alcohol as reclassified in Internal Revenue Circular No.

723, and referred to therein as pure, neutral, or cologne spirits, and as commercial alcohol. (1909) 27 Op. Atty-Gen. 226.

1909 Supp. Appendix, p. 829, sec. 38.

Due process of law.—Property is not taken without due process of law by the imposition, under this section, of an excise, measured by the net corporate income, upon the doing or the carrying on of business in a corporate or quasi-corporate capacity. Flint v. Stone Tracy Co., (1911) 220 U. S. 107, 31 S. Ct. 343, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 389.

Excise or direct tax.—An excise upon the carrying on or the doing of business in a corporate or quasi-corporate capacity is what was imposed by this section. Flint v. Stone Tracy Co., (1911) 220 U. S. 107, 31 S. Ct. 343, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 389.

Inequality of application, owing to different local conditions, does not invalidate the excise imposed by this section upon the doing or carrying on of business in a corporate or quasi-corporate capacity. Flint v. Stone Tracy Co., (1911) 220 U. S. 107, 31 S. Ct. 343, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 389.

Discrimination.—There is such a substantial difference between the carrying on of business by corporations and the conducting of the same business by a private firm or individual as would justify—even were the principles of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Federal Constitution applicable—the excise imposed by this section. Flint v. Stone Tracy Co., (1911) 220 U. S. 107, 31 S. Ct. 343, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 389.

Uniformity.—Taxing a business when carried on by a corporation, and exempting a similar business when carried on by a partnership or by a private individual, as is done by this section, does not invalidate the tax, since the only limitation upon the power of Congress is uniformity in laying the tax, and this is a geographical uniformity, which does not require the equal application of the tax to all persons or corporations who may come within its operation. Flint v. Stone Tracy Co., (1911) 220 U. S. 107, 31 S. Ct. 343, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 389.

Apportionment.—The tax imposed by this section being an excise, and not a direct tax, is not invalid because not apportioned among the several states according to population. Flint v. Stone Tracy Co., (1911) 220 U. S. 107, 31 S. Ct. 342, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 389.

Possible effect on powers of state.—The possibility that the rights of the several states to create corporations may practically be destroyed by the exercise of the power assumed by Congress in this section furnishes no ground for judicial interference with the tax. Flint v. Stone Tracy Co., (1911) 220 U. S. 107, 31 S. Ct. 343, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 389.

Federal taxation of state agencies.—The excise imposed by this section upon the carrying on or the doing of business in a corporate or quasi-corporate capacity is not invalid because the business taxed is done in pursuance of the authority granted by a state, in the creation of private corporations. Flint v. Stone Tracy Co., (1911) 220 U. S. 107, 31 S. Ct. 343, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 389.

"Doing business."—Corporations organized for and actually engaged in such activities as leasing property, collecting rents, managing office buildings, making investments of profits, or leasing ore lands and collecting royalties, managing wharves, dividing profits, and in some cases investing the surplus, are engaged in business within the meaning of this section. Flint v. Stone Tracy Co., (1911) 220 U. S. 107, 31 S. Ct. 343, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 389.

Taxicab corporation.—A corporation owning and leasing taxicabs and collecting rents therefrom is engaged in business within the meaning of this section. Flint v. Stone Tracy Co., (1911) 220 U. S. 107, 31 S. Ct. 343, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 389.

Corporation owning and renting office building.—A corporation organized for the purpose of owning and renting an office building, but which has wholly parted with the control and management of the property, and by the terms of a reorganization, has disqualified itself from any activity in respect to it, its sole authority being to hold the title subject to a lease for 130 years, and to receive and distribute the rentals which may accrue under the terms of the lease, or the proceeds of any sale of the land, if it shall be sold, is not doing business within the meaning of this section. Zonne v. Minneapolis Syndicate, (1911) 220 U. S. 187, 31 S. Ct. 361, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 428.

Real estate trusts created by deed for the purchasing, improving, holding, or selling lands and buildings for the benefit of the shareholders, which do not derive any benefit from, and are not organized under, any statute of the state, and which, by their terms, end with lives in being and twenty years thereafter, are not subject to the excise imposed by this section. Eliot v. Freeman, (1911) 220 U. S. 178, 31 S. Ct. 360, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 424.

Exemptions.—Exempting corporations whose net annual incomes are under five thousand dollars from the excise imposed by this section does not invalidate the tax. Flint v. Stone Tracy Co., (1911) 220 U. S. 107, 31 S. Ct. 343, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 389.

Labor, agricultural, and horticultural organizations, fraternal and benevolent societies, and organizations for religious, charitable, or educational purposes, could be excepted from the operation of the excise imposed by this section without invalidating the tax. Flint v. Stone Tracy Co., (1911) 220 U. S. 107, 31 S. Ct. 343, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 389.

Public service corporations, such as street railway companies created under state laws, may constitutionally be subjected to the excise imposed by this section. Flint v. Stone Tracy Co., (1911) 220 U. S. 107, 31 S. Ct. 343, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 389.

Corporations acting as trustees, guardians, etc., under the authority of the law or courts of a state, are not agents of the state exempt from the imposition, under this section, of an excise measured by net income upon the doing or the carrying on of business in a corporate or quasi-corporate capacity. Flint v. Stone Tracy Co., (1911) 220 U. S. 107, 31 S. Ct. 343, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 389.

Insolvent corporation in hands of receiver. — The federal excise tax imposed on the net income of certain corporations by this section was not intended to include insolvent corporations with no net income, whose properties are being administered by a court. Pennsylvania Steel Co. v. New York City R. Co., (1910) 176 Fed. 471.

1909 Supp. Appendix, p. 829, sec. 38, cl. second.

Measure of tax. — Measuring the excise imposed by this section upon the carrying on or the doing of business in a corporate or quasi-corporate capacity by the entire net income from all sources does not invalidate the tax, although a part of such income may be derived from property in itself not taxable. Flint v. Stone Tracy Co., (1911) 220 U. S. 107, 31 S. Ct. 343, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 389.

The measurement by the net corporate income from all sources of the excise imposed by this section upon the doing or carrying on of business in a corporate or quasi-corporate capacity is not so arbitrary and baseless as to fall outside of the authority of the taxing power. Flint v. Stone Tracy Co., (1911) 220 U. S. 107, 31 S. Ct. 342, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 389.

Validity of deductions. — The excise measured by net annual income, imposed by this section, is not invalid because a deduction of interest payments is permitted only in case of interest paid by banks and trust companies on deposits, and interest actually paid within the year on bonded or other indebtedness to an amount not exceeding the paid-up capital stock. Flint v. Stone Tracy Co., (1911) 220 U. S. 107, 31 S. Ct. 343, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 389.

1909 Supp. Appendix, p. 833, sec. 38, cl. sixth.

Making tax returns public. — Making the returns for the assessments of the excise imposed by the Act of Aug. 5, 1909, sec. 38, on the doing or the carrying on of business in a corporate or quasi-corporate capacity, public documents and open to inspection as such, under certain restrictions, as is done by the 6th clause of that Act, as amended by the Act of June 17, 1910 (Stat. L., 2d Sess. 61st Cong. 494, ch. 297), does not do violence to the constitutional protection against unreasonable searches and seizures. Flint v. Stone Tracy Co., (1911) 220 U. S. 107, 31 S. Ct. 343, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 389.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

Vol. III, p. 809, sec. 1.

Amendment. — This section was amended by the Act of June 29, 1906, ch. 3591, sec. 1, 34 Stat. L. 584, 1909 Supp. Fed. Stat. Annot. 255.

The principal objects of the Interstate Commerce Act. — To the same effect as the original note see Interstate Commerce Commission v. Chicago G. W. R. Co., (1905) 141 Fed. 1003, affirmed (1908) 209 U. S. 108, 28 S. Ct. 493, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 705.

Construction of Act. — The constitutional power of Congress to regulate commerce among the several states includes the power to regulate freight rates by requiring that they shall be uniform to all shippers, and in construing statutes enacted to that end freight rates should be construed to mean the net cost to the shipper of the transportation of his property, and such regulations may lawfully apply, not to common carriers, but to all persons and corporations occupying such relation to transportation that the conduct of their business may operate to impair uniformity of rates. Interstate Commerce Commission v. Reichmann, (1906) 145 Fed. 235.

The construction of this Act and the scope of its operation is a federal question, and as to such question the state courts will follow and are bound by the decisions of the federal courts. But contracts for reduced rates not being affected by the Act, no federal question arises and no federal right is involved, and hence the state courts are free to apply their own rules to its construction. McElvain v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., (Mo. 1910) 131 S. W. 736.

Carriers subject to Act. — Where the line of a railway is wholly within a single state, but it is engaged in the transportation of property moving wholly by railroad from one state to another, it is as much subject to this Act as it would be if it owned and operated a railway connecting points in different states. U. S. v. Illinois Terminal R. Co., (1909) 168 Fed. 546.

Effect of published schedule rate.—There is no presumption of law that a freight rate upon a particular commodity is reasonably low because such rate has been duly published and filed by the carrier with the Interstate Commerce Commission. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, (1907) 206 U. S. 441, 27 S. Ct. 700, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 1128.

Expenditures for permanent improvements and equipments should not be charged to the current or operating expenses of a single year for the purpose of testing the reasonableness of an increased freight rate. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, (1907) 206 U. S. 441, 27 S. Ct. 700, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 1128.

A concerted advance by interstate carriers in the freight rate upon a particular commodity may be held unreasonable and unjust by the Interstate Commerce Commission and by a federal Circuit Court in the subsequent proceedings to enforce the order of the Commission, although such rate may be but a mere division of a through rate. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, (1907) 206 U. S. 441, 27 S. Ct. 700, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 1128.

Demurrage.—The provisions of this section, requiring rates for the transportation and for the "receiving, delivering, storage, or handling" of property by an interstate carrier to be reasonable, and prohibiting discrimination, are sufficiently broad to cover demurrage charges. Michie v. New York, etc., R. Co., (1907) 151 Fed. 694.

Reconsignment charges.—The remedies afforded by this Act extend to the regulation of charges imposed by railroad companies for the transportation of consignments from the part of a city to which they were originally delivered to some other part at the consignee's order, and exclude the review of such question by quo warranto in the state courts. State v. Atchison, etc., R. Co., (1903) 176 Mo. 687, 75 S. W. 776.

Effect on state statutes.—To the same effect as the original note, see Spratlin v. St. Louis Southwestern R. Co., (1905) 76 Ark. 82, 88 S. W. 836.

The Texas statute (Sayles' Annot. Civ. St. Supp. 1897-1904, Act 4502 c, d, e) providing for penalties against railroads for each day freight is held after payment or tender of freight charges, or holding freight for collection of excess of freight thereon, is in conflict with this Act and as to interstate shipments of freight is void. Trinity, etc., R. Co. v. Geppert, (1911), 135 S. W. 164.

Contracts limiting liability—enforcement by state courts.—The right of a state to refuse to enforce a special live stock shipping contract limiting the liability of a carrier, made in a foreign state, is not affected by the Interstate Commerce Act. Louisville, etc., R.

Co. v. Smith, (1910) 123 Tenn. 678, 134 S. W. 866.

Common-law rights.—An interstate carrier can exercise all its rights under the common law to the full extent unless made unlawful by the Interstate Commerce Act. McElvain v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., (Mo. 1910) 131 S. W. 736.

Jurisdiction of court.—A court has not the power, in the first instance, to inquire into the reasonableness of a rate regularly established by a carrier and filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission and published, but whether or not a rate is reasonable is, in the first instance, for the commission. Great Northern R. Co. v. Loonan Lumber Co., (1910) 25 S. D. 155, 125 N. W. 645.

Ferry rates.—This Act did not strip a state of any power to fix rates of ferriage which it theretofore possessed. New York Cent., etc., R. Co. v. Chosen Freeholders, (1909) 80 N. J. L. 305, 74 Atl. 954.

Shipments made under "common arrangement."—Under the provision of this Act that "the provisions of this Act shall apply to any common carrier or carriers engaged in the transportation of passengers or property . . . under a common control, management, or arrangement for a continuous carriage or shipment from one state . . . to any other state," as a general rule a "common arrangement" is established by proof of a shipment under a through bill of lading and a continuous interstate carriage thereunder, coupled with proof of concerted action among the connecting carriers with regard to the payment of the charges and the receipt and movement of the traffic, even if an agreed division of a single through rate is not shown. Standard Oil Co. v. U. S., (1910) 179 Fed. 614, 103 C. C. A. 172.

Comparison of rates.—A carrier's rates on through business do not prove that a local rate is unreasonable, nor can the local rate throw light on the justice or injustice of discriminations between nonlocal shipments of the same origin and destination. Southern R. Co. v. St. Louis Hay, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 1907) 153 Fed. 729.

A finding that the rates charged by railroads for shipment to a particular point are unreasonable in themselves, and in violation of section 1 of the Interstate Commerce Act, cannot properly be based on evidence which only tends to show that they are too high as compared with the rates charged between the initial points and one or two other points. Interstate Commerce Commission v. Nashville, etc., R. Co., (C. C. A. 1903) 120 Fed. 934.

Factors to be considered in fixing reasonable rates—Cost of service to the carrier.—The cost of service to the carrier would be an ideal theory for rate making; but it is not practical. Such cost can be reached approximately, but not accurately enough to make this factor controlling. It is, however, worthy of consideration and is a very important factor. Interstate Commerce Commission v. Chicago G. W. R. Co., (1905) 141 Fed. 1003, affirmed (1908) 209 U. S. 108, 28 S. Ct. 493, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 705.

Value of service to shipper.—There are a great many factors and circumstances to be considered in fixing rates, and among other things is the value of the service to the shipper, which includes the value of the goods and the profits which the shipper can make by having them transported from one point to another. The evidence and authorities in the cases show that this method of rate making is not only ideal, but practical, when not interfered with by competition; and it is based on an idea similar to taxation. Interstate Commerce Commission v. Chicago G. W. R. Co., (1905) 141 Fed. 1003, affirmed (1908) 209 U. S. 108, 28 S. Ct. 493, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 705.

Amount of the product or commodity offered for transportation.—The fact that there is a large amount of a product or commodity in the hands of a few persons under almost one control, which is offered for shipment at stated intervals, in fixed and continuous quantities, may be considered in rate making, thus recognizing the principle of selling cheaper at wholesale than at retail. Interstate Commerce Commission v. Chicago G. W. R. Co., (1905) 141 Fed. 1003, affirmed (1908) 209 U. S. 108, 28 S. Ct. 493, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 705.

Weight, bulk, and convenience of transportation.—The weight and bulk of the article to be transported, and the convenience or inconvenience to the carrier in transporting it, may be considered in rate making. Interstate Commerce Commission v. Chicago G. W. R. Co., (1905) 141 Fed. 1003, affirmed (1908)

209 U. S. 108, 28 S. Ct. 493, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 705.

General public good.—The general public good may be considered in rate making. This includes the welfare and advantage of the great body of the citizens of the United States, who constitute the producers, shippers, and consumers; and it also includes the welfare and advantage of the various localities and of the common carriers. Interstate Commerce Commission v. Chicago G. W. R. Co., (1905) 141 Fed. 1003, affirmed (1908) 209 U. S. 108, 28 S. Ct. 493, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 705.

Competition.—Competition may be considered in rate making. The authorities, as well as the experts in these cases, recognize that competition may be a controlling factor. Interstate Commerce Commission v. Chicago G. W. R. Co., (1905) 141 Fed. 1003, affirmed (1908) 209 U. S. 108, 28 S. Ct. 493, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 705.

No one factor controlling.—None of the above factors alone are considered as necessarily controlling. Neither are all of them controlling as a matter of law. It is a question of fact, to be decided by the proper tribunal in each case, as to what is controlling. In every case the Supreme Court has held that competition may be controlling. In only one has it, as a matter of fact, been held not to be a defense. Interstate Commerce v. Chicago G. W. R. Co., (1905) 141 Fed. 1003, affirmed (1908) 209 U. S. 108, 28 S. Ct. 493, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 705.

Vol. III, p. 813, sec. 2.

CONSTRUCTION AND OPERATION IN GENERAL.

Construction of English act followed.—The settled construction of the equality clause of the English Railway Clauses Consolidation Act of 1845, as forbidding the charging of a higher rate for the carriage of goods for an intercepting or forwarding agent than for others, applies in construing the provisions of this section, which were substantially taken from the English statute. Interstate Commerce Commission v. Delaware, etc., R. Co., (1911) 220 U. S. 235, 31 S. Ct. 392, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 448.

Not a defense to action for damages for delay.—If a contract for the shipment of stock was void as discriminating in favor of the shipper by giving him a rate which was too low, so that the carrier would be entitled to collect the correct rate, it would not prevent the shipper from recovering damages for delay in shipment where he had no actual knowledge that the rate was unlawful. Kirby v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1909) 242 Ill. 418, 90 N. E. 252.

Liability of lessor railroad.—Where a railroad company owning a part of the through route over which oil was transported under an alleged discriminating rate leased its line to another company, and the lessee, by virtue of the lease or otherwise, was not a partner, agent, or representative of the lessor company during the time the former was operating such portion of the through route, the lessor was not personally liable for violation of the Interstate Commerce Act by the lessee's participation in such discriminating rate during the continuance of the lease. Western New York, etc., R. Co. v. Penn Refining Co., (1905) 137 Fed. 343, 70 C. C. A. 23, affirmed (1908) 208 U. S. 208, 28 S. Ct. 268, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 456.

"Contemporaneous service."—Under this section services rendered to a complaining and a favored shipper are "contemporaneous" as long as the discriminating rates remain in force, and for the purpose of comparison they need not be rendered on the same day, nor during the same week or month. Mitchell Coal, etc., Co. v. Pennsylvania R. Co., (1910) 181 Fed. 403.

Rebates.—In Mitchell Coal, etc., Co. v. Pennsylvania R. Co., (1910) 181 Fed. 403, it was held that a shipper was not entitled to recover damages from a railroad company for discrimination in rates because of rebates paid to a shipper from another district; the rate from such district with the rebates deducted being higher than that paid by plaintiff.

Action by person who has received rebates.—In Pennsylvania R. Co. v. International Coal Min. Co., (1909) 173 Fed. 1, 97 C. C. A. 383, it was held that a coal shipper, which, with others, was given rebates by a railroad company in violation of law, could not maintain an action against the company to recover damages for discrimination because others were granted larger rebates.

Right of United States to party rate for transportation of soldiers.—The government of the United States, in buying transportation on a railroad for its soldiers in lots of ten or more, is not entitled to the benefit of a reduced ten-party rate given by the railroad company's schedule to "theatrical, operatic, or concert companies, hunting and fishing parties, glee clubs, brass or string bands, boat, baseball, polo, or tennis clubs, football teams, and other parties of like character." Nor does the refusal to give it the same rates constitute an unjust discrimination against it, or subject it to undue prejudice or disadvantage, in violation of the Interstate Commerce Act, where it is shown that the purpose and effect of the party rate given by the schedule is to increase the company's business, and that tickets sold thereunder are closely limited in time, and are paid for in cash in advance, while those furnished to the government are not so limited, are furnished on a requisition, and are only paid for after indefinite delay, in the auditing and allowance of the claims by the War and Treasury Departments. In such case the conditions and circumstances under which the service is rendered are essentially different, and justify the making of different rates. U. S. v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1905) 127 Fed. 785, 62 C. C. A. 465.

Aggregation of shipments of various owners for carload rates.—A carrier may not forbid the aggregation of the shipments of various owners for the purpose of carload rating in official classification territory, or the combination of such shipments by forwarding agents for that purpose, where preferences and discriminations forbidden by this section will result from the carrier's action. Interstate Commerce Commission v. Delaware, etc., R. Co., (1911) 220 U. S. 235, 31 S. Ct. 392, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 448.

A forwarding agent is a person within the meaning of this section. Interstate Commerce Commission v. Delaware, etc., R. Co., (1911) 220 U. S. 235, 31 S. Ct. 392, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 448.

"Dissimilar conditions."—The ownership or nonownership by the shipper of the goods tendered for carriage is not a dissimilar circumstance and condition, within the meaning of this section, prohibiting inequality and discrimination in rates. Interstate Commerce Commission v. Delaware, etc., R. Co., (1911) 220 U. S. 235, 31 S. Ct. 392, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 448.

Relates to service rendered.—The provisions of sections 2 and 8, prohibiting unjust discriminations and undue and unreasonable preferences, have reference to the service rendered, and not to the person of the sender or consignee. U. S. v. Wells-Fargo Express Co., (1908) 161 Fed. 806, affirmed (1909) 212 U. S. 522, 29 S. Ct. 315, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 635.

Injunction.—Prior to the enactment by Congress of the Elkins Act (Act Feb. 19, 1903, ch. 708, 32 Stat. L. 847, 10 Fed. Stat. Annot. 172, a United States Circuit Court had no jurisdiction in equity over a suit instituted by director of the Attorney-General of the United States to enjoin a railroad company from granting rebates under the interstate commerce law, especially where no order had hitherto been made by the Interstate Commerce Commission on the railroad company to discontinue the forbidden act. U. S. v. Atchison, etc., R. Co., (1905) 142 Fed. 176.

WHAT CONSTITUTES UNJUST DISCRIMINATION UNDER SECTION 2.

Only unjust and unreasonable discriminations illegal.—All discriminations are not forbidden, but only discrimination against some person, locality, or corporation, made for the advantage of the carrier, or by receiving greater or less compensation from one class of persons than from another for similar services; and hence a contract by a railroad to maintain rates from a factory not exceeding, to competitive points, the rates from two other places, is not, on its face, void for discrimination. Laurel Cotton Mills v. Gulf, etc., R. Co., (1904) 84 Miss. 339, 37 So. 134.

Reconsignment charges.—An additional charge by a carrier of two cents per hundred-weight for the privilege of reconsigning hay at East St. Louis, originating in northwestern territory and shipped into southeastern territory, was held to be excessive, within section 1, prohibiting excessive rates, and thereby produced an unjust discrimination, in violation of sections 2 and 3. Southern R. Co. v. St. Louis Hay, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 1907) 153 Fed. 728.

Allowance for trackage of shipper.—The allowance by a railroad company to certain coal companies shipping over its line of a stated sum per ton, ostensibly for the use of trackage owned by such companies and the service of their own locomotives in hauling cars thereon, from the rate charged plaintiff, which was also a shipper in the same district under similar circumstances, was held to be an unlawful discrimination. Mitchell Coal, etc., Co. v. Pennsylvania R. Co., (1910) 181 Fed. 403.

The phrase "substantially similar circumstances and conditions" relates to the circumstances and conditions of carriage only, and does not include matters affecting individual shippers; and a railway company is not authorized to charge one shipper of coal a lower rate than is charged another shipper between the same terminals, because the former is shipping under contracts extending over a term of years, based on lower rates which were in force when such contracts were made, while the other shipper has no such contracts. Pennsylvania R. Co. v. International Coal Min. Co., (1909) 173 Fed. 1, 97 C. C. A. 383.

Discrimination between oil shipments in barrels and tank cars.—In Penn Refining Co. v. Western New York, etc., R. Co., (1908) 208 U. S. 208, 28 S. Ct. 268, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 456, affirming (1905) 137 Fed. 343, 70 C. C.

A. 23, it was held that railroads could not be charged with discriminating against shippers of oil in barrels from the Pennsylvania oil fields to Perth Amboy, New Jersey, because they charge for the barrel package without making a corresponding charge upon shipments in tank cars owned by those shippers who can afford to build and furnish them, the carriers having none of their own, where the transportation by tank cars is more remunerative to the carriers than the transportation by barrels, and the barrel shippers have made no demand for tank cars, and cannot use them economically for shipments to Perth Amboy, on account of the lack of facilities for unloading at that point.

Acceptance of advertising in payment of transportation.—The acceptance of advertising by a carrier in lieu of money in payment of interstate transportation furnished to the publisher, his employees, and the immediate members of his and their families, violates the provisions of this Act, and the Acts amendatory thereof, prohibiting the furnishing of interstate transportation for a compensation less than or different from that specified in the carrier's published rates. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. U. S., (1911) 219 U. S. 486, 31 S. Ct. 272, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 305.

A state statute authorizing a railway company incorporated under the laws of the state to issue transportation in payment for printing and advertising must give way, so far as interstate transportation is concerned, before the provisions of this Act, and the Acts amendatory thereof, under which a carrier can accept nothing but money in exchange for interstate transportation. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. U. S., (1911) 219 U. S. 486, 31 S. Ct. 272, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 305.

"Milling in transit" agreement.—An agreement by which the railroad contracts to credit on the freight charges on manufactured goods any freight on raw material shipped to the factory is not violative of this section. Laurel Cotton Mills v. Gulf, etc., R. Co., (1904) 84 Miss. 339, 37 So. 134.

Sale and delivery of goods by carrier.—An interstate carrier, not empowered by its charter or by any legislation existing at the time of the adoption of this Act to mine and market coal, violates the mandate of the Act respecting the maintenance of published rates, and its prohibitions against undue preferences and discriminations, by stipulating to sell and transport coal at an agreed price, insufficient to yield its published freight rates after deducting the cost of purchase and delivery. New York, etc., R. Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, (1906) 200 U. S. 361, 26 S. Ct. 272, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 515, wherein the court said: "That a carrier engaged in interstate commerce becomes subject as to such commerce to the commands of the statute, and may not set its provisions at naught whatever otherwise may be its power when carrying on commerce not interstate in character, cannot in reason be denied. Now, in view of the positive command of the second section of the Act that no departure from the published rate shall be made 'directly or indirectly,' how can it in reason be held that a carrier may take itself from out the statute in every case by simply electing to be a dealer and transport a commodity in that character? For, of course, if a carrier has a right to disregard the published rates by resorting to a particular form of dealing, it must follow that there is no obligation on the part of a carrier to adhere to the rates, because doing so is merely voluntary. The all-embracing prohibition against either directly or indirectly charging less than the published rates shows that the purpose of the statute was to make the prohibition applicable to every method of dealing by a carrier by which the forbidden result could be brought about. If the public purpose which the statute was intended to accomplish be borne in mind, its meaning becomes, if possible, clearer. What was that purpose? It was to compel the carrier, as a public agent, to give equal treatment to all. Now if, by the mere fact of purchasing and selling merchandise to be transported, a carrier is endowed with the power of disregarding the published rate, it becomes apparent that the carrier possesses the right to treat the owners of like commodities by entirely different rules. That is to say, the existence of such a power in its essence would enable a carrier, if it chose to do so, to select the favored persons from whom he would buy, and the favored persons to whom he would sell, thus giving such persons an advantage over every other, and leading to a monopolization in the hands of such persons of all the products as to which the carrier chose to deal. Indeed, the inevitable result of the possession of such a right by a carrier would be to enable it, if it chose to exercise the power, to concentrate in its own hands the products which were held for shipment along its line, and to make it, therefore, the sole purchaser thereof and the sole seller at the place where the products were to be marketed; in other words, to create an absolute monopoly. To illustrate: If a carrier may, by becoming a dealer, buy property for transportation to a market and eliminate the cost of transportation to such market, a faculty possessed by no other owner of the commodity, it must result that the carrier would be in a position where no other person could ship the commodity on equal terms with the carrier in its capacity of dealer. No other person owning the commodity being thus able to ship on equal terms, it would result that the owners of such commodity would not be able to ship, but would be compelled to sell to the carrier. And as, by the departure from the tariff rates, the person to whom the carrier might elect to sell would be able to buy at a price less than any other person could sell for, it would follow that such person, so selected by the carrier, would have a monopoly in the market to which the goods were transported."

Vol. III, p. 816, sec. 3.

UNDUE OR UNREASONABLE PREFERENCE OR ADVANTAGE.

IN GENERAL.

The object of this section was to prevent undue preference or advantage to any person, company, firm, corporation, or locality, or any particular description of traffic. Interstate Commerce Commission v. Chicago G. W. R. Co., (1905) 141 Fed. 1004, affirmed (1908) 209 U. S. 108, 28 S. Ct. 493, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 705; De Rochemont v. New York Cent., etc., R. Co., (1909) 75 N. H. 158, 71 Atl. 868.

Validity of statute.—This section is valid and enforceable in a civil action for failure to comply with its provisions. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Moore, (Tex. 1904) 80 S. W. 426.

State statutes.—This section is not in conflict with a state statute permitting the attachment of freight cars when not in actual use. De Rochemont v. New York Cent., etc., R. Co., (1909) 75 N. H. 158, 71 Atl. 868.

WHAT CONSTITUTES UNDUE PREFERENCE OR ADVANTAGE.

Definition.—The statute does not define the phrase "undue or unreasonable preference or advantage." Whether a preference or advantage is "undue" or "unreasonable" must be determined by the circumstances of each case. Interstate Commerce Commission v. Chicago G. W. R. Co., (1905) 141 Fed. 1003, affirmed (1908) 209 U. S. 108, 28 S. Ct. 493, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 705.

Preference or advantage not necessarily unlawful.—To the same effect as the second paragraph of the original note, see Gamble-Robinson Commission Co. v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (C. C. A. 1909) 168 Fed. 161, 16 Ann. Cas. 613; Union Pac. R. Co. v. Updike Grain Co., (C. C. A. 1910) 178 Fed. 223.

More inequality of charge does not constitute undue or unreasonable preference or advantage. Railroads are only bound to give the same terms to all persons alike, under the same conditions and circumstances; and any fact which produces an inequality of conditions and a change of circumstances justifies an inequality of charge. Interstate Commerce Commission v. Chicago G. W. R. Co., (1905) 141 Fed. 1003, affirmed (1908) 209 U. S. 108, 28 S. Ct. 493, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 705.

Substantially similar circumstances and conditions must exist in order to render a preference or advantage illegal. U. S. v. Oregon R., etc., Co., (1908) 159 Fed. 975.

The similarity of circumstances and conditions under which a service of carriage is rendered, which, under the Interstate Commerce Act, requires an equality of rate, relates to the circumstances and conditions which affect the service only, and where different coal-mining localities are grouped into a district for rate-making purposes, a carrier is not justified in making a different rate for the same or substantially similar service from a particular locality in such district, or on the product of a particular mine or vein, from that charged others because the difference in the product from such locality mine or vein and that from other mines in the district is such that it can pay a higher rate and still compete in the market. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, (1909) 174 Fed. 687.

Preference between localities.—The same evidence which warrants a finding that dissimilar circumstances and conditions exist which justify a lower rate for a longer haul to one point than for a shorter haul to another also establishes that the charging of such rates does not give one point an undue preference and advantage over the other, in violation of section 3 of the Interstate Commerce Act. Interstate Commerce Commission v. Nashville, etc., R. Co., (C. C. A. 1903) 120 Fed. 934.

In Interstate Commerce Commission v. Cincinnati, etc., R. Co., (1903) 124 Fed. 624, it appeared that the conditions are such at Norfolk and Richmond, Va., by reason of the large number of carrying lines, both rail and water, which enter such places, and the fact that they are in what is known as the "trunk line territory," as to create a very active competition on shipments from the west, and to justify the making of low rates on such shipments; and the fact that such low rates are made on through shipments from Chicago, St. Louis, and East St. Louis by a material reduction from local tariff rates by the connecting lines west of the Ohio river, while substantially the local rates are charged on the same lines on through shipments from the same points to Wilmington, N. C., which is not within the trunk line territory, but in the southern territory, and has fewer lines of transportation and less active competition, resulting in higher through rates to the latter place, although the length of haul is substantially the same, does not operate to give Norfolk and Richmond an undue or unreasonable preference or advantage, or subject Wilmington to an undue or unreasonable prejudice or disadvantage, in violation of section 3.

Classification.—The classification of railway cross-ties in a different class from "lumber," imposing on them a higher rate, constitutes unjust discrimination. American Tie, etc., Co. v. Kansas City Southern R. Co., (C. C. A. 1909) 175 Fed. 28.

The disturbance in the relations between freight rates for soap in carload and less than carload lots, created by advancing the former from class 6 to class 5, and the latter from class 4 to class 3 in a new classification adopted to govern in official classification territory, was not cured by classifying soap in less than carload lots at twenty per cent. less than third class, but not less than fourth class, where the result of applying this modified percentage classification to the varying rates is to leave soap in less than carload lots in the fourth class in portions of the territory and in a higher class in other portions. Cincinnati, etc., R. Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, (1907) 206 U. S. 142, 27 S. Ct. 648, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 995.

Special service.—A contract by a railroad company with a shipper to ship his horses to another state on a special through stock train was not an agreement to perform a special service in violation of the Interstate Commerce Act, every shipper being entitled to the same privilege upon request. Kirby v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1909) 242 Ill. 418, 90 N. E. 252.

Motive.—The fact that a carrier, for the purpose of injuring the business of a consignee, or harassing it, subjects it to a prejudice or disadvantage which is neither undue nor unreasonable, does not change the nature of the prejudice or disadvantage or create any cause of action therefor. Thus, in Gamble-Robinson Commission Co. v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (C. C. A. 1909) 168 Fed. 161, it appeared that the plaintiff was a corporation engaged in buying, selling, and dealing for commissions in fruit, vegetables, and dairy products at Minneapolis, and had offices at St. Paul, Rochester, and Mankato in Minnesota, and Aberdeen in South Dakota. The defendant was a common carrier. It had railroad stations at those towns, and lines of railroad through those states and adjoining states. It was the custom and usage of such carriers, and of the defendant, for the terminal carrier to advance the charges of connecting lines upon freight and deliver it to the consignees, also to receive freight at its stations and to transport and deliver it to the consignees, to hold the bills until the questions regarding the correctness of the charges on its lines and on the connecting lines have been adjusted, and then to collect the bills of the consignees. From a bad motive the defendant, after notice, refused to advance charges to connecting lines, to receive and transport freight consigned to the plaintiff, unless the charges upon it for transportation were prepaid, while it continued to give credit to other consignees similarly situated according to the usage and custom. It was held that these acts did not subject the plaintiff to undue or unreasonable prejudice or disadvantage within the meaning of the Interstate Commerce Act.

Stations for special accommodation of particular customers.—A railroad company may establish a station for the special accommodation of a particular customer, and refuse to establish a like station elsewhere for the accommodation of others, and may also grant to one person the right to erect a warehouse or elevator on its right of way, and refuse to grant the same privilege to another, in the exercise of its right to private property. U. S. v. Oregon R., etc., Co., (1908) 159 Fed. 975.

Loading facilities.—A lumber company, which was a shipper of railroad ties, made a contract with a railroad company in 1899 by which it agreed to build a tie hoist for loading ties at a station, and the railroad company agreed to haul its ties to a designated point for $8.50 per car, and to return to the lumber company ten per cent. of the freights so received to apply on the cost of the hoist until entirely paid for, when it was to become the property of the railroad company. In the meantime, however, it could be used only by the lumber company. The rate given was materially less than the published rate, which was charged other shippers. It was held that such contract was one designed to give the lumber company an undue preference or advantage over other shippers, in violation of this Act, and was illegal and not enforceable in any part. Chesapeake, etc., R. Co. v. Standard Lumber Co., (C. C. A. 1909) 174 Fed. 107.

Discriminating differences between state and interstate rates.—The nation has the power to forbid, and by this Act it has prohibited, undue discriminations between localities in different states wrought by unreasonable differences between intrastate and legal interstate rates caused by the reduction of the former by the acts and orders of the officers of a state. Thus, in Shepard v. Northern Pac. R. Co., (1911) 184 Fed. 765, the facts were considered and it was held that the unavoidable effect of the general and sweeping reductions of intrastate fares and rates in Minnesota, made by the acts and orders considered, was and is substantially to burden, directly to regulate, and to discriminate against the interstate commerce of the defendant companies, and to create undue and unjust discriminations between localities in Minnesota and those in other states, in violation of the commerce clause of the Constitution.

Competition between rival carriers.—See Interstate Commerce Commission v. Chicago G. W. R. Co., (1905) 141 Fed. 1003, affirmed (1908) 209 U. S. 108, 28 S. Ct. 493, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 705.

Different rates for live stock and dressed meats.—A reduction of freight rates for dressed meats and packing-house products from Missouri river points and other points similarly situated to Chicago, which makes such rates lower than those charged for live stock, does not work an undue and unreasonable preference, where the higher rate on live stock has not materially affected any of the markets, prices, or shipments, being reasonably fair to Chicago and the shippers, and the shipments of live stock from the West to Chicago are as great in proportion to the bulk of the business as before the change of rates, and where the lower rate given to the packers was the result of competition, and does not directly influence or injure shippers of live stock. Interstate Commerce Commission v. Chicago G. W. R. Co., (1908) 209 U. S. 108, 28 S. Ct. 493, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 705, affirming (1905) 141 Fed. 1003.

Distinction between "real" and "possible" competition.—The fact that defendants might if they chose to do so bring about a severe competition in live stock, as in its products, is immaterial. It is sufficient that real and substantial competition is not as severe in live stock as in its products; and it is useless to inquire whether it might be possible to make competition as severe in the one case as in the other. Interstate Commerce Commis- tion r. Chicago G. W. R. Co., (1905) 141 Fed. 1003, affirmed (1908) 209 U. S. 108, 28 S. Ct. 493, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 705.

Contracts with shippers.—Railway companies may contract with shippers for a single transportation or for successive transportations, subject to a change of rates in the manner provided in the Interstate Commerce Act. Interstate Commerce Commission v. Chicago G. W. R. Co., (1908) 209 U. S. 108, 28 S. Ct. 493, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 705, affirming (1905) 141 Fed. 1003.

Transportation of intoxicating liquors.—Where an express company doing interstate business refused shipment of intoxicating liquors offered by shippers in Arkansas for transportation to purchasers in that portion of Oklahoma formerly called the Indian Territory, it was held that the shippers were entitled to mandamus to compel the express company to transport and deliver such liquor into that part of Oklahoma to which it was consigned. U. S. v. U. S. Express Co., (1910) 180 Fed. 1006.

Refusal to make switch connections.—This section does subject a railroad company to indictment under section 10 for its failure or refusal to furnish switch connections to a shipper tendering interstate traffic for transportation, although such connections are furnished to other shippers, where the indictment does not charge that those demanded are reasonably practicable and could be put in with safety and would furnish sufficient business to justify the expense of their construction and maintenance, nor that the person or company asking for the same offered to pay such portion of their cost as is usual and reasonable. U. S. v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., (1907) 153 Fed. 997.

Routing by initial carrier.—A discrimination forbidden by this section is not made by the adoption by common carriers, as part of an agreement for a through rate from California to the East, for oranges and other citrus fruits, of a rule under which the right of routing beyond its own terminal is reserved to the initial carrier as the condition of guaranteeing the through rates to the shipper, where such rule has served, as was intended, to break up rebating by the connecting lines, and in its practical operation the actual routing is generally conceded to the shipper, and his requests to divert shipments en route are usually allowed. Southern Pac. Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, (1906) 200 U. S. 536, 26 S. Ct. 330, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 585.

Discrimination based upon ownership.—A carrier may not, under the Interstate Commerce Act, make the ownership of goods tendered to it for carriage the criterion by which its charge for such carriage is to be measured. Interstate Commerce Commission v. Delaware, etc., R. Co., (1911) 220 U. S. 235, 31 S. Ct. 292, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 448.

Discrimination against passengers from different points by stopping trains at certain stations for some and refusing privilege to others.—In Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Moore, (Tex. 1904) 80 S. W. 426, it was held that the refusal by a railroad company to stop its train to let off a passenger who purchased a ticket at a point on its own road, outside the state, at a station at which it stopped its trains to let off passengers who purchased tickets over other roads at points outside the state, was a violation of this section.

Refusal to furnish cars.—In American Tie, etc., Co. v. Kansas City Southern R. Co., (C. C. A. 1909) 175 Fed. 28, it was held that the refusal of an interstate carrier to furnish cars for the shipment of the complainant's cross-ties, while furnishing cars to others for interstate shipment of other freight, constitutes an unjust discrimination in violation of this section, for which plaintiff was entitled to recover full damages with an attorney's fee and costs as authorized by section 8.

Distribution of cars.—A railroad having permitted the erection of grain warehouses along its right of way in which grain was stored for producers and owners for hire, as well as grain purchased and owned by the warehousemen, promulgated a rule requiring all orders for cars for the shipment of grain from such warehouses to be made by the warehousemen. The rule operated to the prejudice of private storers of grain through the use of cars ordered by the warehousemen for the shipment of their own grain before cars could be obtained for the shipment of grain in the warehouse owned by storers, and by the appropriation of cars intended for storers by the warehousemen. It was held that the railroad company, under its duty to see that no discrimination was practiced, was bound either to change the rule, or to see that it was not permitted to operate in favor of one shipper and against another. U. S. v. Oregon R., etc., Co., (1908) 159 Fed. 975.

Pro rata allotment of cars.—A railroad rule providing that, in the distribution of the cars of a railroad company available for the transportation of coal, cars for the railroad's fuel supply, foreign railroad cars specially consigned for the fuel supply of the consigning railroads, and individual cars owned by shippers and assigned to specified mines for loading, should be charged against the capacity of the mines at which they were placed, and that the difference between the rated capacity of the mine and the capacity of such assigned cars should be the rate on which all the other cars of the railroad company would be prorated, which rule operated slightly to the advantage of the owners of individual cars, was held not to be objectionable as a discrimination against them. Logan Coal Co. v. Pennsylvania R. Co., (1907) 154 Fed. 497.

To the same effect as the original note, see U. S. v. West Virginia Northern R. Co., (1903) 125 Fed. 252, affirmed (1904) 134 Fed. 198, 67 C. C. A. 220.

Agreement with shippers.—An arrangement between an interstate railroad company and coal shippers in a certain field, fixing a basis which should be considered equitable for the distribution of cars between such shippers, does not operate to relieve the railroad company from the obligations imposed on it by section 3 to treat shippers without dis-nation. U. S. v. Norfolk, etc., R. Co., 106) 143 Fed. 266, 74 C. C. A. 404.

'are owned by individual operators. — Here some of the operators of coal mines own a line of interstate railroad own cars individually which are moved by the railroad company, they are entitled to the exclusive use of such cars, but in times when the total supply of coal cars, including such individual cars and those owned by the railroad company, is insufficient to meet the demand, in distribution by the railroad company of cars between the different mine operators on a percentage basis, calculated on the proportion of the several mines, each operator is entitled to its percentage of all of the available cars, whether owned by the company or individually, in so far as it will not interfere with such right of the individual owners to the exclusive use of their own cars; and the action of the railroad company in deducting from individual cars before making the distribution, and allowing their owners in addition thereto their full quota of its own cars, subjects other operators who own no cars to an undue and unreasonable prejudice and disadvantage in violation of section 3. In such a distribution the allotment of an arbitrary number of cars for development to new mines which have had no opportunity to establish a percentage within reasonable limits is lawful. S. v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., (1907) 154 Fed. 108; Majestic Coal, etc., Co. v. Illinois R. Co., (1908) 162 Fed. 810.

'are owned by other railroads buying coal for a particular operator. — The practice of a railroad company in distributing coal cars for use between mine operators on its line in cases of shortage of cars not to charge against a mine as a part of its quota cars of other railroad companies who had bought coal fuel from such mine and sent the cars there to receive delivery of the same, when the coal so sold is not taken into consideration in computing such mine's percentage, does not subject other mine operators to an undue or unreasonable prejudice or disadvantage. The same considerations apply to coal purchased by any buyer for its own use to be delivered into its own cars at the mine, and which does not become a subject of interstate commerce. U. S. v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., (1907) 154 Fed. 108.

Extra percentage for prompt return of cars. — The statute is not violated by the allowance by a railroad company of an extra percentage of cars to an operator who during the preceding month has unloaded and returned its cars within a certain average time; such practice having been adopted instead of the imposition of a demurrage charge to encourage prompt return of cars, and enlarge the available supply for use, and being open to all alike. U. S. v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., (1907) 154 Fed. 108.

Demurrage. — A demurrage or "car service" charge, made by an interstate railroad company for the time during which cars loaded with hay are left standing on its tracks at a suburban station in Boston after the expiration of the time given for unloading, is not discriminative within the meaning of section 3 because at South Boston, which is the terminal of the road in the city, a hay shed is provided into which hay is unloaded at the request of a consignee to the extent of its capacity, and where it is stored at a somewhat less rate, the charge being the same at the two places where hay is left in the car. Wichie v. New York, etc., R. Co., (1907) 151 Fed. 694.

Requiring prepayment of charges. — To the same effect as the original note, see Gamble-Robinson Commission Co. v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (C. C. A. 1909) 168 Fed. 161, 16 Ann. Cas. 613.

FACILITIES FOR INTERCHANGE OF TRAFFIC.

Construction of second paragraph. — The vision of this paragraph that the requirement that all railroads shall provide reasonable facilities for the interchange of traffic will not require one carrier to give the use of its track or terminal facilities to another engaged in like commerce, is not a substantial enactment, but a mere interpretation designed to restrain, if necessary, the liberality of the language preceding it. Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co. v. Hunt, (1908) 171 Fed. 189, 86 N. E. 328.

Use of tracks and terminal facilities. — A railroad commission's order, requiring construction of a connection between a plaintiff's road and that of another company at a connection point, did not give such other company the use of complainant's track or terminal facilities, within this section. Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co. v. Hunt, (1908) 171 Fed. 189, 86 N. E. 328.

Duty to transfer shipments consigned to substantially same points of delivery. — A railway maintaining a live stock depot as a point of delivery for cattle having a municipality as their general destination cannot be compelled to receive live stock billed to a similar depot at substantially the same point on another railway, and to deliver the same to that railway, at a point of physical connection between the two roads for ultimate delivery there. Central Stock Yards Co. v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., (1904) 192 U. S. 569, 24 S. Ct. 339, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 565.

I. III, p. 823, sec. 4.

Circumstances justifying different charge. In an action by a carrier to recover a higher rate for a shorter than for a longer haul, an answer alleging that there existed no reason, by way of the peculiar geographical position, competition, or trade or other conditions, why a greater charge should be made for the shorter haul, stated facts showing that the rate was illegal and not recoverable. Great Northern R. Co. v. Loonan Lumber Co., (1910) 25 S. D. 155, 125 N. W. 645.

The possibility of competition arising at a particular point does not render freight rates to that point, though higher than those for a longer haul to a point where competition prevails, obnoxious to the prohibition of the Interstate Commerce Act against a greater charge for a shorter than for a longer haul under substantially similar circumstances and conditions. Interstate Commerce Commission v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., (1902) 190 U. S. 279, 23 S. Ct. 687, 47 U. S. (L. ed.) 1054.

Competition between rival carriers. — In Interstate Commerce Commission v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., (1902) 190 U. S. 279, 23 S. Ct. 687, 47 U. S. (L. ed.) 1054, it was held that freight rates from New Orleans, Louisiana, to La Grange, Georgia, arrived at by charging the through rate to Atlanta, Georgia, fixed as the result of competition at that point, and adding thereto the local rate back over the same line from Atlanta to La Grange, are not obnoxious to the prohibition of the Interstate Commerce Act against undue discrimination and a greater charge for a shorter than for a longer haul under substantially similar circumstances and conditions, because stations between La Grange and Atlanta to which the same rule is applied receive lower rates from New Orleans than La Grange, where the La Grange rates, if based on the nearest competitive point south with the local rate from such point added, would be still higher.

Vol. III, p. 827, sec. 5.

Routing by initial carrier. — The pooling of freights of competing railroads, forbidden by this section, is not accomplished by the adoption of common carriers, as part of an agreement for a through rate from California to the East, for oranges and other citrus fruits, of a rule under which the right of routing beyond its own terminal is, reserved to the initial carrier as the condition of guaranteeing the through rates to the shipper, even though the initial carrier promises fair treatment to the connecting lines, and carries out such promise, where such rule has served, as was intended, to break up rebating by the connecting lines, and in its practical operation the actual routing is generally conceded to the shipper, and his requests to divert shipments en route are usually allowed. Southern Pac. Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, (1906) 200 U. S. 536, 26 S. Ct. 330, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 585. See also under this title, vol. 3, p. 816, sec. 3.

Vol. III, p. 827, sec. 6.

Amendment. — This section was amended by Act of June 29, 1906, ch. 3591, sec. 2, 34 Stat. L. 586, 1909 Supp. Fed. Stat. Annot. 280.

Construction of classification sheets. — In construing classification sheets, the intention of the framers thereof as to the meaning of words used, when such intention can be ascertained, should be given effect regardless of the intention of the shipper, or of local usages and customs relating to the meaning of terms contained therein. Smith v. Great Northern R. Co., (1906) 15 N. D. 195, 107 N. W. 56.

Rates in force to which this section applies are not limited to rates under which transportation has actually taken place, but are those which the carrier has established as its present charges for transportation, as distinguished from those which are obsolete, tentative, or perhaps only to take effect in the future. They are rates open to public inspection and on which shipments may be made, if offered. New York Cent., etc., R. Co. v. U. S., (1908) 166 Fed. 267, 92 C. C. A. 331.

Designation of route. — A tariff rate between two points on different railroads, filed and published by one company and concurred in by the other, which does not designate any particular route, must be held as a matter of law to apply to the natural and direct route over the lines of the two companies between the designated points, and to constitute the lawful rate over such route. Standard Oil Co. v. U. S., (1910) 179 Fed. 614, 103 C. C. A. 172.

Different route. — This section provides, among other things, that it shall be unlawful for any common carrier, party to any joint tariff, to charge or receive a greater or less compensation for the transportation of persons or property, or for any service in connection therewith, between any points as to which a joint rate is named thereon than specified in the schedule filed by the commission in force at the time. It has been held that the words "between two points" do not limit such section to points on the established route, but that the section prohibited the transportation of property between terminals in different states at a greater or less rate than the established rate, without reference to routes. U. S. v. Pennsylvania R. Co., (1907) 153 Fed. 625.

Reservation by initial carrier of right to route freight. — Nothing in the provisions of this section requiring joint traffic rates, when agreed upon, to be filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission, and made public when required, and empowering the commission to prescribe forms of schedules of such rates, forbids the adoption by common carriers, as part of an agreement for a through rate from California to the East, for oranges and other citrus fruits, of a rule under which the right of routing beyond its own terminal is reserved to the initial carrier as the condition of guaranteeing the through rates to the shipper, where such rule has served, as was intended, to break up rebating by the connecting lines, and in its practical operation the actual routing is generally conceded to the shipper, and his requests to divert shipments en route are usually allowed. Southern Pac. Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, (1906) 200 U. S. 536, 26 S. Ct. 330, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 585.

Right to receive freight.—It has been held that it is only the "business" of a common carrier which cannot be exercised without filing rates, and that a railroad company is not prohibited from receiving freight for transportation to another state by the fact that no through route and joint rates had been established between the points of shipment and delivery. Reid v. Southern R. Co., (1910) 153 N. C. 490, 69 S. E. 618.

Through rates under joint schedules.—In U. S. v. Wood, (1906) 145 Fed. 405, it appeared that through shipments of iron pipe were made from points in New Jersey and Pennsylvania to Winnipeg, Can., part over the Baltimore and Ohio railroad and part over the Philadelphia and Reading to the Great Lakes; thence by the Mutual Transit Company, a water carrier, to Duluth; and thence by the Great Northern railway and its connections. There was no through joint rate filed or published, but there was a joint rate of 24½ cents per one hundred pounds between the initial points and Duluth published and filed by participating carriers, and one of twenty-five cents per one hundred between Duluth and Winnipeg filed by the Great Northern Railway Company. It was held that the lawful rate for the through carriage was the sum of such two rates, or 49½ cents per hundred, and that under the interstate commerce law neither line over which the shipments passed could lawfully charge a greater or less sum than was specified in the filed and published schedule of rates to which it was a party.

Demand equal to collection.—Under the provision that no carrier shall charge, demand, collect, or receive a greater or less compensation for service than the rates, fares, and charges specified in the tariff filed and in effect at the time, a wilful demand of more than the tariff rates by a carrier is of equal criminality with an actual collection thereof. U. S. v. Texas, etc., R. Co., (1911) 185 Fed. 820.

A rate on lumber was held to cover cross-ties. American Tie, etc., Co. v. Kansas City Southern R. Co., (C. C. A. 1909) 175 Fed. 28.

Departure from published rate.—Where a tariff has been established on a commodity for a through interstate shipment, as provided by this section, there can be no departure therefrom unless made according to law. U. S. v. Pennsylvania R. Co., (1907) 153 Fed. 625.

Separate rates for icing cars.—It seems that a railroad company engaged in interstate commerce in its schedules of rates and classifications filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission may state separately its rate for the carriage of ordinary commodities of a particular class and its charge for icing cars when commodities of the same class are of a character requiring to be shipped under refrigeration, and that its collection of both charges when refrigeration is used is lawful, provided they are each reasonable and do not cover double compensation for the same service. Knudsen-Ferguson Fruit Co. v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., (C. C. A. 1906) 148 Fed. 968.

Storage charges.—Where a carrier gave notice of the arrival of freight before it had so placed the cars that the freight could be delivered to the consignees, and thereafter attempted to charge storage while the cars remained in its possession as the carrier, in addition to the freight rates it was authorized to charge under its published tariffs, it was held that there was a wilful violation of the provisions of the Interstate Commerce Act, providing that no carrier shall charge, demand, or collect different compensation for service than the rates specified in the tariff filed. U. S. v. Texas, etc., R. Co., (1911) 185 Fed. 820.

Applicability of through rates to other carriers.—Where a railroad accepts freight for shipment to a point not on its route, another road passing through the same place, and to the destination of the shipment, is not justified in refusing to accept the shipment at its regular published rate from the first road, by the fact that there is no agreement between the two companies for a joint through rate, notwithstanding this section relating to publication of joint tariffs. Texas, etc., R. Co. v. Texas Short Line R. Co., (1904) 35 Tex. Civ. App. 387, 80 S. W. 567.

Acceptance at through rates when no through rates published.—Where a railroad accepts freight for shipment to a point not on its route, though it has published no through rate, where there is a railroad passing through the same place and to the destination, the road accepting the shipment may charge the rate published by the other, and need not charge a combination of local rates. Texas, etc., R. Co. v. Texas Short Line R. Co., (1904) 35 Tex. Civ. App. 387, 80 S. W. 567.

Printing, filing, and posting schedule of rates.—Where a carrier makes its schedule of rates and files them with the Interstate Commerce Commission, which approves and promulgates them as required by the Interstate Commerce Act, the carrier and shipper must observe them, and any known departure therefrom will subject them to a fine. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Henderson Elevator Co., (Ky. 1910) 127 S. W. 779.

In an indictment charging a shipper with having received from a railroad company a rebate or concession in violation of this Act, whereby oil was transported for it in interstate commerce at a less rate than that named in the tariffs published and filed by the railroad company, an averment that such company established, published, and filed a rate on oil between Chicago and St. Louis of nineteen and one-half cents per hundred pounds is not sustained by proof that its schedules named only the rate over its own line from Chicago to East St. Louis at eighteen cents, and that the tariff on connecting lines between East St. Louis and St. Louis was one and one-half cents. U. S. v. Standard Oil Co., (1909) 170 Fed. 988.

Necessity for posting.—Under this section, requiring carriers to file freight rate schedules with the Interstate Commerce Commission and to post them in railway stations, and providing that changes in rates shall not take effect until after thirty days' notice to the commission and to the public in the same way, a rate filed with the commission is put in force, though not so posted, as affecting the Circuit Court's jurisdiction to enjoin it. Wickwire Steel Co. v. New York Cent., etc., R. Co., (C. C. A. 1910) 181 Fed. 316.

Interstate freight rates are established when a schedule thereof is filed by a carrier with the Interstate Commerce Commission and copies are furnished by the railway company to its freight offices, although such rates may not be "posted" as required by this section, which is not made a condition precedent to the establishment and putting in force of the tariff of rates, but is a provision based upon the existence of an established rate, which has for its object the affording of special facilities to the public for ascertaining the rates actually in force. Texas, etc., R. Co. v. Cisco Oil Mill, (1907) 204 U. S. 450, 27 S. Ct. 358, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 562. Compare Wabash R. Co. v. Sloop, (1906) 200 Mo. 198, 98 S. W. 607; Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Gardner, (Tex. 1905) 86 S. W. 793.

Necessity for filing at station.—Under this section it is not sufficient that the rates are filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission, but they must be on file at the station or with the agent of the common carrier, in order to justify a rate of such carrier. Pecos River R. Co. v. Reynolds Cattle Co., (Tex. 1911) 135 S. W. 162.

Effect of schedule on contracts for transportation.—To the same effect as the first paragraph of the original note, see Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. New Albany Box, etc., Co., (Ind. 1911) 94 N. E. 906; Melody v. Great Northern R. Co., (N. D. 1910) 127 N. W. 543. See also under this title, 1909 Supp., p. 260, sec. 2.

Common carriers of freight, having adopted classification sheets fixing transportation charges, and having filed the same with the Interstate Commerce Commission, are, as well as the shippers, bound thereby; and contracts between such carriers and shippers are presumed to be governed by the classification sheet in force at the date of shipment. Smith v. Great Northern R. Co., (1906) 15 N. D. 195, 107 N. W. 56.

In September, 1901, it was not unlawful for a connecting railroad line to make a joint rate with a shipper for the transportation of grain from one state to another, and a contract of this character was valid and binding upon the parties thereto if there was no established rate under the provisions of this section in force which applied to such traffic. Kansas City Southern R. Co. v. C. H. Albers Commission Co., (1908) 79 Kan. 59, 99 Pac. 820.

Where a railroad, in compliance with the Interstate Commerce Act, filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission a printed schedule of tariffs showing rates of freight then in force, but in a contract of shipment no rate was fixed verbally or in writing, and no allusion made to a reduced rate, the bill of lading being silent as to the rate, it was held that no presumption obtained that the shipper knew a reduced rate was charged because the printed receipt contained a clause limiting the road's liability, so as to exonerate it from liability for loss of the freight through negligence. Phoenix Powder Mfg. Co. v. Wabash R. Co., (1906) 196 Mo. 663, 94 S. W. 235. See also Phoenix Powder Mfg. Co. v. Wabash R. Co., (1906) 120 Mo. App. 566, 97 S. W. 256.

Failure to publish rate.—Under this section it has been held that a contract by a railroad company to charge no greater rate from a certain factory to competitive points than was charged from certain other places, and to maintain a "milling in transit" agreement, was not illegal on its face, in the absence of any showing that the rates fixed by the contract were different from those approved by the commissions, or that rates had been submitted to the commissions at all before the contract was made. Laurel Cotton Mills v. Gulf, etc., R. Co., (1904) 84 Miss. 339, 37 So. 134.

Vol. III, p. 832, sec. 7.

Limitation of liability in interstate carriage.—The refusal of a state court to limit the liability of a common carrier for its negligence in the execution of a contract for interstate carriage to the valuation agreed upon does not contravene the various provisions of this Act, making it obligatory to provide proper facilities for interstate carriage of freight, and preventing carriers from obstructing continuous shipments on interstate lines. Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Hughes, (1903) 191 U. S. 477, 24 S. Ct. 132, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 268.

Vol. III, p. 833, sec. 8.

Necessity for payment under protest.—To entitle a shipper to maintain an action against a railroad company to recover damages for being unjustly discriminated against in rates, it is not necessary that he should have paid the freight charged under protest. Pennsylvania R. Co. v. International Coal Min. Co., (1909) 173 Fed. 1, 97 C. C. A. 383;

Mitchell Coal, etc., Co. v. Pennsylvania R. Co., (1910) 181 Fed. 403.

Action against initial carrier for damage by connecting carrier.—Sections 8 and 9 do not apply to the liability of an initial carrier under section 20 of this Act, as amended by the Hepburn Act (Act June 29, 1906, ch. 3591, sec. 7, 34 Stat. L. 595, 1909 Supp. Fed.

Stat. Annot. 271), for injuries to property while in the possession of a connecting carrier, notwithstanding any provision in the contract of carriage to the contrary. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Heyser, (1910) 95 Ark. 412, 130 S. W. 562.

Damages.—In an action against a railroad company under this section to recover damages for discrimination in rates charged on coal from the mines in violation of section 2 of this Act, it was held that the plaintiff was entitled only to recover for such discrimination as gave his competitor an unfair advantage in the same market. Mitchell Coal, etc., Co. v. Pennsylvania R. Co., (1910) 181 Fed. 403.

Where a statement of claim alleges damages in certain sums per ton on shipments from different mines, recovery is limited to such sums. Mitchell Coal, etc., Co. v. Pennsylvania R. Co., (1910) 181 Fed. 403.

In an action by a coal mining company against a railroad company to recover damages because of discrimination in rates made in favor of other shippers between the same terminals, the measure of damages recoverable is the difference between the amount paid by plaintiff and the amount it would have paid at the lowest rate charged on any other shipments carried under substantially the same circumstances and conditions during the same time, and not the difference between the rates paid by it and the average rate paid by any other shipper. Pennsylvania R. Co. v. International Coal Min. Co., (1909) 173 Fed. 1, 97 C. C. A. 383.

Ground of recovery.—To support an action by a shipper against a carrier under this section he must show either that there has been some unreasonable or excessive charge imposed or some unlawful discrimination practiced against him by which he has been pecuniarily damaged, and he cannot recover, on a merely technical construction of the law, because, in addition to the ordinary schedule rate, an extra charge for icing service, also shown by the schedules, but separately, has been collected from him, where such charge is not shown to be unreasonable and has not been so held by the Interstate Commerce Commission. Knudsen-Ferguson Fruit Co. v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., (C. C. A. 1906) 148 Fed. 968.

Connecting carriers.—A connecting carrier which takes the cars as they are delivered to it by the initial carrier is not liable for a discrimination in favor of shippers of oil in tank cars and against shippers of oil in barrels which may be practiced by the initial carrier, merely because such connecting carrier has participated in the adoption of a joint through rate for barrel shipments, which is in itself reasonable, although by this section a carrier which "shall do, cause to be done, or permit to be done, any act, matter, or thing in this Act prohibited or declared to be unlawful," shall be liable to the full amount of the damages sustained by one injured thereby. Penn Refining Co. v. Western New York, etc., R. Co., (1908) 208 U. S. 208, 28 S. Ct. 268, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 456, affirming (C. C. A. 1905) 137 Fed. 343.

Limitation of actions.—The Mississippi statute (Annot. Code 1892, sec. 2741) providing that actions to recover a forfeiture or penalty on a penal statute shall be brought within one year has no application to an action in the federal court against a common carrier to recover damages for discrimination in violation of this Act. Carter v. New Orleans, etc., R. Co., (C. C. A. 1906) 143 Fed. 99.

Vol. III, p. 833, sec. 9.

Jurisdiction of federal courts.—The federal courts have exclusive jurisdiction of all suits arising under this section. Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Pacific Coast Lumber Manufacturers' Assoc., (1908) 165 Fed. 1, 91 C. C. A. 39; Union Pac. R. Co. v. Oregon, etc., Lumber Manufacturers' Assoc., (1908) 165 Fed. 13, 91 C. C. A. 51.

Jurisdiction of state courts.—To the same effect as the original note, Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Moore, (1904) 98 Tex. 302, 83 S. W. 362. Compare St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Heyser, (1910) 95 Ark. 412, 130 S. W. 562.

The Interstate Commerce Act is a part of the law of the state and enforceable in its courts when rights under it arise as incidents of a trial. McElvain v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., (1910) 151 Mo. App. 126, 131 S. W. 736.

While the federal courts have exclusive jurisdiction of all actions based on specific remedies given by this Act under sections 8 and 9 thereof, nevertheless, after adjudication by the Interstate Commerce Commission, a state court has jurisdiction of a suit at common law brought against the carrier to recover the excess of freights paid on interstate shipments; such right of action being preserved to the shipper by section 22 of said Act. Kansas City Southern R. Co. v. C. H. Albers Commission Co., (1908) 79 Kan. 59, 99 Pac. 819; Robinson v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., (1908) 64 W. Va. 406, 63 S. E. 323.

In Banner v. Wabash R. Co., (1906) 131 Ia. 405, 108 N. W. 759, it appeared that the plaintiff shipped from one state to another certain goods and sixteen head of stock in an emigrant car, the railroad's rules fixing the rate for such cars, limiting the number of head of stock to be shipped in one car to ten, and providing that the freight charged for animals in excess of said number should be at a certain rate, establishing an arbitrary weight in which the computation should be made. Six of the cattle were calves weighing about three hundred pounds each, and before plaintiff was permitted to remove his property from the car he was compelled to pay the car load price of a car of stock between the points of carriage in addition to the charge for an emigrant car. There was nothing in the schedules or classification shown authorizing a charge for such arbitrary weight. It was held that the state court had jurisdiction of an action to recover the amount so paid by plaintiff, the suit not being one to recover an overcharge under the Interstate Commerce Act but to recover back a wholly unjust and unauthorized exaction demanded and collected not only in violation of the Act itself, but in violation of the contract made with plaintiff.

Overcharges, jurisdiction of actions to recover which is given to federal tribunals by this section, are such as grow out of a charge in excess of a carrier's rates as fixed by schedules, filed, published, and posted, as required by section 6; so that where no such schedules have been posted, and the overcharge is merely one in excess of the rate agreed on with the shipper, action therefor may be maintained in the state courts. Wabash R. Co. v. Sloop, (1906) 200 Mo. 198, 98 S. W. 607.

A state court has jurisdiction of an action based upon a carrier's common-law duties to furnish facilities for shipping, although the damage was caused by the act of a carrier engaged in interstate business, where the action was not brought under the Interstate Commerce Act. Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co. v. Wood, (1908) 45 Ind. App. 1, 84 N. E. 1009.

The question of jurisdiction between the state and federal courts is to be determined by the averments of the petition, and not by the federal questions presented defensively by the answer. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Roff Oil, etc., Co., (Tex. 1910) 128 S. W. 1194.

Election of remedies.—Where the plaintiff elected to proceed by a complaint to the commission, it was held that he was thereafter confined to the remedy provided by this section. Western New York, etc., R. Co. v. Penn Refining Co., (1905) 137 Fed. 343, 70 C. C. A. 23, affirmed (1908) 208 U. S. 208, 28 S. Ct. 268, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 456.

Parties.—Where there has been a preliminary inquiry and finding by the Interstate Commerce Commission on the question of unlawful discrimination, a suit against the carrier may be maintained by the government. U. S. v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., (1903) 122 Fed. 544.

Receivers.—Since execution cannot issue against the property of a railroad company in the hands of a receiver appointed by a federal court to enforce a judgment for damages sustained by the charge of discriminating freight rates in violation of the Interstate Commerce Act, the receiver as such should not be joined with other railroad companies constituting a through route, against which the judgment would constitute a personal liability, to be enforced by execution at law. Western New York, etc., R. Co. v. Penn Refining Co., (1905) 137 Fed. 343, 70 C. C. A. 23, affirmed (1908) 208 U. S. 208, 28 S. Ct. 268, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 456.

Lessee.—Where a lessee railroad company operated a part of a through route over which oil was transported under an alleged discriminating rate, but was not a party to a proceeding before the Interstate Commerce Commission to recover reparation, an order in favor of petitioners including discriminating freight charges by such lessee company was neither conclusive nor effective as to it. Western New York, etc., R. Co. v. Penn Refining Co., (1905) 137 Fed. 343, 70 C. C. A. 23, affirmed (1908) 208 U. S. 208, 28 S. Ct. 268, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 456.

Pleading.—Where a count in a complaint against an interstate carrier alleged a discrimination in rates against the plaintiff, in that the defendant charged plaintiff the full tariff rates and permitted plaintiff's competitors by a device to transport their similar products at a lower rate, it was held to state a cause of action for violating section 2 of this Act, and was therefore not demurrable, though it also insufficiently attempted to allege a combination or conspiracy, on defendant's part, with certain other railroads to restrain trade, and to recover treble damages under the Sherman Anti-trust Act (Act July 2, 1890, ch. 647, 26 Stat. L. 209, 7 Fed. Stat. Annot. 336). American Union Coal Co. v. Pennsylvania R. Co., (1908) 159 Fed. 278.

Limitation of actions.—Two methods of procedure are prescribed for the recovery of damages for violation of the interstate commerce law: One by this section, by an action at law; and the other by complaint to the Interstate Commerce Commission under sections 14, 15, 16, as amended by Act June 29, 1906, ch. 3591, secs. 3, 4, 5, 34 Stat. L. 589, 590, 1909 Supp. Fed. Stat. Annot. 264, 265, 268, and the provision of section 16 as so amended, that "all complaints for the recovery of damages shall be filed with the commission within two years from the time the cause of action accrues," is merely a limitation as to time upon the second method, and does not deprive a party injured of the right to sue at law. Lyne v. Delaware, etc., R. Co., (1908) 170 Fed. 847.

Burden of proof.—In a suit against a railroad for breach of a contract to transport freight at a certain rate, the burden is not on plaintiff to show that the contract rate had been filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission, as required by section 6. Laurel Cotton Mills v. Gulf, etc., R. Co., (1904) 84 Miss. 339, 37 So. 134.

Action for damages for preference to other shippers.—A shipper may maintain an action at law under this section to recover damages from an interstate railroad company because of the giving of a preference or advantage to another shipper by permitting him to keep cars on its terminal tracks without payment of the charges fixed by its schedules while denying the same right to plaintiff. Lyne v. Delaware, etc., R. Co., (1908) 170 Fed. 847.

Production of corporate books.—A corporation cannot refuse to produce its books in an action against it to recover damages for a violation of Interstate Commerce Act on the ground the evidence therein may incriminate it. International Coal Min. Co. v. Pennsylvania R. Co., (1907) 152 Fed. 557.

Action by commission as condition precedent to recovery of unreasonable rate.—In Texas, etc., R. Co. v. Abilene Cotton Oil Co., (1907) 204 U. S. 426, 27 S. Ct. 350, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 553, a leading case, it was held that a shipper cannot maintain an action against a common carrier to obtain relief from an alleged unreasonable freight rate exacted from him for an interstate shipment, without reference to any previous action by the Interstate Commerce Commission, where such rate has been filed with that commission and promulgated as provided by this Act, and is the rate which it is the duty of the carrier, under the Act, to enforce against shippers until changed in accordance with the provisions of that statute, since the independent right of an individual originally to maintain actions to obtain pecuniary redress for violations of the Act, conferred by section 9, must be confined to such wrong as can, consistently with the context of the Act, be redressed without previous action by the commission, and the provision of section 22, that nothing therein "shall in any way abridge or alter the remedies now existing at common law or by statute, but the provisions of this Act are in addition to such remedies," cannot be construed as continuing in shippers a common-law right, the continued existence of which would be absolutely inconsistent with the provisions of the statute. In the course of the opinion Mr. Justice White said: "If, without previous action by the commission, power might be exerted by courts and juries generally to determine the reasonableness of an established rate, it would follow that, unless all courts reached an identical conclusion, a uniform standard of rates in the future would be impossible, as the standard would fluctuate and vary, dependent upon the divergent conclusions reached as to reasonableness by the various courts called upon to consider the subject as an original question. Indeed, the recognition of such a right is wholly inconsistent with the administrative power conferred upon the commission, and with the duty, which the statute casts upon that body, of seeing to it that the statutory requirement as to uniformity and equality of rates is observed. Equally obvious is it that the existence of such a power in the courts, independent of prior action by the commission, would lead to favoritism, to the enforcement of one rate in one jurisdiction and a different one in another, would destroy the prohibitions against preferences and discrimination, and afford, moreover, a ready means by which, through collusive proceedings, the wrongs which the statute was intended to remedy could be successfully inflicted. Indeed, no reason can be perceived for the enactment of the provision endowing the administrative tribunal which the Act created with power, on due proof, not only to award reparation to a particular shipper, but to command the carrier to desist from violation of the Act in the future, thus compelling the alteration of the old or the filing of a new schedule, conformably to the action of the commission, if the power was left in courts to grant relief on complaint of any shipper, upon the theory that the established rate could be disregarded and be treated as unreasonable, without reference to previous action by the commission in the premises. This must be, because, if the power existed in both courts and the commission to originally hear complaints on this subject, there might be a divergence between the action of the commission and the decision of a court. In other words, the established schedule might be found reasonable by the commission in the first instance and unreasonable by a court acting originally, and thus a conflict would arise which would render the enforcement of the Act impossible." Appeal.—The law allows no appeal from or writ of error to review a decision of the Interstate Commerce Commission denying or awarding reparation for an alleged violation of this Act. Western New York, etc., R. Co. v. Penn Refining Co., (C. C. A. 1905) 137 Fed. 343, affirmed (1908) 208 U. S. 208, 28 S. Ct. 268, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 456.

Vol. III, p. 835, sec. 10.

State laws.—A state statute which is practically identical with the third paragraph of this section, except that the punishment prescribed by it is less severe than that imposed by the federal law, is not unconstitutional as in conflict with the federal law. Adams Express Co. v. Charlottesville Woolen Mills, (1908) 109 Va. 1, 63 S. E. 8.

Venue.—The offense of failing to file a rate schedule with a commission is committed in Washington, where the commission has its office, and hence must be prosecuted there. New York Cent., etc., R. Co. v. U. S., (1908) 166 Fed. 267, 92 C. C. A. 331.

Wilfulness.—A violation of this section, providing that if a carrier wilfully violates any provisions of this Act it shall be liable for penalty, is not made out by proof of an overcharge due to accident or mistake, but is only established by evidence of a wilful act or omission. U. S. v. Texas, etc., R. Co., (1911) 185 Fed. 820.

False billing, classification, weighing, etc.—In Montpelier, etc., R. Co. v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1911) 187 Fed. 271, it appeared that the defendant operated a line of railroad from Montpelier to Wells River, in Vermont, a distance of thirty-nine miles. By a joint tariff, to which it was a party, the rate on coal from a point in Pennsylvania to Montpelier was fixed at $3.55 per ton, and to all other points on its line at $3.80, of which it received 75 cents as its share. The published rules also provided that, where the point of destination of a shipment was between any two points named in the schedules, the rate should be the same as to the next more distant point named. It was held that the tariff rate to Montpelier should be construed as applying to the station in that city, and that where the defendant received coal for its own use, which it received at such station and hauled over its own line to a chute between that and the next station, although within the limits of the city, the fact that it had the coal billed at the $3.80 rate and took its divisional share thereof did not render it subject to prosecution for receiving a rebate, in violation of Interstate Commerce Act.

Refusal to disclose value of package — effect on right of recovery. — Where a shipper was asked, and wilfully refused, to give the value of packages, the value of each of which exceeded fifty dollars, offered for interstate express shipment, knowing that, if the value was disclosed, the shipments could be transported only at an increased rate proportionate to the value of the goods, and by such refusal obtained a lower rate than he could otherwise have obtained, it was held that such conduct constituted a violation of the Interstate Commerce Act, which rendered the contract unenforceable, so that, on the destruction of the goods in the hands of the carrier, the courts would not aid the shipper to recover therefor. Ellison v. Adams Express Co., (1910) 245 Ill. 410, 92 N. E. 279.

Burden of proof. — In a prosecution of an interstate carrier for charging a less rate for the transportation of petroleum between two special termini in different states than that scheduled in a filed joint tariff, in violation of section 6 of this Act, the burden is on the government to show a common arrangement for a continuous carriage between the points mentioned in the filed joint tariff. U. S. v. Pennsylvania R. Co., (1907) 153 Fed. 625.

Indictment — For failure to furnish cars. — An indictment against a railroad company based upon section 3 of this Act which charges generally that the defendant did knowingly and unlawfully grant, give, and practice an unreasonable and unjust discrimination in respect of the transportation of property in interstate commerce, by failing and refusing to grant, give, and furnish to a particular coal company its proper and rightful share and quota of cars and motive power, which it was justly and of right entitled to receive from said defendant, and by granting, giving, and furnishing to certain other coal companies and other persons, firms, and corporations more than their respective shares and quota of cars and motive power, to the undue and unreasonable prejudice and disadvantage of the first-named company, does not allege a violation of that part of the section relating to the giving of an undue or unreasonable preference or advantage to any particular person, company, or locality, or to any particular description of traffic, nor does it sufficiently charge that defendant subjected any particular company or any particular description of traffic to any undue or unreasonable prejudice or disadvantage, where it alleges no facts showing the rightful share or quota of cars and motive power to which the coal company charged to have been so prejudiced was entitled, or that such company at the time charged was prepared to make shipments and tendered the same and made demand for cars and motive power for their transportation in interstate commerce. U. S. v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., (1907) 153 Fed. 997.

For unjust discrimination under section 2. — An indictment against an interstate carrier for discrimination, alleging that, under a common arrangement between the connecting carriers, the commodity which was contained in tank cars was transported without stoppage or interruption and was accompanied by written shipping order, waybills, and transfer slips indicating a through transportation, the rate and place of destination was held to sufficiently allege prima facie a common arrangement between the carriers for a through shipment. U. S. v. Pennsylvania R. Co., (1907) 153 Fed. 625.

For charging less than schedule rates under section 6. — An indictment charging shippers with receiving a concession, in that they accepted transportation of certain freight at a less rate than that filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission, but which failed to charge that the higher rate so filed had been and was posted as required, was held to be fatally defective. U. S. v. Miller, (1911) 187 Fed. 375.

For charging less than schedule rates under section 6. — Where in a prosecution against a carrier for discrimination in violation of the interstate commerce law, the indictment alleged that a common arrangement existed between defendant and three other connecting carriers named for a continuous forwarding of property, in interstate commerce, between two specified points, and that defendant kept open for public inspection its printed tariff of rates, and filed the same as required by law, with the allegation that the shipment in question was accompanied by written shipping order, waybills, and transfer slips showing a continuous shipment between such points, it was held that it sufficiently charged the establishment of a joint tariff of rates for the commodity in question, without alleging that all the connecting carriers concurred in such joint rate, or that it was filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission by their joint action. U. S. v. Pennsylvania R. Co., (1907) 153 Fed. 625.

Penalty for failure to publish rates. — The penalty for failure on the part of any carrier to publish and file its rates is as severe as the penalty for failure to strictly observe such rates after filing. U. S. v. Illinois Terminal R. Co., (1909) 168 Fed. 546.

Offenses by shipper. — Under Act Cong. June 29, 1906, ch. 3591, sec. 2, 34 Stat. L. 587, 1909 Supp. Fed. Stat. Annot. 280, requiring interstate carriers to publish a schedule of freight rates and make their charges accordingly, and this section, making it a fraud for a shipper to obtain a preference in freight rates by knowingly making a shipment under a false billing, etc., a contention that a shipper, innocent at the time, and ignorant of any classification or difference in rate, who shipped a race horse and paid the freight charged by the agent without being informed of the valuation made, is guilty of an offense under the statute, because he sues for injuries to the horse and seeks to recover the true value of the horse regardless of the rating, is self-refutatory. Nor under such fact can a contention be sustained that recovery is forbidden by the statute of 1906, because indirectly giving a preference in rating forbidden by the law. Kissenger v. Fitzgerald, (1910) 152 N. C. 247, 67 S. E. 588.

Vol. III, p. 837, sec. 11.

Term of commissioners.—A member of the Interstate Commerce Commission whose term of office, as fixed by law, has expired, cannot thereafter lawfully continue to act as such commissioner and perform the duties of that office. (1905) 25 Op. Atty.-Gen. 332.

Vol. III, p. 838, sec. 12.

Powers and duties of commission—Commission not a court.—To the same effect as the original note, see Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Scott, (1909) 133 Ky. 724, 118 S. W. 900.

No power to fix rates.—Interstate Commerce Commission v. Lake Shore, etc., R. Co., (1905) 134 Fed. 942, affirmed (1906) 202 U. S. 613, 26 S. Ct. 766, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 1171.

Extent of inquiry.—The Interstate Commerce Commission, in making an investigation of a complaint as to the freight rate promulgated in a classification adopted to govern in official classification territory, had the power, in the public interest, unembarrassed by any supposed admissions contained in the complaint, to consider the whole subject, and the operation of the classification in the entire territory, and also how far its going into effect would be just and reasonable, would create preferences, or would engender discrimination. Cincinnati, etc., R. Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, (1907) 206 U. S. 142, 27 S. Ct. 648, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 995.

Power to forbid classification.—The Interstate Commerce Commission is acting within its powers, under the Act to regulate commerce, in ordering carriers to desist from further enforcing a classification by percentage on common soap in less than carload lots, operating throughout official classification territory, which it finds has brought about a general disturbance in relations previously existing in that territory, and has created discriminations and preferences among manufacturers and shippers of the commodity, and between localities in such territory. Cincinnati, etc., R. Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, (1907) 206 U. S. 142, 27 S. Ct. 648, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 995.

Regulation of distribution of coal cars.—Authority to regulate the distribution of a railway company's fuel cars in times of car shortage to the bituminous coal mines was delegated to the Interstate Commerce Commission as a means of prohibiting the unjust preferences or undue discriminations forbidden by section 3 of this Act. Interstate Commerce Commission v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., (1910) 215 U. S. 452, 30 S. Ct. 155, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 280, reversing (1908) 173 Fed. 930.

Restricting allowance for elevator charges.—Confining the allowance by a carrier to the owner of an elevator for elevating grain in transit, in which he has an interest, to such grain as shall be reshipped within ten days, is within the power of the Interstate Commerce Commission. Interstate Commerce Commission v. Dittenbach, (1911) 223 U. S. 42, 32 S. Ct. 22, modifying and affirming 176 Fed. 409.

Evidence.—Contracts of railroad companies or coal companies owned by the railroads, which are otherwise relevant and competent, are not inadmissible in evidence in a proceeding before the Interstate Commerce Commission on a complaint charging such companies with violations of the Act because they are made with third persons not parties to the proceeding. Interstate Commerce Commission v. Baird, (1904) 194 U. S. 25, 24 S. Ct. 563, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 860.

Compulsory production of documentary evidence.—In Interstate Commerce Commission v. Baird, (1904) 194 U. S. 25, 24 S. Ct. 563, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 860, it was held that the production of contracts under which railroad companies engaged in interstate carriage of anthracite coal, who had acquired certain collieries whose proprietors were about to build a competing line, guaranteed the stock and bonds issued on payment therefor by a corporation whose charter they had purchased for that purpose, might be compelled in a proceeding before the Interstate Commerce Commission on a complaint charging such railroad companies with violations of this Act by the pooling of freights and the charging of unreasonable rates in carrying anthracite coal.

Attendance and testimony of witnesses.—Witnesses cannot be required to testify before the Interstate Commerce Commission except in connection with complaints for violation of the Interstate Commerce Act or with the investigation by the commission of subjects that might have been made the object of complaint, these being the only matters contemplated by the provision of section 12, giving the commissioner power to require testimony "for the purposes of this Act," which power cannot be exercised by the commission in performing its duty under that section to keep itself informed as to the manner and method in which the business of common carriers is conducted, nor in connection with the enforcement of the requirement of section 20 respecting reports by carriers, nor to aid the commission in recommending, pursuant to section 21, additional legislation to Congress,

Harriman v. Interstate Commerce Commission, (1908) 211 U. S. 407, 29 S. Ct. 118, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 253, affirming 157 Fed. 432.

Jurisdiction to compel reports.—Jurisdiction, in a federal Circuit Court, of an original proceeding by mandamus to compel an interstate carrier to make the report which the Interstate Commerce Commission is authorized by the Act to require, cannot be inferred from the grant of authority to the commission to enforce that Act, or from the direction to district attorneys of the United States or the attorney-general to institute all necessary proceedings for the enforcement of its provisions. Knapp v. Lake Shore, etc., R. Co., (1905) 197 U. S. 536, 25 S. Ct. 538, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 870.

Vol. III, p. 842, sec. 13.

Cumulative remedies.—See under this title, vol. 3, p. 852, sec. 10.

Vol. III, p. 843, sec. 14.

Amendment.—This section was amended by Act of June 29, 1906, ch. 3591, sec. 3, 34 Stat. L. 589, 1909 Supp. Fed. Stat. Annot. 364.

Inclusion of opinion in report.—Where a proceeding to enforce the commission's findings was tried to a federal court without a jury, it was not error for the court to receive the commission's report in evidence without excluding matters of opinion stated therein, as distinguished from the commission's findings of fact. Southern R. Co. v. St. Louis Hay, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 1907) 153 Fed. 729.

Vol. III, p. 843, sec. 15.

Amendment.—This section was amended by Act of June 29, 1906, ch. 3591, sec. 4, 34 Stat. L. 589, 1909 Supp. Fed. Stat. Annot. 265.

Vol. III, p. 844, sec. 16.

Amendment.—This section was amended by Act of June 29, 1906, ch. 3591, sec. 5, 34 Stat. L. 590, 1909 Supp. Fed. Stat. Annot. 268.

Jurisdiction of federal courts.—The courts have the power to investigate any rate or rates fixed by legislative authority and to determine whether they are such as would be confiscatory of the property of the carrier, and if they are judicially found to be confiscatory in their effects, to restrain their enforcement. Any law which attempts to deprive the courts of this power is unconstitutional. (1905) 25 Op. Atty.-Gen. 422.

Courts cannot make rates.—The rate-making power is not a judicial function and cannot be conferred constitutionally upon the courts of the United States, either by way of original or appellate jurisdiction. (1905) 25 Op. Atty.-Gen. 422.

The lawfulness of an order of reparation issued by the Interstate Commerce Commission does not necessarily depend on a sufficiency of evidence adduced before the commission, but on the existence of facts, whether disclosed or not before that body, warranting the reparation ordered; and in an action to enforce such reparation it is sufficient that such facts be established by proper evidence. Western New York, etc., R. Co. v. Penn Refining Co., (1905) 137 Fed. 343, 70 C. C. A. 23, affirmed (1908) 208 U. S. 208, 28 S. Ct. 268, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 456.

Enforcement of order.—No lawful orders of the Interstate Commerce Commission are self-executing. Western New York, etc., R. Co. v. Penn Refining Co., (1905) 137 Fed. 343, 70 C. C. A. 23, affirmed (1908) 208 U. S. 208, 28 S. Ct. 268, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 456.

The enforcement of an order of the Interstate Commerce Commission directing the common carriers to desist from maintaining or enforcing a rule adopted by them may be decreed by a federal Circuit Court if it finds such rule is, for any reason, in violation of this Act, although such reason may not have been the one relied upon by the commission itself to invalidate the rule. Southern Pac. Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, (1906) 200 U. S. 551, 26 S. Ct. 330, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 585. See also under this title, vol. 3, p. 816, sec. 3.

Any supposed admissions in a complaint filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission as to the freight rate promulgated in a classification adopted to govern in official classification territory are ineffectual to deprive a federal Circuit Court, in a proceeding to enforce an order of the commission, of the power to test the validity of such order by the scope of this Act. Cincinnati, etc., R. Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, (1907) 206 U. S. 142, 27 S. Ct. 648, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 995.

Jury trial.—In an action to enforce an interstate commerce reparation order based on a discriminating freight rate, whether such rate was just and reasonable or unreasonable and excessive is a question for the jury. Western New York, etc., R. Co. v. Penn Refining Co., (1905) 137 Fed. 343, 70 C. C. A. 23, affirmed (1908) 208 U. S. 208, 28 S. Ct. 268, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 456.

Necessity for action by commission.—The rule that an action at law to recover excessive interstate freight charges cannot be maintained in advance of action by the Interstate Commerce Commission will not prevent a federal Circuit Court which has suspended proceedings on a bill seeking relief from an advance in freight rates, pending action by the commission, from granting relief in the exercise of its powers under section 16, as a court of equity, on a petition filed after the commission has acted, stating the substance of the findings of the commission, and containing a copy of its report and opinion, where defendants have stipulated in open court that, in case complainants prevailed, decree of restitution might be made. Southern R. Co. v. Tift, (1907) 206 U. S. 428, 27 S. Ct. 709, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 1124.

Stipulation.—Parties, after action by the Interstate Commerce Commission declaring an increased freight rate to be unreasonable, may make a valid stipulation, in the subsequent proceedings had in the federal court under this section, that such court may adjudge the amount of the reparation. Southern R. Co. v. Tift, (1907) 206 U. S. 428, 27 S. Ct. 709, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 1124.

Reference for ascertainment of damages.—The final decree of a federal Circuit Court in the proceedings prosecuted under this section, after action by the Interstate Commerce Commission declaring an increased freight rate to be unreasonable, may direct an order of reference to the standing master of the pleadings and evidence in the cause, with instructions to ascertain the sum of the increase in rates paid since the rate went into effect, where defendants stipulated in open court that, in case complainants prevailed, a decree of restitution might be made. Southern R. Co. v. Tift, (1907) 206 U. S. 428, 27 S. Ct. 709, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 1124.

Evidence—Findings of fact.—The provision of this section that the findings of fact of the Interstate Commerce Commission shall be prima facie evidence of the facts found in a subsequent proceeding to enforce the commission's order, contemplated that the findings of fact should be so prepared and arranged in the commission's report that they could be offered in evidence unaccompanied by extraneous or incompetent legal arguments, opinions, or other conclusions. Western New York, etc., R. Co. v. Penn Refining Co., (1905) 137 Fed. 343, 70 C. C. A. 23, affirmed (1908) 208 U. S. 208, 28 S. Ct. 268, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 456.

A finding by the Interstate Commerce Commission that a just and reasonable charge for the privilege of reconsigning hay at East St. Louis was one cent per hundred weight was held to be prima facie evidence of its own truth. Southern R. Co. v. St. Louis Hay, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 1907) 153 Fed. 728.

Opinions of commission.—The mere opinions of the Interstate Commerce Commission are inadmissible in an action brought for the enforcement of an order of pecuniary reparation. Western New York, etc., R. Co. v. Penn Refining Co., (1905) 137 Fed. 343, 70 C. C. A. 23, affirmed (1908) 208 U. S. 208, 28 S. Ct. 268, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 456.

No power to modify order or substitute new one.—In a proceeding in a Circuit Court under this section of the Interstate Commerce Act, to enforce an order of the Interstate Commerce Commission, the court has no power to amend or modify such order, or to sever from the remainder a part which is illegal, but must enforce the same, if at all, in its entirety as made by the commission. Interstate Commerce Commission v. Lake Shore, etc., R. Co., (1905) 134 Fed. 942, affirmed (1906) 202 U. S. 613, 26 S. Ct. 766, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 1171.

Hearing and determination de novo.—Though an action to recover pecuniary reparation ordered by the Interstate Commerce Commission is triable de novo, the cause of action must have been included in the order of reparation, and have constituted the whole or part of the basis of such order, whether the proceeding to enforce the same is in equity or at law. Western New York, etc., R. Co. v. Penn Refining Co., (1905) 137 Fed. 343, 70 C. C. A. 23, affirmed (1908) 208 U. S. 208, 28 S. Ct. 268, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 456.

Review of facts.—Findings of fact found by the Interstate Commerce Commission, when concurred in by a federal Circuit Court, will not be disturbed unless the record establishes that clear and unmistakable error has been committed. Cincinnati, etc., R. Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, (1906) 206 U. S. 142, 27 S. Ct. 648, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 995; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, (1907) 206 U. S. 441, 27 S. Supersedeas.—To the same effect as the second paragraph of the original note, and following the case there cited, Interstate Commerce Commission v. Southern Pac. Co., (1904) 137 Fed. 606.

A Circuit Court will not supersede a decree enjoining railroad companies from violating an order of the Interstate Commerce Commission affecting rates, entered in a suit brought by the commission pursuant to this section, pending an appeal from such decree, where it does not appear that the damage to defendants from the enforcement of the decree will be greater than that which would result to shippers from its suspension. Interstate Commerce Commission v. Southern Pac. Co., (1904) 137 Fed. 606.

New section added.—See Act of June 29, 1906, ch. 3591, sec. 6, 34 Stat. L. 592, 1909 Supp. Fed. Stat. Annot. 271.

Telegrams sent by commission.—Substantial compliance with the requirements of the Comptroller of the Treasury that the original telegrams relating to the business of the Interstate Commerce Commission, or copies thereof, or certificates that such telegrams are of a confidential nature, shall accompany telegraph vouchers for which credit is asked, is made by an order of the commission, filed by the secretary with his accounts, which directs him to disregard such requirements as to copies of telegrams, and declares that such messages are so far confidential as to justify the refusal to disclose their contents, and that the requirement for their production is unreasonable and against public interest. U. S. v. Moseley, (1902) 187 U. S. 322, 23 S. Ct. 90, 47 U. S. (L. ed.) 198.

Amendment.—This section was amended by Act of June 29, 1906, ch. 3591, sec. 7, 34 Stat. L. 593, 1909 Supp. Fed. Stat. Annot. 271.

Attendance and testimony of witnesses.—See under this title, vol. 3, p. 838, sec. 12.

Vol. III, p. 851, sec. 22.

Jurisdiction.—The common-law right of a shipper to recover in excess of charges paid to a carrier for an interstate shipment is not within the exclusive jurisdiction of the federal courts, but may be enforced in a state court. H. L. Halliday Milling Co. v. Louisiana, etc., R. Co., (1906) 80 Ark. 536, 98 S. W. 374; Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Lena Lumber Co., (Ark. 1911) 137 S. W. 562; *Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Effect of reservation of existing remedies.—The clause in this section reserving existing common-law or statutory remedies cannot be construed as continuing in shippers a common-law right, the continued existence of which would be absolutely inconsistent with the provisions of this Act. In other words, the Act cannot be held to destroy itself. The clause is concerned alone with rights recognized in or duties imposed by the Act, and the manifest purpose of the provision in question was to make plain the intention that any specific remedy given by the Act should be regarded as cumulative, when other appropriate common-law or statutory remedies existed for the redress of the particular grievance or wrong dealt with in the Act. Texas, etc., R. Co. v. Abilene Cotton Oil Co., (1907) 204 U. S. 426, 27 S. Ct. 350, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 553.

Equity jurisdiction.—The provision of section 1 of the federal judiciary acts of 1887 and 1888 (Act March 3, 1887, ch. 373, 24 Stat. L. 552, and Act Aug. 13, 1888, ch. 866, 25 Stat. L. 433), relating to the Circuit and District Courts, that "no suit shall be brought in either of said courts against any person by any original process or proceeding in any other district than that whereof he is an inhabitant," does not apply to suits of which such courts are given exclusive jurisdiction; and a suit to enjoin railroad companies from establishing and enforcing unreasonable rates in violation of the Interstate Commerce Act is of such character and may be maintained in any district in which the defendants can be found. Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Pacific Coast Lumber Manufacturers' Assoc., (C. C. A. 1908) 165 Fed. 1; Union Pac.

R. Co. v. Oregon, etc., Lumber Manufacturers' Assoc., (C. C. A. 1908) 165 Fed. 13.

Under this section a Circuit Court of the United States has jurisdiction of a suit to enjoin railroad companies from filing or enforcing a proposed new schedule of rates alleged to be unjust and unreasonable by the Interstate Commerce Commission, where it is shown that their enforcement would result in irreparable injury to the complainants. Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Pacific Coast Lumber Manufacturers' Assoc., (1908) 165 Fed. 1, 91 C. C. A. 39; Union Pac. R. Co. v. Oregon, etc., Lumber Manufacturers' Assoc., (1908) 165 Fed. 13, 91 C. C. A. 51.

As to the right to enjoin an established rate as unreasonable, see infra, this title, p. 1204, 1909 Supp., p. 265, sec. 4, Effect upon power of courts to pass upon reasonableness of rates.

A complaint for the recovery of an excess over reasonable charges paid to a carrier for an interstate shipment, which is good as stating a common-law cause of action, is not rendered bad by the Interstate Commerce Act, dealing with the subject of reasonable and just rates, in view of the provision in this section that nothing therein contained shall in any way abridge or alter the remedies now existing at common law or by statute, but the provisions of the Act are in addition to such remedies. H. L. Halliday Milling Co. v. Louisiana, etc., R. Co., (1906) 80 Ark. 536, 98 S. W. 374.

Compelling carrier to receive and transport goods.—A suit to compel an interstate carrier to receive and transport property tendered for shipment is one to enforce performance of a duty imposed by general law, and within the jurisdiction of the courts, and the complainant is not required to resort in the first instance to the Interstate Commerce Commission. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. F. W. Cook Brewing Co., (C. C. A. 1909) 172 Fed. 117.

Express franks.—The issuing of franks by an express company to officers, agents, attorneys, or employees of itself or other express companies or railroad companies, or to the families of such persons, upon which property is transported from one state to another free of charge, relates to interstate commerce, which it is within the constitutional power of Congress to regulate, and is within the prohibitions of the Interstate Commerce Act and its amendments against discrimination, undue preference, and departure from the published schedule of rates, and is unlawful. Such gratuitous carriage is not within the exceptions made in section 22, which by their terms are restricted to certain classes of passengers carried by railroads and property carried for certain classes of shippers and for stated purposes. U. S. v. Wells-Fargo Express Co., (1908) 161 Fed. 607, affirmed (1909) 212 U. S. 522, 29 S. Ct. 315, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 635.

Reduction of freight on machinery used in making irrigation ditches.—This Act is not violated by a reduction in freight rates, authorized by section 22, on material and machinery used by the United States, or by parties contracting with them, for work upon irrigation systems under construction in the arid regions of the West, provided the government receives the whole benefit of the reduced rate or concession; but it is violated if the contractor receives any portion of such benefit. (1905) 25 Op. Atty-Gen. 408.

Reclamation service employees.—There is no provision in the Act to regulate commerce or in its various amendments, which justifies the granting of reduced rates by railroads to employees of the Reclamation Service and dependent members of their families and servants accompanying them, and laborers destined for work in that service. (1906) 26 Op. Atty-Gen. 47.

Vol. III, p. 852, sec. 24.

New section added.—See Act of June 29, 1906, ch. 3591, sec. 8, 34 Stat. L. 595, 1909 Supp. Fed. Stat. Annot. 275.

Vol. III, p. 852, sec. 10.

Necessity for previous determination by commission.—The courts cannot, under the guise of exerting judicial power, usurp merely administrative functions by setting aside an order of the Interstate Commerce Commission within the scope of the power delegated to such commission, upon the ground that such power was unwisely or inexpediently exercised. Interstate Commerce Commission v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., (1910) 215 U. S. 452, 30 S. Ct. 155, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 280.

Cumulative remedies.—An action in a federal court for a mandamus, under this section, does not preclude the relator or others from proceedings in respect to the same matter by petition to the Interstate Commerce Commission under section 13 of the original Act, and the court in the mandamus suit is without power on an ancillary bill to enjoin such proceeding. Merchants' Coal Co. v.

Fairmont Coal Co., (C. C. A. 1909) 160 Fed. 769.

Effect of judgment as bar to subsequent proceedings.—The judgment of a federal court in a mandamus suit brought by a coal company operating mines on the lines of a railroad against the railroad company to compel a fair distribution of cars, upon an allegation of discrimination in violation of the interstate commerce law, does not inure to the benefit of any other operator not a party to the suit nor bar an independent suit or proceeding by such operator on its own behalf in court or before the Interstate Commerce Commission to secure similar relief; nor is it estopped to maintain such independent suit or proceeding by the fact that it aided the relator in the prior suit or contributed to the expense thereof. Merchants' Coal Co. v. Fairmont Coal Co., (C. C. A. 1908) 160 Fed. 769.

Vol. III, p. 853. [Intoxicating liquors shipped in original packages subject to state laws.]

Object of statute.—This Act removed all limitations upon the powers of the states to regulate or prohibit all sales, contracts, and other acts and transactions relating to intoxicating liquors, occurring wholly within their territorial jurisdictions. State v. Spence, (1910) 127 La. 336, 53 So. 596; State v. Miller, (1909) 66 W. Va. 436, 66 S. E. 522.

Prohibition of advertising of intoxicating liquors.—Since the passage of this Act a state may lawfully prohibit the advertising within the state of intoxicating liquors sold or kept for sale without the state. State v. J. P. Bass Pub. Co., (1908) 104 Me 288, 71 Atl. 895; State v. State Capital Co., (1909) 24 Okla. 252, 103 Pac. 1021.

No new powers conferred on states.—This Act does not authorize the enactment by a state of a law restricting the right of an interstate carrier to deliver the imported package to its consignee. Crescent Liquor Co. v. Platt, (1906) 148 Fed. 894.

Municipal license law.—A city ordinance imposing a license tax on dealers in beer was held to be one enacted in the exercise of the police power conferred on the city by its charter, and by virtue of this Act was not invalid as in violation of the interstate commerce clause of the Federal Constitution as applied to the sale of beer in the bottles in which it was brought from other states. Meyer v. Mobile, (1906) 147 Fed. 843.

Importer can sell only on terms prescribed by local statute.—New Iberia v. Erath, (1907) 118 La. 305, 42 So. 845.

State laws.—Under the provisions of this Act a statute which, in aid of a police regulation prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors within a state, or any portion thereof, prohibits the solicitation of orders, is not, for the reason that such statute conflicts with the power of Congress to regulate and control interstate commerce, void as to orders solicited in said state, although the seller and the liquor to be sold may both be in another state, because such regulation in no wise encroaches upon the power of Congress to control interstate commerce. The exercise of such state regulation, so far from being in conflict with the power of Congress to regulate interstate commerce, is expressly allowed by this Act. Rose v. State, (1908) 4 Ga. App. 588, 62 S. E. 117.

A license tax imposed under municipal ordinance upon those engaged in selling beer in the city by the barrel, half barrel, or quarter barrel, must be regarded, even when applied to interstate transactions in the original packages, as an exercise of the police power permitted by the Wilson Act, subjecting intoxicating liquors arriving in a state to the laws of such state enacted in the exercise of its police power, although the city may derive more or less revenue from the ordinance in question. Phillips v. Mobile, (1908) 208 U. S. 472, 28 S. Ct. 370, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 578.

A state statute prohibiting a carrier from carrying intoxicating liquors into any county or district therein where the sale of such liquors is prohibited by law, as applied to shipments from other states, is void as an attempted regulation of interstate commerce, and affords no justification for the refusal of a railroad company, although a corporation of such state, to receive and carry such shipments. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. F. W. Cook Brewing Co., (C. C. A. 1909) 172 Fed. 117, affirmed 222 U. S.

When state law becomes operative. — The federal Supreme Court in its decision in Heyman v. Southern R. Co., 203 U. S. 270, 27 S. Ct. 104, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 178, announced Dec. 3, 1906, has authoritatively settled the following doctrines: (a) Prior to the Wilson Act, in case of interstate shipment of intoxicating liquors, delivery and sale in the original package was necessary to terminate interstate commerce, so far as the police regulations of the states were concerned. (b) The Wilson Act did not delegate to the states the right to forbid the transportation of merchandise from one state to another, but "it merely provided in the case of intoxicating liquors that such merchandise, when transported from one state to another, should lose its character as interstate commerce upon completion of delivery under the contract of interstate shipment, and before sale in the original package." (c) The state statute must permit the delivery of the liquors to the party to whom they were consigned within the state, but after such delivery the state has power to prevent the sale of the liquors, even in the original package. (d) The question of whether the liability of the carrier, as such, has ceased, under the state laws, and has become that of a warehouseman, is immaterial. (e) But the court reserved its opinion upon the question whether, if the consignee, after notice and full opportunity to receive the liquors, designedly leaves them in the hands of the carrier for an unreasonable time, they should not be held to have come under the provisions of the Wilson Act, because constructively delivered.

Under the authority of the decision of the federal Supreme Court in the Heyman case, supra, the Supreme Judicial Court of Maine overruled its decision in State v. Intoxicating Liquors, (1901) 95 Me. 140, 49 Atl. 670, cited in the original note, and held that intoxicating liquors transported from another state to Maine by a common carrier are not subject to seizure by virtue of the provisions of the prohibitory liquor statute of that state until there has been a delivery to the consignee. State v. Intoxicating Liquors, (1907) 102 Me. 385, 67 Atl. 312. See also American Express Co. v. Iowa, (1905) 196 U. S. 133, 25 S. Ct. 182, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 417; Danciger v. Stone, (1909) 187 Fed. 853; Crigler v. Com., (1905) 120 Ky. 512, 87 S. W. 276; State v. Eighteen Casks Beer, (1909) 24 Okla. 786, 104 Pac. 1093.

But where a person went outside the state and purchased intoxicating liquors and brought them into the state himself, it was held that the state law did not operate until he had reached his destination. Hudson v. State, (1909) 2 Okla. Crim. 176, 101 Pac. 275. And in High v. State, (1909) 2 Okla. Crim. 161, 101 Pac. 115, it was held that carrying or conveying intoxicating liquors from the railroad station to the home of the consignee is a part of the interstate commerce transportation, when they were shipped from another state, and is not a violation of a constitutional clause making the conveyance of such liquors from one place within a state to another place therein an offense.

The agreement of the local agent of an express company to hold for a few days a C. O. D. interstate shipment of intoxicating liquors, to suit the convenience of the consignee in paying for such liquor and taking it away, does not destroy the character of the transaction as interstate commerce, so as to render the express company amenable to prosecution for violating a state local option law. Adams Express Co. v. Kentucky, (1907) 208 U. S. 129, 27 S. Ct. 606, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 987.

Sales made outside a state by mail. — This Act does not affect the question of a sale in one state, completed by delivery in that state of the liquor to a common carrier to transport to another state to the person who ordered it from there by mail, being within the protection of the interstate commerce clause of the Constitution, as against the law of the state in which the sale was made, making it an offense to sell intoxicating liquor. State v. Kelly, (1911) 123 Tenn. 556, 133 S. W. 1011.

Sales of traveling salesmen. — To the same effect as the original note, see Moog v. State, (1906) 145 Ala. 75, 41 So. 166.

But in Delamater v. South Dakota, (1907) 205 U. S. 97, 27 S. Ct. 447, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 724, it was held that the annual license charge imposed by a state law upon the business of selling or offering for sale intoxicating liquors within the state by any traveling salesman who solicits orders in quantities of less than five gallons cannot be regarded, when applied to interstate transactions, as repugnant to the commerce clause of the Federal Constitution, in view of the provisions of the Wilson Act that intoxicating liquors coming into the state shall be as completely under its control as if manufactured therein.

Inspection laws.—Interstate commerce in intoxicating liquors is not unlawfully burdened by an inspection law enacted by a state "in the exercise of its police powers," because the statute does not provide for an adequate inspection, and imposes a burden beyond the cost of inspection. Pabst Brewing Co. v. Crenshaw, (1905) 198 U. S. 17, 25 S. Ct. 552, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 925.

Neither is such an inspection law void because it operates to deter shipments into the state. Pabst Brewing Co. v. Crenshaw, (1905) 198 U. S. 17, 25 S. Ct. 552, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 925.

A state statute imposing an inspection fee upon beer or other malt liquor shipped from other states into that state, and held there for sale and consumption therein, must, although producing a revenue, and not providing for an adequate inspection, be deemed enacted by the state "in the exercise of its police powers," within the meaning of the Wilson Act, where the highest state court has upheld as a valid police regulation so much of the statute as imposes the same fee on beer of domestic manufacture over the objection that it is a revenue measure, and not an inspection law. Pabst Brewing Co. v. Crenshaw, (1905) 198 U. S. 17, 25 S. Ct. 552, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 925. See also Delamater v. South Dakota, (1907) 205 U. S. 93, 27 S. Ct. 447, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 724.

Taxation on bar of vessel.—In Harrell v. Speed, (1904) 113 Tenn. 224, 81 S. W. 840, affirmed (1905) 199 U. S. 517, 26 S. Ct. 138, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 288, it appeared that a Tennessee statute (Act Tenn. 1903, p. 615, ch. 357, sec. 4) provided that persons selling any quantity of liquor on any vessel should pay a specified tax. It was held that one running a bar on a vessel belonging to a corporation of Arkansas and plying between a port in Arkansas and one in Tennessee—the one running the bar acting under a lease from the corporation—was subject to the license tax imposed by the statute for running the bar while the vessel was at its landing within the jurisdiction of Tennessee.

Vol. III, p. 855. [Self-incriminating disclosures by witnesses in proceedings, etc.]

Constitutionality.—The immunity extended by this Act from prosecution or forfeiture of estate because of testimony given in pursuance of the requirements of the law satisfies the guaranty of the Fifth Amendment of the Federal Constitution against compelling witnesses to furnish evidence against themselves. Interstate Commerce Commission v. Baird, (1904) 194 U. S. 25, 24 S. Ct. 563, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 860; U. S. v. Swift, (1911) 186 Fed. 1002.

Offenses committed after testimony given.—This Act is not intended to be, and cannot be made, a shield against prosecution for offenses committed after the testimony is given or the evidence furnished, since a person cannot be said to have been a witness against himself in respect to an offense which had not been committed when the testimony was given. U. S. v. Swift, (1911) 186 Fed. 1002.

Compulsory production of documentary evidence.—The compulsory production of documentary evidence in a proceeding before the Interstate Commerce Commission on a complaint alleging violations by railroad companies of the Act of Feb. 4, 1887, to regulate commerce, does not infringe the immunity from unreasonable searches and seizures guaranteed by the Fifth Amendment to the Federal Constitution, since that Act, as amended by the Act of Feb. 11, 1893, expressly extends immunity from prosecution or forfeiture of estate because of testimony given in pursuance of the requirements of the law. Interstate Commerce Commission v. Baird, (1904) 194 U. S. 25, 24 S. Ct. 563, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 860.

Corporations.—A corporation, whether state or federal, cannot claim immunity from prosecution for violation of the interstate commerce laws of the United States because of testimony given or evidence produced by its officers or agents before the Interstate Commerce Commission or the Commissioner of Corporations, or any proceeding, suit, or prosecution under such laws, the right to immunity on account of evidence so given in the several cases granted by this Act being limited to individuals who as witnesses give testimony or produce evidence. U. S. v. Armour, (1906) 142 Fed. 808.

Vol. X, p. 170, sec. 1. [Interstate commerce regulations — corporation common carriers liable for violating.]

Amendment.—This Act was amended by Act of June 29, 1906, ch. 3591, sec. 2, 34 Stat. L. 587, 1909 Supp. Fed. Stat. Annot. 262.

Due process of law is not denied by the provisions of this Act, under which the commission by corporate officers, acting within the scope of their employment, of criminal violations of the prohibitions of the Act against giving rebates, is imputed to the corporation, and the corporation is subjected to criminal prosecution therefor. New York Cent., etc., R. Co. v. U. S., (1909) 212 U. S. 481, 29 S. Ct. 304, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 613.

Possible invalidity in part.—The possible invalidity as to individual carriers of the provisions of this Act, imputing to the carrier the acts, omissions, or failures of the officers and agents of such carrier, acting within the scope of their employment, does not affect the validity of so much of that Act as imputes to corporate carriers the commission by officers and agents of such carriers, acting within the scope of their employment, of criminal violations of the prohibitions of that Act against giving rebates. New York Cent., etc., R. Co. v. U. S., (1909) 212 U. S. 481, 29 S. Ct. 304, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 613.

[Penalty for failing to file tariffs, etc. — giving rebates, etc.]

Constitutionality. — This Act is not unconstitutional as in violation of the Fifth Amendment because it subjects a shipper to criminal prosecution for accepting a concession from a rate published and filed without permitting him as a defense to show that the established rate was extortionate and unreasonable, and that the rate paid was reasonable. U. S. v. Vacuum Oil Co., (1908) 158 Fed. 536.

The mere incidental effect upon exports which may be produced by applying to a shipment from an interior point of the United States to a foreign port the provisions of this Act making it an offense against the United States to obtain the transportation of property in interstate or foreign commerce at less than the carrier's published rates, does not render such provisions repugnant to U. S. Const., art. 1, sec. 9, par. 5, forbidding the levying of export taxes or duties. Armour Packing Co. v. U. S., (1908) 209 U. S. 56, 28 S. Ct. 428, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 680.

Due process of law. — This Act was not unconstitutional as depriving shippers or carriers of property rights without due process of law. U. S. v. Great Northern R. Co., (1907) 157 Fed. 288.

Preference is not given to the ports of one state over those of another by applying to articles intended for foreign export, the provisions of this Act making it an offense against the United States to accept transportation of goods in interstate or foreign commerce at less than the carrier's published rates. Armour Packing Co. v. U. S., (1908) 209 U. S. 56, 28 S. Ct. 428, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 680.

Effect of repeal. — This Act has been held to be in full force as to offenses created thereby committed prior to the time it was superseded by the Hepburn Act (Act June 29, 1906, ch. 3591, 34 Stat. L. 584). U. S. v. Great Northern R. Co., (1907) 157 Fed. 288.

Purpose of Act. — The purpose of Congress in the enactment of this Act was to secure uniform freight rates to all shippers, and its provisions are violated by the giving or receiving of any rebate or concession whereby any property shall be transported at a less rate, by any interstate carrier, than that named in the tariffs published and filed by such carrier, whether by direct agreement between shipper and carrier, or indirectly by "any device whatever;" and where a railroad company has published shipments to points beyond its own line, said section applies to such rates equally with those between points on its own road. U. S. v. Standard Oil Co., (1907) 148 Fed. 719.

Scope of statute. — This Act is not restricted in its provisions to departures from an established tariff rate, but is violated if any other advantage is given to a shipper whereby a discrimination is practiced. U. S. v. Vacuum Oil Co., (1907) 153 Fed. 598.

Construction of statute. — This section describes three separate and distinct correlative offenses on the part each of carrier and shipper, to wit: The offering or soliciting of a rebate, concession, or discrimination; the granting or accepting of a rebate, concession, or discrimination; and the giving or receiving of a rebate, concession, or discrimination. U. S. v. Bunch, (1908) 165 Fed. 736.

In considering the sufficiency of an indictment for receiving an unjust discrimination in rates from a carrier on an interstate shipment of property, in violation of Interstate Commerce Act Feb. 4, 1887, ch. 104, 24 Stat. L. 379, 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 809, as supplemented by this Act, any doubts as to the correct construction of the statute should be resolved in favor of the evident intention of Congress that equality among shippers should be maintained, and unjust discrimination and favoritism of all kinds condemned, leaving the question whether the existing conditions justified the difference in rates charged to be determined as one of fact on the trial. U. S. v. Vacuum Oil Co., (1907) 153 Fed. 598.

Size of shipment. — The gist of the offense under this Act was the receipt of a concession, irrespective of whether the property involved was train loads, carloads, or pounds, and consisted of the "transaction," which was not completed until the shipper received a rate different from the established rate, without reference to the size of the shipment. Standard Oil Co. v. U. S., (1908) 164 Fed. 376, 90 C. C. A. 364.

Intent. — In a prosecution of an interstate carrier for giving a rebate on an interstate shipment of lime, constituting a departure from the established published rate, the intent of the carrier is of the essence of the offense. Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. U. S., (1909) 170 Fed. 250, 95 C. C. A. 446.

Wilfulness. — A departure from an established and published interstate freight rate by a carrier in order to constitute a crime denounced by the Elkins Act must be wilful. Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. U. S., (1909) 170 Fed. 250, 95 C. C. A. 446.

The use of the word "wilful" in this Act, to characterize offenses thereunder, conceding it to apply to the granting of rebates from the published schedule rates, does not require that there should have been an evil intent to constitute the offense, but it is sufficient if the act was done knowingly and purposely. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. U. S., (1908) 162 Fed. 835, 90 C. C. A. 211.

Good faith.—Intentionally accepting transportation of goods in interstate or foreign commerce at less than the carrier's published rates, which is forbidden by this Act, is sufficient to sustain a conviction under the Act, although such action may have been taken in good faith, under a claim of legal right. Armour Packing Co. v. U. S., (1908) 209 U. S. 56, 28 S. Ct. 428, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 680.

Elements of offense.—To warrant a conviction of a shipper for receiving rebates in violation of section 1, the fact of the payment of such rebate by or on behalf of the carrier, and its receipts by or on behalf of defendant, must be proved, and each payment constitutes but one offense, although it may cover more than one shipment. U. S. v. Bunch, (1908) 165 Fed. 736.

When offense complete.—The offense of giving rebates in violation of the Elkins Act is complete when the carrier, to whom the shipper has paid the full legal rate, pays over to the shipper, upon a claim presented by him, the amount of the rebate stipulated in the agreement under which the shipment was made. New York Cent., etc., R. Co. v. U. S., (1909) 212 U. S. 481, 29 S. Ct. 304, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 613.

Foreign shipments.—Shipments under a through bill of lading from an interior point in the United States to a foreign port are embraced in the provisions of this Act. Armour Packing Co. v. U. S., (1908) 209 U. S. 56, 28 S. Ct. 428, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 680.

Necessity for secret or fraudulent device.—A device or contrivance, secret or fraudulent in its nature, is not essential to sustain the conviction of a shipper for violating this Act. Armour Packing Co. v. U. S., (1908) 209 U. S. 56, 28 S. Ct. 428, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 680.

Rebates received by consignee.—A consignee, no less than the consignor, is chargeable with a violation of this section by receiving rebates or concessions from the published tariffs of an interstate carrier through the cancellation of terminal charges at the point of destination which form a part of the tariffs as so published. U. S. v. Standard Oil Co., (1907) 148 Fed. 719.

Rebate given by intrastate railroad.—The fact that a concession from the published and filed through rate on an interstate shipment over the lines of a connecting carrier was given entirely by the initial carrier for transportation over its own line wholly within one state does not relieve the shipper receiving such concession from liability to prosecution therefor. U. S. v. Vacuum Oil Co., (1908) 158 Fed. 536.

Private car companies.—A private car company which delivers its cars to railroad companies to be furnished indiscriminately for the use of shippers, receiving pay for such use from the railroad companies on a mileage basis, is within the provision of this section, and the giving by such a car company of any rebate or allowance to a shipper using its cars, whereby he secures the transportation of his property at a less rate than that named in the published tariff of the carrier for transportation of such property in its own cars, although from its own funds and without the connivance or knowledge of the carrier, is a violation of the statute. Such a car company is therefore subject to the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission, charged with the duty of enforcing the statute and having power to inquire into the operations of any agency of transportation which may so conduct its business as to destroy uniformity of rates. Interstate Commerce Commission v. Reichmann, (1906) 145 Fed. 235.

In U. S. v. Milwaukee Refrigerator Transit Co., (1906) 145 Fed. 1007, it appeared that a refrigerator company was incorporated to own and operate a private car line, and to have charge of all the interstate transportation of the product of a brewing company. A majority of the brewing company's stock, however, was owned by persons who had no interest in the refrigerator company, and the stock of the latter was bought and paid for by the holders with their own money and in their own interest, none of it being held for the brewing company, though the majority of it was owned by persons who also owned brewing company stock. The brewing company paid its freights in full and received no rebates, nor was it a party to contracts between the refrigerator company and the railroad companies by which the refrigerator company received a rebate of from one-eighth to one-tenth of all freight moneys on all interstate traffic it controlled. It was held that such facts were insufficient to establish that the brewing company had received rebates.

Necessity for knowledge of rate by shipper.—A shipper cannot be convicted of accepting a concession from the lawfully published rate without proof of knowledge of what such rate in fact was, and hence evidence that the shipper had no knowledge of the published rate, and could only have ascertained the same by construction of several tariff sheets, the application of which was questionable, was held to be admissible. Standard Oil Co. v. U. S., (1908) 164 Fed. 376, 90 C. C. A. 364.

Retrospective operation.—The payment of a rebate after the passage of this Act, but upon shipments of property transported prior to its enactment, is comprehended by its provisions that it shall be unlawful to offer, grant, or give, or to solicit, accept, or receive, any rebate in respect to property in interstate commerce transportation, whereby any such property shall be transported at less than the published rates. New York Cent., etc., R. Co. v. U. S., (1909) 212 U. S. 500, 29 S. Ct. 309, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 624.

Common arrangement.—A carrier by water which has not joined in a tariff and division sheet filed and published by connecting railroad carriers for the through carriage of interstate shipments between two points does not become a party to a "common arrangement" for the carriage of such a shipment within the meaning of the Elkins Act, by accepting and carrying the same under a through bill of lading issued by the initial railroad carrier stating the published tariff rate and the division of the charges in accordance therewith, nor by receiving its divisional part of such rate, where it has pre-viciously privately contracted with the shipper to "protect" a lower through rate, pursuant to which contract the shipment was made, and its return to the shipper of a part of its divisional share of the freight, in fulfillment of the contract, is not the "giving of a rebate" in violation of this Act. Camden Iron Works v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1908) 158 Fed. 561; Mutual Transit Co. v. U. S., (1910) 178 Fed. 664, 102 C. C. A. 164.

Refund of elevator charges.—A railroad company whose published schedule rate for the carriage of oats in interstate shipment from Minneapolis to Duluth or Superior was five cents per one hundred pounds, and which received payment from a shipper at such rate, but, on shipments intended for through transportation over the lakes, later refunded to the shipper the elevator charges for transferring the grain from its cars to vessels after the termination of its own carriage, amounting to one-half cent per bushel, was held to be guilty of granting a rebate or concession from the published schedule rate, in violation of the Elkins Act, and it was held to be no defense to a prosecution therefor that competing roads granted a like concession, and that it was compelled to do the same in order to secure its fair share of the business, or that it treated all shippers alike, or that the concession was made by its officers in good faith and in the honest belief that it was lawful. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. U. S., (1908) 162 Fed. 835, 90 C. C. A. 211.

Receiving rebate from joint rate.—This section makes it unlawful for a carrier to grant a rebate from a joint tariff rate which it has filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission, or published, or in which it participates when filed or published by another carrier, but it does not make it a criminal offense to receive a rebate from a joint rate unless such rate has been both filed and published. U. S. v. Wood, (1906) 145 Fed. 405.

"By any device whatever."—Under the provisions in this section prohibiting the giving or receiving of rebates in respect to the transportation of any property in interstate or foreign commerce "by any device whatever" it was unlawful for a corporation organized to control the interstate transportation of a brewing company to demand and receive as a consideration for the routing of the brewing company's products over certain lines of railroad a concession equal to one-eighth or one-tenth of the published freight rates. U. S. v. Milwaukee Refrigerator Transit Co., (1906) 145 Fed. 1007.

Liability of stockholder.—The fact alone that a person is a stockholder in a corporation which has accepted rebates in violation of law does not render him subject to the penalty imposed by the statute therefor. U. S. v. Wood, (1906) 145 Fed. 405.

Liability of shipper not receiving the benefit of the rebate.—The fact that a shipper who contracts for and receives a rebate in violation of the statute personally receives no benefit therefrom, but turns the same over without consideration to another, does not relieve him from criminal liability. U. S. v. Wood, (1906) 145 Fed. 405.

Shipments beginning and terminating in same state but passing through other states.—A shipment from New York city to Buffalo, by way of New Jersey and Pennsylvania, is interstate commerce, and so is subject to the provisions of this Act. U. S. v. Delaware, etc., R. Co., (1907) 152 Fed. 269.

Necessity for express agreement.—When a carrier unites with another or others in making a rate for interstate or foreign shipments, and a through bill is issued therefor, it is subject to the Interstate Commerce Act. An express agreement for the through rate is not required, but the successive receipt and forwarding in the ordinary course of business by two or more carriers under through bills, or any arrangement for a continuous carriage, constitutes assent to such common arrangement, and makes the carrier a party to the contract, within the meaning of the Act. U. S. v. Wood, (1906) 145 Fed. 405.

Departure from published through rate—shipments over different route.—An initial carrier which has become a party to a joint through rate for the transportation of property over its own and connecting lines between two points in different states, which rate has been filed and published as required by this Act, cannot lawfully transport property between such points at a less and unpublished rate over another route and with different connections. U. S. v. Vacuum Oil Co., (1907) 153 Fed. 598.

Refund for use of private tracks.—Private tracks built by the owner of a packing plant on its own property, extending from a connection with the tracks of a belt line railroad company to and around its buildings, and used in loading cars for shipment, are not a part of the railroad system, but plant facilities, and the refunding by a railroad company, which made and published a schedule of through rates, including the belt line charge of one dollar per car to such packing company on shipments made by it and paid for at the schedule rate, on the ground that it was a payment for the use of such private tracks, thus making the rate charged one dollar per car less than that published and charged to shippers generally from the same point, was held to constitute the giving of a rebate, in violation of this section. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1907) 156 Fed. 558.

Carriers by water.—Broadly speaking, this Act is not applicable to carriers by water, and such a carrier does not become subject to the Act in respect to an interstate shipment in part over its line and in part over connecting railroad lines, unless, as provided in this section, it was "under a common control, management, or arrangement" with the railroad carriers for the continuous carriage of such shipment. Mutual Transit Co. v. U. S., (1910) 178 Fed. 664, 102 C. C. A. 164.

Accepting aggregate of local rates as through rate.—In U. S. v. Great Northern R. Co., (1907) 157 Fed. 288, it was held that a carrier which accepts and carries an interstate shipment on a through bill of lading, openly charging the sum of the published local rates between the points named therein, thereby creates a through rate and accepts the published aggregate as the lawful through charge; and that any rebate given therefrom was a violation of the Elkins Act.

Agreements made prior to passage of statute.—A railroad company subject to the interstate commerce laws, which paid rebates to a shipper in 1904, was subject to prosecution therefor under the Elkins Act, although the agreement therefor was made before the passage of such Act. Such agreement was unlawful and unenforceable under the original interstate commerce law, and the rebates cannot be said to have been "given" within the meaning of the Elkins Act until their actual payment; and as so construed the Act as applied to such a case is not an ex post facto law. U. S. v. Great Northern R. Co., (1907) 157 Fed. 288.

Joinder of defendants.—Both the corporation and its agents may be joined in an indictment for violating the provisions of this Act. New York Cent., etc., R. Co. v. U. S., (1909) 212 U. S. 481, 29 S. Ct. 304, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 613.

Contract fixing former rate as defense.—A shipper is guilty of accepting transportation at less than the carrier's published rates where, after the carrier has duly established a higher rate, he secures such transportation at the rate agreed upon in a prior contract with the carrier, which was the legal, published, and filed rate when the contract was made, since the statute, being then in force, is read into such contract, and becomes a part of it. Armour Packing Co. v. U. S., (1908) 209 U. S. 56, 28 S. Ct. 428, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 680.

Questions for jury.—On the trial of indictments against a railroad company for granting concessions to a shipper in respect to interstate shipments in violation of this section and for failing to observe its published tariff rates with regard to demurrage charges, the questions whether defendant had made a settlement with the shipper as to such demurrage, and whether, if so, the cancellation of the charges was a valid settlement of a disputed claim or for the purpose of making a concession in violation of the law, were held to be questions of fact for the jury. U. S. v. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co., (1910) 184 Fed. 543.

Excessive sentence.—In Standard Oil Co. v. U. S., (1908) 164 Fed. 376, 90 C. C. A. 364, it appeared that the defendant, Standard Oil Company of Indiana, was found guilty on 1,462 counts of an indictment for receiving concessions from a railroad company on shipments of oil, in violation of this section. The defendant's capital stock was one million dollars, and there was no evidence that its assets were in excess of that sum, nor did it appear that the defendant had ever before been guilty of a similar offense. A majority of defendant's capital stock was owned by the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey, which was no party to the prosecution, whose capital stock was one hundred million dollars. This corporation was a holding company, and its net earnings for the period during which the concessions were received the court investigated before passing sentence. It was held that the assessment of the fine of $29,240,000, which was the maximum punishment on each count, based on a finding that such amount was less than one-third of the net revenues of the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey during the period of violation, the effect of which would be to bankrupt the defendant, was excessive, and an abuse of discretion.

Number of offenses.—In a prosecution against a shipper for receiving concessions from the published rates of a railroad company in violation of this Act, which involves continuous shipments covering a number of years, there can be no greater number of offenses than there were payments of freight in which concessions were granted and received, such receipt being the completion of the transaction which constitutes the offense. U. S. v. Standard Oil Co., (1909) 170 Fed. 988.

Under this section, which makes it unlawful for a shipper to receive "any concession" from the published and filed rate for the interstate transportation of property, where the published rates relate to transportation in carload lots and the shipments are so made, concessions received and accepted on such shipments were upon the property transported, and not upon the conceded rate, and each shipment on which a concession was given constitutes a separate offense. U. S. v. Vacuum Oil Co., (1908) 158 Fed. 536.

Indictment.—An indictment charging a shipper with securing transportation of goods in interstate or foreign commerce at less than the carrier's published rates, in violation of this Act is sufficient where it charges each and all of the elements of the offense, with allegations of time, place, kind of goods, and name of carrier, averring the fixing of the published rate, the changing of the rate, and the new publication, the shipper's knowledge of this change, and the carriage of the goods over a described route at a concession of the difference between the two rates. Armour Packing Co. v. U. S., (1908) 209 U. S. 56, 28 S. Ct. 428, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 681.

An indictment against a railroad company for granting rebates in violation of the Elkins Act need not set out a particular description of the device resorted to, but is sufficient where it avers the kind of property shipped, the time and place, when and where shipped, the consignee, the existing legal tariff for such shipment, the payment thereof by the shipper, the subsequent payment of the rebate by the carrier to the shipper, and the time and amount of such payment. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. U. S., (1908) 162 Fed. 835, 90 C. C. A. 211.

An indictment of a shipper for receiving rebates or concessions in violation of the Elkins Act, which charges that defendant received a concession from such rates on a specified shipment, is sufficiently specific and need not specifically charge the actual payment of the unlawful lower rate, which is a matter of proof. Standard Oil Co. v. U. S., (1910) 179 Fed. 614, 103 C. C. A. 172.

In Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. U. S., (1909) 170 Fed. 250, 95 C. C. A. 446, it was held that an indictment alleging that the established and published rate per car for bulk lime between two points was seventy dollars per car of 40,000 pounds minimum, and that the defendant charged and received for a specified car the sum of $64.75, and no more, sufficiently charged that defendant granted a "concession" prohibited by the statute, though the counts did not use the word "concession" to describe the alleged rebate.

An indictment for violation of this section for giving or receiving rebates need not allege that the carrier's published rate was a reasonable rate, nor set out its tariffs in full, it being sufficient to aver that a certain named rate was in force between designated points as shown by the published tariffs. U. S. v. Standard Oil Co., (1907) 148 Fed. 719.

For other cases dealing with the sufficiency of an indictment for violation of this section, see U. S. v. Standard Oil Co., (1907) 148 Fed. 719; U. S. v. Delaware, etc., R. Co., (1907) 152 Fed. 269; U. S. v. Vacuum Oil Co., (1907) 153 Fed. 598; U. S. v. Vacuum Oil Co., (1908) 158 Fed. 536; U. S. v. Standard Oil Co., (1910) 183 Fed. 223.

Duplicity.—Under the provision of this Act, making it an offense for an interstate carrier to "offer, grant, or give" rebates, where the transaction is completed, the substantive offense is the payment and receipt of the rebate; and an indictment therefor is not bad for duplicity because it also avers the offer or agreement pursuant to which the payment was made. U. S. v. Great Northern R. Co., (1907) 157 Fed. 288.

An indictment under this section alleging that the defendant offered, granted, and gave a rebate, is not duplicitous, but charges but one offense. U. S. v. Delaware, etc., R. Co., (1907) 152 Fed. 269.

Variance.—In an indictment charging a shipper with having received from a railroad company a rebate or concession in violation of this Act, whereby oil was transported for it in interstate commerce at a less rate than that named in the tariffs published and filed by the railroad company, an averment that such company established, published, and filed a rate on oil between Chicago and St. Louis of 19½ cents per hundred pounds was not sustained by proof that its schedules named only the rate over its own line from Chicago to East St. Louis at eighteen cents, and that the tariff on connecting lines between East St. Louis and St. Louis was 1½ cents. U. S. v. Standard Oil Co., (1909) 170 Fed. 888.

A tariff sheet showing an established and published rate on bulk lime between two points of $3.50 per ton in carload lots of not less than 40,000 pounds was held not to sustain an indictment against the carrier for granting a concession alleging that the established rate was $70 a car of 40,000 pounds minimum. Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. U. S., (1909) 170 Fed. 250, 95 C. C. A. 446.

Evidence.—Where, in a prosecution against a carrier for alleged rebating on shipments of bulk lime, it was shown that the regular published rate was $3.50 per ton, 40,000 pounds minimum, that the value of the lime was $3.50 a ton at the point of shipment, and that the carrier had accepted in settlement sums varying from 35 cents to $14.35 per car less than such established rate, it was held that evidence that the shipper had claimed that each of the cars had been loaded with at least the minimum amount, but that various amounts had been lost in transit, and that the carrier had not exacted freight on the amount so lost, was admissible as showing absence of the carrier's intent to grant a concession from the established freight rate. Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. U. S., (1909) 170 Fed. 250, 95 C. C. A. 446.

In Standard Oil Co. v. U. S., (1910) 179 Fed. 614, 103 C. C. A. 172, the evidence was held to be sufficient to support a verdict finding that defendant knowingly accepted concessions as a shipper from the lawful rates established by railroad companies in violation of this Act.

An indictment against a railroad company containing a number of counts, each charging the granting of a concession by defendant to a shipper in violation of this section, by failing to collect a demurrage charge fixed by its published schedule of rates on a single carload shipment, was held to be supported as to any one count by proof that at a single settlement between defendant and the shipper after all the shipments charged had been made defendant made a concession equal to the demurrage charges on all of the cars. U. S. v. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co., (1910) 184 Fed. 543.

For other cases under this paragraph, see U. S. v. Milwaukee Refrigerator Transit Co., (1905) 142 Fed. 247; U. S. v. Armour, (1906) 142 Fed. 808; Ex p. Chapman, (1907) 153 Fed. 371; Wisconsin Cent. R. Co. v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1909) 169 Fed. 76; U. S. v. Standard Sanitary Mfg. Co., (1911) 187 Fed. 232.

[Prosecutions—jurisdiction.]

Constitutionality.—The requirement that the prosecution of crimes against the United States be had in the state or district where the offense was committed, which is made by U. S. Const., Sixth Amend., is not violated by the provision of this Act, under which the offense of obtaining transportation of goods from one place to another at less than the carrier's published rates may be tried in any federal district through which such transportation was conducted. Armour Packing Co. v. U. S., (1908) 209 U. S. 56, 28 S. Ct. 428, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 681.

Failure to file rate schedule.—The offense of failing to file a rate schedule with the commission is committed in Washington, where the commission has its office, and hence must be prosecuted there. New York Cent., etc., R. Co. v. U. S., (1908) 166 Fed. 267, 92 C. C. A. 331.

[Published rates to be adhered to.]

Liability of carrier not publishing or filing schedule.—A carrier which gives rebates from a joint rate on file with the Interstate Commerce Commission may, although it did not itself publish and file the rate, be convicted of violating this Act, which, inter alia, provides that the published rate shall be conclusively deemed, in any prosecution under the Act, to be the legal rate as against the carrier who files the same or "participates in any rates so filed or published," and that any departure from such rate shall be deemed to be an offense under the Act. U. S. v. New York Cent., etc., R. Co., (1909) 212 U. S. 514, 29 S. Ct. 313, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 631.

Vol. X, p. 172, sec. 3. [Equity courts to enforce tariffs, prohibit discrimination, etc.]

Restraining rebating.—Equity has jurisdiction to grant an injunction at the instance of the United States against carriers and other corporations, restraining them from giving and receiving rebates in violation of this Act, although such acts may also constitute a crime. U. S. v. Milwaukee Refrigerator Transit Co., (1906) 145 Fed. 1007.

Prior violations.—See U. S. v. Atchison, etc., R. Co., (1905) 142 Fed. 176.

Necessity for going before commission.—This section provides a remedy in court, without going before the Interstate Commerce Commission, for any discriminations or preferences prohibited by sections 1 and 3 of the Act of Feb. 4, 1887, ch. 104, 24 Stat. L. 379, 380, 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 809, 816. Interstate Commerce Commission v. Chicago G. W. R. Co., (1905) 141 Fed. 1003, affirmed (1908) 209 U. S. 108, 28 S. Ct. 493, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 705.

Sufficiency of bill.—In U. S. v. Milwaukee Refrigerator Transit Co., (1905) 142 Fed. 247, it was held that in a suit of equity by the United States against interstate carriers and others, brought under this Act, to enjoin the giving and receiving of unlawful rebates, in which the lawfulness of payments made by the carriers depended upon the intent with which they were made and received, the bill was sufficient on its face to show the unlawful intent and illegality of the payments, where it alleged that the defendant brewing company, which was a larger shipper of beer prior to the enactment of such statute, habitually received rebates from carriers; that shortly after such enactment its officers, who were also its controlling stockholders, organized a transit company (defendant) and became its officers and the owners of practically all of its stock, and on behalf of the brewing company contracted with it to make all the shipments for the brewing company, and that the transit company contracted for shipments with such interstate carriers as would pay it from one-tenth to one-eighth of the published rate for the transportation, ostensibly as a commission for obtaining the business, but in fact, as was well known to the carrier defendants, as a rebate for the benefit of the brewing company.

Venue.—An action by certain shippers to restrain an interstate carrier from enforcing a reconsignment charge of five dollars per car, as unreasonable, though maintainable at common law, is nevertheless a suit within the Interstate Commerce Act, so that federal jurisdiction is not alone dependent on diverse citizenship, and hence it can be brought only in the district of which the defendant is an inhabitant, as provided by Judiciary Act March 3, 1887, ch. 373, sec. 1, 24 Stat. L. 552, as amended by Act Aug. 13, 1888, ch. 866, 25 Stat. L. 434, 4 Fed. Stat. Annot. 265. Sunderland v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1908) 158 Fed. 877.

Evidence.—In a case of an equivocal act which is unlawful if so intended, but not otherwise, or which is claimed to have been accidental or through mistake, evidence of unconnected but similar facts is always admissible to show intent or system or to rebut accident; and, under such rule, upon an issue as to whether a corporation organized and owned by the officers and stockholders of another is in fact an independent corporation or was organized merely as a dummy to enable the other through it to collect and obtain illegal rebates from carriers, the fact that the latter had previously and habitually received rebates in violation of law is pertinent and may be allowed and proved. U. S. v. Milwaukee Refrigerator Transit Co., (1905) 142 Fed. 247.

[District attorneys to bring suits, etc. — recovery of damages.]

Suits without direction of commission.—The Attorney-General has authority to institute a proceeding to restrain rebating by interstate carriers of his own motion, without direction or investigation on the part of the Interstate Commerce Commission. U. S. v. Milwaukee Refrigerator Transit Co., (1906) 145 Fed. 1007.

Vol. X, p. 173, sec. 4.

Retroactive effect.—The remedies given by section 3 of this Act were so far made applicable to prior pending proceedings to enforce the former Act by the provision of section 4, that pending causes shall not be affected by the repeal of conflicting laws provided for therein, but shall be prosecuted to a conclusion in the matter theretofore provided "and as modified by the provisions of this Act," that a decree granting the relief prayed for in a suit brought on behalf of the United States by its law officers to enjoin discrimination between localities, which suit was unauthorized because brought before the passage of the later Act, must be reversed and the cause remanded for further proceedings consistent with the Act to Regulate Commerce as originally enacted and subsequently amended. Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. U. S., (1903) 189 U. S. 274, 23 S. Ct. 507, 47 U. S. (L. ed.) 811.

Vol. X, p. 173, sec. 1.

For an amendment to this Act, see Act of June 30, 1906, ch. 3920, 34 Stat. L. 798, 1909 Supp. Fed. Stat. Annot. 708.

"Proceeding."—The examination of witnesses before a grand jury concerning an alleged violation of the Anti-trust Act is a "proceeding" within the meaning of the proviso to this Act. Hale v. Henkel, (1906) 201 U. S. 43, 26 S. Ct. 371, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 652.

Sufficiency of statutory immunity.—The right of a witness to claim his privilege against self-incrimination, afforded by the U. S. Const., Amend. 5, when examined concerning an alleged violation of the Anti-trust Act, is taken away by the proviso to this Act which furnishes a sufficient immunity from prosecution to satisfy the constitutional guaranty, although it may not afford immunity from prosecution in the state courts for the offense disclosed. Hale v. Henkel, (1906) 201 U. S. 43, 26 S. Ct. 371, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 652; Nelson v. U. S., (1906) 201 U. S. 92, 26 S. Ct. 358, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 673.

A shield against successful prosecution, available to the accused as a defense, and not immunity from the prosecution itself, is what was secured by this Act. Heike v. U. S., (1910) 217 U. S. 423, 30 S. Ct. 539, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 821.

Persons filing answer under oath.—This section as amended by Act of June 30, 1906, ch. 3920, 34 Stat. L. 798, 1909 Supp. Fed. Stat. Annot. 708, does not immunize persons who have filed answers under oath in a proceeding under the Anti-trust Act. U. S. v. Standard Sanitary Mfg. Co., (1911) 187 Fed. 229.

1909 Supp., p. 255, sec. 1.

Constitutionality.—The provision of Const. U. S., art. 1, sec. 9, that "no preference shall be given by any regulation of commerce or revenue to the ports of one state over those of another," does not prevent the exercise of the power of Congress by delegated authority to regulate commerce between ports of different states merely because such regulation may incidentally affect the commerce of a port in still another state. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, (1910) 184 Fed. 118.

Construction.—The sections of this Act which are amendatory of the Act of Feb. 4, 1887, ch. 104, 24 Stat. L. 379, 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 809, are to be treated, as to matters occurring after the enactment of such Act, as if such section had been in the original Act. State v. Adams Express Co., (1908) 171 Ind. 138, 85 N. E. 337.

Free passes — Passes in payment of claims for damages — Invalidating contracts for free transportation.—An agreement by an interstate carrier to issue annual passes for life in consideration of a release of a claim for damages, though entered into prior to this Act, was made unenforceable by the prohibition of section 2 against demanding, collecting, or receiving "a greater or less or different compensation" for the transportation of persons or property or for any service in connection therewith, than that specified in the carrier's published schedule of rates. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Mottley, (1911) 219 U. S. 467, 31 S. Ct. 265, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 297.

Employees of railway mail service.—The provision of this Act that no carrier subject to this Act shall issue in interstate commerce free transportation, except to railway mail employees, cannot be construed to prohibit the issuance of a free pass to an employee of the railway mail service for transportation of such employee while not in the actual discharge of his official duties. Schuyler v. Southern Pac. Co., (Utah 1910) 109 Pac. 459.

Defense to actions for death from negligence.—Where an interstate carrier issued free transportation to an employee of the railway mail service for use by such employee while not on duty, it was held that it could not avoid liability to the personal representatives of such employee for its negligence in causing his death, by alleging that such transportation was issued in violation of this Act. Schuyler v. Southern Pac. Co., (Utah 1910) 109 Pac. 459.

Persons punishable.—Under the provision of this section which makes it a misdemeanor for any common carrier subject to its provisions to issue any free ticket, free pass, or free transportation for passengers, except to persons therein excepted, and further provides that "any person other than the persons excepted in this provision, who uses any such interstate free ticket, free pass, or free transportation, shall be subject to a like penalty," one who, having in his possession an interstate free ticket or pass issued by a railroad company, sells it to another, knowing that he is not the person named therein, and is not entitled to ride thereon, with intent that he shall so use it, which he does by riding free on an interstate journey, is guilty of using the ticket in violation of the statute. U. S. v. Martin, (1910) 176 Fed. 110.

State laws.—An order of a state commission which provided that ten days' free storage should be allowed on less than carload shipments when destined to consignees who lived at interior points five miles or more from the railroad station, in so far as it applied to interstate commerce was held to be void for the reason that it was in conflict with and superseded by sections 1 and 2 of this Act, and for the further reason that it interfered with and imposed upon interstate commerce an unreasonable burden. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. State, (Okla. 1910) 107 Pac. 929.

Since the Oregon statute requiring railroads to furnish cars on demand by shippers (Act of Feb. 18, 1907, Laws of 1907, p. 77, sec. 26) covers a field not occupied by the Interstate Commerce Act, in that it regulates the manner of making the request, the excuses that may be made for a failure to deliver cars, and adds an additional penalty by way of demurrage for failure to comply with its terms, it is not superseded by nor in conflict with the federal statute. Martin v. Oregon R., etc., Co., (1910) 113 Pac. 16.

This Act regulating the transportation and delivery of goods by express companies superseded the Indiana statute (Act Ind. March 6, 1901, Act 1901, p. 97, ch. 62, Burns' Annot. Stat. 1901, sec. 3312a), relating to the same subject-matter. State v. Adams Express Co., (1908) 171 Ind. 138, 85 N. E. 337.

Common-law or contractual duties.—The liability of connecting carriers for breach of their common-law or contractual duty in respect to property received for shipment is not regulated or affected by this section, though the shipment is an interstate one, and therefore an action against them for injuries to the property caused by negligence and delay in transportation, being based on a breach of such duty and not on any infraction of said Act, is properly brought in a state court. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Clements, (1909) 53 Tex. Civ. App. 143, 115 S. W. 664.

Reasonableness of terminal charges.—A terminal charge for delivering carloads of live stock to the Union Stock Yards in Chicago, a point beyond the carrier's line, if in itself just and reasonable, and separately stated in the tariff schedules, as required by section 2 of this Act, cannot be condemned or the carrier required to reduce it on the ground that it, taken with prior charges of transportation over the lines of the carrier, or of connecting carriers, makes the total charge to the shipper unreasonable. Interstate Commerce Commission v. Stickney, (1909) 215 U. S. 98, 30 S. Ct. 66, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 112, affirming (1908) 164 Fed. 638.

Compelling switch connection.—The remedy given by this section, on complaint by the shipper to the Interstate Commerce Commission, when an interstate railway carrier refuses to establish a switch connection with a lateral branch line, is exclusive, and the general powers given by other sections of the statute cannot be deemed to authorize a complaint to the commission by the lateral branch railway company. Interstate Commerce Commission v. Delaware, etc., R. Co., (1910) 216 U. S. 531, 30 S. Ct. 415, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 605.

Limitation of liability to fixed valuation.—This Act does not prevent a shipper from recovering the actual loss to a live stock shipment, though the stock was shipped on the valuation of $100 per head. Betus v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1a. 1911) 129 N. W. 962.

Street railroads.—The Interstate Commerce Act does not apply to street railway companies engaged in the transportation of passengers between cities in different states. Omaha, etc., R. Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, (1910) 179 Fed. 243.

Shipments wholly within a territory.—Prior to this amendment the Interstate Commerce Commission had no jurisdiction to fix or adjust charges or rates on shipments, the carriage of which was wholly within a territory. Ft. Smith, etc., R. Co. v. Chandler Cotton Oil Co., (Okla. 1909) 106 Pac. 10.

In the commodities clause cases — Matters not settled by earlier decisions.—The adjudication in the commodities clause cases (U. S. v. Delaware, etc., Co., (1909) 213 U. S. 366, 20 S. Ct. 527, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 836) set out in the original note, that the ownership by a railway carrier of stock in a bona fide corporation manufacturing, mining, producing, or owning the commodity carried is not the interest in such commodity forbidden to the carrier by the Hepburn Act, is not res judicata of the right of such carrier to exert its power as a stockholder so as to deprive the other corporation of all real independent existence, and to make it virtually but an agency, or dependency, or department of the carrier. U. S. v. Lehigh Valley R. Co., (1911) 220 U. S. 257, 31 S. Ct. 387, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 458.

Stock ownership in sham corporation.—The exercise by a railway carrier of its power as a stockholder in a corporation manufacturing, mining, producing, or owning the commodity carried in such manner as to deprive the latter corporation of all independent existence, and to make it virtually but an agency, or dependency, or department of the carrier, is forbidden by the provisions of this section, making it unlawful for a railway carrier to transport in interstate commerce articles or commodities "manufactured, mined, or produced by it or under its authority, or which it may own in whole or in part, or in which it may have any interest, direct or indirect." U. S. v. Lehigh Valley R. Co., (1911) 220 U. S. 257, 31 S. Ct. 387, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 458.

Cars not owned by shipper.—The case cited in the original note was reversed on other grounds in U. S. v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., (1910) 215 U. S. 481, 30 S. Ct. 164, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 292.

1909 Supp., p. 260, sec. 2.

Contract for special facilities.—A shipper cannot, under a special contract with a carrier, claim special facilities in transportation, such as that the freight be transferred in a single covered express wagon by itself, so that, in an action by a shipper based on such special contract, the express company could show as a defense that the tariff rates applicable did not provide for such special privileges. Winn v. American Express Co., (Ia. 1910) 128 N. W. 663.

Question of fact.—What is an undue or unreasonable preference or advantage given by a carrier of goods to a shipper within the inhibition of this section is a question of fact. State v. Adams Express Co., (1908) 171 Ind. 138, 85 N. E. 337.

Discrimination against localities.—Under the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended by this section, forbidding carriers to give any unreasonable preference or advantage to any shipper or locality, a carrier cannot lawfully make rates so as to overcome the natural advantage of one locality over another, or so as to build up one place at the expense of another. State v. Adams Express Co., (1908) 171 Ind. 138, 85 N. E. 337.

Filing rates.—In a prosecution against certain interstate carriers for shipping certain freight at a ten cent rate when the published and filed rate was fifteen cents per hundred weight, evidence that the ten cent rate had been published by defendant's connections, and sent "broadcast," though not filed, was held to be inadmissible as a matter of defense, since the charging of a rate less than the filed rates constitutes a concession to the shipper, in violation of the Act, as a matter of law. U. S. v. Merchants', etc., Transp. Co., (1911) 187 Fed. 363.

Presumption as to compliance.—There is no presumption that interstate carriers sued for overcharge for icing cars had filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission a schedule of freight rates, including icing charges, and that such rates were promulgated as required by the Act, in the absence of allegations to that effect, so as to defeat the jurisdiction of a state court. N. H. Blitch Co. v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., (1910) 87 S. C. 107, 69 S. E. 16.

Knowledge.—In a prosecution of an interstate carrier for shipping freight at a rate less than that filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission, it was held that defendant could not be heard to say that it did not know of the filed rate, which it had established in accordance with the law, as a justification for its departure therefrom. U. S. v. Merchants', etc., Transp. Co., (1911) 187 Fed. 363.

Compensation for transportation.—A carrier engaged in interstate commerce cannot lawfully charge, collect, or receive anything but money for transportation on its road since the enactment of this section, prohibiting any carrier from demanding, collecting, or receiving "a greater or less or different compensation" for the transportation of persons or property, or for any service in connection therewith, than that specified in its published schedule of rates. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Mottley, (1911) 219 U. S. 467, 31 S. Ct. 265, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 297, reversing (1909) 133 Ky. 652, 118 S. W. 982.

Effect of Act on contracts for transportation.—The interstate commerce law abrogated the right of the carrier and shipper to fix the freight rate by contract; the law fixing the rate. Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. New Albany Box, etc., Co., (Ind. 1911) 94 N. E. 906.

Where carriers have filed and published schedules of joint through rates, it is the right of a shipper to have his property transported upon the lines joining in such schedules and at the rates therein specified, and the carrier receiving it cannot avoid its obligation by any contract inserted in its bill of lading. Dickerson v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., (1910) 187 Fed. 874.

Release of damage claims.—An interstate carrier cannot make a valid contract to issue annual passes for life in consideration of a release of a claim for damages, since the enactment of this section expressly prohibiting any carrier from demanding, collecting, or receiving "a greater or less or different compensation" for the transportation of persons or property, or for any service in connection therewith, than that specified in its published schedule of rates. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Mottley, (1911) 219 U. S. 467, 31 S. Ct. 265, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 297, reversing (1909) 133 Ky. 652, 118 S. W. 982.

The constitutional liberty of the citizen to make contracts was not infringed by the enactment by Congress, in the exercise of its power over commerce, of the provisions of this section, which rendered unenforceable a prior contract, valid when made, by which an interstate carrier agreed to issue annual passes for life in consideration of a release of a claim for damages. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Mottley, (1911) 219 U. S. 467, 31 S. Ct. 265, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 297, reversing (1909) 133 Ky. 652, 118 S. W. 982. See also under this title, vol. 3, p. 827, sec. 6.

Damages for failure to post freight rates.—Where a railroad company failed to post a schedule of tariff rates, and a shipper in ignorance of such schedule, relying upon a schedule previously in force, contracted for shipment of grain, to his damage, it was held that he could recover of the railroad company therefor at common law. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Henderson Elevator Co., (1910) 138 Ky. 220, 127 S. W. 779.

Time rate takes effect.—The tariff of rates is established and put in force when the schedules have been published and filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission, and approved and promulgated by it, the posting of the schedules in the carrier's office or stations not being a condition to the taking effect of the rate. Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. New Albany Box, etc., Co., (Ind. 1911) 94 N. E. 906.

Separating terminal charges.—Carriers separately state the terminal charges for delivering live stock beyond their own lines to the Union Stockyards in Chicago, as required by this section, where their tariff schedules inform shippers that the live stock rates to Chicago apply only to deliveries at the carriers' own yards, and that for transportation to the Union Stockyards a stated additional charge will be made, the amount of such charge being entered, not upon the general freight charges of the companies, but as a separate item. Interstate Commerce Commission v. Stickney, (1909) 215 U. S. 98, 30 S. Ct. 66, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 112, affirming (1908) 164 Fed. 638.

1909 Supp., p. 265, sec. 4.

Constitutionality of delegation.—The power delegated by Congress to the Interstate Commerce Commission to prescribe railroad rates for the future is legislative in its nature, and, since it concerns the administrative affairs of the government, which by reason of variable conditions cannot be covered in detail by direct legislation, its delegation is not in violation of the Constitution, and it may be as fully exercised by the commission as Congress might have exercised it, subject to any limitations imposed by Congress itself. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, (1910) 184 Fed. 118. See also (1905) 25 Op. Atty.-Gen. 422.

Extent of power of commission.—This section places no restrictions on the commission in respect to the matters which it may take into consideration, or the weight it shall give to every of such matters in informing itself what opinion it ought to give, except that it shall not abuse its authority and proceed arbitrarily without regard to the justice of the case, or give a judgment not fairly within its power. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, (1910) 184 Fed. 118.

Establishing through routes and joint rates.—In Interstate Commerce Commission v. Northern Pac. R. Co., (1910) 216 U. S. 538, 30 S. Ct. 417, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 608, it was held that the personal preferences of many travelers for a southern route between eastern points and points on the Northern Pacific Railway between Portland and Seattle do not make the through route via the Northern Pacific Railway unreasonable or unsatisfactory, so as to justify the Interstate Commerce Commission, in the exercise of its power under this section to establish through routes and joint rates where "no reasonable or satisfactory through route exists," in ordering the establishment of through rates and joint rates between those points via the Union Pacific Railway, so as to put the latter road on an equal footing with the Northern Pacific Railway Company in the use for through travel of the road belonging to the latter between Portland and Seattle.

Regulation of distribution of railway cars.—An order of the Interstate Commerce Commission commanding a railway company to desist from its practice not to take into account the company's fuel cars in the daily distribution of coal cars in time of car shortage to the bituminous coal mines on its line, and requiring it for a future period of two years to count such cars against the share of the mine receiving them, is within the authority delegated by this section, upon complaint duly made, to declare a rate or practice affecting rates illegal, and to determine and prescribe for a term not exceeding two years what will be a just and reasonable rate, and what regulation or practice in respect to transportation is just, fair, and reasonable thereafter to be followed. Interstate Commerce Commission v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., (1910) 215 U. S. 452, 30 S. Ct. 155, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 280.

Allowance of elevator charges.—The Interstate Commerce Commission cannot make the allowance by a carrier to the owner of an elevator of the cost of the elevation in transit of grain in which he has an interest, conditioned upon his failure to use the opportunity afforded during the process of elevation to treat, weigh, inspect, or mix the grain, since such allowance cannot be deemed an undue preference or discrimination forbidden by the Act to regulate commerce, in view of the provisions of this section, recognizing that services in transportation, rendered by an owner of the property transported, are to be paid for by the carrier. Interstate Commerce Commission v. Dissenbauch, (1911) 222 U. S. 42, 32 S. Ct. 22, modifying and affirming 176 Fed. 409.

Procedure.—The procedure prescribed by section 13 of the Act of Feb. 4, 1887, ch. 104, 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 842, requiring a statement of charges against a carrier filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission to be forwarded "to such common carrier," who shall be required to answer the same, which procedure is required to be followed in case of hearings for the prescribing of rates under section 4, is analogous to that in all legal controversies, and sufficient, and it is no objection to the validity of an order of the commission prescribing rates to be charged by a carrier between certain localities that it will affect the rates of other carriers, not before the commission, who may be in the succession of all or any interstate transportation which includes that in question. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, (1910) 184 Fed. 118.

Validity of order.—It is no objection to the validity of an order of the Interstate Commerce Commission determining and prescribing rates to be charged by a carrier, that it would derange the schedule of rates on other routes. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, (1910) 184 Fed. 118.

Effect upon power of courts to pass on reasonableness of rates.—The courts have no jurisdiction to enjoin the filing, publication, or enforcement of a proposed rate alleged to be unreasonable, in advance of action thereon by the Interstate Commerce Commission, which is by said Acts vested with exclusive jurisdiction to determine the reasonableness of rates in the first instance. Columbus Iron, etc., Co. v. Kanawha, etc., R. Co., (1909) 171 Fed. 713, affirmed (1910) 178 Fed. 261, 101 C. C. A. 621. See also Houston Coal, etc., Co. v. Norfolk, etc., R. Co., (1909) 171 Fed. 723, affirmed (1910) 178 Fed. 266, 101 C. C. A. 626; Wickwire Steel Co. v. New York Cent., etc., R. Co., (C. C. A. 1910) 181 Fed. 316; Mitchell Coal, etc., Co. v. Pennsylvania R. Co., (1911) 183 Fed. 908.

The original jurisdiction of the federal courts under section 9 of the Interstate Commerce Act (Act Feb. 4, 1887, ch. 104, 24 Stat. L. 379, 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 833) has not been entirely destroyed, and they still may redress such wrongs as can consistently with the Act be redressed without previous action by the Interstate Commerce Commission, and, when one sues for discrimination by a carrier, it is necessary in the first instance to determine whether the wrong can be redressed by the courts. Langdon v. Pennsylvania R. Co., (1911) 186 Fed. 237.

As to the authority of the courts to enjoin a proposed rate as unjust and unreasonable, see also, supra, this title, p. 1191, vol. 3, p. 851, sec. 22, Equity Jurisdiction.

Review by courts.—A court having no constitutional power to regulate commerce or to fix rates to be charged by a carrier cannot suspend or vacate an order of the Interstate Commerce Commission prescribing rates under the power conferred by section 15 of the Interstate Commerce Act as amended by Act June 29, 1906, ch. 3591, sec. 4, except on the ground that in making such order the commission transcended its power or exercised such power without due regard to law and in violation of some legal, constitutional, or natural right of the carriers affected. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, (1909) 174 Fed. 687.

The courts may review the determination of the Interstate Commerce Commission upon the question whether "no reasonable or satisfactory through route exists" within the meaning of this section, conditioning the authority of the commission to establish through routes and joint rates upon the non-existence of such route. Interstate Commerce Commission v. Northern Pac. R. Co., (1910) 216 U. S. 538, 30 S. Ct. 417, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 608.

But the courts cannot, under the guise of exerting judicial power, usurp merely administrative functions by setting aside an order of the Interstate Commerce Commission within the scope of the power delegated to such commissioner, upon the ground that such power was unwisely or inexpediently exercised. Interstate Commerce Commission v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., (1910) 215 U. S. 452, 30 S. Ct. 155, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 280, reversing (1906) 173 Fed. 930.

1909 Supp., p. 268, sec. 5.

Powers of commission.—A reduction in that part of the through rates in Atlantic seaboard shipments to Missouri river cities which applies to the haul between the Mississippi and Missouri rivers is not beyond the power of the Interstate Commerce Commission as introducing a new system of rate-making by artificially apportioning the country into zones tributary to given trade centres, in order to build up or protect certain distributive centres at the expense of others, where the commission, by its order, intended only to correct through rates which it found upon complaint were unreasonable in themselves, by substituting therefor reasonable rates. Interstate Commerce Commission v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1910) 218 U. S. 88, 30 S. Ct. 651, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 946, reversing (1909) 171 Fed. 680.

Conclusiveness of findings of commission.—Findings of the Interstate Commerce Commission that certain through rates are unreasonable in themselves carry with them a presumption of correctness. Interstate Commerce Commission v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1910) 218 U. S. 88, 30 S. Ct. 651, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 946, reversing (1909) 171 Fed. 680.

Parties.—Parties injuriously affected by the orders of the Interstate Commerce Commission may lawfully institute suits in the Circuit Courts to enjoin, suspend, or annul such orders, although they were not parties to the proceeding before the commission on which the orders are based. Parties similarly situated may intervene in such suits.

Peavey v. Union Pac. R. Co., (1910) 176 Fed. 409, affirmed 222 U. S. 42, 32 S. Ct. 22.

Judicial inquiry concerning rates fixed by commission.—The wisdom or expediency of the lawful discharge of the administrative duties of the Interstate Commerce Commission is not reviewable by the courts. But the courts may relieve from orders of the commission which deprive complainants of their property without due process of law, or take it without just compensation, from those which are beyond the delegated power of the commission, and from those which evidence so unreasonable an exercise of its power as to be substantially without though formally within it. Peavey v. Union Pac. R. Co., (1910) 176 Fed. 409, affirmed 222 U. S. 42, 32 S. Ct. 22; Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, (1910) 184 Fed. 118.

Complaint.—Under the provision that all complaints for damages shall be filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission within two years from the time the cause of action accrues, a letter to the commission setting out the facts and containing a substantial prayer for relief by way of damages is a sufficient complaint, no formal pleadings being required by the Act. Dickerson v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., (1910) 187 Fed. 875.

Necessity for fixing reasonable rate as condition precedent to recovery of overcharge.—In a proceeding before the Interstate Commerce Commission to recover damages on a complaint by a shipper that the amount collected by the carrier at the lawfully established rate had been excessive because that rate was unreasonable, the finding and prescription by the commission of a reasonable maximum rate to be observed in the future and an order by the commission forbidding the use of a rate in excess thereof are conditions precedent to its exercise of its power to order reparation. Denver, etc., R. Co. v. Baer Bros. Mercantile Co., (C. C. A. 1911) 187 Fed. 485.

1909 Supp., p. 271, sec. 7.

Liability of carrier beyond own line.—Under this amended section the liability of an initial carrier is the same whether its contract as issued reads to the end of its own line or to a destination over the lines of connecting carriers. Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Johnson, (Tex. 1911) 133 S. W. 725.

The initial carrier is liable for damage caused by the wrongful diversion of an interstate shipment by a connecting carrier in another state. Kemendo v. Fruit Dispatch Co., (Tex. 1910) 131 S. W. 73.

Constitutionality.—To the same effect as the first paragraph of the original note, see Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Riverside Mills, (1911) 219 U. S. 186, 31 S. Ct. 164, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 167, affirming (1909) 168 Fed. 987, cited in the original note; St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Heyser, (1910) 95 Ark. 412, 130 S. W. 562; Fry v. Southern Pac. Co., (1911) 247 Ill. 564, 93 N. E. 906; Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Scott, (1909) 133 Ky. 724, 118 S. W. 990; Dodge v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1910) 111 Minn. 123, 126 N. W. 627; Reid v. Southern R. Co., (1910) 153 N. C. 490, 69 S. E. 618; Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Wallace, (Tex. 1909) 117 S. W. 169; Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Hariman, (Tex. 1910) 128 S. W. 932; Houston, etc., R. Co. v. Lewis, (Tex. 1910) 129 S. W. 594; Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Johnson, (Tex. 1911) 133 S. W. 725; Norfolk, etc., R. Co. v. Dixie Tobacco Co., (1911) 111 Va. 813, 69 S. E. 1106.

Effect.—To the same effect as the original note, see Central of Georgia R. Co. v. Sims, (1910) 169 Ala. 295, 53 So. 826; Kansas City Southern R. Co. v. Carl, (1909) 91 Ark. 97, 121 S. W. 932.

Under this section an initial carrier is liable for its own negligence or that of connecting carriers resulting in delay in the transportation of cattle by reason of which they failed to reach their destination within a reasonable time, whether they were shipped under an oral or under a written contract attempting to limit the carrier's liability for its own acts or delays occurring on its own line. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Miles, (1909) 92 Ark. 573, 123 S. W. 775, 124 S. W. 1043.

Jurisdiction of courts.—To the same effect as the first paragraph of the original note. Central of Georgia R. Co. v. Sims, (1910) 169 Ala. 295, 53 So. 826; St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Heyser, (1910) 95 Ark. 412, 130 S. W. 562; Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Warfield, (1909) 6 Ga. App. 550, 65 S. E. 309, following Southern Pac. Co. v. Crenshaw, (1909) 5 Ga. App. 676, 63 S. E. 865; Louisville, etc., R. Co.

Limitation of action.—Under the proviso in this section that claims accrued prior to the passage of this Act may be presented within one year, it was held that a claim which accrued prior to the passage of the Act may be presented at any time within two years after the date of its accrual, although complaint is not filed until more than a year after the passage of the Act. Dickerson v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., (1910) 187 Fed. 874.

To the same effect as the second paragraph of the original note, see Fry v. Southern Pac. Co., (1911) 247 Ill. 564, 93 N. E. 907.

Under the provision of this amendment that initial carriers issuing receipts or bills of lading shall be liable for loss caused by connecting carriers, the state courts have jurisdiction of actions against an initial carrier for the negligence of connecting carriers, despite sections 8 and 9 of the original Act of Feb. 4, 1887, 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 833, which, respectively, make carriers subject to the provisions of the Act liable for damages caused by the doing of certain things, and provide that any person claiming such damages may complain to the Interstate Commerce Commission or bring suit in the federal courts, for the above sections relate only to the original Act. Gibson v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., (S. C. 1911) 70 S. E. 1030.

State laws.—The proviso of this section, "that nothing in this section shall deprive any holder of such receipt or bill of lading of any remedy or right of action which he had under existing law," leaves a shipper free to resort to the laws of the state applicable to his contract. Latta v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1909) 172 Fed. 850, 97 C. C. A. 198.

In Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Rodgers, (N. M. 1911) 113 Pac. 805, it was held that this section did not displace a previously existing state statute restricting the right of a common carrier to limit liability upon interstate shipments.

A state rule that a carrier cannot contract for exemption from or limitation of its liability arising from its negligence, or that of its servants, is not affected by this section. Wright v. Adams Express Co., (Pa. 1911) 79 Atl. 760.

Prior to the enactment of this section each of several connecting carriers was responsible only for loss occurring on its own line. Central of Georgia R. Co. v. Chicago Varnish Co., (1910) 169 Ala. 287, 53 So. 832.

As to interstate through shipments made by an initial carrier before the amendment of the Interstate Commerce Act forbidding the limitation by an initial carrier of its liability as insurer where it contracts to carry through, it could limit its liability as insurer for a consideration such as a reduced rate of freight. Blackmer, etc., Pipe Co. v. Mobile, etc., R. Co., (1909) 137 Mo. App. 479, 119 S. W. 1.

Notice of damage. — A provision of a transportation contract, requiring notice of loss or damage and of an intent to claim damages within thirty hours after arrival of the goods at destination, was not invalidated by this section. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Keller, (1909) 90 Ark. 308, 119 S. W. 254.

Loss by fire. — The statute does not prohibit carriers from placing any limitation whatever upon their common-law liabilities, but merely forbids them from limiting their liability as to damages caused by the respective carriers, for which damage a carrier is liable, irrespective of negligence, if it is responsible for the cause thereof, so that, where the contract of carriage exempted the carrier from liability for loss by fire, it could show that the fire occurred from causes beyond its control. St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. v. Ray, (Tex. 1910) 127 S. W. 281.

Termination of liability. — Where a connecting carrier's liability as a carrier for an interstate shipment had terminated when it sold the goods for freight charges, the initial carrier would not be liable for the value of the goods under this section. Norfolk, etc., R. Co. v. Stuart's Draft Milling Co., (1909) 109 Va. 184, 63 S. E. 415.

Limitation of amount of liability. — The purpose of this section is to render the initial carrier of interstate shipments over connecting lines liable to the holder of the bill of lading for any loss to the property, whether occurring on its line or not, and to prevent interstate carriers from exempting themselves from liability for the loss of property after it has passed into the hands of another carrier for transportation, but it does not abrogate the right of the carriers to regulate their charges for carriage by the value of the goods or to agree with the shipper on valuation of the property carried, and a contract limiting the carrier's liability to a specified sum in consideration of the rate charged regulated by the value of the goods is not invalid. Bernard v. Adams Express Co., (1910) 205 Mass. 254, 91 N. E. 325; McElvain v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., (1910) 151 Mo. App. 126, 131 S. W. 736; Travis v. Wells, (1909) 79 N. J. L. 83, 74 Atl. 444; Greenwald v. Barrett, (1910) 199 N. Y. 170, 92 N. E. 218; Larsen v. Oregon Short Line R. Co., (Utah 1910) 110 Pac. 983.

Arbitrary limitations of value and pre-adjustments of the damage in contracts of carriage are invalid under this section. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Warfield, (1909) 6 Ga. App. 550, 65 S. E. 309.

Liability for negligence. — This Act does not in any manner supersede or amend the rule at common law with reference to the liability of a common carrier for its negligence in the transportation of property by interstate shipments. Miller v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1909) 85 Neb. 458, 123 N. W. 449.

Who may question validity. — Under the rule that one not within a class affected by a statute may not attack its constitutionality, an initial carrier in an action against it, based on section 7, making the initial carrier liable for loss of or injury to interstate shipments caused by any connecting carrier, may not question the validity of the provision permitting it to recover from the connecting carrier for the loss sustained by it. Central of Georgia R. Co. v. Sims, (1910) 169 Ala. 295, 53 So. 826.

Contract for through shipment. — A bill of lading dated in one state, showing a destination in another, and containing stipulations governing the entire transportation, specifying rights, duties, or limitations relating not only to the parties, but also to subsequent carriers, is a "contract for a through shipment" within this section. Southern Pac. Co. v. Meadors, (Tex. 1910) 129 S. W. 170.

Judgment as evidence against connecting carrier. — The provision in this section, making the initial carrier of an interstate shipment liable for loss of or injury thereto caused by a connecting carrier, and permitting the initial carrier to recover from the connecting carrier causing the loss or injury the amount it may be required to pay to the owner of the property, as evidenced by any receipt or judgment, makes a judgment against the initial carrier only prima facie evidence against the connecting carrier, and it is not invalid as depriving the connecting carrier of its property without due process of law. Central of Georgia R. Co. v. Sims, (1910) 169 Ala. 295, 53 So. 826.

Failure to divert shipment as desired. — An initial carrier, which was under no obligation, by contract or otherwise, to notify a connecting carrier that the shipper desired a diversion of the shipment at a point on the connecting carrier's line, having delivered the shipment to the connecting carrier, was not liable for failure of the connecting carrier to make the diversion, as no fault was attributable to the connecting carrier. Patton v. Texas, etc., R. Co., (Tex. 1911) 137 S. W. 721.

Enforcement of contracts limiting liability. — A bill of lading of an interstate shipment, which contains clauses repugnant to this section, is not thereby entirely vitiated, but the holder thereof may recover for a failure to safely transport the goods. Central of Georgia R. Co. v. Sims, (1910) 169 Ala. 295, 53 So. 826.

The word "caused," as used in this section, implies not only active misconduct and deeds of commission, but also passive neglect and deeds of omission, and failure to exercise duties faithfully. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Warfield, (1909) 6 Ga. App. 550, 65 S. E. 308.

The word "state," as used in the part of this section regarding the limitation of liability, is used in its limited sense to represent and include only the states of the federal Union, and such section has no application to a shipment of cotton from a point in Texas to a foreign country. Houston, etc., R. Co. v. Inman, (Tex. 1911) 134 S. W. 275.

Delivery to interstate railroad. — Delivery of an interstate shipment of freight to an interstate railroad under a through bill of lading and a guaranty of a through rate is a through shipment, and is governed by this section, making initial carriers liable for loss or injury caused by connecting carriers. Veeder v. Gilmer, (Tex. 1910) 129 S. W. 595.

No receipt or bill of lading given.—A railroad company engaged in interstate commerce, which receives goods to be transported from a point in this state to a point in another state, is liable by force of this section for a loss of the property caused by it or any connecting carrier, although the receiving company failed to issue a receipt or bill of lading therefor. International Watch Co. v. Delaware, etc., R. Co., (1910) 80 N. J. L. 553, 78 Atl. 49.

Limiting liability for property before placed on cars.—This section does not prevent a carrier of cattle from one state to another to exempt itself by contract from liability until the cattle are loaded on its cars, since a carrier need not take possession of property before the same is placed on its cars for transportation. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Jones, (1910) 93 Ark. 537, 125 S. W. 1025.

Right to sue intermediate carrier.—The holder of a bill of lading is not bound to sue the initial carrier, but may sue directly an intermediate carrier for loss of or damage to goods on its line. St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. v. Ray, (Tex. 1910) 127 S. W. 281.

Recovery of overcharges.—Where an interstate carrier represents to the shipper that a certain freight rate has been established between given points, and such rate has in fact been published, and the shipper sends his goods on the faith of such representation, and is thereafter coerced into paying a higher rate, a state court has jurisdiction to hear and determine his suit for recovery of the amount thus overpaid. Pine Tree Lumber Co. v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1909) 123 La. 583, 49 So. 202.

For other cases under this section, see Central of Georgia R. Co. v. Dowe, (1909) 6 Ga. App. 858, 65 S. E. 1091; Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co. v. State, (1909) 172 Ind. 147, 87 N. E. 1034; Pittsburg, etc., R. Co. v. Mitchell, (Ind. 1910) 91 N. E. 735; Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Scott, (1909) 133 Ky. 724, 118 S. W. 990; Holland v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1910) 139 Mo. App. 702, 123 S. W. 987; International Watch Co. v. Delaware, etc., R. Co., (1910) 80 N. J. L. 553, 78 Atl. 49; Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Carpenter, (1908) 52 Tex. Civ. App. 585, 114 S. W. 900; St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Fenley, (Tex. 1909) 118 S. W. 845; Southern Pac. Co. v. Meadors, (Tex. 1910) 129 S. W. 170; Texas Cent. R. Co. v. Hico Oil Mill, (Tex. 1910) 132 S. W. 381; Patton v. Texas, etc., R. Co., (Tex. 1911) 137 S. W. 721.

JUDGMENTS.

Vol. IV, p. 2, sec. 966.

Interest prior to judgment.—In U. S. v. Sargent, (C. C. A. 1908) 162 Fed. 81, it was said: "In the proceeding at common law before a jury, the verdict of the jury assessing the amount of the damages would not become effective until the same should be affirmed by the judgment of the court, and interest would not attach until after judgment of condemnation, conformably to section 966, R. S. It could not have been in the contemplation of Congress, in adopting the Conformity Act of 1888, that the government should thereby become amenable to the payment of any interest anterior to the rendition of judgment, which a state legislature might adopt in the admeasurement of the just compensation to be awarded to the property owner, different from what it would be under the common-law procedure."

Vol. IV, p. 5, sec. 1.

Lien expressly given.—A judgment constitutes a lien on the defendant's real estate from the date of its rendition, or whenever thereafter the judgment debtor acquires property. Owen v. Brown, (C. C. A. 1903) 120 Fed. 812. See also Great Falls Nat. Bank v. McClure, (C. C. A. 1910) 176 Fed. 208.

Previously existing courts not disturbed. — It has been held that the statute does not disturb the previously existing courts in California, except to the necessary extent of cutting off part of their territorial jurisdiction, and substituting "Northern District of California" for "District of California" as the designation of the original district. It detached from the district as previously existing certain named counties, but omitted to attach the new district to the Ninth Circuit, or any circuit, and it did not designate the judges authorized to hold the Circuit Court therein, unless inferentially by providing in section 8 "that the circuit and district judges of said Southern District of California shall each, respectively, appoint a clerk for their respective courts." It is only by reason of the fact that the territory comprised within the Southern District of California was within the Ninth Circuit, and is geographically situated so as to be conveniently attached to the Ninth Circuit, and because the Act did not express an intention to change the boundaries of the circuit, that said district can be considered as being, by legal implication, a constituent of the Ninth Circuit. *Geiger v. ## JUDICIAL OFFICERS.

Vol. IV, p. 70, sec. 363.

This section is not limited in its effect by R. S. sec. 366, 4 Fed. Stat. Annot. 71. They are independent sections, originally forming parts of independent Acts. U. S. v. Twining, (1904) 132 Fed. 129.

Authority of special assistant. — An attorney appointed under this section may perform any of the duties which devolve on the district attorney. U. S. v. Cobban, (1904) 127 Fed. 713.

A special assistant appointed to assist a district attorney in a certain class of suits and prosecutions in his district may, by direction of the district attorney, appear before the grand jury, and assist in the conducting of examinations by that body. U. S. v. Cobban, (1904) 127 Fed. 713.

But see U. S. v. Rosenthal, (1903) 121 Fed. 862, wherein it was held that a special assistant to the Attorney-General, appointed to investigate and report concerning alleged fraudulent importations of Japanese silks at the port of New York, and to prepare and conduct such civil and criminal proceedings as may result therefrom, is not authorized by law to conduct, or to aid the conduct of, proceedings before a federal grand jury, and indictments based upon such proceedings so conducted should be quashed upon motion.

And in U. S. v. Virginia-Carolina Chemical Co., (1908) 163 Fed. 66, it was held that the Attorney-General was not authorized to appoint special assistants to a district attorney having the authority or the right to appear before and participate in the proceedings of a grand jury; and the presence of such attorneys, specially appointed for a particular case, and their examination of witnesses on whose testimony an indictment was returned, render such indictment invalid.

Not an officer. — A special assistant to the Attorney-General is not an officer of the department of justice. U. S. v. Rosenthal, (1903) 121 Fed. 862.

Compensation. — Where third persons assured the Attorney-General that, if necessary, they would furnish funds to compensate the special assistant who should be appointed for such purpose; it was held that this arrangement was inter alios, and did not disqualify the appointee, who became an employee of the United States, to whom alone he could look for compensation, and for whom he performed his duty with fidelity and probity. U. S. v. Rosenthal, (1903) 121 Fed. 862.

Validity of appointment.—The fact that an attorney appointed by the department of justice as a special assistant to a district attorney in the prosecution of criminal actions against the officers of an insolvent national bank had previously been employed by the receiver of such bank to prosecute civil suits against such officers does not affect the validity of his appointment. U. S. v. Twinning, (1904) 132 Fed. 129.

Vol. IV, p. 71, sec. 8.

Assistant district attorneys appointed by a United States district judge, as authorized by this section, are officers of the United States courts for their respective districts. In re Leaken, (1905) 137 Fed. 680.

Vol. IV, p. 81. [Clerks of courts not to be receivers, etc.]

Appointment of deputy clerk as special master.—Where a Circuit Court determines that a special reason exists for appointing a deputy clerk special master, such appointment is not reversible error because, through inadvertence, the reason is not assigned in the order. Briggs v. Neal, (C. C. A. 1903) 120 Fed. 224.

In Quinton v. Neville, (C. C. A. 1907) 154 Fed. 432, it was held that where an order appointing a clerk of the Circuit Court of the United States special master to conduct a judicial sale of certain land under a decree of the Circuit Court did not specify special reasons therefor, the order was held to be erroneous to that extent. But it was also decided that the error might be cured by amendment, and that it did not affect the balance of the decree.

This Act was intended to prevent abuses which it was assumed had arisen out of favoritism for officers of the court. It nevertheless recognized and contemplated that special reasons might exist in the particular case or instance for departing from the interdiction of the statute; but as a safeguard that the spirit as well as the letter of the statute should be observed, while reposing a discretion in the judge of the court in making such appointment, it requires that he should assign in the order of appointment the special reasons inducing such selection. Quinton v. Neville, (C. C. A. 1907) 154 Fed. 432.

Vol. IV, p. 81, sec. 715.

Bailiffs and criers of the federal courts, appointed to attend the same, as authorized by this section, though not constitutional officers, are officers of the court. U. S. v. McCabe, (C. C. A. 1904) 129 Fed. 708.

Per diem fees.—Court criers and bailiffs appointed under this section are entitled to per diem fees for attendance on the Circuit Court on days when the court was adjourned by written order of the judge. U. S. v. McCabe, (1903) 122 Fed. 653.

Where criers and bailiffs attend a Circuit Court on days to which the court is adjourned by written orders of the judge, they are entitled to receive their per diem fees therefor, though the court was not actually opened by a judge, and they were not specifically directed by the court or judge to attend. U. S. v. McCabe, (C. C. A. 1904) 120 Fed. 708.

Vol. IV, p. 82, sec. 795.

Breach of bond.—A clerk of a Circuit Court who has given bond as required by R. S. sec. 795, or under the provisions of Act Feb. 22, 1875, ch. 95, sec. 3, 18 Stat. L. 333, conditioned that he shall "faithfully discharge the duties of his office . . . and properly account for all moneys coming into his hands as required by law," and who fails to pay out to the persons entitled thereto money deposited with him by litigants to secure costs under an order or rule of the court, or to account for and pay over the same to his successor in office, commits a breach of such bond. U. S. v. Abeel, (C. C. A. 1909) 174 Fed. 12.

Suit on bond.—Where a clerk of a Circuit Court in the course of a number of years received a large number of deposits of money made by litigants to secure costs, as required by a rule of court, and failed to pay the same out to the persons who became entitled to the same as fees, or to turn the fund over to his successor in office, but converted it to his own use, the United States, as payee, may maintain an action on his official bond to recover the amount, and is not required in its pleading to name all or any of the persons entitled to share in the fund as use plaintiffs, since the sums so deposited can in no event become the property of the clerk beyond the amount he is entitled to retain for his own fees, but must legally remain subject to the orders of the court, which has power, on the recovery of the fund, to see that it is properly disbursed. U. S. v. Abeel, (1909) 174 Fed. 12, 98 C. C. A. 50.

Vol. IV, p. 89, sec. 823.

This section means that whatever costs were properly taxable in favor of attorneys, solicitors, and proctors are still to be theirs, in addition to the compensation provided for by section 824. Matheson v. Hanna-Schoelkopf Co., (1904) 128 Fed. 164.

Where libellant was the prevailing party in a suit in admiralty, but for equitable reasons the court directed that the costs be divided and paid by the parties in stated proportions, such order should be construed as including the statutory fee for libellant's proctor, which in ordinary course would have been taxed as costs, but not a fee for respondent's proctor. The L. F. Munson, (1904) 127 Fed. 707.

Ordinary counsel fees not taxable.—This section does not prevent attorneys from charging and receiving from their client, in addition to this taxable docket fee, reasonable compensation for their services, but it must be from their client, and not his adversary, in the nature of costs. Doddridge County Oil, etc., Co. v. Smith, (1909) 173 Fed. 388.

Vol. IV, p. 90, sec. 824.

"On a trial before a jury" contemplates not only an examination and hearing of evidence before a jury, but a determination of the question at issue, or a final submission of the cause for such determination, so that on a case on trial before a jury being settled pursuant to a stipulation before submission, no docket fee is allowable. Howler v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1909) 166 Fed. 828.

Counsel fees.—A federal court of equity has power to make an allowance for counsel fees to a complainant who, as a joint owner of a fund or property, has maintained a suit for its preservation or protection, where it has been brought within the custody or control of the court, such allowance to be charged thereon; but the power is discretionary, and will only be exercised where it is clear that a direct benefit has resulted to the property or those interested therein. Cuyler v. Atlantic, etc., R. Co., (1904) 132 Fed. 570.

Consolidated suits.—Where two suits are brought in a federal court between the same parties, which are consolidated for trial but separate verdicts are returned, two attorney's docket fees of twenty dollars each are taxable against the losing party. U. S. v. Venable Constr. Co., (1904) 158 Fed. 833.

Proctor's fees.—Where there are several distinct causes of action in different parties although consolidated in a single suit, each claimant is entitled to a docket fee of ten dollars. Title Guaranty, etc., Co. v. Crane Co., (1910) 219 U. S. 35, 31 S. Ct. 140, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 72.

Fees taxable for taking depositions in interrogatories in a federal court when not taken by a United States commissioner are not governed by the state statute, but may properly be taxed at twenty cents per folio by analogy with those allowed the clerk by R. S. sec. 828. U. S. v. Venable Constr. Co., (1904) 158 Fed. 833.

Must be used on hearing of cause.—This section refers to depositions taken out of court to be used on the hearing of the cause, and has no application to evidence taken either in court or before a master on a reference. Kissinger-Ison Co. v. Bradford Belting Co., (C. C. A. 1903) 123 Fed. 91.

Must be admitted in evidence.—Attorney's fees for taking depositions can be taxed in a federal court under this section only for such depositions as were "admitted in evidence." U. S. v. Venable Constr. Co., (1904) 158 Fed. 833.

Depositions used in several cases on joint trial.—Where depositions, though written out but once, were taken to be read in several cases, and were entitled and admitted in evidence in each, on the joint trial thereof the successful party is entitled to tax costs thereof in each case, in the absence of an agreement to the contrary. L. E. Waterman Co. v. Lockwood, (1904) 128 Fed. 174.

Testimony given before an examiner may be treated as a "deposition." Missouri v. Illinois, (1906) 202 U. S. 599, 26 S. Ct. 713, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 1160.

Cases discontinued.—Where, pending trial to a jury, the case was settled pursuant to stipulation before submission, it was not "discontinued." Howler v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1909) 166 Fed. 828.

Vol. IV, p. 95, sec. 828.

The clerk of the Circuit Court is entitled to demand his fees in advance, being required to account therefor to the government whether collected or not, having once been earned. Hoysradt v. Delaware, etc., R. Co., (1910) 182 Fed. 880.

Right to recover costs.—Though the legal title to costs, including officers' fees, is in the successful party, he holds the same as trustee, and the officers may therefore recover them in his name. Hoysradt v. Delaware, etc., R. Co., (1910) 182 Fed. 880.

Though a taxation or retaxation of costs can only be made at the instance of a party, and must be confined to the compensation of the parties for the expenses of litigation, as distinguished from officers' fees, it is unnecessary that unpaid fees of officers shall be formally taxed as costs in order to support an execution therefor, it being sufficient that they are noted of record or are entered on the writ. Hoysradt v. Delaware, etc., R. Co., (1910) 182 Fed. 880.

Fees due by indigent defendants.—Charges for services of a clerk of a federal court on behalf of indigent defendants in criminal cases, which consist in administering oaths by order of court to defendant's witnesses, in administering oaths to affidavits of poverty, and affixing jurats, in filing and entering applications for process, in filing and entering motions of defendants for new trial, and in rendering services to defendant in a capital case, by order of court, in prosecution of writ of error, are properly allowed. U. S. v. Jones, (1904) 193 U. S. 531, 24 S. Ct. 561, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 776.

Docket fees.—Separate trials under one indictment against several defendants are separate causes, within the meaning of this section. U. S. v. Keatley, (1907) 204 U. S. 562, 27 S. Ct. 404, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 618.

Recording abstract of judgment.—The services of a clerk of a federal court for recording abstracts of judgments, as required by a rule of court, are not covered by the docket fees prescribed by the tenth paragraph of this section, and separate charges therefor are justified by the eighth paragraph. U. S. v. Keatley, (1907) 204 U. S. 562, 27 S. Ct. 404, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 618.

Fees taxable for taking depositions on interrogatories in a federal court when not taken by a United States commissioner are not governed by the state statute, but may properly be taxed at twenty cents per folio, under this section. U. S. v. Venable Constr. Co., (1904) 158 Fed. 833.

Administering oaths.—An allowance to a clerk of a federal court of charges for administering oaths on the voir dire of grand and petit jurors cannot be justified under this section. U. S. v. Jones, (1904) 193 U. S. 531, 24 S. Ct. 561, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 776.

Copies.—The right and duty of a clerk of a Circuit Court to charge the fees fixed by this section for each copy of an injunctive order directed by the court to be certified and served on each defendant in a suit is not affected by the fact that the copies, being large in number, were printed. Cudahy Packing Co. v. McGuire, (1905) 135 Fed. 891.

Certifying copies.—Charges of a clerk of the federal court for certificates to copies of sci. fa., and certain orders of the court, are properly disallowed where no direction of the court as to such certificates is shown. U. S. v. Jones, (1904) 193 U. S. 531, 24 S. Ct. 561, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 776.

Entering decree.—The clerk may refuse to enter a decree until his fees are paid, and the decree, though remaining physically in the clerk's office, is neither effective nor entered until the fees are paid. Ommen v. Talcott, (1910) 180 Fed. 925.

Making, certifying, and returning record.—Where a clerk of a Circuit Court makes and certifies a record in response to a writ of error or appeal, he is not merely making a transcript or copy, but is "making a record" within the meaning of this section, and he is entitled to fifteen cents a folio. Hoysradt v. Delaware, etc., R. Co., (1910) 182 Fed. 890.

For making return to an order contained in a writ of error to a Circuit Court directing it "to send the record and proceedings aforesaid, with all things concerning the same," to the appellate court, the clerk is entitled to charge the fee of fifteen cents for each folio authorized for making any "return" by this section. Mohrstadt v. Mutual L. Ins. Co., (1906) 145 Fed. 751.

Where a clerk of the Circuit Court charged ten instead of fifteen cents per folio for making and certifying a record on a writ of error for defendant, and after reversal of the judgment the parties settled on the basis of a statement of the costs made by the clerk, containing the same mistake, it was held that such settlement did not relieve plaintiff, who lost the suit and was cast for the costs, from the obligation to respond to the clerk for the difference. Hoysradt v. Delaware, etc., R. Co., (1910) 182 Fed. 880.

Per diem compensation.—A clerk of a federal District and Circuit Court is entitled to his statutory per diem compensation for days on which he refers to the referees in bankruptcy voluntary petitions in bankruptcy filed during the absence of the judge from the district, though without written orders to open the court for that or any other purpose. U. S. v. Marvin, (1909) 212 U. S. 275, 29 S. Ct. 297, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 510.

For receiving, keeping, and paying out money, in pursuance of any statute or order of court, the clerk is entitled to one per centum on the amount as received, kept, and paid. See In re Michigan Cent. R. Co., (C. C. A. 1903) 124 Fed. 731; The Adula, (1901) 127 Fed. 851.

Under the provision of this section, which is the only authority on which the clerk's right to a commission rests, four things must be combined, namely: first, receiving; second, keeping; third, paying out; and fourth, in pursuance of a statute or order of court. Edwards v. Bay State Gas Co., (1910) 177 Fed. 575.

Money must be in clerk's custody or control.—But this section is applicable only to money which the clerks were required to receive, keep, and pay out pursuant to statute or order of court, and does not entitle such clerks to commissions on funds paid into the hands of court commissioners and disbursed by them, without at any time being in the custody or under the control of the clerks. S. Morgan Smith Co. v. Rockingham Power Co., (1909) 173 Fed. 923.

To entitle a clerk of a Circuit Court to a commission for "receiving, keeping, and paying out money," under R. S. sec. 828, such money must be paid to him or be subject to his order, so that he becomes responsible for its keeping and payment. Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Harsha, (1904) 134 Fed. 217, 67 C. C. A. 145.

A clerk is not entitled to commissions on part of a fund in the hands of a receiver appointed by the court, not deposited in a designated United States depository, but under order of the court in a national bank to the credit of the receiver, subject to the checks drawn by the receiver and countersigned by the judge of the courts. Edwards v. Bay State Gas Co., (1910) 177 Fed. 575.

A clerk of a Circuit Court is not entitled to a commission on the proceeds of mortgaged property sold under a foreclosure decree, which by order of the court is paid by the master making the sale directly to the mortgagee. Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Harsha, (1904) 134 Fed. 217, 67 C. C. A. 145.

A fund paid by a master into a United States depository, pursuant to an order of the court, and subject to be withdrawn on its order, is neither actually nor constructively in the keeping of the clerk, and he is not entitled to a commission thereon when it is so paid out. Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Harsha, (1904) 134 Fed. 217, 67 C. C. A. 145.

Railroad bonds deposited in a Circuit Court as collateral security by its order, and kept in a bank vault to which the clerk kept the key, are not "money," and the clerk is not entitled to a commission thereon, under R. S. sec. 828, when by order of the court he takes them from the bank and surrenders them to the depositor; nor is there any authority outside of the statute for the allowance of such a commission. Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Harsha, (1904) 134 Fed. 217, 67 C. C. A. 145.

Where a bidder is permitted to make a deposit with the master in the form of a check or certificate of deposit, and to pay for the property by crediting the amount on the decree in his favor, neither the deposit nor the purchase money is required to be deposited in court. And, in such case, a motion by the clerk to require the master to deposit the proceeds of the sale will be denied. Curtice v. Crawford County Bank, (1903) 124 Fed. 919.

Vol. IV, p. 107, sec. 829.

Mileage.—A United States marshal is not entitled to mileage for the distance traveled in serving warrants of arrest, in excess of the usually traveled route between the place of receiving the writs and the place of service, however great the necessity of pursuing a circuitous route, in view of R. S. sec. 829, which directs such mileage to be computed "from the place where the process is returned to the place of service." U. S. v. Nix, (1903) 189 U. S. 199, 23 S. Ct. 495, 47 U. S. (L. ed.) 775.

The allowance by the district judge of the account of a United States marshal is prima facie evidence of the correctness of the mileage items of such account. U. S. v. Nix, (1903) 189 U. S. 199, 23 S. Ct. 495, 47 U. S. (L. ed.) 775.

The per diem fee for the attendance of a United States marshal at a court which has been opened for business by order of the judge is allowable, although business may not have been transacted in court on such day, and the judge may not have been present. U. S. v. Nix, (1903) 189 U. S. 199, 23 S. Ct. 495, 47 U. S. (L. ed.) 775.

Vol. IV, p. 118, sec. 830.

The expenses paid by a marshal for meals of officers in charge of prisoners and witnesses in custody are allowable under this section. Swift v. U. S., (1904) 128 Fed. 763.

Extra bailiffs.—The provision of R. S. sec. 830, that marshals shall be paid their expenses necessarily incurred for fuel, lights, "Caretaker for vessel."—A marshal who has taken possession of a vessel on a process from a court of admiralty is responsible for her safekeeping to all parties in interest; and if he dispenses with a caretaker at the request of one party, it is within his discretion to again take possession and incur the expense of a keeper, as authorized by this section. The Robert R. Kirkland, (C. C. A. 1907) 153 Fed. 864.

Effect of marshal's negligence.—The expense of transporting a prisoner under a warrant of commitment cannot be allowed a United States marshal, where such prisoner escaped from the custody of his deputy before he could be delivered to the penitentiary, and there is no finding of due diligence on the part of the officer to prevent the escape. U. S. v. Nix, (1903) 189 U. S. 199, 23 S. Ct. 495, 47 U. S. (L. ed.) 775.

When court "in session."—When the court is open by its own order for the transaction of business, it is in session within the meaning of this section. U. S. v. Dietrich, (1904) 126 Fed. 659.

and "other contingencies that may accrue in holding the courts" within their districts, is sufficient to entitle a marshal to reimbursement for the expense of extra bailiffs ordered by the court to take charge of a jury and witnesses in custody. U. S. v. Swift, (C. C. A. 1905) 139 Fed. 225.

Vol. IV, p. 120, sec. 833.

Clerk is a "debtor" with respect to amount payable by him.—The duty of a clerk of a federal District Court to pay over to the United States the surplus fees and emoluments of his office which his half-yearly return or the audit thereof shows to exist over and above the compensation and allowances authorized by law to be retained by him is not governed by the federal statutes relating to the embezzlement of "public money" or "money or property of the United States;" but such fees and emoluments are received by the clerk, not as moneys or property belonging to the United States, but as the amount allowed to him for his compensation and office expenses under the statutes defining his rights and duties; and with respect to the amount payable when the return is made, the clerk is not a trustee, but a debtor. U. S. v. Mason, (1910) 218 U. S. 517, 31 S. Ct. 28, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 1133.

Oath to return.—The oath of a clerk of a District Court to his semi-annual return may be taken by the district judge. U. S. v. Mason, (1910) 177 Fed. 552.

Bankruptcy forms not a necessary expense.—Where a federal district judge decided that bankruptcy forms were reasonably necessary for the proper administration of justice in order to insure uniformity, and thereupon ordered the District Court clerk to have certain approved forms printed and distributed, and to pay for the same from the receipts of his office, the printing of such forms, in so far as they were to be used for records by referees, etc., could not be regarded as stationery or a necessary expense of the clerk's office, within this section. U. S. v. Mason, (C. C. A. 1904) 129 Fed. 742.

Vol. IV, p. 122, sec. 837.

Docket fee.—Sections 824 and 837 of the Revised Statutes authorize the taxation and allowance, on a trial before a jury in a civil or criminal action prosecuted by the government, of a docket or attorney's fee of forty dollars. These provisions, so far as they may relate to the district attorney, are not repealed or modified by Act May 27, 1898, ch. 252, 29 Stat. L. 179, placing district attorneys on salaries, except as to the disposition of such fees. U. S. v. Southern Pac. Co., (1909) 172 Fed. 911.

Vol. IV, p. 123, sec. 839.

That "necessary office expenses" may be allowed as a proper credit appears from sections 833 and 839. U. S. v. Mason, (C. C. A. 1904) 129 Fed. 742.

Vol. IV, p. 137, sec. 7.

Purpose of section.—The fragmentary character of the provisions of the Acts of Congress upon the subject of salaries of district attorneys is due to the fact that they were framed in recognition of an almost universal usage in courts of justice of allowing costs to the prevailing party, rather than to any supposed necessity for affirmative legislation. Western Coal, etc., Co. v. Petty, (C. C. A. 1904) 132 Fed. 603.

Vol. IV, p. 146, sec. 21.

Where a special examiner took depositions which were read and used in three cases tried together, it was held that he was entitled to a fee of three dollars a day in but one case, and to ten cents a folio for certifying and filing the depositions in the second and third case. L. E. Waterman Co. v. Lockwood, (1904) 128 Fed. 174.

Vol. IV, p. 155, sec. 771.

This section has been cited in In re Beavers, (1904) 131 Fed. 366; U. S. v. Rea-Read Mill, etc., Co., (1909) 171 Fed. 601.

Vol. IV, p. 159, sec. 787.

This section has been cited in Leas v. Merriman, (1904) 132 Fed. 510.

Vol. IV, p. 161, sec. 788.

This section has been cited in Leas v. Merriman, (1904) 132 Fed. 510.

Vol. IV, p. 165, sec. 1778.

A bill for an injunction in a federal court, verified before a commissioner of deeds of the city of New York, is improperly verified.

Stationary Engineer Pub. Co. v. Comerford, (1907) 155 Fed. 667.

Vol. X, p. 179, sec. 4.

The term "Northern District of Illinois" is used to designate the district as it existed both before and after the passage of the Act. The purpose of the statute was to give to the new judge all the power possessed by a judge for the Northern District of Illinois. Walsh v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1909) 174 Fed. 615.

Vol. X, p. 181, sec. 12.

This section has been cited in Citizens' Sav., etc., Co. v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., (1907) 205 U. S. 46, 27 S. Ct. 425, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 703.

Vol. X, p. 184, sec. 1. [Washington.]

This section, which divides Washington into two judicial districts, interpreted consistently with the practice of Congress and the judicial history of the country, and the general laws in force relating to the federal judiciary and the jurisdiction and powers of the federal courts and judges, lacks none of the essentials of a sufficient organic law, and the Circuit and District Courts of the Western District of Washington as thereby created are the same courts as those previously existing in the District of Washington, having the same judges and officers and the same powers and jurisdiction within that part of the original district remaining after the Eastern District had been carved therefrom, and being still within the boundaries are constituent parts of the Ninth Judicial Circuit. While the Act does not "ordain and establish" courts in said Western District as required by Const., art. 3, sec. 1, in express words, nor define their jurisdiction and powers further than to fix their terms, nor assign the district to either of the nine judicial circuits, nor provide for the appointment of judges and officers therein otherwise than by providing that the district judge and officers of the District of Washington then in office shall be the district judge and officers of the Western District, the intention of Congress in respect to all such matters is clear from the Act, and in the provisions necessary to carry out such intention. Geiger v. Tacoma R., etc., Co., (1906) 141 Fed. 169.

This section did not in effect abolish the existing Circuit and District Courts, but left them restricted only as to territory, and intact in all other respects. Seattle Electric Co. v. Hartless, (C. C. A. 1906) 144 Fed. 379.

JUDICIARY.

Vol. IV, p. 218, sec. 563, cl. first.

There are no common-law offenses, so called, against the United States, and the courts of the United States have only such jurisdiction as Congress has conferred upon them to try and punish such acts as it shall have previously declared to be crimes against the United States and fixed the penalty for such violations. U. S. v. Hudson, (1812) 7 Cranch 32, 3 U. S. (L. ed.) 259; U. S. v. Hall, (1878) 98 U. S. 343, 345, 25 U. S. (L. ed.) 180; U. S. v. Eaton, (1892) 144 U. S. 677, 687, 12 S. Ct. 764, 36 U. S. (L. ed.) 591; U. S. v. Martin, (1910) 176 Fed. 110.

Excepting that treason is defined by the Constitution, there are no crimes against the United States save such as Congress has expressly defined or recognized and made punishable. The federal courts have no jurisdiction over common-law crimes. U. S. v. Dietrich, (1904) 126 Fed. 676, 678.

Drawing grand jury.—By this clause the jurisdiction of a District Court is by law made coextensive with the territorial area of the district, and, unless limitations are found in the congressional acts, the right to draw a grand jury from the district as a whole would seem to be unquestionable. Clement v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1906) 149 Fed. 306, 308, certiorari denied (1907) 206 U. S. 562, 27 S. Ct. 795, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 1189.

Vol. IV, p. 220, sec. 563, cl. fourth.

Suits by United States.—Duties are a personal debt or charge upon the importer; and in the District of Maine an action of debt is the appropriate remedy for their recovery.

The federal District Courts have jurisdiction of such actions. U. S. v. National Fibre Board Co., (1904) 133 Fed. 596.

Vol. IV, p. 220, sec. 563, cl. sixth.

The right of the United States to sue for recovery of money obtained from it by means of a fraudulent claim is one existing at common law, and under this clause the District Court has jurisdiction of an action by the United States to recover money fraudulently obtained by defendant in payment of a false claim for a pension. Pooler v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1904) 127 Fed. 519.

Vol. IV, p. 220, sec. 563, cl. eighth.

Nature and scope of admiralty jurisdiction.—Admiralty is "a branch of the law not hampered by the rigid rules of the common law and which deals with causes upon considerations even more elastic than pertain to the broad jurisdiction of courts of chancery." Toledo Steamship Co. v. Zenith Transp. Co., (C. C. A. 1911) 184 Fed. 391, 399.

"The maritime law subsists as an entirety as the subject of federal jurisprudence, and is to be administered by the federal courts without impairment by state legislation." Mack Steamship Co. v. Thompson, (1910) 176 Fed. 499, 100 C. A. 57.

A citizen of the United States cannot be deprived by treaty of his constitutional right to invoke the jurisdiction of the national courts of admiralty to determine a cause within the admiralty and maritime jurisdiction to which he is a party, and which is cognizable within the United States. The Neck, (1905) 138 Fed. 144.

Determination of equitable titles.—A court of admiralty has no jurisdiction to determine the equitable title or conflicting claims to partnership property, although it consists of a steamboat and attendant barges employed in commerce upon navigable waters of the United States. Hulings v. Jones, (1908) 63 W. Va. 696, 60 S. E. 874.

Jurisdiction to administer a fund.—Although a court of admiralty has not jurisdiction to foreclose mortgages on vessels, when it has a fund to dispose of it may entertain claims based on mortgages, and its jurisdiction to administer a fund applicable, in whole or in part, to the payment of maritime liens, being exclusive, is not affected by the fact that mortgagees may also have claims against the same fund or by the pendency of foreclosure suits brought by them in a state court. The Conveyor, (1906) 147 Fed. 586.

Jurisdiction of Circuit Court excluded.—Under this subdivision with the third paragraph of R. S. sec. 711, 4 Fed. Stat. Annot. 494, a federal Circuit Court, which through its receiver had sold vessels subject to maritime liens and liens under the state law for supplies, etc., had no jurisdiction to determine and enforce such liens, such jurisdiction belonging exclusively to the District Court in admiralty. Hudson v. New York, etc., Transp. Co., (1909) 175 Fed. 519.

Saving of common-law remedy.—"Although not directly decided, it seems to be fairly inferable from American Steamboat Co. v. Chase, (1872) 16 Wall. 532, 21 U. S. (L. ed.) 369, that this saving clause is applicable in all cases where the action in the state court is in form a common-law action against the person, without any of the ingredients of a proceeding in rem to enforce a maritime lien." The Lotta, (1907) 150 Fed. 219.

The saving of a right of a common-law remedy "leaves open to the common law jurisdiction of the state courts over torts committed at sea." The Hamilton, (1907) 207 U. S. 398, 404, 28 S. Ct. 133, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 264.

"The clause 'saving to suitors a common-law remedy where the common law is competent to give it' is intended to save the remedy or right of action in those courts which proceed according to the course of the common law as distinguished from admiralty proceedings, and the words 'common-law remedy' do not necessarily imply an action or remedy obtainable in a common-law court, but are equivalent to 'the means employed to enforce a right or redress an injury,' nor are they limited to such causes of action as were known to the common law at the time of the passage of the Judiciary Act." Johnson v. Westerfield, (1911) 143 Ky. 10, 135 S. W. 425.

The federal courts did not have exclusive jurisdiction of a suit to partition a vessel between several owners. Such a suit was maintainable in a state court. And the fact that the admiralty courts have no admiralty or maritime jurisdiction to compel the sale of a vessel and the division of the proceeds where there is a majority owner does not affect the jurisdiction of state courts to afford such relief. Reynolds v. Nielson, (1903) 116 Wis. 483, 93 N. W. 455.

The state courts have jurisdiction of an action based on a maritime contract to be performed on the high seas. Ransberry v. North American Transp., etc., Co., (1900) 22 Wash. 476, 61 Pac. 154; Gill v. North American Transp., etc., Co., (1905) 37 Wash. 694, 79 Pac. 778, affirmed (1906) 203 U. S. 579, 27 S. Ct. 778, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 326.

The seizure of a vessel under the Wisconsin attachment law was held not to invade the jurisdiction of the federal admiralty courts, because the vessel itself was not proceeded against; it being simply the reaching of property rights in the property by attachment in a personal action against the owner as a common-law remedy. Phillips v. Eggert, (1907) 133 Wis. 318, 113 N. W. 686.

In an action against a carrier for damage to goods in shipment to plaintiff, the pleadings did not show a case within the exclusive jurisdiction of the federal courts where the answer alleged that the goods were shipped by water, and that the damage was caused by reason of the dangers of navigation, by the grounding of the vessel, and it becoming necessary to lighten the same, which had been assumed by plaintiff by a bill of lading exempting the carrier from liability for loss from perils of navigation and by a general average bond. John Meunier Gun Co. v. Lehigh Valley Transp. Co., (1904) 123 Wis. 143, 101 N. W. 386.

The owner of a vessel who has been held liable in an action at law in a state court for damages caused by collision, may maintain a suit in admiralty to compel contribution from another vessel, alleged to have also been in fault for such collision, even if he failed to avail himself of a provision of the state statute under which he might have brought in the owner of such other vessel in the state court. The Ira M. Hedges, (1910) 218 U. S. 264, 31 S. Ct. 17, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 1039, reversing (1908) 163 Fed. 587.

Nonmaritime transactions in general.— "It is true that a court of admiralty is often spoken of as one of equity, but that phrase means no more than that equitable principles are applied to the solution of matters of maritime jurisprudence. It is a perversion of the phrase to argue from it that because admiralty seeks for aid in the analogies of equity, a maritime court is therefore entitled to draw within its jurisdiction matters primarily of nonmaritime cognizance." United Transp., etc., Co. v. New York, etc., Transp. Line, (1910) 180 Fed. 902.

A cause of action to obtain relief against a fraudulent contract between two corporations, made by an officer common to both, is not maritime in its nature and cannot be brought by either an original or cross libel within the jurisdiction of a court of admiralty, although the contract itself was maritime. United Transp., etc., Co. v. New York, etc., Transp. Line, (1911) 185 Fed. 336.

Waters and places.—It has been frequently held that the admiralty jurisdiction of the United States attaches to all such bodies of water as the bays, indentations, and streams in which the tide ebbs and flows, along the south shore of Long Island, and this admiralty jurisdiction can be lost only when the particular water loses the character of a stream capable of carrying on interstate commerce or of navigation in and out from the ocean for pleasure and business purposes. U. S. v. Banister Realty Co., (1907) 155 Fed. 583, 595.

"It is not in the power of any state to say that the admiralty shall not have jurisdiction over any waters which but for that legislation would be subject to that jurisdiction." Maryland v. Miller, (1910) 180 Fed. 796, citing Workman v. New York, (1900) 179 U. S. 552, 21 S. Ct. 212, 45 U. S. (L. ed.) 314.

The public laws of New Jersey are in force in the littoral waters of Sandy Hook peninsula below low-water mark, whether enacted prior or subsequently to the cession to the United States, by N. J. Act March 12, 1846, of jurisdiction over a portion of that peninsula for military purposes. Hamburg American Steamship Co. v. Grube, (1905) 196 U. S. 407, 25 S. Ct. 352, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 529.

The city of New York was engaged in filling up Riker's Island in East river, embankments and cribwork having been constructed around the outside, leaving a gap through which the tide ebbed and flowed, and through which tugs and scows passed into the interior, carrying material for filling. A scow, having been so towed in, was left until the tide ebbed, when she settled on a projection in the bottom and was injured. It was held that the injury occurred in navigable water, and that an action to recover damages therefor was within the jurisdiction of a court of admiralty. Dailey v. New York, (1904) 128 Fed. 796.

"High seas."—A collision which occurred off a foreign port, although within a marine league of the coast, was nevertheless on the "high seas" for the purposes of jurisdiction of a suit arising therefrom. The Kaiser Wilhelm der Grosse, (1909) 175 Fed. 213.

Property subject to admiralty jurisdiction.

—A navigable structure intended for the transportation of a permanent cargo, as a scow carrying a pile driver and engine, which has to be towed in order to navigate, is a "vessel" and within the admiralty jurisdiction. The Raithmoor, (1911) 186 Fed. 849.

Vessel.—A pumpboat, which consists of a floating structure equipped with engine, boiler, pumps, pipes, and capstans, used for pumping out coal barges, and which can be moved on the water by means of poles or ropes attached to its capstans, or towed, is a navigable structure intended for the transportation of a permanent cargo, to wit, its engine, boiler, pumps, and capstans, from place to place where required to do its work, and therefore is a "vessel" and subject to the admiralty jurisdiction. Charles Barnes Co. v. One Dredge Boat, (1909) 169 Fed. 895.

Incompleted beacon.—Concrete piles built in a navigable stream by a contractor for the government—intended to support a beacon, but which structure had not been completed—had not yet reached the stage when they were devoted to maritime purposes, and a court of admiralty was without jurisdiction of a suit to recover for their injury by a moving vessel. The Raithmoor, (1911) 186 Fed. 849.

Suit for hire of dredge.—A court of admiralty has jurisdiction of a suit to recover the hire of a Bowers hydraulic dredge, intended to operate a float, and generally used for maritime purposes, and should not decline such jurisdiction because the dredge was temporarily used for a partly land transaction in dredging material from a stream for the purpose of depositing the same by means of its pipes on land of the charterer. Bowers Hydraulic Dredging Co. v. Federal Contracting Co., (1906) 148 Fed. 290, affirmed (C. C. A. 1907) 153 Fed. 870.

Foreign persons or property.—"It is the settled law of this country that our admiralty courts have jurisdiction over suits between foreigners, if the subject-matter of the controversy is of a maritime nature, and the ship or party to be charged is within the jurisdiction of the court. It is a jurisdiction the court may decline to exercise where for some special reason it appears to be inexpedient." Fairgrieve v. Marine Ins. Co., (1899) 94 Fed. 686, 37 C. C. A. 190, quoted in The Koenigin Luise, (1910) 184 Fed. 170, which held that the alienage of a seaman did not disentitle him to maintain a suit in a court of admiralty against a foreign vessel within the jurisdiction.

Where the aid of an American court of admiralty is invoked in a settlement for wages between foreign seamen and a foreign vessel, in the absence of treaty stipulations, it rests in the discretion of the court whether it will take jurisdiction, and the courts are inclined to take jurisdiction when, but only when, it is necessary to prevent a failure of justice. The Albani, (1909) 169 Fed. 220, dismissing the libel under the particular circumstances.

A federal admiralty court is not bound to exercise jurisdiction of a libel for wages brought by alien seamen against a foreign vessel, but will use its discretion. Where the voyage is ended, "jurisdiction is usually exercised in the absence of reasons to the contrary." The Bound Brook, (1906) 146 Fed. 160.

A United States court of admiralty has jurisdiction of a suit by a seaman against a foreign vessel to recover wages, and the exercise of such jurisdiction is discretionary. Where the libellant is an American citizen, signed in an American port, although on board the vessel, and claims to have been wrongfully discharged, jurisdiction will be entertained. The August Belmont, (1907) 153 Fed. 639.

A court of admiralty of the United States may, in its discretion, take jurisdiction of a suit by seamen to recover wages from a foreign ship, and will exercise such discretion in favor of jurisdiction where libellants are American seamen and a strong case for immediate relief is shown, or where they invoke the provisions of the statutes of the United States. The Alnwick, (1904) 132 Fed. 117.

The provision of the treaty of Dec. 11, 1871, art. 13, 7 Fed. Stat. Annot. 558, between the German Empire and the United States, that the consular agents of either country "shall have exclusive charge of the internal order of the merchant vessels of their nation, and shall have the exclusive power to take cognizance of and to determine differences of every kind which may arise, either at sea or in port, between the captains, officers, and crews," does not include a claim by a seaman against a vessel or owner for a tort, so as to exclude the jurisdiction of a United States court of admiralty of a suit on such a claim against a German vessel. The Baker, (1907) 157 Fed. 485. But the court is without jurisdiction of a suit against a German vessel to recover wages, brought by seamen who are not citizens of the United States, but who signed before a German consul in a port thereof and were discharged in another port after completing their term of service without objection; and such jurisdiction is not conferred merely by the fact that they were paid wages in advance, in violation of the Act of Dec. 21, 1898, ch. 28, sec. 24, 30 Stat. L. 763, 6 Fed. Stat. Annot. 871. The Bound Brook, (1906) 146 Fed. 160. The treaty provision does not, however, deprive the admiralty courts of the United States of jurisdiction to determine the rights of an American seaman who enters and leaves the service of a German vessel within this country. The Neck, (1905) 138 Fed. 144.

The admiralty court has jurisdiction of a suit against the charterer of a foreign vessel to recover for damage to cargo where it obtains jurisdiction over the defendant, notwithstanding a provision of the bill of lading that any disputes arising thereunder shall be determined by the law of a foreign country and in a court thereof. Gough v. Hamburg Amerikanische Packetfahrt Aktiengesellschaft, (1907) 158 Fed. 174.

A court of admiralty of the United States has jurisdiction of an action in personam against the owner of a foreign ship to recover for injuries sustained by an American passenger on the high seas, irrespective of the law of the ship's flag, the case being governed by the general maritime law as administered in this country. Elder Dempster Shipping Co. v. Poupirt, (C. C. A. 1903) 125 Fed. 732.

A court of admiralty of the United States is not required to decline jurisdiction of a suit brought against foreign vessels, seized within its jurisdiction, belonging to different nations, for an injury which took place on the high seas, in the absence of any treaty provision affecting the case. The Kaiser Wilhelm der Grosse, (1909) 175 Fed. 215.

The right to object to the assumption of jurisdiction by a court of admiralty in a suit by a foreign subject against a vessel of his own country is waived by a general appearance and the filing of an answer by the claimant. The Ucayali, (1908) 159 Fed. 800.

Accounting.—While a court of admiralty is without jurisdiction of a suit to obtain an accounting as such, it has jurisdiction to decree an accounting as incidental to the principal cause of action of which it has undoubted jurisdiction as between the owners of a vessel, with respect to her past earnings in a suit for her sale for partition. The Emma B., (1906) 140 Fed. 771.

Mortgages.—A contract by which a vessel is mortgaged to secure money borrowed to pay the purchase price thereof is not maritime in character, and a court of admiralty will not entertain a suit by the mortgagee to recover possession of the vessel thereunder. The Clifton, (1906) 143 Fed. 460, 74 C. C. A. 594.

Possessory suits.—In a possessory action a court of admiralty may take notice of an equitable title when it comes up incidentally, and especially when it is alleged by way of defense by the claimant in possession. Chirurg v. Knickerbocker Steam Towage Co., (1909) 174 Fed. 188.

In a possessory action in a court of admiralty to recover possession of vessels of which libellant alleged that he was owner claimant, a corporation filed an answer alleging that it was the owner and in possession, that it bought and paid for the vessels several years before, and had been in possession ever since, that it had the title conveyed to its then president in trust for it, and that he, although having no personal interest in such vessels, in collusion with libellant, who knew all of the facts, fraudulently executed a bill of sale to libellant. It was held that such answer stated a defense cognizable in a court of admiralty, which had jurisdiction to determine whether or not libellant's title, alleged as the basis of his right of possession, was fraudulent. Chirurg v. Knickerbocker Steam Towage Co., (1906) 174 Fed. 188.

When a libel for the possession of a vessel shows that the action, which it institutes, involves a mortgage, the validity of which the court would be required to pass upon, and to try questions of fraud and mistake, jurisdiction will not be entertained for the purpose of ousting the mortgagee from possession. The Helys, (1909) 173 Fed. 928.

Affreightment and charter-parties.—Contracts of affreightment are matters of admirality jurisdiction. U. S. Shipping Co. v. U. S., (1906) 146 Fed. 914.

Libellant chartered a vessel and made advances for her disbursements to the master, pursuant to the terms of the charter-party, which provided that such advances should be deducted in all cases from the freight and should be so receipted for the master on the bills of lading. They were so receipted for, but in settling the freight at the end of the voyage, through oversight or mistake, a part of such advances were not deducted, and the owner of the vessel refused to repay the same. It was held that a suit to recover the same was one for breach of the charter, of which a court of admiralty had jurisdiction, and that it might be brought in rem against the vessel, which was bound for the performance of the contract. The Oceano, (1906) 148 Fed. 131.

Maritime fire insurance.—A policy of insurance on a vessel engaged in navigation, although it insures her against fire risks alone, is a maritime contract because of its subject-matter, and an action in personam to enforce payment thereon, is within the jurisdiction of a court of admiralty. North German F. Ins. Co. v. Adams, (1905) 142 Fed. 439, 73 C. C. A. 555.

Salvage.—A court of admiralty may entertain a suit for salvage, in which the claimant pleads a contract under which it is alleged the services were performed, but which libellant seeks to avoid on the ground of fraud or mistake; such court having equitable jurisdiction, in the sense of applying rules of equity to questions incidentally arising in a suit within its general jurisdiction, at least where no objection is made prior to the hearing. The Stanley H. Miner, (1909) 172 Fed. 486.

"It is settled that the distress or danger from which a vessel has been saved need not, in order to justify a recovery of salvage compensation, have arisen solely by reason of a peril of the sea in the strict legal acceptation of those words." Accordingly, a court of admiralty has jurisdiction of a libel claiming salvage for services rendered by tugs in subduing a fire communicated from the shore to a vessel undergoing repairs in a dry dock from which all the water had been emptied. The Steamship Jefferson, (1909) 215 U. S. 130, 30 S. Ct. 54, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 125.

Where a charge for landing a steamer in distress was really a claim for salvage, it was rightfully cognizable by a court of admiralty in a proceeding wherein the members of the salving vessel's crew could participate; and hence such claim was properly withdrawn from an action by the owner of the salving vessel in a state court against the owner of the vessel saved to recover on an account for services rendered, etc. Neel v. Iron City Sand Co., (1907) 149 Fed. 980, 79 C. C. A. 490.

Maritime contract.—"The rule is well settled that the test of admiralty jurisdiction in contract cases is their nature and subject-matter." U. S. Shipping Co. v. U. S., (1906) 146 Fed. 914.

"No pure case of storage, even on the water, can be regarded as maritime in its character;" but where the storage is incidental to the transportation of the goods stored by water, as where they were stored by the carrier for delivery to the consignee, it is maritime, and a court of admiralty has jurisdiction of an action for its breach by nondelivery to the consignee. Evans v. New York, etc., Steamship Co., (1906) 145 Fed. 841.

A contract on the part of respondent, a railroad company operating a line of road having a seaport terminus, to furnish to libellant all the cargoes which it then had or might thereafter have at such port during the term of the contract for shipment over sea, and on the part of libellant to furnish steamships to carry such cargoes, is maritime, and an action for its breach is within the admiralty jurisdiction. Graham v. Oregon R., etc., Co., (1905) 135 Fed. 608.

A suit to recover for an injury to a scow from a charterer, whose duty it was to exercise ordinary care to return her to the owner in good condition, arises out of a maritime contract, and is within the admiralty jurisdiction, irrespective of the place of the injury. Dailey v. New York, (1904) 128 Fed. 796.

A contract by the master of a steamboat to collect and transport certain cotton seed from one port to another within a reasonable time, for freight specified, is a maritime contract, a breach of which entitles the shipper to recover damages in admiralty. Florence Cotton Oil Co. v. Alabama Towboat Co., (C. C. A. 1904) 128 Fed. 915.

A corporation of Washington contracted with a dock company to bring six hundred Japanese laborers from Honolulu to Seattle on respondent steamship, owned by a steamship company, for which the corporation was to pay a stated sum per head for carriage. A Japanese agent of the dock company in Honolulu advertised for laborers and contracted with libellants and others to transport them to Seattle, collecting from them a part of the passage money agreed upon, and taking their notes for the balance. A representative of the steamship company went to Honolulu and there received from the agent a portion of the passage money, and issued tickets for carriage to Victoria, B. C., the vessel being of the Canadian register and not entitled to carry passengers from there to any United States port. Libellants being unable to read the tickets, which were in English, did not know that they were not to be taken to Seattle until they had gone on board, but on learning such fact left the vessel, and libeled her for breach of the contracts. It was held, on evidence showing that the arrangement between the dock company and the steamship company was not a charter but a joint enterprise in the profits of which each was to share, and that the Japanese agent who made the contracts also represented the owner of the vessel, that the contracts were maritime, and gave a right of action in admiralty against the ship. The Stanley Dollar, (C. C. A. 1908) 160 Fed. 911.

While a suit to collect brokerage and money expended in negotiating a charter-party is not a case of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction, nor cognizable in a court of admiralty, a libel which alleges that libellant as agent for respondent executed a charter-party in his own name, by which respondent became obligated as his principal, and that by reason of respondent's breach of the contract libellant was compelled, as the nominal party, to pay damages which he seeks to recover by subrogation to the rights of the other party, is one founded on the charter-party and within the admiralty jurisdiction. Adler v. Galbraith, (1907) 156 Fed. 259.

A vessel insured under a policy payable to the owners was sunk; the insurance was adjusted, and the money paid to a custodian under an agreement between the owners, various lien claimants, and certain mortgagees, that it should be applied (1) to pay for the raising of the boat; (2) to the payment of all maritime, labor, and supply liens against it; (3) to the repair of said boat; and (4) the remainder to be paid to the mortgagees. The boat was raised, but was not repaired, and was sold in admiralty proceedings by the lien claimants. It was decided that the contract under which the insurance money was held was maritime, and the fund subject to administration by the admiralty court, unaffected by the fact that the contract was not fully executed, and that under its terms the seamen and supply claimants were entitled to payment from the fund, leaving the mortgagees to resort to the proceeds of the vessel for any deficiency on their claims. The Conveyor, (1906) 147 Fed. 586.

Passage contract.—A libel in admiralty in rem was maintainable for injuries to a passenger of a steamboat on the Great Lakes resulting from negligence in the performance of the transportation contract, by reason of which negligence the passenger's stateroom was entered, and she was assaulted and robbed. The Western States, (C. C. A. 1908) 159 Fed. 354, certiorari denied 210 U. S. 433, 28 S. Ct. 762, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 1136.

Nonmaritime contract.—Where a contract sued on is not maritime, a court of admiralty is without jurisdiction of the subject-matter, which cannot be conferred by consent, and the objection may be taken at any time. The Oceano, (1906) 148 Fed. 131.

A sale by a merchant to fishermen, who are about to go on a fishing voyage under a lay contract, of tobacco, clothing, and other articles for their personal use, is not a maritime transaction, and a court of admiralty is without jurisdiction of a suit to enforce collection therefor, although a lien is claimed on the vessel under a state statute. The Mary F. Chisholm, (1904) 129 Fed. 814.

A lease of space at a wharf for use by a vessel at a fixed annual rent is a lease of real estate, and not a maritime contract on which a suit in admiralty can be maintained for the collection of the rent, since it has not necessarily any connection with navigation or the commerce of the seas. The James T. Furber, (1904) 129 Fed. 808.

A contract between a marine insurance company and an insurance broker, by which the latter agreed to procure insurance for the company on marine risks on commission, and to be responsible for all premiums due on such insurance, is not a maritime contract, and an action thereon by the company to recover such premiums is not cognizable in a court of admiralty. St. Paul F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Birrell, (1908) 164 Fed. 104.

A lease to a steamer and owners of the privilege of running a line of steamers from a wharf for a certain term for a gross rental, which gives the lessee the exclusive right to use the wharf during such term, and contains a covenant on his part to restore it in as good condition as when the lease went into effect, with certain exceptions, and which makes the rent payable, whether or not the wharf is used by the lessee, is not wholly a maritime contract, and cannot be enforced in a court of admiralty, nor can the lessor be permitted to waive the contract and enforce a lien on the vessel named for wharfage for such use as she in fact made of the wharf; the rights and remedies of the parties being governed by the contract as made. The James T. Furber, (1907) 157 Fed. 126.

A corporation organized to conduct a boys' school on shipboard chartered a vessel for the purpose, and also entered into contracts with libellants, by which it engaged to take pupils for the school year, who were to be received on board and taught the ordinary studies of a preparatory course. During the year the ship was to make a voyage to foreign countries, and the pupils were to be organized into a cadet corps and given instruction in nautical and naval matters. It was held that such contracts were not maritime, and that their breach by the corporation did not give libellant a lien on the vessel enforceable in admiralty. The Pennsylvania, (1907) 154 Fed. 9, 83 C. C. A. 139.

A bond given by the charterer of a vessel to secure his performance of the conditions of the charter-party, which neither requires nor authorizes the surety to perform such contract in case of the default of the principal, but merely to respond in damages for its breach, is not a maritime contract, and an action thereon is not within the admiralty jurisdiction. Pacific Surety Co. v. Leatham, etc., Towing, etc., Co., (1907) 151 Fed. 440, 80 C. C. A. 670.

A traffic agreement between a railroad company and the owner of certain steamships, which were to be used in connection with the railroad of the first party as a part of a through line of transportation, by which agreement the parties were to co-operate in the operation of such line and divide the receipts as connecting carriers, as therein specified in detail, is not maritime in its nature, and a court of admiralty is without jurisdiction of a suit for its breach. Graham v. Oregon R., etc., Co., (1904) 134 Fed. 454.

A contract to furnish material for the construction of a dock, reserving a lien thereon to the seller, is not a matter of maritime jurisdiction, within the exclusive cognizance of the federal courts. Arnold v. Eastin, (1903) 116 Ky. 686, 76 S. W. 855.

Contracts of a mixed nature are not cognizable in the admiralty courts, and where the principal subject-matter of a controversy belongs to the jurisdiction of a court of common law or of equity, the incidental matters must also be relegated to the appropriate jurisdiction; although of themselves they might be cognizable in admiralty. The Pennsylvania, (1907) 154 Fed. 9, 83 C. C. A. 189.

"A towage contract is a maritime contract." Mack Steamship Co. v. Thompson, (1910) 176 Fed. 499, 100 C. C. A. 57.

Liens. — "The jurisdiction of the admiralty court to enforce maritime liens against boats is exclusive. Ballard v. Wiltshire, (1867) 28 Ind. 341." The Conveyor, (1906) 147 Fed. 586; 589.

"(1) For foreign repairs and supplies there arises a lien, apart from statute, enforceable in rem in a court of admiralty, and not so enforceable in the state courts, whether expressly given by statute or otherwise. (2) For domestic repairs and supplies there is no lien, apart from statute (except the possessory lien); but a state statute may give a maritime lien for them enforceable in rem in a court of admiralty, and not so enforceable in the state courts. (3) For construction there is no lien, apart from statute; but a state statute may give a lien, not ordinarily enforceable, in rem or otherwise, in a court of admiralty, but enforceable in the state courts by proceedings which are undistinguishable from proceedings in rem. Even a federal court is not altogether excluded from the enforcement of a statutory lien for the construction of a vessel. If the vessel has been libeled, and sold by a court of admiralty in the enforcement of a maritime claim, the surplus, after satisfying the maritime claim, will be handed over to the person entitled thereto. In the distribution of this surplus the court recognizes claims and liens other than maritime, such as pledges, mortgages, and statutory liens for construction. The Guiding Star, (1881) 9 Fed. 521, on appeal (1883) 18 Fed. 263; The Maud Carter, (1886) 29 Fed. 156. On the ground of diversity of citizenship, a suit to enforce the statutory lien for construction may be brought in the Circuit Court or removed thereto. The Winnebago, (1905) 141 Fed. 945, 73 C. C. A. 295, 142 Mich. 84, 105 N. W. 527, 113 Am. St. Rep. 666, (1907) 205 U. S. 854, 27 S. Ct. 509, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 836." American Trust Co. v. W. & A. Fletcher Co., (C. C. A. 1909) 178 Fed. 471.

A state statute giving a lien on vessels cannot enlarge the jurisdiction of a court of admiralty, which depends upon whether or not the subject-matter of the suit is maritime in its nature. The James T. Furber, (1904) 129 Fed. 808; The Mary F. Chisholm, (1904) 129 Fed. 814.

"It is undoubtedly true that proceedings against vessels in rem to enforce maritime liens are vested exclusively in the District Courts of the United States." Hudson v. New York, etc., Transp. Co., (C. C. A. 1910) 180 Fed. 973; holding, however, that a Circuit Court could sell vessels free from such liens, if the lienors voluntarily submitted themselves to the Circuit Court's jurisdiction.

If holders of maritime liens against vessels come into the Circuit Court having possession of the res, and ask for adjudication upon their liens, they should be held to have assented to the jurisdiction of the Circuit Court for all purposes, including a substitution of the proceeds of sale for the res whenever in the sound discretion of the court such substitution is necessary to preserve the property from deterioration or secure a better price for it. Hudson v. New York, etc., Transp. Co., (C. C. A. 1910) 180 Fed. 973.

A contract for repairs furnished to a canal boat in a port of the state to which she belongs is a maritime contract, and a state statute providing for a lien for repairs upon vessels cannot be enforced by proceedings in rem as also provided in the statute, the federal District Court having exclusive jurisdiction. The Robert W. Parsons, (1903) 191 U. S. 17; 24 S. Ct. 8, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 73.

Under Comp. Laws Mich. 1897, sec. 10789, which gives a lien on watercraft constructed, or being constructed, for towage, a charge for towage of a new vessel being built in that state and completed, except for her fittings, whether regarded as a completed vessel or not, may be enforced by a proceeding in rem against her in an admiralty court, where the contract was with the owner, who was a resident of another state; the contract for towage being maritime. Mack Steamship Co. v. Thompson, (1910) 176 Fed. 499, 100 C. C. A. 57.

Where a steamboat on which a lien for supplies is claimed has been sold, and the money due on the purchase price is brought into the state court, and the construction of a statute of the state becomes necessary, the state court has jurisdiction to construe the statute, and, having construed it, it has jurisdiction to direct to whom the money shall be paid. Shailer v. Hanlon, (1904) 26 Ohio Cir. Ct. Rep. 120.

A state court can only sell the right of the shipowner subject to maritime liens, and where the purchaser at a receivership sale paid, over and above his bid, a certain sum of money to lien claimants, who had filed a libel against the vessel in a court of admiralty, the insolvent estate had no ownership or equity in the money so paid and received, and the lien claimants, who were also creditors of the insolvent, could not be compelled to account for the same in the receivership proceedings. In re Red River Line, (1905) 115 La. 367, 40 So. 250.

Tests — *In general. — A court of admiralty of the United States has jurisdiction of an action in personam against the owner of a foreign ship to recover for injuries sustained by an American passenger on the high seas, irrespective of the law of the ship's flag, the case being governed by the general maritime law as administered in this country. Elder Dempster Shipping Co. v. Pouppirt, (C. C. A. 1903) 125 Fed. 732 (certiorari denied 191 U. S. 576, 24 S. Ct. 848, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 309), affirming on this point 132 Fed. 966.

The fact of locality alone does not give a court of admiralty jurisdiction of an action for a tort committed on the high seas or navigable waters, but it must further appear that the tort was maritime in character, having some relation to a vessel or its owners. Campbell v. Hackfeld, (C. C. A. 1903) 125 Fed. 696.

An action against a contracting stevedore by an employee to recover for personal injuries sustained while discharging a vessel, through the alleged negligence of defendant or his other employees, is not within the admiralty jurisdiction, where no fault is charged against the vessel, her owners, officers, or crew. Campbell v. Hackfeld, (C. C. A. 1903) 125 Fed. 696.

A court of admiralty is without jurisdiction of an action against an agent who issued a policy of marine insurance, brought under Act Pa. May 1, 1876 (P. L. 66), sec. 48, which provides that the agent of any foreign company which does not comply with the laws of the state shall be personally liable "on all contracts of insurance" made by him on behalf of such company. Such an action is not one on contract, but one to recover statutory damages for a tort committed in violating the law, and imposed for the benefit of the person injured, and is not maritime. Reliance Lumber Co. v. Rothschild, (1904) 127 Fed. 745.

An action to recover damages for a personal injury received by libellant by falling from a deck when attempting to go on board a vessel after dark, charged to have been due to the negligence of those in charge of the vessel in removing the gang plank, is not maritime, and therefore not within the jurisdiction of a court of admiralty, where the right of recovery is based on the tort. The Albion, (1903) 123 Fed. 189.

Injuries by vessel.—The admiralty jurisdiction of the federal courts extends to a libel in rem against a vessel for negligently colliding with and destroying a beacon standing some fifteen or twenty feet from the channel, in water twelve or fifteen feet deep, though it is built upon piles driven firmly into the bottom. The Blackheath, (1904) 195 U. S. 361, 25 S. Ct. 46, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 236.

In The Curtin, (1907) 152 Fed. 588, the court expressed the opinion, without positively so deciding, that an action for injury to a pier by a moving vessel is not cognizable in admiralty.

A pontoon floating upon the water of a navigable stream, between high and low water mark, rising and falling with the tide and used as a landing in connection with a ferry, although fastened to the shore by a cable, is not land, and an action for an injury to a person thereon by a moving vessel is for a maritime tort and within the admiralty jurisdiction. The Mackinaw, (1908) 165 Fed. 351.

Injuries to structures on land.—A court of admiralty has no jurisdiction of a libel in rem against a vessel, based on injuries inflicted to the piers or abutments of a railroad bridge spanning a navigable stream, to the piling placed around the centre abutment in order to protect vessels from injury, and to a shore deck or wharf. Cleveland Terminal, etc., R. Co. v. Cleveland Steamship Co., (1908) 208 U. S. 316, 28 S. Ct. 414, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 508. Nor can redress be afforded in admiralty for injuries inflicted by a colliding vessel upon the draw of a bridge over a navigable stream, and to its centre pier protection. The Troy, (1908) 208 U. S. 321, 28 S. Ct. 416, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 512.

A collision in a navigable river between vessels and the surface part of borings made to locate an aqueduct under the bed of the river for municipal purposes is not in any sense maritime, and a suit to recover damages for injury to such borings is not within the admiralty jurisdiction. The Poughkeepsie, (1908) 162 Fed. 494, affirmed 212 U. S. 558, 29 S. Ct. 687, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 451.

Admiralty had no jurisdiction of the injury where a pier of a lawfully constructed bridge resting in the bottom of a navigable river was run into by a vessel, causing a span of the bridge to fall into the stream, though the damage was largely effected by the action of the water after the fall of the bridge. West v. Martin, (1908) 51 Wash. 85, 97 Pac. 1102.

Contribution.—A court of admiralty has jurisdiction of a libel brought by one of two vessels, which were both adjudged to be in fault for a collision, to enforce contribution on account of its payment of the entire damage to the cargo of the other vessel. Erie R. Co. v. Erie, etc., Transp. Co., (1907) 204 U. S. 220, 27 S. Ct. 246, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 450.

Right of action for a death.—There is no admiralty jurisdiction under the general maritime law authorizing the maintenance of a proceeding in rem against a vessel for the death of a person injured as the result of negligence. The Lotta, (1907) 150 Fed. 219. There is no right of action for wrongful death under the general maritime law. Williams v. Quebec Steamship Co., (1903) 126 Fed. 591.

In the absence of an Act of Congress or a state statute giving a right of action therefor and a lien on a vessel, a libel in rem cannot be maintained in admiralty to recover for the death of a human being on the high seas, resulting from negligence. The Aurora, (1908) 163 Fed. 633; Williams v. Alaska Commercial Co., (1903) 2 Alaska 43, 64.

"In the admiralty, it has become well settled that where damages or death occur, it is not sufficient that the wrong originated upon the water. If it was not consummated upon the water, jurisdiction does not exist." Ryley v. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co., (1909) 173 Fed. 839, holding that the court had no jurisdiction to award damages for the death of a person on shore from injuries caused by a collision in the Delaware river.

The steamer Bertha engaged to tow the schooner Dora B. to Lituga bay, but owing to rough weather passed that port and steered for Yakutat. Before reaching Yakutat, and while off the coast of Alaska, the hawser parted. Instead of returning to the tow and rendering further assistance, the Bertha kept on her course, abandoning the Dora B., which was carried on the coast and wrecked, and the deceased lost his life. It was held to be immaterial that the parting of the hawser happened over three miles off shore and out of the jurisdiction of the court, it appearing that the disaster which caused the decedent's death happened upon the shore within the three-mile limit and within the jurisdiction of the court. Williams v. Alaska Commercial Co., (1903) 2 Alaska 43.

"The decision in The Harrisburg, (1886) 119 U. S. 199, 7 S. Ct. 140, 30 U. S. (L. ed.) 358, settled the proposition definitely, that in the absence of federal or state legislation giving a right of action therefor, a suit in admiralty cannot be maintained to recover damages for death caused by wrongful act or negligence upon the high seas. Whether an action in rem in the admiralty can be maintained upon the statute of a state, unless a lien is distinctly given, and whether such an action will lie, even if a lien be given, are questions about which the courts have differed." Fisher v. Boutelle Transp., etc., Co., (1908) 162 Fed. 994.

The statutory law of a state authorizing recovery for wrongful death may be enforced in a court of admiralty where the death occurred in a collision in the waters of the state. Trauffer v. Detroit, etc., Nav. Co., (1910) 181 Fed. 256.

A statute of a state may be applied to a suit in admiralty to recover for a death on the high seas arising purely from tort, where the vessel belonged to the state in question; but the burden rests upon the libellant to establish by satisfactory evidence that the vessel was one of such state, where it is denied, which cannot be presumed from the fact that her owner is a corporation of such state. Fisher v. Boutelle Transp., etc., Co., (1908) 162 Fed. 994.

Vol. IV, p. 235, sec. 563, cl. sixteenth.

An act cannot be held to be a tort either in violation of the law of nations, or of a treaty of the United States, when the Executive, Congress, and the treaty-making power all have adopted the Act. O'Reilly de Camara v. Brooke, (1908) 209 U. S. 45, 28 S. Ct. 439, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 676.

Defendant, while governor of Cuba during its occupation by the United States, abolished a valuable franchise owned by plaintiff, who was a Spanish subject. On appeal the Secretary of War of the United States confirmed the governor's order. Subsequently, by the so-called "Platt Amendment," incorporated in the treaty between the United

A section in the Oregon statutes declared that, when the death of a person is caused by the wrongful act or omission of another, the personal representatives of the former may maintain an action at law against the latter, if the former might have maintained an action, had he lived, against the latter for the injury done by the same act or omission. Another section declared that every boat or vessel used in navigating the waters of the state shall be subject to a lien for all demands for damages for injuries done to persons or property by such boat or vessel; another section provided for the priority of liens; and another section declared that any person, instead of proceeding against the master, owner, or agent, may sue the boat or vessel by name. It was held that, where a longshoreman employed by a vessel was killed while assisting in loading her by an alleged defect in the gang plank, his administratrix was entitled to maintain a libel in rem in the admiralty courts of the United States to recover damages for his death. The Aurora, (1908) 163 Fed. 633.

Code Pub. Gen. Laws Md. 1904, art. 67, secs. 1, 2, creating a cause of action for wrongful death, and providing for assessment of damages by a jury, is not for that reason unenforceable in the federal courts of admiralty sitting in that state by a libellant to recover for wrongful death happening in consequence of a negligent obstruction in the navigable waters of the state; the right of trial by jury not being indispensable to the enforcement of the right conferred. Maryland v. Miller, (1910) 180 Fed. 796.

Seizures.—In cases of seizures on land, the District Court proceeds, not as a court of admiralty, but as a court of common law upon a trial by jury. U. S. v. Spraul, (C. C. A. 1911) 185 Fed. 405, 408.

States and the republic of Cuba, it was provided that "all acts of the United States in Cuba during its military occupancy thereof are ratified and validated, and all lawful rights acquired thereunder shall be maintained and protected." It was held that such ratification was equivalent to an original authorization of defendant by the United States government to make the order in question and exempted defendant from any personal liability to plaintiff for depriving her of her property right in the franchise. O'Reilly de Camara v. Brooke, (1906) 142 Fed. 858, affirmed (1908) 209 U. S. 45, 28 S. Ct. 439, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 676.

Vol. IV, p. 236, sec. 566.

Application of statute.—The provision for a jury trial "in causes of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction" applies only to the Great Lakes and waters connected therewith, and then only to such issues of fact as arise in cases of contract or tort, the statute having no reference to foreign vessels or those trading between ports of the same state. The Western States, (C. C. A. 1908) 159 Fed. 354, certiorari denied 210 U. S. 433, 28 S. Ct. 762, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 1136.

Proceedings for deportation under section 13 of the Chinese Exclusion Act of Sept. 13, 1888, 25 Stat. L. 479, 1 Fed. Stat. Annot. 772, are administrative rather than judicial, and are not "causes" in the proper sense of that word as used in section 566, providing for a jury trial. Toy Tong v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1906) 146 Fed. 343.

Proceeding for recovery on forfeited recognizance.—Under this section and the provisions in the 7th Amendment to the Federal Constitution, 8 Fed. Stat. Annot. 37, defendants in a proceeding by scire facias on a forfeited recognizance in a federal District Court in which the United States sought to recover $1,000 were entitled to a trial by jury of issues of fact tendered unless such right was waived. Hollister v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1906) 145 Fed. 773.

Effect of verdict.—In The Western States, (C. C. A. 1908) 159 Fed. 354, certiorari denied 210 U. S. 433, 28 S. Ct. 762, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 1136, a passenger filed a libel against a steamboat in rem, charging the owners with negligence in performing the contract for libellant's transportation, and the issue was tried by a jury under this section. It was held that the verdict was not merely advisory, and that the power of the court can go no further than to grant a new trial, but that the district judge properly set aside a verdict for $15,000 on the ground that it was the result of passion and prejudice, or a misunderstanding of his charge, and entered a decree for libellant for $5,000.

Trial without a jury.—R. S. sec. 649, 4 Fed. Stat. Annot. 393, which provides for the waiving of a jury, applies only to the Circuit Court. U. S. v. Cleage, (C. C. A. 1908) 161 Fed. 85; U. S. v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., (C. C. A. 1909) 169 Fed. 73; Low v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1909) 169 Fed. 86.

In Low v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1909) 169 Fed. 86, a criminal case, the defendants and the government waived a jury, and the case was heard upon the evidence by the court, and a general judgment rendered of guilty upon certain counts and not guilty upon others. On writ of error it was held that the judge must be regarded only as an arbitrator, the court also saying: "For the reason indicated we may not inquire into the sufficiency of the evidence to support any judgment, or any matter of form in respect to the indictment, nor review the action of the court below upon the admission or rejection of evidence, nor any question of law arising out of or upon the evidence. But if there appears upon the record proper, the process, the pleadings, and the judgment, defects which should have prevented the rendition of the judgment, and for which it should have been arrested, such apparent defect or insufficiency in law is equally fatal upon writ of error." Bond v. Dustin, (1884) 112 U. S. 604, 5 S. Ct. 296, 28 U. S. (L. ed.) 835; Kentucky L., etc., Ins. Co. v. Hamilton, (1894) 63 Fed. 93, 99, 11 C. C. A. 42.

Review on writ of error after trial by court.—Where an action at law triable by jury under this section is by consent of the parties tried to the court without a jury, no question of fact or law decided upon or in connection with the trial is subject to re-examination in an appellate court. U. S. v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., (C. C. A. 1909) 167 Fed. 306; U. S. v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., (C. C. A. 1909) 169 Fed. 73.

In U. S. v. Cleage, (C. C. A. 1908) 161 Fed. 85, the court said: "In these respects the law applicable to the District Courts and to the review of their judgments is to-day precisely the same as was the law applicable to the Circuit Courts and to the review of their judgments before the enactment of the statute now embodied in sections 649 and 700 of the Revised Statutes [4 Fed. Stat. Annot. 393, 450]. . . . Where, in a cause otherwise triable by jury, the parties agree upon a statement of the ultimate facts, and not the evidence of them, and the cause is then submitted to the court, without a jury, for its decision of the questions of law arising upon the facts so stated, the judgment may be reviewed upon a writ of error; and this because there the facts are not determined upon a trial by the court, but by the agreed statement, which is spread at large upon the record, as part of it, as would be a special verdict."

Vol. IV, p. 239, sec. 607.

This section is superseded by Judicial Code, sec. 118, ante, p. 192 of this Supplement.

The measure of the power and authority of a circuit judge within the territorial limit of his circuit is the power and authority of the circuit justice allotted to that circuit. If the circuit justice may exercise his authority in chambers either inside or outside his circuit, and outside of the particular district of the litigation, a circuit judge may do the same judicial acts, provided only he acts within his circuit. Horn v. Pere Marquette R. Co., (1907) 151 Fed. 626, holding that a circuit judge, sitting at chambers within his circuit, may appoint a receiver in a cause pending in another district of the circuit. See also R. S. sec. 368, 4 Fed. Stat. Annot. 257.

Vol. IV, p. 243, sec. 609.

This section is expressly repealed by Judicial Code, sec. 297, ante, p. 250 of this Supplement; and Circuit Courts are abolished by Judicial Code, sec. 289, ante, p. 249.

One of the judges named, sitting alone, exercises the power of all three. Cuyler v. Atlantic, etc., R. Co., (1904) 132 Fed. 568.

A district judge is a judge of the Circuit Court, and, when presiding therein, has jurisdiction to appoint a commissioner to select jurors from which a grand jury is to be drawn for that court under the Act of June 30, 1879, ch. 52, sec. 2, 4 Fed. Stat. Annot. 749. U. S. v. Miller, (1911) 187 Fed. 369.

Vol. IV, p. 246, sec. 629, cl. third.

Officers of the United States.—A receiver of a national bank is an officer of the United States, and an action by him to recover assets of the bank is one of which a federal Circuit Court has jurisdiction without regard to the amount involved or the citizenship of the parties. Schofield v. Palmer, (1904) 134 Fed. 753; Murray v. Chambers, (1907) 151 Fed. 142.

Vol. IV, p. 246, sec. 629, cl. fourth.

Under Act providing revenue from imports.—The Circuit Court has jurisdiction of an action at law against a collector of customs who withholds refunds accruing under a decision by the Board of General Appraisers. Klampp v. Thomas, (C. C. A. 1908) 162 Fed. 833.

Postal laws.—This subdivision does not confer exclusive jurisdiction on the federal courts in controversies arising under the postal laws, but only concurrent with the courts of the states, and for this reason state courts may take cognizance of such cases. Lewis Pub. Co. v. Wyman, (1907) 152 Fed. 200.

Vol. IV, p. 249, sec. 629, cl. sixteenth.

This subsection "has reference solely to those actions brought under the statute to redress the deprivation of the civil rights secured by sections 1977 and 1979 of the Revised Statutes [1 Fed. Stat. Annot. 791, 795]." Holt v. Indiana Mfg. Co., (1900) 178 U. S. 68, 20 S. Ct. 272, 44 U. S. (L. ed.) 374.

Alleged deprivation of due process of law.—A suit against the governor and certain officers of the national guard of a state, founded on imprisonment for two and one-half months under the order of the governor, without sufficient reason, but in good faith in the exercise of his power under the state constitution and laws to call upon the military arm of the government to suppress an insurrection, is not within the original jurisdiction of a federal Circuit Court as a suit authorized by law to be brought to redress the deprivation of any right secured by the Constitution of the United States. In such case it cannot be successfully contended that plaintiff was deprived of his liberty without due process of law. Moyer v. Peabody, (1909) 212 U. S. 78, 29 S. Ct. 235, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 410, affirming judgment in (1906) 148 Fed. 870.

Effect of Circuit Courts of Appeals Act.—The pecuniary limitation of appellate jurisdiction in this section was not transferred to the appellate jurisdiction of the Circuit Court of Appeals by section 4 of the Act of 1891, 4 Fed. Stat. Annot. 397, creating the latter court. The Joseph B. Thomas, (C. C. A. 1906) 148 Fed. 762.

Vol. IV, p. 257, sec. 638.

This section is embodied in Judicial Code, sec. 9, ante, p. 134; Circuit Courts being abolished by Judicial Code, sec. 289, ante, p. 249.

Appointment of receiver at chambers.—This statute is little, if anything, more than a recognition of the inherent and ancient powers of a chancellor exercising the powers of equity judges in matters of equitable cognizance, according to the rules and practice of the English courts of equity, at the time of the adoption of the Constitution. Horn v. Pere Marquette R. Co., (1907) 151 Fed. 626, holding that a federal circuit judge had authority at chambers to make an order appointing a receiver in a pending cause.

Vol. IV, p. 258, sec. 641.

The denial in summoning or impaneling jurors, of any equal civil rights secured to an accused by the Federal Constitution or laws, does not, unless authorized by the state constitution or laws, as interpreted by its highest court, give the right to remove a criminal prosecution from a state to a federal Circuit Court, under this section. Kentucky v. Powers, (1906) 201 U. S. 1, 26 S. Ct. 387, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 633.

A local statute relative to the qualifications of grand jurors, and providing that persons to be competent must be above the age of twenty-one and under the age of sixty-five years, and that no exception to any such juror on account of his age shall be allowed after he has been sworn, does not deny or prevent the enforcement of any rights secured to a person indicted by the grand jury under any law providing for equal civil rights of citizens of the United States, within the meaning of R. S. sec. 641. New Jersey v. Corrigan, (1906) 139 Fed. 758.

Under a local law which provides that no person shall be a competent juror for the trial of a criminal case, unless he be a citizen at least twenty-one years of age, a house-keeper, sober, temperate, discreet, and of good demeanor, and that juries de medietate lingue may be directed by the court, it was held that it did not appear as a matter of law that, because the statute also required jurymen in criminal cases to be citizens, the court had no power to grant an alien charged with a criminal offense a jury consisting of six citizens and six aliens of his own nationality, or that the state courts would so construe such sections as to deny an alien such right; and hence an alien charged with a crime was not entitled to have the prosecution removed to the federal courts because he could not secure a jury de medietate lingue in the state courts, under this section. Kentucky v. Wendling, (1910) 182 Fed. 140.

Removal of an indictment to a federal court on the ground that under the law of the state the petitioner has no right to challenge a grand juror after he has been sworn is unauthorized, as the petitioner has an adequate remedy for any alleged grievance in the state courts; and, failing therein, can obtain relief by a writ of error to the United States Supreme Court. New Jersey v. Corrigan, (1905) 139 Fed. 758. But see Kentucky v. Powers, (1906) 201 U. S. 1, 26 S. Ct. 387, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 633.

Denial of civil rights.—The right of removal under this section, given to a defendant who is denied or cannot enforce his civil rights in the judicial tribunals of the state, is not affected by the fact that such rights may be enforced ultimately by proceedings in error in the Supreme Court of the United States. The remedy by removal is given by the statute to all who bring themselves within its provisions. Kentucky v. Powers, (1906) 201 U. S. 1, 26 S. Ct. 387, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 633, reversing (1905) 139 Fed. 452.

While this section is not as broad as the provision of the Fourteenth Constitutional Amendment for the equal protection of the laws, since it is confined to the action of judicial tribunals, it is not restricted to cases where civil rights are denied by legislative action of the states; but it applies as well where, by rulings in other cases, or in the same case prior to final hearing, a rule of judicial decision has been established which will presumably so affect the judicial tribunals of the state as to cause a denial of civil rights to a defendant, or prevent their enforcement. Kentucky v. Powers, (1906)

Where the petitioner's failure to obtain a trial of an action in a state court resulted from her inability to secure an attorney for that purpose, or because the plaintiff had been able to secure postponements of the trial against defendant's protest, and not because of any command or authority of the state, or any provision of the laws of the state, it was held that the defendant was not entitled to remove the cause to the federal courts under R. S. sec. 641. Scott v. Kinney, (1905) 137 Fed. 1009.

The nonrecognition by the state courts of the validity of a pardon pleaded in bar of a criminal prosecution, even if involving a denial of a right secured to the accused by the Federal Constitution or laws, does not make a case for a removal of such cause from a state to a federal Circuit Court under this section. Kentucky v. Powers, (1906) 201 U. S. 1, 26 S. Ct. 387, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 633, reversing (1905) 139 Fed. 452.

Denial of equal protection of laws.—A petition for removal filed by a defendant in a criminal prosecution, taken in connection with the transcript filed in the federal court, showed that petitioner had been tried three times on the charge in a Circuit Court of Kentucky, and that each time he had been convicted, and the judgment reversed by the state Court of Appeals; that the crime charged grew out of a political contest; that on the second and third trials petitioner had been discriminated against in the selection of the jurors by those charged under the state law with the duty of drawing the panel and summoning venire men, with the result that all the jurors by whom he was tried were in each case members of the opposite political party to himself; that on objections properly taken to the panel and jury on that ground, and on motions for new trial, the court refused to consider evidence offered to prove such discrimination, and ruled that the petitioner had no right to object thereto, inasmuch as the jurors chosen possessed the statutory qualifications. By Kentucky Code Crim. Prac., sec. 281, as construed by the Court of Appeals, such rulings of a trial court with respect to juries are made final, and are not subject to review. It was held that by such discrimination petitioner was denied the equal protection of the laws secured to him by the Fourteenth Amendment to the Federal Constitution, and that the petition showed a right of removal under this section. Kentucky v. Powers, (1906) 201 U. S. 1, 26 S. Ct. 387, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 633, reversing (1905) 139 Fed. 452.

Vol. IV, p. 260, sec. 643.

A petition for the removal of a criminal prosecution commenced in a state court against a revenue officer of the United States, under R. S. sec. 643, need not be filed until after the indictment of the defendant, where an indictment is required by the state law, until which time the prosecution has not been "commenced" within the meaning of the statute. Such petition need not contain allegations of local prejudice. Virginia v. Felts, (1904) 133 Fed. 85.

This section authorizes a revenue officer against whom a prosecution has been commenced in a state court on account of an act done under color of his office to remove the cause, "at any time before the trial thereof," into the "Circuit Court next to be holden in the district," but it does not require the petition for removal to be filed at the place where the next session of the Circuit Court is to be held after indictment, where there are several places of holding court in the district, and it may be filed, at any time before trial, at the place where the next term thereafter is to be held. Such requirement is directory only, and the filing of the petition in the clerk's office at a different place is not ground for remanding the cause to the state court. Virginia v. Felts, (1904) 133 Fed. 85.

To render an action against an officer of the United States removable from a state to a federal court by certiorari under this section, the acts which constitute the cause of action must have some rational connection with official duties under a "revenue law," and in some way affect the revenue of the government, and such fact must appear on the face of the complaint in the action or the petition for the writ. An action for libel against the Assistant Attorney-General for the Post Office Department and an inspector of such department, based on the promulgation by them of a fraud order against the plaintiff, does not meet such requirements and is not removable. People's U. S. Bank v. Goodwin, (1908) 162 Fed. 937.

W. H. Thomas, etc., Co. v. Barnett, (1905) 135 Fed. 172, affirmed (C. C. A. 1906) 144 Fed. 338, was a removed action against a surveyor of customs to recover damages for acts done in his official capacity.

Schafer v. Craft, (1906) 144 Fed. 907, was a removed action against a collector of internal revenue for the recovery of a tax and penalty paid under compulsion.

This section does not include actions against officers acting under the postal laws. Lewis Pub. Co. v. Wyman, (1907) 152 Fed. 200.

Vol. IV, p. 265, sec. 647.

Congress has not conferred jurisdiction on the Circuit Courts over controversies between citizens of different states because, apart from diversity of citizenship, they may have claimed title by grants from different states, even if it had power to do so. Stevenson v. Fain, (1904) 195 U. S. 165, 25 S. Ct. 6, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 142.

Vol. IV, p. 265, sec. 1.

Circuit Courts are now abolished by Judicial Code, sec. 289, see ante, title JUDICIARY, p. 249 of this Supplement. The jurisdiction formerly exercised by them, especially that which is prescribed in the text section, is conferred upon the District Courts by Judicial Code, sec. 24, see ante, title JUDICIARY, p. 139, and the text section is expressly repealed by Judicial Code, sec. 297, see ante, p. 250. The provision as to the venue of suits is now in Judicial Code, secs. 51-57, see ante, title JUDICIARY, pp. 153-155.

I. JURISDICTION OF CIRCUIT COURTS IN GENERAL.

The general object of the Act was to contract the jurisdiction of the federal courts, and all doubts must be resolved against their jurisdiction. Joy v. St. Louis, (1903) 122 Fed. 524; St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Davis, (1904) 132 Fed. 629.

The judicial power of the United States, vested in the federal courts by U. S. Const., art. 3, sec. 1, embraces all controversies of a justiciable nature arising within the territorial limits of the nation, no matter who may be the parties thereto, except so far as there are limitations expressed in the Constitution on the general grant of judicial power. Kansas v. Colorado, (1907) 206 U. S. 46, 27 S. Ct. 655, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 956.

The entire judicial power of the nation granted to the federal courts by Const. U. S., art. 3, sec. 1, is not limited by the declaration in section 2 that "the judicial power shall extend to all cases in law and equity arising under this Constitution, the laws of the United States," etc. Kansas v. Colorado, (1907) 206 U. S. 46, 27 S. Ct. 655, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 956.

The cases and controversies prescribed by the Constitution for the courts to act upon judicially embrace claims brought before the courts by regular proceedings for the enforcement of rights, or for the prevention of wrongs. Ayres v. U. S., (1908) 44 Ct. Cl. 110.

The term "controversies" in article 3 of the Constitution of the United States refers to cases in which such controversies are brought to the attention of the court, and not to quarrels, disputes, or controversies at large. So there could be no controversy of which the court could take or retain jurisdiction without a cause pending. Hence a case which has been dismissed by order of the court is not a "controversy," but merely a dispute at large. Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Larwill, (1910) 83 Ohio St. 108, 93 N. E. 619.

Limited jurisdiction of courts.—The law is well settled that the courts of the United States, inferior to the Supreme Court, are mere creatures of Congress, and possess no powers except those specifically granted to them by an Act of Congress, and this limitation applies to all causes which, under the Constitution, Congress might have granted to the national courts jurisdiction to hear and determine. Lewis Pub. Co. v. Wyman, (1907) 152 Fed. 200. To the same effect see Stevenson v. Fain, (1904) 195 U. S. 165, 25 S. Ct. 6, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 142; U. S. v. Mar Ying Yuen, (1903) 123 Fed. 159; U. S. v. Barrett, (1905) 135 Fed. 189; Risley v. Utica, (1909) 168 Fed. 737.

Under U. S. Const., art. 3, providing that the judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one supreme court and in such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish, an inferior court need not possess all the powers and subjects of jurisdiction of every other inferior court of the United States. James v. U. S., (1903) 38 Ct. Cl. 615, reversed on other grounds in (1906) 202 U. S. 401, 26 S. Ct. 685, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 1079.

Since federal courts exercise but a limited jurisdiction, conferred by the Federal Constitution and laws, there is no presumption in favor of their jurisdiction which must affirmatively appear of record. Yeandle v. Pennsylvania R. Co., (C. C. A. 1909) 169 Fed. 938; Newcomb v. Burbank, (C. C. A. 1910) 181 Fed. 334.

An admission made on the trial of an action in the Circuit Court, of "the liability of defendant in this case and everything as alleged except the measure of damages," does not cure the omission of the declaration to allege facts giving the court jurisdiction. Grand Trunk Western R. Co. v. Reddick, (C. C. A. 1908) 160 Fed. 898.

At law and in equity.—The Circuit Courts of the United States have a jurisdiction in law and a jurisdiction in equity, vested in the same judges. Armstrong Cork Co. v. Merchants' Refrigerating Co., (C. C. A. 1910) 184 Fed. 199.

II. SUITS OF A CIVIL NATURE AT COMMON LAW OR IN EQUITY.

"Of a civil nature."—A claim for future alimony under a judgment of a state court is an action of a civil nature within the jurisdiction of the federal courts, other jurisdictional requisites being present. Israel v. Israel, (1904) 130 Fed. 237.

The Massachusetts Employers' Liability Act, which authorizes an action to recover damages for the death of an employee, to be "assessed with reference to the degree of culpability of the employer or of the person for whose negligence the employer is liable," is not a penal statute in such sense that an action based thereon may not be maintained in a federal court. Malloy v. American Hide, etc., Co., (1906) 148 Fed. 482.

In equity.—The equity jurisdiction of the federal courts is the same as that possessed by the High Court of Chancery in England, and is uniform throughout the states. Union Pac. R. Co. v. Flynn, (1910) 180 Fed. 565.

The equity jurisdiction of the federal courts is uniform throughout the states and not subject to limitation or restraint by state legislation. Union Pac. R. Co. v. Flynn, (1910) 180 Fed. 565.

The jurisdiction of a federal court was not granted by, and may not be annulled or impaired by, the law of any state. Mechanics' Ins. Co. v. C. A. Hoover Distilling Co., (C. C. A. 1910) 182 Fed. 599.

A state statute precluding interference by a court of equity with the collection of taxes by injunction does not apply to the federal courts. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Trapp, (C. C. A. 1911) 186 Fed. 114.

Where federal jurisdiction attaches at law, it attaches for some purpose in equity, and vice versa. Whelan v. Enterprise Transp. Co., (1908) 164 Fed. 95.

The jurisdiction in equity in the federal courts is concurrent with that of law; and in matters requiring an accounting, which would be difficult or impracticable for a jury to make, a court of equity will entertain jurisdiction. London Guarantee, etc., Co. v. Bell Telephone Co., (1909) 171 Fed. 278.

A federal court of equity is not without jurisdiction of a suit expressly authorized by a state statute, and in which equity alone can afford the entire relief sought, because of the fact that legal questions are also involved. New Jersey, etc., Land, etc., Co. v. Gardner-Lacy Lumber Co., (C. C. A. 1910) 178 Fed. 772, reversing (1908) 161 Fed. 768.

A proceeding by a stockholder or creditor of a corporation for an injunction and the appointment of a receiver for the corporation as an insolvent, under the New Jersey Corporation Act (P. L. 1896, p. 298, sec. 65), which authorizes such proceeding in the Court of Chancery whenever a corporation shall become insolvent or suspend its ordinary business for want of funds, is one involving a money controversy, so as to that extent to be within the jurisdiction of a federal court, where diversity of citizenship exists and the requisite amount is in dispute. Jacobs v. Mexican Sugar Co., (1904) 130 Fed. 589.

The federal courts enforce a vendor's lien under the general rule in equity, when not in contravention of the jurisprudence of the state in which the suit is brought. Wilson v. Plutus Min. Co., (C. C. A. 1909) 174 Fed. 317.

A federal court in equity has jurisdiction to disregard or enjoin enforcement of an unconscionable judgment of the state or national court for new causes, such as fraud, accident, or mistake, which led the court into rendition of a wrong judgment, or prevented the judgment defendant from availing himself of a meritorious defense. Horton v. Stegmyer, (C. C. A. 1910) 175 Fed. 756.

Jurisdiction stated of the federal court to enforce the trust impressed upon the property of a decedent in favor of his creditors, heirs, and legatees. McClellan v. Carland, (C. C. A. 1911) 187 Fed. 915.

The existence of a remedy at law in a state court does not oust a federal court of jurisdiction in equity, under the rule that a federal court of equity, following the chancery precedents, does not inquire concerning the remedies available in a state court, but whether a federal court of law offers an adequate remedy, which inquiry is confined to the remedies in the federal courts, regardless of the antiquity of the remedies offered by the state. Borden's Condensed Milk Co. v. Baker, (C. C. A. 1910) 177 Fed. 906, reversing (1909) 168 Fed. 111.

In determining whether or not a complainant has a plain, adequate, and complete remedy at law which will deprive a federal court of equity of jurisdiction, recourse is to be had to the principles of equity, and not to the statutes of the state in which the court sits. Empire Circuit Co. v. Sullivan, (1909) 160 Fed. 1009. And see also R. S. sec. 723, 4 Fed. Stat. Annot. 530, and the note to the corresponding place, infra, in this Supplement.

Jurisdiction of bills to perpetuate testimony, see R. S. sec. 866, 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 20, and note p. 1061 of this Supplement.

Effect of state legislation.—The power of the federal courts was not granted by, and may not be revoked, impaired, or restricted by, any law or act of a state. Brun v. Mann, (1906) 151 Fed. 145, 80 C. C. A. 513; Collins County Nat. Bank v. Hughes, (C. C. A. 1907) 155 Fed. 389; Butler Bros. Shoe Co. v. U. S. Rubber Co., (C. C. A. 1907) 156 Fed. 1; Dunlop v. Mercer, (C. C. A. 1907) 156 Fed. 545.

The Constitution and laws of the United States confer jurisdiction and the duty on the national courts to enforce their judgments and to decide by their own independent judgment every controversy which affects their complete execution, and the power cannot be limited or diminished by the legislation of the states or the decisions of their courts. Brun v. Mann, (1906) 151 Fed. 145, 80 C. C. A. 513.

Rights created and remedies provided by the statutes of the state to be pursued in the state courts may be administered in the national courts, either at law or in equity, or in admiralty, as the nature of the rights and remedies may require. Platt v. Leocq, (C. C. A. 1907) 158 Fed. 723, reversing (1906) 150 Fed. 391.

Where the laws of a state enlarge the jurisdiction of the probate courts, which ordinarily embraces proceedings in rem in respect to estates of decedents, as the probating of wills and the administration of estates by which the property of a decedent is devolved, to include also suits formerly cognizable in the form of ordinary suits at law or in equity in courts of general jurisdiction, they are dealing with that which may also be subject to the judicial power of the United States, and, while they may properly regulate the jurisdiction of the courts of the state, they cannot restrict that of the federal courts. Spencer v. Watkins, (C. C. A. 1909) 169 Fed. 379.

If a suit, when viewed in the light of recognized principles of jurisprudence, appears to be a suit of a civil nature at common law or in equity, it matters not that by a local statute exclusive cognizance has been in terms reserved to the courts of the state generally or to some specially designated local tribunal. Spencer v. Watkins, (C. C. A. 1909) 169 Fed. 379.

A state statute authorizing the maintenance of a suit to quiet title, although the plaintiff is out of possession, is an enlargement of equitable rights which may be administered by a federal court, and, having jurisdiction to entertain such an action, the federal court may determine any question arising therein which could be determined by any state court. Farr v. Hebe-Peters Land Co., (C. C. A. 1911) 188 Fed. 10, reversing (1908) 176 Fed. 644.

The provision of a state law prohibiting unqualified foreign corporations doing business in the state from suing in its courts, does not affect the power of the federal courts to determine controversies in bankruptcy proceedings or other controversies of which the Constitution and the Acts of Congress give them jurisdiction. Dunlop v. Mercer, (C. C. A. 1907) 156 Fed. 545.

Proceedings relating to wills.—Since the United States Circuit Courts in equity have the jurisdiction of the High Court of Chancery at the adoption of the Constitution, such courts have no jurisdiction of pure probate proceedings, quasi in rem, establishing the succession of a decedent's property, which at that time was within the exclusive jurisdiction of the ecclesiastical courts. Underground Electric R. Co. v. Owsley, (1909) 169 Fed. 671.

But a Circuit Court of the United States may, as a court of equity, having the full jurisdiction of the English Courts of Chancery as they existed at the time of the adoption of the Constitution, in a suit where it has jurisdiction of the parties, appoint a receiver of an estate pending the probate of a will, in the absence of the appointment of a custodian by the probate court, and this although proceedings for the probate of the will and the appointment of an executor are pending in such court which have been delayed by reason of litigation between parties in interest. Underground Electric R. Co. v. Owsley, (C. C. A. 1909) 176 Fed. 26.

If the statutes of the state in which the property of the deceased is being administered give to its courts of general jurisdiction the right to entertain an original action to set aside the probate of a will, such a suit may be maintained in a Circuit Court of the United States, in case the parties are citizens of different states and more than $2,000 is involved. Pulver v. Leonard, (1909) 176 Fed. 586.

Where the controversy over the validity of a will arises between citizens of different states, the federal court has jurisdiction of a proceeding to contest it, which the statutes of a state authorize to be instituted in the courts of general jurisdiction of the state. Sawyer v. White, (1908) 122 Fed. 223, 58 C. C. A. 587.

Settlement of estates.—Federal courts have no original jurisdiction in respect to the administration and general settlement of the estates of deceased persons. Thiel Detective Service Co. v. McClure, (1904) 130 Fed. 55.

Federal courts act with reference to estates of deceased persons only to ascertain and enforce claims between citizens of different states after the state courts have probated the will or established intestacy. Underground Electric R. Co. v. Owsley, (1909) 169 Fed. 671.

A person entitled to a distributive share of the estate of a deceased person may maintain a suit in a Circuit Court of the United States against the administrator concerning his right to such share. Pulver v. Leonard, (1909) 176 Fed. 566.

While federal courts will not take cognizance of purely administrative proceedings in the settlement of decedents' estates, and will not invade the possession of the assets taken by probate courts for the purpose of administration, federal courts will take jurisdiction of a suit by a widow, a citizen of one state, against the executors of her deceased husband's estate situated in another state, to set aside her election to take under the will, as procured by fraudulent concealment by one of the executors, and to establish and enforce her claim under the statute of decedents and distribution of the state, allowing a widow to elect to take a statutory estate instead of the provision made for her by the will. Eddy v. Eddy, (C. C. A. 1909) 168 Fed. 590.

Under a statute relating to claims against the estates of decedents, which required such claims to be filed with the clerk of the District Court within the stated time to prevent the same from being barred by limitation and to fix their class, and unless approved by the executor or administrator they must thereafter be established by the court on notice in what is in effect an ordinary independent suit, it was held that the filing of a claim as so required by a nonresident creditor does not bar his right to maintain a suit to establish the same in a federal court where the jurisdictional facts exist, even if it be assumed that after such filing the matter is pending in the state court. Farmers' Bank v. Wright, (1908) 158 Fed. 841.

While a federal court cannot interfere with property in the hands of an administrator, which is in the custody of the state probate court, it may adjudicate the rights of parties before it in such property, and such adjudication will be binding on the administrator and may be enforced against him personally. Order of St. Benedict of New Jersey v. Steinhauser, (1910) 179 Fed. 137.

A federal court has jurisdiction, equally with a state court of general jurisdiction, of a suit to establish a lien on the interest of defendants in funds belonging to the estate of a decedent and in the hands of an administrator; whatever action it may take, however, being subject to that of the probate court within its proper jurisdiction. Ingersoll v. Coram, (1903) 127 Fed. 418.

Though a creditor of a deceased person may establish the validity of his claim by a suit at law in the federal courts, provided requisite jurisdictional elements are present, yet on recovering judgment, if the same is not paid, the creditor must ordinarily seek relief by a marshaling of assets in the state courts having jurisdiction of the settlement of estates. Thiel Detective Service Co. v. McClure, (1904) 130 Fed. 55.

The chancery jurisdiction of the federal courts embraces a suit, where the requisite diversity of citizenship exists, to have the complainants adjudicated to be the heirs at law and next of kin of a decedent. McClellan v. Carland, (1910) 217 U. S. 268, 36 S. Ct. 501, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 762.

The jurisdiction of a federal Circuit Court of a controversy between citizens of different states, presented by a bill which seeks to declare and foreclose an attorney's lien upon certain interests in the distributive shares of the property of a decedent within the district, is not defeated because the settlement of the estate is pending in a state probate court, where no interference with that court is sought or decreed, and rights between the parties arising from their transactions and contracts are adjudged and are decreed to be redressed only when the probate court shall have finished its functions. Ingersoll v. Coram, (1908) 211 U. S. 385, 29 S. Ct. 92, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 208.

While proceedings for the probate of a will or the establishment of intestacy of a decedent's estate are in abeyance or in dispute, the federal Circuit Court has jurisdiction, at the instance of a noncitizen, to appoint receivers to preserve the estate. Underground Electric R. Co. v. Owsley, (1909) 169 Fed. 671.

Where the surviving partner of a firm is one of the executors of the estate of his deceased partner, the settlement of which is pending in the probate court of the state, a bill in equity will not lie in the federal Circuit Court to compel an accounting between such executors, involving an accounting by the surviving partner of his deceased partner's interest in the firm, such proceeding being within the jurisdiction of the probate court. Moore v. Fidelity Trust Co., (1905) 134 Fed. 489, affirmed 138 Fed. 1, 70 C. C. A. 663.

Mandamus proceedings.—A federal Circuit Court has no jurisdiction of original proceedings seeking relief by mandamus. Knapp v. Lake Shore, etc., R. Co., (1905) 197 U. S. 586, 25 S. Ct. 538, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 870.

Any legal right which a stockholder of a national bank may have to obtain an inspection of its books may be enforced in the state courts by mandamus. Guthrie v. Harkness, (1905) 199 U. S. 148, 26 S. Ct. 4, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 130, affirming (1904) 27 Utah 248, 75 Pac. 624, 107 Am. St. Rep. 664.

Exercise of the function of parens patriæ for the determination of the right to the custody of an insane person is not within the jurisdiction of a federal court. Hoadly v. Chase, (1904) 126 Fed. 818, affirmed (1903) 129 Fed. 1005, 64 C. C. A. 319.

III. AMOUNT IN CONTROVERSY.

The jurisdictional amount prescribed in this section, viz. $2,000, is increased to $3,000 by the Judicial Code, sec. 24, first paragraph. See ante, title JUDICIARY, p. 139, of this Supplement.

In what cases jurisdictional amount is necessary — Generally. — Federal jurisdiction in an action at law between citizens of different states does not exist, unless the amount involved exceeds $2,000, exclusive of interest and costs. Shewalter v. Lexington, (1906) 143 Fed. 161; Southern Land, etc., Co. v. Johnson, (1907) 156 Fed. 246; Turner v. Jackson Lumber Co., (C. C. A. 1908) 159 Fed. 923; Peters v. Queen Ins. Co., (1910) 182 Fed. 113.

The fact that a suit in a federal court involves a federal question is not sufficient to confer jurisdiction unless the amount involved exceeds $2,000. Shewalter v. Lexington, (1906) 143 Fed. 161.

The jurisdiction of a federal court must affirmatively appear from the record, and a bill for the partition of lands does not state a case within the jurisdiction where it shows the value of the complainant's interest therein to be less than $2,000. Southern Land, etc., Co. v. Johnson, (1907) 156 Fed. 246.

On an application to a federal court by a shareholder in a national banking association for a writ of mandamus to compel the association to permit him to inspect a list of its shareholders, based on R. S. sec. 5210, the pleadings must show that the matter in dispute exceeds the value of $2,000 to give the court jurisdiction. Large v. Consolidated Nat. Bank, (1905) 137 Fed. 168.

But an action by a receiver of a national bank to collect a debt due the bank is one brought under authority of R. S. sec. 5234, and is within the jurisdiction of a federal court, regardless of the amount in controversy. Schofield v. Palmer, (1904) 134 Fed. 753. See also Rankin v. Herod, (1904) 130 Fed. 390; Rankin v. Herod, (1905) 140 Fed. 661.

Interest and costs excluded. — The amount in controversy is to be determined exclusive of the interest and costs. Turner v. Jackson Lumber Co., (C. C. A. 1908) 159 Fed. 923.

Costs. — Thus where a statute provided that when an insurance company refuses to pay a loss within sixty days after demand it shall be liable to the policy holder, in addition to the loss, for not more than twenty-five per cent. on the company's liability, and also for all reasonable attorney's fees for the prosecution of the case, provided it shall appear that the insurer's refusal to pay the loss was in bad faith; it was held that the amount recoverable for attorney's fees under such section should be regarded as "costs," defined by the state court to include all charges fixed by statute as compensation for services rendered by officers of the court in the progress of the cause; and hence, where a reasonable amount for attorney's fees under such statute was necessary to bring the amount in controversy up to $2,000, the action, though between citizens of different states, was not within the jurisdiction of the federal Circuit Court. Peters v. Queen Ins. Co., (1910) 182 Fed. 113.

Interest. — But where defendant refused to pay the amount due on an accident policy providing for payment of $2,000 in case of assured's accidental death, and there was no contract for interest in the policy, it was held that interest was not a mere incident or accessory to the matter in dispute in an action in a federal court in assumpsit for $3,000 damages for defendant's failure to perform, but constituted, with the amount of the policy, aggregate damages for the breach; and hence the action involved a sum in excess of $2,000, exclusive of interest and costs, and was within federal jurisdiction. Continental Casualty Co. v. Spradlin, (C. C. A. 1909) 170 Fed. 322.

Absence of pecuniary value. — The Circuit Court has no jurisdiction of a suit to correct an ambiguity in the deed of a railroad right of way, and to restrain the removal of gates at a crossing in the inclosure thereof, where the value of the realty and the damage accruing to adjacent property from the road's construction are not shown to exceed $2,000; and the fact that animals may stray on the track through the threatened openings in the inclosure, and cause wrecks occasioning great damage, does not help the case, since, when jurisdiction depends on a particular sum, suits where the right involved cannot be calculated in money are not within it. Oregon R., etc., Co. v. Shell, (1903) 125 Fed. 979.

"Matter in dispute" defined. — The value of the matter in dispute, on which the jurisdiction of the federal Circuit Court is based, is the value of that which complainant seeks to recover, or the value of that which defendant will lose if complainant obtains the recovery he seeks. Cowell v. City Water Supply Co., (1903) 121 Fed. 53, 57 C. C. A. 393, reversing (1899) 96 Fed. 769.

An action by heirs to set aside, as fraudulent, judgment rendered by a probate court against the estate, none of which exceeds $2,000, cannot be brought within the jurisdiction of the Circuit Court by reason of the fact that the real estate on which the judgments are liens exceeds in value that amount. McDaniel v. Traylor, (1905) 196 U. S. 415, 25 S. Ct. 369, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 533, reversing (1903) 123 Fed. 338.

In a suit to set aside a conveyance of property, and mortgages given thereon, the value of the property and rights which will be affected if the relief prayed for is granted, and not the value of complainant's interest in the property, constitutes the amount in dispute, for the purpose of determining the jurisdiction of a federal court. Cowell v. City Water Supply Co., (1903) 121 Fed. 53, 57 C. C. A. 393, reversing (1899) 96 Fed. 769.

In a suit by an alleged owner of 1/325 of certain real property, consisting of waterworks and their appurtenances, to cancel and avoid mortgages thereon for $475,000, and to declare his interest in the property free from the liens of such mortgages, the sum or value in dispute is the value of the 1/325 of the property, which complainant claims to own and seeks to relieve from the lien of the incumbrances. Cowell v. City Water Supply Co., (1903) 121 Fed. 53, 57 C. C. A. 393, reversing (1899) 96 Fed. 769.

Where plaintiff sued to quiet title and to set aside a deed of trust on certain land, and also to vacate a deed executed to the purchaser under foreclosure of such deed of trust, but asked in the alternative that, if the deeds be not set aside, she be permitted to redeem on payment of the mortgage debt, interest, and costs, the amount involved, for the purpose of determining the jurisdiction of the federal Circuit Court, was held to be the value of the land, and not the amount required to redeem. Greenfield v. U. S. Mortgage Co., (1904) 133 Fed. 784.

Where suit was brought in a federal court to quiet title to certain property as against certain street improvement certificates amounting to less than $2,000, the amount of the certificates, and not the value of the land, constituted the subject-matter of the action, and was therefore insufficient to confer jurisdiction. Shewalter v. Lexington, (1906) 143 Fed. 161.

The amount of all the judgments against a municipality concerning which relief was sought, and which were directly adjudicated to be barred by the statute of limitations, and not simply the judgment fund in the hands of the treasurer, is the amount in controversy, for the purpose of a writ of error from the federal Supreme Court to a territorial Supreme Court, to review a judgment denying relief by mandamus, where the prayer was for a continuous levy of taxes by the municipal officers for the amount permitted by law annually to be applied in payment of the judgments. Beadles v. Smyser, (1908) 209 U. S. 393, 28 S. Ct. 522, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 849, reversing (1906) 17 Okla. 162, 87 Pac. 292.

A suit by a surety for cancellation of a bond for $40,000, on which, if valid, complainant is subject to a liability exceeding $2,000, involves a sufficient amount to confer jurisdiction on a federal court. Fidelity, etc., Co. v. Moshier, (1907) 151 Fed. 806.

Where, in a suit to enforce a double liability of stockholders of an insolvent bank, the debts of complainants, who were citizens of Indiana, against the bank, a citizen of Kentucky, exceeded $2,000, exclusive of interest and costs, and the trust fund to be collected from the stockholders was nominally $200,000, it was held that the amount in controversy was sufficient to sustain federal jurisdiction. Conway v. Owensboro Sav. Bank, etc., Co., (1908) 165 Fed. 822.

Where the primary purpose of a bill was to enjoin the execution of a contract for the construction of a city water system and to restrain the issuance and delivery of city bonds to the extent of $600,000 on the ground that the issue of the bonds was void, and the bill alleged that if the bonds were issued complainant would be required to pay in taxes a sum exceeding $10,000, such amount represented the amount in controversy for the purpose of determining federal jurisdiction. Helena r. Helena Waterworks Co., (C. C. A. 1909) 173 Fed. 18.

A controversy between a state corporation commission and a railway company, which involves not only the right to enforce against the railway company the payment of statutory penalties in excess of $2,000, but also the right of that company to carry on interstate commerce in the state without being subject to orders and directions of the corporation commission, which so directly burdened such commerce as to amount to a regulation thereof, which right is alleged in the bill to be of the necessary jurisdictional value, such allegation being supported by testimony, and found to be the fact, is within the jurisdiction of a federal Circuit Court, although a dispute of some $146 demurrage may have been the origin of the litigation. McNeill v. Southern R. Co., (1906) 202 U. S. 543, 26 S. Ct. 722, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 1142, modifying (1904) 134 Fed. 82.

In a suit concerning water rights, the thing in controversy is the right to the use of the water, and where that exceeds in value $2,000, exclusive of interest and costs, a Circuit Court of the United States has jurisdiction. Morris v. Bean, (1906) 146 Fed. 423.

How ascertained — Claim. — The amount or value in controversy stated in plaintiff's complaint is the sole test of federal jurisdiction, so far as concerns courts of the first instance. Eisele v. Oddie, (1904) 128 Fed. 941. See also Hayne v. Woolley, (1910) 180 Fed. 573; Baley v. Woolley, (C. C. A. 1910) 183 Fed. 1021.

Plaintiff's allegations of value govern in determining the jurisdiction of a federal Circuit Court except where, upon the face of his own pleadings, it is not legally possible for him to recover the jurisdictional amount, or where such allegations are fraudulently made for the purpose of creating the jurisdiction. Smithers v. Smith, (1907) 204 U. S. 632, 27 S. Ct. 297, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 656; Hampton Stave Co. v. Gardner, (1907) 154 Fed. 805, 83 C. C. A. 521.

But when, from the nature of the action as set forth in plaintiff's complaint, there could not legally be a judgment for the amount necessary to the jurisdiction of a federal court, jurisdiction cannot attach, though the damages are laid in a larger sum. Vance v. W. A. Vandercook Co., (1898) 170 U. S. 468, 18 S. Ct. 645, 42 U. S. (L. ed.) 1111; Battle v. Atkinson, (1903) 191 U. S. 559, 24 S. Ct. 845, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 302.

And the federal courts are required to take note of the fact, when it is a fact, that the plaintiff cannot, under the allegations of his petition, possibly recover as much as $2,000, and the allegations as to the quantum of damages must in such case be regarded as merely colorable, and made solely for the purpose of stating a case apparently within the jurisdiction of the federal court as to amount. Clement v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., (1907) 153 Fed. 979.

But a federal court will not dismiss a bill for want of jurisdiction on demurrer on the ground that the requisite jurisdictional amount is not involved in the suit where the bill alleges that the matter in dispute exceeds in value such amount, and discloses no facts which contradict such allegation. North American Cold Storage Co. v. Chicago, (1907) 151 Fed. 120.

On a bill to enjoin publication of complainant's biography in a set of books, an allegation that the right infringed is worth $2,000 is prima facie sufficient to confer jurisdiction of the subject-matter on the federal Circuit Court, in the absence of proof that the facts which he gave for publication in another set of books were merely formal, or such as any one might learn. Colgate v. White, (1910) 180 Fed. 882.

In an action to recover damages for depriving plaintiff of rights secured to him by the Constitution and laws of the United States under color of a state statute or law, the plaintiff is not required to allege that defendants acted maliciously, and a failure to do so does not authorize the court to determine as matter of law that only nominal damages are recoverable, and that therefore the action is not within the jurisdiction of a federal court. Brickhouse v. Brooks, (1908) 165 Fed. 534.

A matter in dispute exceeding the value of $2,000 is presented by a cross-bill which seeks to recover a balance of $1,700 due on a contract for the exchange of soda fountain apparatus, where the original bill, which was dismissed on complainant's own motion, asked for the cancellation of his agreement to pay $2,025 in consideration of the exchange. Kirby v. American Soda Fountain Co., (1904) 194 U. S. 141, 24 S. Ct. 619, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 911.

Recovery. — Under the Judiciary Act the amount in dispute in determining the jurisdiction of the court is the amount demanded in good faith, and not the amount ultimately recovered. Denver City Tramway Co. v. Norton, (1905) 141 Fed. 599, 73 C. C. A. 1.

The amount in dispute in an action for damages, in which the damages are determinable by the jury, is sufficient to give a federal court jurisdiction, where more than $2,000, exclusive of interest and costs, is demanded, and the facts alleged are such as to justify the good faith of such demand. O. J. Lewis Mercantile Co. v. Klepner, (C. C. A. 1910) 176 Fed. 343.

Where a suit against a mutual benefit association to invalidate an assessment involved a certificate for $2,000 and benefits, and defendant's allegation as to the amount involved was not traversed, it was held that the amount was sufficient to confer federal jurisdiction, notwithstanding a tender of premium. Enders v. Supreme Lodge, etc., (1910) 176 Fed. 882.

Aggregate of claims — Generally. — The value of the matter in dispute, in a suit to set aside judgments of a probate court establishing claims against the estate of an intestate, which are a lien on his real property inherited by complainants, on the ground that they were fraudulently obtained by defendants acting in concert, is the aggregate amount of the claims whose allowance was procured in furtherance of the unlawful combination. McDaniel v. Traylor, (1905) 196 U. S. 415, 25 S. Ct. 369, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 533, reversing (1903) 123 Fed. 338; on second appeal (1909) 212 U. S. 428, 29 S. Ct. 343, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 584.

In a suit by the several owners of water rights in a stream, joining as complainants for conveyance only, to enjoin the obstruction of the stream or the diversion of water therefrom by defendants, the matter in dispute must exceed $2,000, exclusive of interest and costs, as to each complainant, in order to give a federal court jurisdiction. Eaton v. Hoge, (1905) 141 Fed. 64, 72 C. C. A. 74, reversing 135 Fed. 411.

In a suit brought in a federal court by creditors of an insolvent corporation on behalf of themselves and all other creditors similarly situated, to recover property alleged to belong to the corporation, but to have been fraudulently acquired by certain of the defendants, where the claims of some of the complainants exceed $2,000, others may join although their claims are less than that amount. Starwood v. Wishard, (1905) 134 Fed. 959.

Where county bonds were owned by the holders jointly, it was held that they were entitled to join as plaintiffs in a suit therein in the federal courts, and that the whole sum sued for, and not the value of the interest of each party, constituted the amount in controversy for the purpose of determining the court's jurisdiction. Thomas v. Green County, (C. C. A. 1908) 159 Fed. 399.

In an action in a federal court on several notes, the jurisdictional amount in controversy is the aggregate of the judgment prayed for. Heffner v. Gwynne-Treadwell Cotton Co., (C. C. A. 1908) 160 Fed. 685.

The undivided interests of the joint owners and holders of the bonds and coupons on which suit is brought may be united for the purpose of making up the amount necessary to give jurisdiction to a federal Circuit Court. Green County v. Thomas, (1909) 211 U. S. 598, 29 S. Ct. 168, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 843, affirming (C. C. A. 1908) 159 Fed. 359.

A person holding claims, each below the jurisdictional amount, but together aggregating more than $2,000, and constituting, when so united, a single cause of action, may, if permitted by the local rules of joinder, bring them all together for determination into a federal court. Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Erie R. Co., (1909) 172 Fed. 899.

The aggregate sum of the possible penalties sued for in several actions brought by the United States against a carrier under Act June 29, 1906, ch. 3594, §4 Stat. L. 607, requiring the unloading of live stock during transit, and consolidated, is the amount in dispute for the purpose of sustaining the appellate jurisdiction of the federal Supreme Court. Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. U. S., (1911) 220 U. S. 94, 31 S. Ct. 366, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 384, modifying (1908) 159 Fed. 33, 86 C. C. A. 223.

Aggregate amount sufficient.—Where a state railroad commission imposed a fine of $2,000 on each of two connecting railroads for through charges made on shipments, in alleged violation of an order of the commission, a bill for an injunction, filed by the companies, as joint complainants, alleging such fact, and that the commission threatened and intended also to enforce its said order with respect to future shipments, shows a sufficient value in controversy to give a federal court jurisdiction. Louisiana R. Commission v. Texas, etc., R. Co., (1906) 144 Fed. 68, 75 C. C. A. 226.

Where complainant sued to set aside special tax bills assessed against certain lots in a city, of which he owned the fee, and he was the equitable owner of other lots assessed, and the tax bills on all the lots amounted to over $2,000, it was held that the federal court had jurisdiction. Field v. Barber Asphalt Paving Co., (1902) 117 Fed. 925, modified (1904) 184 U. S. 618, 24 S. Ct. 784, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 1142.

Where the assets of an insolvent corporation proceeded against under a state statute, exclusive of interest and costs, exceed $2,000, and the claims of the creditors joined in the bill exceed such amount, though no creditor has a claim equal to that amount, the jurisdictional amount is sufficient to give a Circuit Court of the United States jurisdiction. Jones v. Mutual Fidelity Co., (1903) 123 Fed. 506.

Aggregate amount insufficient.—Where, in a suit to restrain the enforcement of a franchise tax against a corporation amounting to about $3,000, it was averred that $1,117.04 of such amount was claimed by the state and the balance by the counties, cities, and towns for local purposes, and the bill was not sustainable in so far as it affected the amount claimed by the state on the ground that the suit was really against the state, which could not be sued without its consent, the amount of the tax in controversy which remained was insufficient to confer jurisdiction on the federal courts. Coulter v. Fargo, (1904) 127 Fed. 912, 62 C. C. A. 444.

Claims or demands assigned for collection only, the assignors retaining the absolute owners, and paying pro rata the expenses of collection, including costs and attorneys' fees, cannot be added to the amount of the assignee's own claim to create an amount in dispute in excess of $2,000, for the express purpose of enabling suit to be brought in a federal Circuit Court. Woodside v. Beckham, (1910) 216 U. S. 117, 30 S. Ct. 387, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 498, affirming (1906) 142 Fed. 617.

Under a state statute which authorized the joinder of several causes of action against several insurance companies liable for a single loss under several policies, it was held that where, notwithstanding such joinder, the liability of each was separate, and not joint, the federal court had no jurisdiction of such an action where the alleged liability of each insurance company did not exceed $2,000. Wisconsin Cent. R. Co. v. Phoenix Ins. Co., (1903) 123 Fed. 969.

Where a purchaser of real estate executed two vendor's lien notes for $1,200 each, one of which was transferred to each of the plaintiffs, and, not having been paid, plaintiffs joined in a suit in the federal court to recover judgment on the notes and foreclose the lien, it was held that the lien which secured both notes was but an incident to the notes, and that the two notes could not be added for the purpose of establishing an amount in controversy sufficient to sustain federal jurisdiction. Troy Bank v. Whitehead, (1910) 184 Fed. 932.

Suits for injunction.—In a suit for an injunction in a federal court the amount in dispute for jurisdictional purposes is the value of the right to be protected, and where the requisite value is alleged and not denied it is immaterial how much, or whether any, actual loss has been sustained. Southern Pac. Co. v. Bartine, (1909) 170 Fed. 725.

In a suit by a railroad company in a federal court against a number of landowners to enjoin threatened interference with its use of its right of way through their lands, the value of the right sought to be protected, and not the value of the land constituting the right of way across the lands of defendants, constitutes the value in controversy for jurisdictional purposes. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Smith, (1904) 128 Fed. 1, 63 C. C. A. 1.

In a suit by a carrier to restrain the "scalping" of nontransferable round-trip tickets issued at a reduced fare on account of gatherings expected to be largely attended from various parts of the country, the value of the business so sought to be protected determines the amount in controversy for the purpose of determining the jurisdiction of the federal court. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Bitterman, (1906) 144 Fed. 34, 75 C. C. A. 192, affirmed (1907) 207 U. S. 205, 28 S. Ct. 91, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 171; Texas, etc., R. Co. v. Bitterman, (1906) 144 Fed. 46, 75 C. C. A. 204.

A suit for an injunction to protect a claimed property right, from which it is alleged and shown that complainant realized $30,000 per year, and which right is denied by defendant, involves a sufficient amount to be within the jurisdiction of a federal court. Chicago Board of Trade v. Cella Commission Co., (1906) 145 Fed. 28, 76 C. C. A. 28, reversing (1903) 121 Fed. 1012; Chicago Board of Trade v. Donovan Commission Co., (1906) 145 Fed. 31, 76 C. C. A. 16.

In a suit by a member of a nonstock corporation to restrain alleged illegal and ultra vires action by its governing body, the amount involved, for jurisdictional purposes, is the value of the rights sought to be protected; and a federal court has jurisdiction where it is shown by the bill that the mismanagement complained of, if not restrained, will result in the creation of debts, and may result in the loss of the corporation's property, which largely exceeds in value the jurisdictional amount. McKee v. Chautauque Assembly, (1903) 124 Fed. 808, affirmed (1904) 130 Fed. 536, 65 C. C. A. 8.

In a suit to enjoin the enforcement of an ordinance imposing a license tax on complainant's business, alleged to be prohibitory, the amount in controversy, for the purpose of determining the jurisdiction of a federal court, is the value of such business. Humes v. Little Rock, (1898) 138 Fed. 929.

In a suit to restrain certain voluntary labor organizations, and officers and members of the same, from interfering with the business of complainant, the amount in dispute for the purpose of determining the jurisdiction of a federal court is the value of complainant's right to conduct its business, and an allegation in the bill that complainant will be damaged by the acts of defendants in a sum exceeding $2,000 is sufficient to confer jurisdiction. Rocky Mountain Bell Telephone Co. v. Montana Federation of Labor, (1907) 156 Fed. 809.

A bill by the owner of a number of tugs and barges employed in navigation which required them to pass through defendant's canal to enjoin defendant from enforcing certain alleged illegal regulations and charges states a cause of action in the nature of a continuing trespass, and where it shows that complainant is subjected to charges owing to such exactions amounting to some $1,600 per year, it discloses a sufficient amount in dispute to give a federal court jurisdiction. Chesapeake, etc., Canal Co. v. Gring, (C. C. A. 1908) 159 Fed. 662.

The jurisdictional amount involved in a suit brought by the New York Cotton Exchange to enjoin the defendant from receiving and using quotations of sales on such exchange until he shall have acquired the right to receive them from the exchange, or, with its consent and approval, from one of the telegraph companies authorized to distribute them, is to be measured by the value to the exchange of the right to control the quotations, and not by the rate paid by the defendant under his contract with the telegraph company furnishing him with such quotations. Hunt v. New York Cotton Exch., (1907) 205 U. S. 322, 27 S. Ct. 529, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 821, affirming (1906) 144 Fed. 511.

In a suit to enjoin the wrongful and unlawful interference with complainant's business, the amount in controversy, for the purpose of the jurisdiction of a federal court, is the value of the right sought to be protected, and a general averment in the bill that the value of the matter in dispute exceeds $25,000, together with further allegations, showing the extent of complainant's business which has been interfered with, and which will be interfered with in the future, unless protected by injunction, tending to show that the value of such right sought to be protected in the future largely exceeds $2,000, are sufficient, when not denied, to give the court jurisdiction. Evenson v. Spaulding, (1907) 150 Fed. 517, 82 C. C. A. 263, 9 L. R. A. N. S. 904, affirming (1906) 149 Fed. 913.

Where, in a suit in a federal court to enjoin the enforcement of a municipal smoke ordinance, complainant alleged that it was a foreign corporation, and that the amount involved was largely in excess of $2,000, exclusive of interest and costs, it was held that the bill sufficiently showed the jurisdiction of the federal courts. Glucose Refining Co. v. Chicago, (1905) 138 Fed. 209.

In a suit to enjoin the maintenance of a nuisance, the matter in dispute, for the purpose of determining the jurisdiction of a federal court, is not the damage resulting to complainant from the alleged nuisance, but the right of defendant to maintain the same, and the value of such right determines the amount in controversy. American Smelting, etc., Co. v. Godfrey, (C. C. A. 1907) 158 Fed. 225, 14 Ann. Cas. 8.

A suit by a minority stockholder to restrain a misapplication of corporate funds is brought in right of the corporation, and the amount involved, for the purpose of determining the jurisdiction of a federal court, is the value of the right of the corporation sought to be protected, and not the value of complainant's interest therein. Larabee v. Dolley, (1909) 175 Fed. 365.

A suit by a stockholder in a banking corporation for an injunction to restrain the acceptance by the bank of the provisions of the bank guaranty law of Kansas (Laws 1909, ch. 61), which contemplates a continuing course of business and an initial and annual deposit of money by the bank with the state treasurer aggregating more than $2,000, which fund may be used by the state in paying losses of other banks, involves a sufficient amount to give a federal court jurisdiction. Larabee v. Dolley, (1909) 175 Fed. 365.

Under a state law which permits any numbers of persons whose burdens as taxpayers may be increased thereby to join in a suit to enjoin the unauthorized expenditure of public money by state officers, the value of the right sought to be protected from invasion, and not the loss which may result to each separate complainant, measures the amount in controversy for the purposes of federal jurisdiction. Larabee v. Dolley, (1909) 175 Fed. 365.

To restrain collection of taxes.—In a suit by an educational corporation to restrain public officers from levying and collecting taxes upon its property under an alleged exemption to its charter, the value of the matter in dispute for the purpose of determining the jurisdiction of a federal court is not limited to the amount of the particular tax which has been or is threatened to be levied, but is the value of the right to the exemption claimed. Whitman College v. Berryman, (1907) 156 Fed. 112.

A suit to enjoin the enforcement of a tax levied on lands under authority of a state by the sale of timber from such lands, where it is not alleged that the tax is illegal, but merely that it was erroneously levied, is not a suit to remove a cloud on title, and the amount involved for the purpose of determining the jurisdiction of a federal court is the amount of the tax, and not the value of the land. Douglas Co. v. Stone, (1903) 191 U. S. 557, 24 S. Ct. 843, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 301, affirming (1901) 110 Fed. 812.

Where suit was brought against a tax collector to enjoin the collection of certain taxes, the amount of which was less than $2,000, the case was not within the jurisdiction of a federal court. Turner v. Jackson Lumber Co., (C. C. A. 1908) 159 Fed. 926.

The Circuit Court has no jurisdiction of a suit to restrain the enforcement of a personal state tax amounting only to $80, though the tax constitutes a cloud on the complainant's title to realty the value of which exceeds $2,000. Purnell v. Page, (1903) 128 Fed. 496.

In ejectment to recover possession of land, including a mill site with the mill thereon, the amount in controversy to sustain federal jurisdiction is not the value of the whole property which plaintiff claimed as described in his complaint. Butters v. Carney, (1904) 127 Fed. 622.

In an action of ejectment in a federal court to recover a tract of land alleged to be of greater value than $2,000, the court is not ousted of jurisdiction because the defendant by his answer disclaims as to all except a portion of the tract which is of less value. Way v. Clay, (1904) 140 Fed. 352.

In a suit for an accounting by a surviving partner, the amount in controversy is the value of the entire partnership property, and where that exceeds $2,000 it is sufficient to sustain the jurisdiction of a federal court. Rogers v. Lawton, (1908) 162 Fed. 203.

In an action of unlawful detainer the federal court in Arkansas, by analogy to the requirements of Sand. & H. Dig., ch. 70, sec. 3449, requiring as a preliminary to the issuance of a writ of possession a bond in double the amount of two years' rent, will, in determining the value of possession as affecting its jurisdiction, regard the amount in controversy as a sum double the amount of the rent of the premises detained for two years. Battle v. Atkinson, (1903) 191 U. S. 559, 24 S. Ct. 845, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 302, affirming (1902) 115 Fed. 384.

A creditors' suit brought by two complainants, one of whom has a judgment on which more than $2,000 is due, exclusive of interest and costs, to subject property of greater value than $2,000, involves an amount sufficient to confer jurisdiction on a federal court, although the claim of the other complainant is less than that amount. Huff v. Bidwell, (1907) 151 Fed. 563, 81 C. C. A. 43.

In a suit by a stockholder on behalf of himself and other stockholders to secure the distribution of a fund belonging to a dissolved corporation, the entire fund is the amount in controversy for the purpose of determining the jurisdiction of a federal court. Kent v. Honsinger, (1909) 167 Fed. 619.

In a suit by a railroad company to quiet title to a specific portion of its right of way which lies more than 100 feet from its tracks, and has never been used in the operation of its road, the amount in dispute for the purpose of determining the jurisdiction of a federal court is the value of the land in controversy, and not the value of the company's right to operate its road. Union Pac. R. Co. v. Cunningham, (1909) 173 Fed. 90.

Pleading.—Where the declaration in a suit in the federal courts contained the common counts and a special count, each alleging the amount in controversy to be $5,000, and a verdict was directed in favor of plaintiff for more than $2,000, it was held that the necessary jurisdictional amount sufficiently appeared. Chicago State Bank v. Cox, (1906) 143 Fed. 91, 74 C. C. A. 285.

In an action between citizens of different states in a Circuit Court of the United States, where the complaint contains the requisite allegations respecting the amount in controversy, jurisdiction is not defeated because other matters stated in the complaint have a tendency to show that that allegation is not well founded, unless they are such as to create a legal certainty of that conclusion. Henry v. Colorado Farm, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 1908) 164 Fed. 986.

It is not essential that a bill in a federal court should state the amount or value in controversy, if it appears to be within the jurisdictional limit, from the allegations of the bill, or otherwise from the record, or from evidence taken in the case before the hearing of objections to the jurisdiction. Robinson v. Suburban Brick Co., (1904) 127 Fed. 804, 62 C. C. A. 484.

Where a bill in the federal courts to enjoin the business of buying and selling nontransferable railroad tickets alleged that the value of the business sought to be protected amounted to $5,000, exclusive of interest and costs, such averment will be treated as prima facie true for the purpose of sustaining the court's jurisdiction, notwithstanding an allegation in the answer that the amount in controversy is less than $2,000, until defendant has sustained the burden of affirmatively showing that the requisite jurisdictional amount is wanting. Pennsylvania Co. v. Bay, (1905) 138 Fed. 203.

A bill to enjoin defendants from diverting the waters of a stream in violation of complainant's prior right thereto, which is alleged to be of the value of $2,000, and also to recover damages, in the sum of $2,500, alleged to have been sustained by complainant by reason of the joint action of defendants in diverting such waters, shows the amount in controversy to be sufficient to give a federal court jurisdiction. Morris v. Bean, (1903) 123 Fed. 618.

But an averment in a bill in equity in a federal court that the amount or value in controversy exceeds $2,000, exclusive of interest and costs, does not give the court jurisdiction, unless sustained by proof, where it is put in issue, and such issue may be taken by answer. Oregon R., etc., Co. v. Shell, (1903) 125 Fed. 979, affirmed on rehearing (1904) 143 Fed. 1004.

A bill to recover an interest in lands of a decedent, in which the only allegation with respect to the amount or value in controversy is that "complainants are informed and believe that the whole of said lands . . . are worth $12,000, and the amount demanded by them herein is more than $2,000," is argumentative, leaving the court to make a calculation, and, therefore, does not meet the statutory requirement to give a federal court jurisdiction. Dupree v. Leggette, (1905) 140 Fed. 776.

A complaint alleging that plaintiff employed defendant to locate him on a half section of government land, which he entered under the Homestead and Timber Acts, for which service he paid defendant $200, and seeking to recover damages for false and fraudulent representations as to the quantity and quality of timber on such land, does not state a cause of action for the recovery of damages beyond the amount paid defendant, if there can be any recovery, and the action is not within the jurisdiction of a federal court, although the damages are laid in a sum exceeding the jurisdictional amount. Wines v. Cobb Real Estate Co., (1904) 128 Fed. 198.

In an action of ejectment, where no special acts of damage are averred in the declaration, the damages recoverable are nominal only, and the amount of damages laid in the ad damnum clause cannot avail to give a federal court jurisdiction where the value of the land is insufficient. Way v. Clay, (1904) 140 Fed. 352.

A complaint for injunction alleging that complainant's trade name is worth in excess of $5,000; that defendant's acts are calculated to deceive and mislead intending purchasers of complainant's product, to its "great loss, injury, and damage," and that unless defendant's acts are checked the reputation of complainant will still further suffer great and irreparable damage, does not show jurisdiction in the federal court, as it cannot be assumed that the trade name will be destroyed, or that complainant's damages are in excess of $2,000. Winchester Repeating Arms Co. v. Butler, (1904) 128 Fed. 976.

IV. SUITS ARISING UNDER THE CONSTITUTION, LAWS, OR TREATIES OF THE UNITED STATES.

State courts may exercise concurrent jurisdiction with the federal courts in cases arising under the Constitution, laws, and treaties of the United States, unless exclusive jurisdiction has been expressly or by necessary implication conferred on the federal courts. Ex p. Martin, (1910) 180 Fed. 209; St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Hesterly, (Ark. 1911) 135 S. W. 874.

Case arising under the laws of the United States — Generally. — An action to enforce a right, the existence of which depends upon an Act of Congress, necessarily involves the construction and application of the federal statute, and is within the jurisdiction of the federal courts. Calhoun v. Central of Georgia R. Co., (1910) 7 Ga. App. 528, 67 S. E. 274.

A federal Circuit Court, having properly obtained jurisdiction of a suit by reason of the federal questions set up by the bill, has the right to decide all questions in the case, even though it decides the federal questions adversely to the party raising them, or even if it omits to decide them at all, but decides the case on local or state questions only. Siler v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., (1909) 213 U. S. 175, 29 S. Ct. 451, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 753; Siler v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., (1909) 213 U. S. 199, 29 S. Ct. 458, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 760.

Suit involving taxation of federal bonds. —

A federal court has jurisdiction of a suit to enjoin an assessment where the question involved is the right of the taxpayer to an exemption on account of United States bonds owned by him, regardless of the citizenship of the parties; and, having such jurisdiction, it may adjudicate other questions involved in the case, although it decides the federal question adversely to complainant. People's Sav. Bank v. Layman, (1905) 134 Fed. 635.

Suit to enjoin the enforcement of schedule of freight rates pending decision by interstate commerce commission. — A suit in equity against a railroad company to enjoin the enforcement of a schedule of freight rates which has been filed by defendant with the interstate commerce commission, and which is alleged to be unjust and unreasonable, until the legality of such rates can be passed upon by the commission, is one arising under the laws of the United States and for the enforcement of such laws, of which the federal courts have exclusive jurisdiction. Kalispell Lumber Co. v. Great Northern R. Co., (1907) 157 Fed. 845.

Right of way under federal statute. — A bill by a railroad company, alleging that it acquired a right of way for its road over government lands under a federal statute, and is proceeding to construct its road thereon, but did not complete the same within the time limited by the Act, and that defendant, claiming that its rights have thereby been forfeited, has taken possession of a portion of such right of way, presents a question under the laws of the United States. Columbia Valley R. Co. v. Portland, etc., R. Co., (C. C. A. 1908) 162 Fed. 603.

The federal Employer's Liability Act (Act of April 22, 1908, ch. 149, sec. 2, 35 Stat. L. 65, 66, 1909 Supp. Fed. Stat. Annot. 584, which makes common carriers by railroad within the territories of the United States liable for injuries to employees as therein stated, supersedes the common law in the territories with respect to such liability, and any cause of action within its terms is necessarily one arising under a law of the United States, and on that ground within the jurisdiction of a federal Circuit Court, where the requisite amount is involved. Cound v. Atchison, etc., R. Co., (1909) 173 Fed. 527; Clark v. Southern Pac. Co., (1909) 175 Fed. 122.

Water privileges. — One who has acquired a right to the use of water from a stream flowing through public land for domestic or irrigation purposes, in accordance with the laws of the state, is protected therein by R. S. secs. 2339, 2340, 7 Fed. Stat. Annot. 1090, 1096, and the jurisdiction of a federal court to determine the conflicting rights of parties is not affected by the fact that their lands, and their points of diversion of the water, are in different states. Anderson v. Basman, (1905) 140 Fed. 14.

Title to allotments to Indians. — State courts were not given jurisdiction of controversies necessarily involving a determination of the title, and incidentally of the right to the possession, of Indian allotments while the same were held in trust by the United States, by the provision of Act of Aug. 15, 1894, ch. 290, 28 Stat. L. 286, delegating to the federal Circuit Courts the power to determine such questions, since the purpose of that Act to continue the exclusive federal control over disputes concerning allotments which, prior to that Act, could only have been decided by the secretary of the interior, is manifested by its provision that a judgment or decree in any such controversy shall be certified by the court to the secretary of the interior, and by the provision of Act of Feb. 6, 1901, ch. 217, 31 Stat. L. 760, that in such suits "the parties thereto shall be the claimant as plaintiff and the United States as party defendant." McKay v. Kalyton, (1907) 204 U. S. 458, 27 S. Ct. 340, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 586, reversing (1904) 45 Ore. 116, 74 Pac. 491, 78 Pac. 352.

The laws enacted by a territory subject to disapproval by Congress are not laws of the United States, and a suit arising under them, as where a corporation organized under them is a party to the suit, does not arise under the laws of the United States, and a federal court has no jurisdiction on that ground. Maxwell v. Federal Gold, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 1907) 159 Fed. 110.

Suit under state laws. — A suit by citizens and taxpayers of Kansas, under a state law, to enjoin the alleged illegal expenditure of public money by officers of the state, which will increase the burden of taxation, cannot be maintained in a federal court, where the alleged illegality does not arise under any law of the United States. Larabee v. Doley, (1909) 175 Fed. 365.

Division of state into congressional districts. — While the power to fix the number of representatives in Congress and to apportion them among the several states is vested in Congress, the power to divide a state into congressional districts for the election of representatives resides in the legislature of the state, and the question whether a county is lawfully included in a congressional district, where it was placed by an act of the legislature, does not depend on the construction of any law of the United States, so as to give a federal court jurisdiction of a suit for its determination, but upon the validity of the act of the legislature, which is a question for determination by the state courts. Anthony v. Burrow, (1904) 129 Fed. 783.

In a suit to enjoin the enforcement of city ordinances, federal jurisdiction cannot be predicated on an allegation that in passing the ordinances the city exceeded its charter powers; such question being one for the determination of the state courts. Glucose Refining Co. v. Chicago, (1906) 138 Fed. 209.

Suit against state judge. — A statement of claim which seeks to recover damages for acts of defendant done in his capacity as judge of a state court does not raise a federal question, and, where there is no diversity of citizenship, a Circuit Court of the United States is without jurisdiction, and it is its duty, on motion therefor, to dismiss the suit. Kimney v. Mitchell, (1905) 138 Fed. 270.

Action for false imprisonment. — A complaint which alleges that defendants entered into a conspiracy by unlawful means to deprive plaintiff of his liberty and property, and that they unlawfully, forcibly, and without due process of law caused his arrest and confinement in a state insane asylum, states a cause of action for false imprisonment, not involving any federal question, and which it is the province of the state and not the federal courts to redress. Marten v. Holbrook, (1907) 157 Fed. 716.

Suit against state — Generally. — No suit can be maintained in the courts of the United States against the officers of a state, when the state, though not named in the pleadings, is the real party against whom the relief is asked, and against whom the judgment will operate. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Andrews, (1907) 154 Fed. 95.

Where a state statute provides that suits to recover penalties for its violation shall be brought in the name of the state by direction of the governor, the governor acts thereunder officially as executive officer of the state having a discretionary power, and a suit to enjoin him from exercising such power is one against the state, of which a federal court is without jurisdiction under the Eleventh Constitutional Amendment. Central of Georgia R. Co. v. McLendon, (1907) 157 Fed. 961.

No waiver by the state of its constitutional immunity from a suit in a federal court to set aside the title of the state to lands sold for unpaid taxes can be gathered from the provision of a statute which makes the auditor-general a party defendant to all actions or proceedings to set aside a sale for delinquent taxes on lands held as state tax lands, or which have been sold as such, or which have been sold at annual tax sales, since the statute makes such requirements with reference to procedure and costs as to indicate that the legislature had in mind only proceedings in the state courts. Chandler v. Dix, (1904) 194 U. S. 590, 24 S. Ct. 766, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 1129.

A suit by a corporation to restrain the state attorney-general from instituting a suit in the name of the state to forfeit the corporation's charter is in effect a suit against the state, and is not, therefore, within the jurisdiction of the federal courts. Morenci Copper Co. v. Freer, (1903) 127 Fed. 199.

A state board of equalization which is required to "adjust and equalize the valuation of real and personal property among the several counties in the state," is a tribunal charged with duties as an agency of the state, in the performance of which judgment must be exercised by its members, and a suit against them to compel them to raise the valuation of the property in a county is one against the state, within the meaning of the Eleventh Constitutional Amendment, of which a federal court is without jurisdiction. U. S. v. Hadley, (1909) 171 Fed. 118.

Where the valuation of a corporation's franchise has been made by a state board, and the auditor has given final notice thereof before suit was brought against him in his official capacity to restrain the collection of such tax, a bill is not maintainable as to the part of the tax due the state, since as to it the bill would be in effect against the state, which is not subject to suit without its consent. Coulter v. Weir, (1904) 127 Fed. 897, 62 C. C. A. 429.

A suit in equity against officers of a state to restrain them from instituting judicial proceedings in the courts of the state to enforce a statute alleged to be unconstitutional is in fact a suit against the state, which a federal court is prohibited from entertaining by the Eleventh Amendment to the Constitution. Hutchinson v. Smith, (1905) 140 Fed. 982.

The existing relation of debtor and creditor between the state of South Carolina and the vendors of liquor under the state dispensary Acts was not so altered by the winding-up Act of Feb. 16, 1907, providing for the appointment of a commission to close out the state dispensary business and turn over to the state treasury the surplus funds remaining after liquidating and paying claims out of the state assets, as to enable a federal Circuit Court to take jurisdiction of a bill filed by such vendors, which seeks to enjoin the commission from disposing of the fund until their claims are paid, and asks for the appointment of a receiver, on the theory that, by such statute, the assets of the dispensary were placed in the hands of the commission as a trust fund for the benefit of all creditors having valid claims against such fund, which they are entitled to enforce by judicial action against the commission, without the presence of the state as a necessary party. Murray v. Wilson Distilling Co., (1909) 213 U. S. 151, 29 S. Ct. 459, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 742, reversing (C. C. A. 1908) 164 Fed. 1.

But a municipal corporation is not an agency of the state in such sense that a suit against it is one against the state within the meaning of the Eleventh Constitutional Amendment, excluding such suits from federal jurisdiction. Camden Interstate R. Co. v. Catlettsburg, (1904) 129 Fed. 421.

A federal Circuit Court should not dismiss on its own motion, for want of jurisdiction, a suit against the dairy and food commissioner of a state, on the ground that such suit is one against the state, but such question should be raised by demurrer or other pleading. Scully v. Bird, (1908) 209 U. S. 481, 28 S. Ct. 597, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 899.

Suits involving validity of state law under Federal Constitution. — A federal court may enjoin the attorney-general of a state, whose general duty is to enforce the state statutes, from proceeding to enforce against persons affected a state statute which violates the Federal Constitution. Ex p. Young, (1908) 209 U. S. 123, 28 S. Ct. 441, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 714.

A suit against state officers, charged with the enforcement of a statute of the state, to enjoin the enforcement of such statute on the ground that it is in violation of the Constitution of the United States, is not a suit against the state within the meaning of the Eleventh Constitutional Amendment, and is within the jurisdiction of a federal court.

Western Union Tel. Co. v. Julian, (1909) 169 Fed. 166.

A suit is maintainable in the federal courts against a state officer, claiming under an unconstitutional state statute, where he holds possession or is about to take possession or commit a trespass on property belonging to or in plaintiff's possession. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Andrews, (1907) 154 Fed. 95; Consolidated Gas Co. v. New York, (1907) 157 Fed. 849; St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Cross, (1909) 171 Fed. 480; Kansas Natural Gas Co. v. Haskell, (1909) 172 Fed. 545.

A suit against an individual to prevent him from effecting the destruction of property or the impairment of property rights under color of an unconstitutional law is not a suit against the state. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. v. Alabama R. Commission, (1907) 155 Fed. 792; Central of Georgia R. Co. v. Alabama R. Commission, (1908) 161 Fed. 925.

The North Carolina corporation commission and the attorney-general being specially charged with the enforcement of certain laws, a suit against the attorney-general and the members of the commission to restrain the enforcement thereof, and other similar laws, because of alleged unconstitutionality, is not a suit against the state. Southern R. Co. v. McNeill, (1907) 155 Fed. 756.

A suit in a federal court to restrain the secretary of state from enforcing a statute which requires him to cancel the license of any foreign railroad corporation to do business in Missouri in case it removed an action brought against it to the federal court, and providing, in addition, a penalty for each offense, with disability to again do business within the state for five years, on the ground that such act was unconstitutional, is not a suit against the state. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Swanger, (1908) 157 Fed. 783.

But under a state law which provided that foreign corporations shall not do business in the state until they have complied with the Act, which requires the filing of a copy of the articles of incorporation, with the consent that service of process may be had on the secretary of state, and that it will not remove any action against it to any federal court without consent of the other party, requires payment of certain specified fees, and declares that any foreign corporation failing to comply and doing business in the state shall be subject to a fine of not less than $1,000, to be recovered in suits to be brought in the name of the state by the prosecuting attorneys for the benefit of the county in which the suit is brought, and paid into the county's general revenue, one-fourth of the recovery to belong to the prosecuting attorney as a part of his compensation, it was held that a suit by a foreign telegraph company, having failed to comply with such Act, against the prosecuting attorneys of the judicial circuits of the state, to restrain them from instituting any proceeding to recover penalties against complainant for its refusal to comply with the Act on the ground that it was unconstitutional, was an action against the defendants merely in their capacity as attorneys for the state, and was in effect a suit against the state. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Andrews, (1907) 154 Fed. 95.

A court of admiralty is not deprived of jurisdiction of a suit to recover possession of a vessel duly licensed and enrolled, under the navigation laws of the United States, by the appearance of officers of the state claiming to hold the vessel under process issued by a state court for violation of a state fishery law, where the constitutionality of such law is seriously attacked by the libellant, since such appearance does not render the suit one against the state, within the meaning of the Eleventh Constitutional Amendment, and the question is one which it is competent for the libellant to raise, and for the court to determine. The W. J. Hingston, (1906) 144 Fed. 560.

Suits dealing with questions of taxation.—

An action by a university, whose lands are exempt from taxation, against officers charged with the duty of levying and collecting taxes, to restrain such officers from enforcing taxes on improvements erected by lessees on such exempt lands, is not a suit against the state, so as to exclude the jurisdiction of the federal courts. University of the South v. Jetton, (1907) 155 Fed. 182.

Mandamus to compel county auditors and county treasurers to levy a tax to pay a judgment on township bonds is not a suit against the state, within the inhibition of the Federal Constitution, because such officers have been forbidden by the state legislature to exercise any such power. Graham v. Folsom, (1906) 200 U. S. 248, 26 S. Ct. 245, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 464, affirming (1904) 131 Fed. 496.

Interference with interstate commerce.—

A suit against a state corporation commission to enjoin the enforcement of an order alleged to be void as an interference with interstate commerce in violation of the Federal Constitution and laws is not one against the state, and is within the jurisdiction of a federal court. McNeill v. Southern R. Co., (1906) 202 U. S. 543, 26 S. Ct. 722, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 1142, affirming as modified (1904) 134 Fed. 82.

A state constitutional provision which prohibits the bringing of a suit against a state by a citizen of another state, cannot be construed to nullify the power conferred on Congress to regulate the commerce among the several states, nor prevent an action to restrain a state railroad commission from enforcing an order injuriously affecting interstate commerce. Mississippi R. Commission v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., (1906) 203 U. S. 335, 27 S. Ct. 90, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 209, affirming (1905) 138 Fed. 327, 70 C. C. A. 617.

Suit to enjoin enforcement of railroad rates.—A suit against the attorney-general and board of railroad commissioners of a state to enjoin them from enforcing state statutes regulating railroad rates, on the ground that they are confiscatory and unconstitutional, is not one against the state of which a federal court is denied jurisdiction by the Eleventh Constitutional Amendment. Louisiana R. Commission v. Texas, etc., R. Co., (1906) 144 Fed. 68, 75 C. C. A. 226; Poor v. Iowa Cent. R. Co., (1907) 155 Fed.

Where, under the state constitution, any railroad company has the right to maintain proceedings in a state court against the state railroad commission to contest the validity of any decision, rule, or order of the commission, a company which is a citizen of another state may maintain a suit for the same purpose in a federal court, where the amount involved is sufficient to give the court jurisdiction. Louisiana R. Commission v. Texas, etc., R. Co., (1906) 144 Fed. 68, 75 C. C. A. 226.

Substantial dispute as to construction of constitution, law, or treaty essential.—If it appears from a bill filed in a federal court that in any aspect which the case may assume the right to relief may depend upon the construction of a provision of the Constitution or laws of the United States, and that such claim is not merely colorable, but rests upon a reasonable foundation, the court has jurisdiction of the cause. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Davis, (1904) 132 Fed. 629.

The assertion in a suit to enjoin municipal construction of an underground railway that complainants had a prior exclusive right to the use of the city streets for that purpose does not bring the cause within the jurisdiction of a federal Circuit Court as really and substantially involving a dispute or controversy respecting the Federal Constitution, where such contention is based upon the effect claimed for the filing of a map and profile of the proposed route and for the payment of an incorporation tax, and involves the unfounded assumption that the determination by the rapid transit board created by Laws N. Y. 1891, ch. 4, to construct an underground railway, together with the consent of the municipal authorities and abutting owners to the municipal construction of such road, was the equivalent of the requisite consent to the construction of complainant's proposed road, which had never been obtained. Underground R. Co. v. New York, (1904) 193 U. S. 416, 24 S. Ct. 494, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 733, affirming (1902) 116 Fed. 952.

The averment in a bill that the property of a water company was taken without due process of law by a local statute enabling it to sell its property to a municipality to defeat municipal construction of a water supply system, because such statute was construed by the highest state court as not entitling the company to compensation for its franchise and other incorporated rights, and the averment that the obligation of the company's contract with the city to furnish water for fire protection was impaired by the failure to value future profits arising from such contract, are so devoid of merit, where the water company's charter was not exclusive, and was subject to repeal, alteration, and amendment, as to be insufficient to sustain the jurisdiction of a Circuit Court of the United States on the theory that the case arose under the Federal Constitution. Newburyport Water Co. v. Newburyport, (1904) 193 U. S. 561, 24 S. Ct. 553, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 795; Gloucester Water Supply Co. v. Gloucester, (1904) 193 U. S. 580, 24 S. Ct. 557, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 801.

The assertion, in a bill filed by a water company against a municipality and its common council, that the obligation of the municipality's rental contract with the company was impaired by an ordinance which, while denying the validity of the contract, allowed a claim for rentals, is too clearly unfounded to present a case arising under the Constitution or laws of the United States, of which a federal Circuit Court has jurisdiction without regard to the diversity of citizenship. Defiance Water Co. v. Defiance, (1903) 191 U. S. 184, 24 S. Ct. 63, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 140.

Where, in a suit by a private person against state judges of general jurisdiction, the statement of plaintiff's claim did not show diverse citizenship, or that the action involved a federal question, a mere allegation that defendants were liable under R. S. secs. 1979, 1980, 1 Fed. Stat. Annot. 795, 796, prohibiting the deprivation of rights, privileges, and immunities secured by the Constitution and laws, etc., was insufficient to establish federal jurisdiction, in the absence of an allegation of facts showing a substantial dispute as to the effect or construction of the Constitution, or of some law of the United States on the determination of which the recovery depended. U. S. v. Bell, (1905) 135 Fed. 336, 68 C. C. A. 144, affirming (1904) 127 Fed. 1002.

The claim that grazing cattle owned by a Jesuit society are exempt from state taxation, based either upon the theory that because the income of the society was devoted to the charitable work of improving and educating the Indians on the Flathead reservation, in Montana, the entire beneficial use or ownership of the property taxed was in tribal Indians, or upon the ground that the federal government, by permitting and approving the work of the society, and by aiding it from time to time by making appropriations in its behalf, had constituted it one of the agencies to carry out its obligation to the Indians, is too clearly lacking in merit to confer jurisdiction on a federal Circuit Court. Montana Catholic Missions v. Missoula County, (1906) 200 U. S. 118, 26 S. Ct. 197, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 398.

Must so appear from plaintiff's statement — Generally. — When the jurisdiction of a federal court depends upon the case being one arising under the Constitution or laws of the United States, the facts necessary to make such a case must be plainly shown upon the record, and it is not enough that such question may arise. Louisville v. Cumberland Telephone, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 1907) 155 Fed. 725, 12 Ann. Cas. 500; American Nat. Bank v. Tappan, (1909) 174 Fed. 431; Larabee v. Dofley, (1909) 175 Fed. 365; Earnhart v. Switzler, (C. C. A. 1910) 179 Fed. 832; Hare v. Birkenfield, (C. C. A. 1910) 181 Fed. 825;

Seattle Electric Co. v. Seattle, etc., R. Co., (C. C. A. 1911) 185 Fed. 365.

To confer jurisdiction of a suit between citizens of the same state upon a federal court on the ground that legislation of a state which it is sought to have declared invalid impairs the obligation of a contract or deprives complainant of his property without due process of law, and that, therefore, the questions involved arise under the Constitution of the United States, it must appear from complainant's pleading that there is a legal contract subject to impairment, or that complainant has become vested with property rights in the particular thing of which he is alleged to have been deprived. Underground R. Co. v. New York, (1902) 116 Fed. 952, affirmed (1904) 193 U. S. 416, 24 S. Ct. 494, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 733.

Where, in an action against an interstate carrier for death of a servant, the complaint alleged that defendant was engaged in transporting both freight and passengers, and of interstate and foreign commerce, such averment did not allege that defendant was engaged in the transportation of freight and passengers "in" interstate and foreign commerce, and must therefore be taken as an averment of the transportation of freight and passengers in both interstate and intrastate commerce. Troxell v. Delaware, etc., R. Co., (1910) 180 Fed. 871.

A street railroad company which has acquired a franchise to construct its line has a property right therein of which it cannot be deprived without due process of law, and also contract rights which cannot be impaired by the state by subsequent legislation; but before it can invoke the provisions of the Constitution of the United States for the protection of such rights by a suit in a federal court, it must show that it has done all the things required under the laws of the state to vest it with the contract and property rights which it seeks to protect. Underground R. Co. v. New York, (1902) 116 Fed. 952, affirmed (1904) 193 U. S. 416, 24 S. Ct. 494, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 733.

But it is not necessary to allege in pleading matters of which the court is bound to take judicial notice or matters which the law presumes, and a bill in a federal court which seeks to enjoin the enforcement of a city ordinance, and invokes the jurisdiction of the court on the ground that such enforcement will deprive complainant of its property without due process of law in violation of the Fourteenth Constitutional Amendment, need not allege that the ordinance was enacted under state authority where there is a statute of the state which confers authority on the city to enact such an ordinance, since the court is required to take judicial notice of such statute, and must presume that the city acted thereunder. North American Cold Storage Co. v. Chicago, (1907) 151 Fed. 120.

Sufficient allegation. — A substantial controversy respecting rights under the Federal Constitution, presented by the averments of the bill, is sufficient to support the jurisdiction of a federal Circuit Court, irrespective of the actual sufficiency of the facts alleged to justify the relief sought, or of the facts as they may subsequently turn out. Pacific Electric R. Co. v. Los Angeles, (1904) 194 U. S. 112, 24 S. Ct. 566, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 896, affirming (1902) 118 Fed. 746.

A Circuit Court has jurisdiction of a suit on the ground that it arises under the Constitution of the United States, where it appears from the allegations of the bill that the claim is made in good faith that an Act of the legislature under which defendants are proceeding to do the acts sought to be enjoined is in violation of the Federal Constitution, although other grounds of invalidity are also alleged, and where it is further alleged that complainant will sustain damages, direct and consequential, by reason of the threatened action, in excess of $2,000. Manigault v. Ward, (1903) 123 Fed. 707, affirmed (1905) 199 U. S. 473, 26 S. Ct. 127, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 274.

A federal court has jurisdiction of a suit to restrain the collection of taxes levied under provisions of the constitution and statutes of a state, which the bill, in good faith, alleges are repugnant to the Constitution of the United States, and where it is also alleged that the defendant, as a state officer, by his acts under said state constitution and statute, is about to deprive complainants of their property without due process of law. Michigan R. Tax Cases, (1905) 138 Fed. 223, affirmed (1906) 201 U. S. 245, 26 S. Ct. 459, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 744.

An allegation in a bill that a municipal ordinance providing for the summary seizure and destruction of food in cold storage when unfit for human consumption violates Const. U. S. Amend. 14, because it provides neither for notice nor for an opportunity to be heard before such seizure and destruction, presents, although unfounded, a constitutional question within the original jurisdiction of the federal Circuit Court. North American Cold Storage Co. v. Chicago, (1908) 211 U. S. 306, 16 Ann. Cas. 276, 29 S. Ct. 101, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 195.

Where a petition in an action against an interstate carrier for injuries to a brakeman in one of the territories of the United States alleged injury to plaintiff by the negligence of a carrier while plaintiff was in the performance of his duty, it sufficiently showed that the action was based on the federal Employers' Liability Act, though it did not so allege in terms. Clark v. Southern Pac. Co., (1909) 175 Fed. 122.

Insufficient allegation. — An allegation in a complaint in ejectment that defendant is in possession of the property by direction of the United States, which is not required under the statute to state plaintiff's cause of action, is mere surplusage, and cannot give a federal court jurisdiction on the ground that the action is one arising under the Constitution of the United States, by making it appear that defendant holds under a law which plaintiff claims to be unconstitutional. Filhiol v. Torney, (1903) 119 Fed. 974, affirmed (1904) 194 U. S. 356, 24 S. Ct. 688, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 1914.

An allegation in a complaint that full faith and credit will not be given to the Public Acts of Minnesota if a New Jersey corporation organized for the purpose of acquiring the control of two competing interstate railway companies engaged in business in Minnesota is allowed to carry out the object of its incorporation, does not present a cause arising under the Federal Constitution, of which a Circuit Court of the United States can take jurisdiction. Minnesota v. Northern Securities Co., (1904) 194 U. S. 48, 24 S. Ct. 598, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 870, reversing (1903) 123 Fed. 692.

Averments in a complaint in ejectment, that defendant's possession rests upon an infraction by the United States of its treaty obligations, and upon a taking of private property for public use without just compensation, do not bring the case within the jurisdiction of a federal Circuit Court, where the averments respecting plaintiff's title disclose no case within the jurisdiction of that court. Filhiol v. Torney, (1904) 194 U. S. 356, 24 S. Ct. 688, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 1014, affirming (1903) 119 Fed. 974.

A suit to compel the specific performance by a carrier of its agreement to issue free passes annually to the complainants is not brought within the original jurisdiction of a federal Circuit Court as one arising under the Constitution or laws of the United States, by allegations in the bill that the refusal to comply with the contract is based upon the provisions of Act Cong. June 29, 1906, 1907 Supp. Fed. Stat. Annot. 255, and that such Act does not prohibit the giving of passes under the circumstances of the case, and, if construed as having such effect, violates Const. Amend. 5, by denying due process of law. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Mottley, (1908) 211 U. S. 149, 29 S. Ct. 42, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 126, reversing (1907) 150 Fed. 406.

A bill by a railroad company to enjoin suits at law for damages, or in equity to restrain its removal of a division point, on the ground, among others, that the enforcement of an alleged contract to maintain the railroad's shops, roundhouses, etc., at the point in question would interfere with interstate commerce, and prevent complainant's compliance with Act Cong. March 4, 1907, ch. 2939, 34 Stat. L. 1415, 1909 Supp. Fed. Stat. Annot. 581, known as the "Hours of Service Law," does not show federal jurisdiction as involving a federal question, under the rule that to give the federal Circuit Court jurisdiction for that reason the federal question must appear necessarily in the statement of the cause of action, and not as mere allegations of a defense pleaded. Kansas City Southern R. Co. v. Quigley, (1910) 181 Fed. 190.

An action by a shipper against a railroad company engaged in interstate commerce, to recover damages because of an alleged discrimination in exacting a charge from one class of shippers which is not required from another class, although the service is the same in both cases, is not within the jurisdiction of a federal court, as one arising under the interstate commerce law, where it is not alleged that the charge is not in accordance with a schedule of rates duly published and filed with the interstate commerce commission, nor that any application has been made to the commission to correct such alleged discrimination. Clement v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., (1907) 153 Fed. 979.

A suit against a city and certain of its officers to enjoin the commission of acts by them under the claimed authority of a city ordinance, which it is alleged will deprive complainant of its property without due process of law in violation of the Federal Constitution, does not involve any constitutional question which will give a federal court jurisdiction with respect to acts which it clearly appears are not authorized by the ordinance, set out in the bill, and which, if committed, will be without authority of law and mere private trespasses. North American Cold Storage Co. v. Chicago, (1907) 151 Fed. 120.

Statement of defense.—Jurisdiction of a federal court cannot be invoked by averments in plaintiff's pleadings anticipatory of the defense and allegations that such defense is based on the Constitution or laws of the United States. People's U. S. Bank v. Goodwin, (1908) 160 Fed. 727.

Suits arising under Constitution involving due process of law.—A suit to enjoin the enforcement of state enactments regulating railroad rates, on the ground that the same are confiscatory and would deprive the railroad companies of their property without due process of law and deny them the equal protection of the laws, in violation of the Fourteenth Constitutional Amendment, is one arising under the Constitution of the United States, of which a federal court has jurisdiction on that ground. Ex p. Young, (1908) 209 U. S. 123, 28 S. Ct. 441, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 714; St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Hadley, (1907) 155 Fed. 220; Perkins v. Northern Pac. R. Co., (1907) 155 Fed. 445.

Allegations in a bill to enjoin the enforcement, as in violation of Const. U. S. Amend. 14, of an order of a state railroad commission, that such commission was not vested with power to make that order, do not defeat the jurisdiction of a federal Circuit Court because, in such case, the action of the commission is not that of the state, where the bill sets up several entirely separate federal questions, some of which are directed to the invalidity, on various constitutional grounds, of the state statute under the supposed authority of which the order was made, and some of which are founded upon the terms of the order. Siler v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., (1909) 213 U. S. 175, 29 S. Ct. 451, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 753.

A bill by a telephone company to enjoin the enforcement of a city ordinance fixing maximum rates of charge for telephone service, which alleges that the ordinance was passed in the exercise of power to fix rates conferred upon the city by an act of the legislature, and that if enforced complainant cannot make any net earnings whatever on its large capital invested in the business, nor sufficient to pay its necessary expenses, and will be deprived of its property without due process of law, states a cause of action arising under the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, of which a federal court has jurisdiction, although it is further averred, as a legal conclusion, that the ordinance is also in violation of the state constitution, prohibiting the impairment of the freedom of contract. Ozark-Bell Telephone Co. v. Springfield, (1905) 140 Fed. 666.

Under the Federal Constitution, a municipal corporation, although having power to regulate the rates to be charged by a telephone company, may not reduce such rates below a rate which will pay operating expenses, maintain the plant, and pay a fair return on the capital actually invested, and a bill to restrain the enforcement of a rate alleged to be confiscatory presents a federal question and is within the jurisdiction of a federal court. Owensboro v. Cumberland Telephone, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 1909) 174 Fed. 739.

The question whether rates fixed by a municipal body to be charged by a water company are just and reasonable, or confiscatory and unconstitutional, is a judicial one, for the determination of which the company has the right to invoke the jurisdiction of a federal court. Spring Valley Water Co. v. San Francisco, (1908) 165 Fed. 667.

A suit by a domestic corporation to restrain the collection of taxes imposed by the state on personal property alleged in the bill to have its situs for purposes of taxation in another state involves a federal question and is within the jurisdiction of a federal court, since the taxation by a state of property without its jurisdiction amounts to a taking of the property of the owner without due process of law. Central of Georgia R. Co. v. Wright, (1908) 166 Fed. 153.

A suit to enjoin the enforcement of an ordinance requiring a street railroad company to carry without pay passengers holding transfers from other car lines is cognizable in equity on the ground of preventing a multiplicity of suits and is within the jurisdiction of a federal court, where the invalidity of the ordinance is alleged on the ground that it deprives the company of its property without due process of law in violation of the Federal Constitution. Chicago City R. Co. v. Chicago, (1905) 142 Fed. 844.

Where a municipal corporation without statutory authority was attempting to take a portion of complainant's right of way for a street, and to deprive complainant of its property without due process of law, a federal court had jurisdiction of a suit to restrain such action. Portland R., etc., Co. v. Portland, (1910) 181 Fed. 632.

The owners of property fronting on a street may maintain a suit in equity in a federal court against the city and a street railroad company, both of which are corporations of the state, to enjoin the laying of tracks in the street under a void enactment by the city council purporting to authorize such act, where irreparable injury will result to their property, as a taking of property under color of authority from the state without due process of law. Savannah v. Holst, (1904) 132 Fed. 901, 65 C. C. A. 449, reversing 131 Fed. 931.

A suit to enjoin officers or agents of a state from exercising powers conferred on them by a state statute, on the ground that their action is in violation of the property rights of complainant under the Constitution of the United States, is within the jurisdiction of a federal court, without regard to the citizenship of the parties, where the requisite amount is involved. Douglas Park Jockey Club v. Grainger, (1906) 146 Fed. 414.

A city given by the state the power to contract for a supply of water for extinguishment of fires, and to tax property in the city to pay therefor, made and continued a contract which was unreasonable, and provided for an excessive compensation to the water company. The state itself had not approved or sanctioned the contract by its legislative, executive, or judicial authority. It was held that any illegal act of the city under the contract was done without the authority of or contrary to the state law, and persons who had paid the taxes could not seek equitable relief in the federal court, on the ground of deprivation of property without due process of law. Risley v. Utica, (1910) 179 Fed. 875.

The exercise by a city council of the taxing power delegated to it by the legislature is the act of the state, within the Fourteenth Constitutional Amendment, and a person who is thereby deprived of property without due process of law may invoke the jurisdiction of a federal court on the ground of a violation of such amendment; but, where such action is without the authority of or contrary to state law, no question arises under the Constitution which gives such court jurisdiction. Risley v. Utica, (1909) 173 Fed. 502.

A state statute which asserts the ownership by the state of the beds and shores of all navigable waters therein, but expressly provides that it shall not be construed so as to debar any person from asserting his claim to vested rights in the courts of the state, is not in violation of the Federal Constitution, as depriving riparian owners under previous grants from the United States of their property without due process of law, nor does a suit by such owners to enjoin officers of the state from selling shore lands under a statute enacted pursuant to such provision involve any constitutional question which gives a federal court jurisdiction thereof. McGilvra v. Ross, (C. C. A. 1908) 164 Fed. 604, affirming (1907) 161 Fed. 398.

The averment in a bill to enjoin the construction of a rapid transit railroad tunnel under a city street that, by such construction, complainant, as an abutting owner, is deprived of his property without due process of law, does not bring the case within the jurisdiction of a federal Circuit Court, where the bill, on its face, proceeds on the theory that the action sought to be enjoined was not only unauthorized, but was forbidden by state legislation. Barney v. New York, (1904) 193 U. S. 430, 24 S. Ct. 502, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 737; Huntington v. New York,

A municipal ordinance not passed in accordance with legislative authority is not a law of the state within the meaning of the prohibitions of the Constitution of the United States, and a suit to enjoin the enforcement of an ordinance alleged to have been passed in violation of the requirements of the state law presents no question arising under the Constitution, which confers jurisdiction on a federal court, on the ground that the enforcement of the ordinance will deprive complainants of property without due process of law. Savannah v. Holst, (1904) 132 Fed. 901, 65 C. C. A. 449, reversing 131 Fed. 931.

A suit to enjoin the diversion or intended diversion by a municipality of certain funds which, under legislative sanction, it had collected from taxpayers for a specific public object, but which were not applied to that object, on the theory that such failure of duty on the part of the municipality may ultimately cause increased taxation, and thereby deprive the taxpayers of their property without the due process of law guaranteed by Const. U. S. Amend. 14, if the full amount originally intended to be applied to the particular object named by the legislature is to be collected, is not one arising under the Constitution of the United States, of which a federal Circuit Court has original jurisdiction without regard to the citizenship of the parties. Owensboro Waterworks Co. v. Owensboro, (1906) 200 U. S. 38, 26 S. Ct. 249, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 361.

The averment that if a temporary injunction granted by an inferior state court, restraining the future payment of rentals accruing under the alleged contract of a municipality with a water company because of the invalidity of the contract, should ultimately be made perpetual, such company would thereby be deprived of its property without due process of law, does not justify a federal Circuit Court in assuming jurisdiction of a suit by the water company to restrain the municipality from attempting to annul the rental contract, as being a case arising under the Federal Constitution or laws. Defiance Water Co. v. Defiance, (1903) 191 U. S. 184, 24 S. Ct. 63, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 140.

The contention that a state court, in admitting a nuncupative will to probate without giving the statutory notice to the next of kin, violated the due process of law clause of Const. U. S. Amend. 14, is too lacking in merit to afford a basis for the jurisdiction of a federal Circuit Court of a suit to set aside the probate, even assuming that such notice is essential to the preliminary probate, where the bill proceeds on the theory, which finds support in the law of the state, that, despite the mere preliminary admission to probate, there remained a right to assail the existence of the will and its probate, which was not lost by the failure to give notice. O'Callaghan v. O'Brien, (1905) 199 U. S. 89, 25 S. Ct. 727, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 101, affirming (1903) 125 Fed. 657, 60 C. C. A. 347, and reversing (1902) 116 Fed. 934.

Since the only statute recognizing the right of an entryman to settle on unsurveyed lands of the United States is Act May 14, 1880, ch. 89, 21 Stat. L. 140, 6 Fed. Stat. Annot. 300, 301, providing that a homestead settler, on public land surveyed or unsurveyed shall be allowed the same time to file his application and perfect his original entry as is allowed to settlers under the pre-emption laws, a suit by a homestead settler on unsurveyed public land to protect his possessory right as against an adverse claimant does not involve a construction of the Constitution of the United States so as to sustain federal jurisdiction on that ground. Earnhart v. Switzler, (C. C. A. 1910) 179 Fed. 832.

Where the validity of a city ordinance regulating the sale of nonintoxicating beverages depends wholly on state statutes, no federal question can be injected into a prosecution for violating the ordinance unless it be that accused is being held contrary to the inhibition of the Fourteenth Amendment of the Federal Constitution. Kroschel v. Munckers, (1910) 179 Fed. 961.

A suit to enjoin the enforcement of a municipal ordinance is not within the jurisdiction of a federal court as involving the construction of the Federal Constitution, where the ordinance, if in violation of the Constitution, is equally in violation of the constitution of the state. Seattle Electric Co. v. Seattle, etc., R. Co., (C. C. A. 1911) 185 Fed. 365.

A case arising under the Federal Constitution and laws, of which a federal Circuit Court has jurisdiction without diversity of citizenship, is not presented by a bill which asserts the invalidity, under the Federal Constitution, of certain statutes and ordinances alleged to constitute a cloud on title, which the bill seeks to remove. Devine v. Los Angeles, (1906) 202 U. S. 313, 26 S. Ct. 652, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 1046.

In a suit in a federal court by a nonresident of a state to enjoin the enforcement of an ordinance, adopted in a local option district of such state, prohibiting the sale of liquors therein except for certain purposes, the only questions which can be considered are those affecting the rights of complainant under the Constitution and laws of the United States. In questions relating to the validity and effect of the law, or the regularity of the election, complainant has no legal interest, except as they may affect such rights. Busch v. Webb, (1903) 122 Fed. 655.

An objection that local legislation prohibiting the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors, etc., and making a violation thereof a misdemeanor, was violative of complainants' rights guaranteed by the Federal Constitution, is available as a defense to a prosecution in the state courts for violation of the Act, which could finally be determined by the United States Supreme Court on writ of error from the highest court of the state, and therefore is not ground of federal jurisdiction to restrain the enforcement of the Act. Christian Moerlein Brewing Co. v. Hill, (1908) 166 Fed. 140.

Impairing obligation of contracts.—Where jurisdiction of a federal court is predicated on the ground that the obligation of a contract has been impaired by a state, the questions to be considered are (1) the existence or not of the contract, (2) the obligation arising under it, and (3) whether there has been state legislation impairing the contract obligation. American Telephone, etc., Co. v. New Decatur, (1910) 176 Fed. 133.

It is not essential to the jurisdiction of a federal court of a suit based on an alleged impairment of a contract by a state in violation of section 10 of article 1 of the Constitution, that there should be a valid contract, or that the impairment complained of should in fact be effected, but it is sufficient, for jurisdictional purposes, if the plaintiff claims the existence of such contract, and its impairment, in good faith. Riverside, etc., R. Co. v. Riverside, (1902) 118 Fed. 736; Pacific Electric Co. v. Los Angeles, (1902) 118 Fed. 746, affirmed (1904) 194 U. S. 112, 24 S. Ct. 586, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 896.

That a state constitution contains a provision prohibiting the passage of any law impairing the obligation of contracts does not deprive a litigant of the right to invoke the similar provision of the Federal Constitution in a suit which involves the question of its violation. Des Moines City R. Co. v. Des Moines, (1907) 151 Fed. 854.

A federal court of equity may grant relief by injunction against a city ordinance which impairs the contract rights of complainant, or deprives him of his property without due process of law. Cleveland City R. Co. v. Cleveland, (1899) 94 Fed. 385, affirmed Cleveland v. Cleveland City R. Co., (1904) 194 U. S. 517, 24 S. Ct. 756, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 1102.

A suit to restrain the passage of a municipal ordinance repealing a prior ordinance granting a franchise to a street railroad company, which had been accepted by the company, is one involving the question of the impairment of the obligation of a contract in violation of the constitutional rights of the company, and is within the jurisdiction of a federal court, regardless of the citizenship of the parties. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Olathe, (1907) 156 Fed. 624.

The formal repudiation by a municipality of its contract with a waterworks company, and its refusal to perform its obligations under it, cannot give rise to a suit under the Federal Constitution, of which a Federal Circuit Court can take jurisdiction without reference to the citizenship of the parties. Dawson v. Columbia Ave. Sav. Fund, etc., Co., (1905) 197 U. S. 178, 25 S. Ct. 420, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 713.

Jurisdiction of a federal Circuit Court of a suit to enjoin the enforcement of a municipal ordinance reducing street railway rates cannot be defeated on the theory that a lack of delegated power to adopt the ordinance withdrew from the case any question as to the impairment of contract obligations, where the municipality's defense is that certain other ordinances asserted as contracts did not deprive it of its continued power to exert authority over such rates, because the state law prevented it from abrogating, by subsequent contracts, the right of regulation expressly reserved in a prior ordinance. Cleveland v. Cleveland City R. Co., (1904) 194 U. S. 517, 24 S. Ct. 756, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 1102; Cleveland v. Cleveland Electric R. Co., (1904) 194 U. S. 538, 24 S. Ct. 764, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 1109.

A case arising under the Constitution of the United States, of which a federal Circuit Court has original jurisdiction without regard to the citizenship of the parties, is made by a bill filed by a water company to restrain the municipal construction of a waterworks system on the ground that it had a contract with the municipality giving it exclusive privileges, the obligations of which, it insists, would be impaired by the establishment of municipal waterworks under the authority of subsequent legislation. Knoxville Water Co. v. Knoxville, (1906) 200 U. S. 22, 26 S. Ct. 224, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 353.

A municipal ordinance legislative in character, in the exercise of delegated authority to make laws which the legislature might have made, has the force of a state law within the contract clause of the constitution, and, where such ordinance impairs the obligation of a prior contract made by the city, a suit to enjoin its enforcement involves a question arising under the Constitution of the United States, of which the federal courts have jurisdiction, where the requisite amount is involved, without regard to the citizenship of the parties. Nelson v. Murfreesboro, (1909) 179 Fed. 905.

A suit to enjoin municipal officers from violating its contract with a drainage company presents no federal question as to impairment of contract obligations or taking of property without due process of law. Shawnee Sewerage, etc., Co. v. Stearns, (1911) 220 U. S. 462, 31 S. Ct. 452, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 544.

A resolution of a city council, ordering a railroad company to open and put in condition for public travel a street through its station yards, previously vacated by an ordinance which constituted a contract with the company, where disobedience of such order subjected the railroad company to a penalty under the laws of the state, is a legislative act which impairs the obligation of the contract and entitles the company to relief by injunction in a federal court of equity. Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Shawnee, (C. C. A. 1910) 183 Fed. 85.

A federal court is without jurisdiction of a suit to enjoin the enforcement of a municipal ordinance, on the ground that it impairs the obligation of a contract or deprives complainant of property without due process of law, in violation of the Constitution of the United States, when the bill alleges that no power had been granted to the municipality by the constitution or legislature of the state to pass such ordinance; the prohibition of the Federal Constitution being against state action only. Louisville v. Cumberland Telephone, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 1907) 155 Fed. 725, 12 Ann. Cas. 500.

A federal court has jurisdiction of a suit by a landowner to restrain revenue officers of a state from prosecuting proceedings expressly based on a state statute to enforce the collection of taxes against such lands, on the ground that such statute as applied to complainant's lands impairs the obligation of a contract with the state exempting such lands from taxation. University of the South v. Jetton, (1907) 155 Fed. 182.

A case arising under the Federal Constitution, of which a federal Circuit Court has jurisdiction without diversity of citizenship, is presented by a bill which alleges a contract exemption from taxation which the state is, by subsequent legislation, attempting to destroy. Jetton v. University of the South, (1908) 208 U. S. 489, 28 S. Ct. 375, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 584.

A bill by a stockholder in a banking corporation to enjoin the acceptance by the bank of the provisions of the state bank guaranty law, on the ground that such Act is unconstitutional, as impairing the obligation of the contracts of complainant and others as stockholders, by taking their property for the payment of debts which neither they nor the bank have contracted, presents a controversy arising under the constitution, which is within the jurisdiction of a federal court, regardless of the citizenship of the parties. Larabee v. Dolley, (1909) 175 Fed. 365.

A controversy arising under the Federal Constitution, of which a federal Circuit Court has original jurisdiction without regard to the citizenship of the parties, is presented by a bill which asserts that the obligation of a contract for the exclusive privilege of supplying water to a city and its inhabitants is impaired by a subsequent municipal ordinance and a legislative enactment under which the municipality is proceeding to issue and market its bonds for the purpose of constructing its own waterworks system. Mercantile Trust, etc., Co. v. Columbus, (1906) 203 U. S. 311, 27 S. Ct. 83, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 198.

The trustee in a mortgage given by a corporation to secure its bonds may maintain a suit in a federal court to protect rights arising out of contracts pledged by the mortgage from impairment by legislation of the state or by its authority regardless of the citizenship of the mortgagor. Denver v. New York Trust Co., (C. C. A. 1911) 187 Fed. 890.

A suit by a street railway company claiming in good faith to have a contract with a city giving it a perpetual right to operate its cars in the streets of the city, to enjoin the city from impairing such contract by enforcing an enactment of its council treating the company as a trespasser and requiring the removal of its tracks from the streets, is a suit arising under the Constitution of the United States, of which a federal court has jurisdiction regardless of the citizenship of the parties. Des Moines City R. Co. v. Des Moines, (1907) 151 Fed. 854.

A bill alleging that complainant leased a certain oyster bed from the state for a term of years pursuant to a state law, and planted the same, but that by a subsequent act of the legislature the state undertook to transfer the property in such beds to the owners of the adjacent land, and that defendant, claiming under such law, has excluded complainant from said leased property, and which seeks injunctive relief, states a case which presents a constitutional question of the impairment of a contract by the state, and is within the jurisdiction of a federal court. Green v. Oemler, (1907) 151 Fed. 936.

A federal Circuit Court has jurisdiction to compel an interstate carrier to specifically perform a contract to issue free passes to complainants during their natural lives, which the carrier had refused to do because of the provisions of the Act of June 29, 1906, 34 Stat. L. 584, ch. 3591, 1909 Supp. Fed. Stat. Annot. 255, prohibiting a carrier from issuing free interstate transportation, complainants having alleged that the value to each of them of the right sought to be enforced exceeded $2,000, exclusive of interest and costs. Mottley v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., (1907) 150 Fed. 406.

Where two canal companies constructed irrigation ditches appropriating water from the Arkansas river, and the second to commence the work first recorded its plat, in compliance with a local statute, which, under said Act, gave it priority of right; but in subsequent litigation between the parties the Supreme Court of the state held such Act to be unconstitutional and void, it was held that the compliance with said Act by the second company, while it was recognized as the law of the state, did not give such company any contract rights with the state, or under the laws of the United States, which entitled it or the owner of a water right thereunder to invoke the jurisdiction of a federal court on the ground that it had a vested contract right to priority in the use of the water of the river, which was impaired by the state decision. Mohl v. Lamar Canal Co., (1904) 128 Fed. 776.

Equal protection of law.—The provisions of the Fourteenth Constitutional Amendment, securing personal rights, are directed against the states and their agencies, and not against the acts of private individuals, which give no right of action in the federal courts on the ground that a constitutional question is involved. Marten v. Holbrook, (1907) 157 Fed. 716.

The assessment by a state board of the property of a railroad company at a higher percentage of its actual value than property of other leases is assessed, in violation of a provision of the state constitution requiring uniform taxation of all classes of property, without statutory authority and contrary to the law of the state as declared by its Supreme Court, is not an act of the state within the meaning of the provision of the Fourteenth Constitutional Amendment, prohibiting a state from denying to any person the equal protection of the laws; and the jurisdiction of a federal court cannot be invoked for redress on the ground that the action of the board is a violation of such provision, the remedy of the company being in the state courts. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Davis, (1904) 132 Fed. 629.

Inequality in valuation for taxation of a franchise, as compared with other taxable property, must be systematic and intentional in order to justify a federal court in enjoining the apportionment and certification of the tax to the several counties, where the assessment does not appear to have been made on such a different scale of values from that adopted elsewhere as to deny the equal protection of the laws guaranteed by Const. U. S. Amend. 14, which was the only ground invoked to sustain the federal jurisdiction. Coulter v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., (1905) 196 U. S. 599, 25 S. Ct. 342, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 615, reversing (1903) 131 Fed. 282.

Where the jurisdiction of a federal court has been properly invoked for relief against assessments as discriminating against complainant, and depriving it of the equal protection of the laws, in violation of the Fourteenth Constitutional Amendment, although such federal question is determined against complainant, the bill may be retained for the decision of other questions arising on the record. Michigan R. Tax Cases, (1905) 138 Fed. 223, affirmed (1906) 201 U. S. 245, 26 S. Ct. 459, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 744.

A state constitution which makes the governor the commander-in-chief of the militia of the state, and authorizes him to call out the militia to execute the laws, suppress insurrection, and repel invasion, and a statute of the same state, which provides more in detail for the exercise of such power, are not in conflict with the Fourteenth Amendment to the Federal Constitution, as authorizing any action in violation of personal rights, but are clearly within the powers of the state; and to give a federal court jurisdiction of an action against officers of the state to recover damages for acts done as claimed under authority of such provisions, as in violation of constitutional rights, defendants must be alleged to have been guilty of a wanton abuse of the power thereby conferred. Moyer v. Peabody, (1906) 148 Fed. 870.

The Fourteenth and Fifteenth Amendments of the Federal Constitution are limitations on the states and do not confer primary rights enforceable by a person of color in the first instance in the federal courts. Brawner v. Irvin, (1909) 169 Fed. 984.

Suit against federal receiver.—It is well settled by authority that a suit against a receiver does not arise under the laws of the United States merely from the fact that such receiver was appointed by a federal court. Wrightsville Hardware Co. v. Hardware, etc., Mfg. Co., (1910) 180 Fed. 586, 588. See also Rural Home Telephone Co. v. Powers, (1910) 176 Fed. 986.

A petition against a railroad company in the possession of a receiver appointed by the federal court, to quiet plaintiff's title or to declare a forfeiture in his favor to certain realty, color of title to which is vested in the railroad company, and the legal custody of which without any other title or interest is held by the receiver, presents no federal question for the reason that, in such case, the title was in the railroad company if not forfeited, and in plaintiff if it was forfeited, and was not in the receiver. Monnett v. Columbus, etc., R. Co., (1904) 26 Ohio Cir. Ct. Rep. 469.

A petition against a railroad company in the possession of a receiver under appointment of a federal court, for the cancellation of certain writings alleged to have been fraudulently obtained from plaintiff by the receiver, involves no federal question. Monnett v. Columbus, etc., R. Co., (1904) 26 Ohio Cir. Ct. Rep. 469.

Suits relating to copyright.—Where, in a suit in the federal courts to restrain the sale of complainants' copyrighted publications at less than regular prices, there was neither diversity of citizenship nor claim for damages in the sum of $2,000, questions not arising out of the copyright law cannot be considered. Scribner v. Straus, (1906) 147 Fed. 28, 78 C. C. A. 122, affirmed (1905) 139 Fed. 193.

But a suit, the primary object of which is to enforce a right secured by the copyright laws which is being infringed by defendant, is a suit under those laws and within the jurisdiction of the federal Circuit Court, though it incidentally draws in question the validity and effect of the contract through which complainant derives title. Wooster v. Crane, (1906) 147 Fed. 516, 77 C. C. A. 211. And see also the title COPYRIGHT, ante, p. 932.

Suits relating to trademarks.—In a suit between citizens of the same state for infringement of a trademark, the federal court has no jurisdiction of an issue of alleged unfair competition; its jurisdiction being confined to the trademark as registered. A. Leschen, etc., Rope Co. v. Broderick, etc., Rope Co., (1904) 134 Fed. 571, 67 C. C. A. 418, affirmed (1906) 201 U. S. 166, 26 S. Ct. 425, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 710; Thaddeus Davids Co. v. Davids, (1908) 165 Fed. 792; National Casket Co. v. New York, etc., Casket Co., (1911) 185 Fed. 533. See also the title TRADEMARKS, post.

But a bill may be maintained in the federal Circuit Court to restrain the infringement of a common-law trademark where other jurisdictional facts are present. Capewell Horse Nail Co. v. Mooney, (C. C. A. 1909) 172 Fed. 826, affirming 167 Fed. 575.

A federal court has jurisdiction of a suit between citizens of different states to enjoin infringement of a trademark, though the actual value of the trademark is not alleged, and it is not averred that it will be destroyed by defendant's unlawful use. Griggs v. Erie Preserving Co., (1904) 131 Fed. 359.

Where, owing to noncompliance with Act March 3, 1881, ch. 138, 21 Stat. L. 502, 7 Fed. Stat. Annot. 329, the registration of a valid trademark is void, the trademark is not thereby nullified, but still retains the properties of a common-law trademark, and for its infringement suit may be brought in the federal court, if the requisite diversity of citizenship exists and the requisite judicial amount is involved. Edison v. Thomas A. Edison, Jr. Chemical Co., (1904) 128 Fed. 1013. See also A. B. Andrews Co. v. Punc- ture Proof Footwear Co., (1909) 168 Fed. 762.

Unfair competition in trade is not a federal question, and a suit therefor is not within the jurisdiction of a federal court, where the parties are citizens of the same state, nor is that issue drawn within such jurisdiction because the bill also alleges infringement of a patent growing out of the same acts of defendant. Mecky v. Grabowski, (1910) 177 Fed. 591.

National banks.—As to suits by or against national banks, see the title NATIONAL BANKS, post.

Interstate commerce.—Jurisdiction of all actions brought under the remedial sections of the Interstate Commerce Act to enforce its provisions lies exclusively in the federal courts. Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co. v. Wood, (Ind. 1908) 84 N. E. 1009. And see the title INTERSTATE COMMERCE, ante, p. 1172.

Suit on government contractor's bond.—An action by the United States on relation of a materialman against a government contractor and a surety, to recover on the contractor's bond to the government for materials furnished to enable him to perform the contract, constituted a case arising under the Constitution or laws of the United States, and was therefore within the jurisdiction of the federal courts. U. S. v. Axman, (1906) 152 Fed. 816.

Suits relating to federal elections.—An action to recover damages from state election officers for their asserted wrongful refusal to permit the plaintiff to vote for a member of the House of Representatives, at a national election held in the district where he resided, is one arising under the Constitution of the United States, of which a Circuit Court of the United States has jurisdiction. Knight v. Shelton, (1905) 134 Fed. 423; Brickhouse v. Brooks, (1908) 165 Fed. 534.

Suits relating to rights in navigable waters.—Where a river within a state was navigable for some distance from its mouth, and was actually navigated by small steamboats and river craft for the purpose of carrying up groceries, supplies, clothing, loggers' tools, etc., to the head of navigation, and returning with farmers' products, a bill was maintainable in the federal courts to restrain a boom company from maintaining a boom in the river in such a manner as to be an obstruction to navigation, though the river was chiefly valuable for floating logs, and there was no proof of actual carriage of goods on the river in interstate commerce. U. S. v. Wishkah Boom Co., (1905) 136 Fed. 42, 68 C. C. A. 592.

Claims under land grants and mining claims.—Where complainant, a Washington railroad company, had complied with all the provisions of Act Cong. March 3, 1875, ch. 152, sec. 1, 18 Stat. L. 482, 6 Fed. Stat. Annot. 501, conferring on railroad companies duly organized, etc., a right of way over the public lands of the United States, sought to restrain defendant railroad company, also incorporated under the laws of Washington, from trespassing on complainant's alleged right of way over public lands along the north bank of the Columbia river, on which complainant alleged it intended to construct its railroad in the future, the jurisdiction of the federal court was sustainable on the ground that the case involved the construction of such federal statute. Wallula Pac. R. Co. v. Portland, etc., R. Co., (1906) 154 Fed. 902.

The contention that rights below the high-water mark of navigable nontidal waters can be asserted by the patentees from the United States as appurtenant to the uplands conveyed to them, as against the title of the state when subsequently admitted into the Union, is too clearly unfounded, in view of the prior decisions of the federal Supreme Court, to raise a federal question within the original jurisdiction of a federal Circuit Court. McGilvra v. Ross, (1909) 215 U. S. 70, 30 S. Ct. 27, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 95.

Averments that patentees from the United States, whose titles were derived from Spain and Mexico by virtue of grants to their predecessors from those countries, which were confirmed by the board of land commissioners, were deprived of their property without due process of law, and allegations that their contract obligations were impaired, by certain enumerated California statutes and charters of the city of Los Angeles, which conferred upon the city only such rights in respect to the waters of a river as may have been vested in the state, afford no proper basis for the jurisdiction of the federal Circuit Court, as of a case arising under the Federal Constitution. Devine v. Los Angeles, (1906) 202 U. S. 313, 26 S. Ct. 652, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 1046.

The petition in an action of ejectment does not present a case arising under the laws of the United States of which a federal Circuit Court has jurisdiction without diversity of citizenship because it states that there is a dispute between the parties over the construction of the patent from the United States and several Acts of Congress set out as the source of plaintiff's title, where its averments show that the real controversy is over the claim of plaintiff that he is entitled to the land formed by accretion, since the patent was issued, and after the statutes were passed. Joy v. St. Louis, (1906) 201 U. S. 332, 26 S. Ct. 478, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 776.

Since the only statute recognizing the right of an entryman to settle on unsurveyed lands of the United States is Act May 14, 1880, ch. 89, 21 Stat. L. 140, 6 Fed. Stat. Annot. 300, 301, providing that a homestead settler on public land surveyed or unsurveyed shall be allowed the same time to file his application and perfect his original entry as is allowed to settlers under the pre-emption laws, a suit by a homestead settler on unsurveyed public land to protect his possessory right as against an adverse claimant does not involve a construction of the laws of the United States so as to sustain federal jurisdiction on that ground. Earnhart v. Switzler, (C. C. A. 1910) 179 Fed. 832. See also Hare v. Birkenfield, (C. C. A. 1910) 181 Fed. 825.

A suit brought under R. S. sec. 2326, 5 Fed. Stat. Annot. 35, in support of an adverse claim to mining ground, is not necessarily one of federal cognizance, but the jurisdiction of a federal court is dependent on diversity of citizenship. Willitt v. Baker, (1904) 133 Fed. 937.

Suit arising under treaty.—Allegations in a bill to quiet title, framed under Code Civ. Proc. Cal., sec. 738, that defendant's adverse claims are based upon an erroneous construction of Treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo (9 Stat. L. 922), and Act Cong. March 3, 1851, ch. 41, 9 Stat. L. 631, and upon certain enumerated acts of the California legislature, and ordinances and charters of the city of Los Angeles, adopted and approved in pursuance of such construction, do not present a case arising under the Federal Constitution, laws, or treaties, of which a federal Circuit Court has jurisdiction without diversity of citizenship. Devine v. Los Angeles, (1906) 202 U. S. 313, 26 S. Ct. 652, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 1046.

An action in ejectment to recover land claimed under a Spanish grant, protected by the Louisiana Purchase treaty and subsequent confirmatory Acts of Congress, does not involve the effect or validity of a treaty or law of the United States to confer jurisdiction on a federal court on that ground, where it appears from the petition that plaintiff's rights depend solely upon questions of fact as to whether the land in suit was within the boundaries of the original grant, or was occupied by his grantors at the time necessary to bring it within the provisions of the confirmatory acts. Joy v. St. Louis, (1903) 122 Fed. 524.

V. SUITS BY UNITED STATES.

A Circuit Court of the United States has jurisdiction of any suit in which the United States properly appears as plaintiff. U. S. v. Allen, (1909) 171 Fed. 907; U. S. v. Comet Oil, etc., Co., (1911) 187 Fed. 674.

The United States is the real, and not merely nominal, plaintiff, so as to sustain the original jurisdiction of a federal Circuit Court without regard to the amount in dispute, in a suit authorized by the Act of Aug. 13, 1894, 28 Stat. L. 279, sec. 5, ch. 282, 6 Fed. Stat. Annot. 125, to be brought in its name, for the use and benefit of a materialman, upon the bond of a contractor for a public work, which the statute requires shall contain the specific special obligation directly to the United States that the contractor will promptly make payments to all persons supplying him labor and materials in the prosecution of the work. U. S. Fidelity, etc., Co. v. U. S., (1907) 204 U. S. 349, 27 S. Ct. 381, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 516, affirming (1904) 132 Fed. 82, and apparently overruling U. S. v. Henderlong, (1900) 102 Fed. 2; U. S. v. Sheridan, (1902) 119 Fed. 236; U. S. v. Barrett, (1905) 135 Fed. 189; Burrell v. U. S., (1906) 147 Fed. 44, 77 C. C. A. 308.

VI. DIVERSE CITIZENSHIP.

In general.—A federal court has no jurisdiction of a suit between two citizens of the same state on a cause of action arising within the state and under its laws. Shohoney

v. Quincy, etc., R. Co., (1909) 223 Mo. 649, 122 S. W. 1025.

Whenever the citizens of a state can secure trial of their controversies by its courts of general jurisdiction, the citizens of different states may obtain the trial of like controversies between them by appropriate action in the federal courts. Barber Asphalt Paving Co. v. Morris, (1904) 132 Fed. 945, 66 C. C. A. 55, 67 L. R. A. 761.

The motive with which a creditor invokes the jurisdiction of a federal Circuit Court is immaterial if he has a justifiable demand and the requisite diversity of citizenship exists. Blair v. Chicago, (1906) 201 U. S. 400, 26 S. Ct. 427, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 801, reversing (1904) 132 Fed. 848.

Where a mortgage was given to secure a prior indebtedness from the mortgagor to the mortgagee, who were citizens of different states, the jurisdiction of a federal court of a suit to foreclose the mortgage is not affected by the fact that it also secured other indebtedness owing by the mortgagor to a third person, who was a citizen of the same state, which had been assigned to the mortgagee. Peacock, etc., Co. v. Thaggard, (1904) 128 Fed. 1005, affirmed 129 Fed. 1005, 64 C. C. A. 490.

State citizenship — Generally. — While a domicile once acquired by intention and acts may be held by intention alone, so far as relates to citizenship necessary to support the jurisdiction of a federal court, to constitute a change of domicile which will confer such jurisdiction, the intention must be supported by such acts as are consistent with the change, and not contradictory of it. Davis v. Dixon, (1910) 184 Fed. 509. See also Howe v. Howe, etc., Ball Bearing Co., (1907) 154 Fed. 820, 83 C. C. A. 536; Hill v. Walker, (C. C. A. 1909) 167 Fed. 241; Laws v. Fleming, (1910) 177 Fed. 450.

A plaintiff who had for many years been a resident of a city in Pennsylvania became, some two years before the commencement of his suit, the superintendent of a company engaged in drilling oil wells, which required his presence the greater part of the time at the place where the company was at work. A year later, the most of the wells on which it was then engaged being in the vicinity of a town across the river in Ohio, sixteen miles from his residence, he established his headquarters there, hiring a room in a hotel, where he stayed through the week. His family, consisting of a wife and son, remained in Pennsylvania, where his wife built a residence, and he usually spent Sundays there. He was in the directory there as a resident, paid taxes there, and voted there when he last voted. It was held that notwithstanding his testimony that he was a resident of Ohio and although he might have intended to remove to the Ohio town, he was in fact still a resident and citizen of Pennsylvania, and could not maintain a suit in a federal court against another citizen of that state. Harton v. Howley, (1907) 155 Fed. 491.

Affidavits presented to a federal court on a motion to dismiss a suit for want of jurisdiction were considered, and the facts shown held insufficient to sustain the burden resting upon the complainant to prove his alleged citizenship of the state of Washington, where it was shown that he left that state some two and one-half years prior to the commencement of the suit, and thereafter resided continuously in South Dakota, where the suit was brought, and that at about the time of its commencement he described himself in conveyances as a resident of the latter state; his own testimony being that he was unmarried, that he owned a house in Washington, and that at all times since leaving he claimed his residence there, and intended to return there after the conclusion of certain litigation and the disposal of property owned by him in South Dakota. Jones v. Subera, (1907) 150 Fed. 462.

The testimony of a plaintiff that he was at "home" in a certain town and that he lived there is sufficient proof of his citizenship in the state in which such town is situated to sustain the jurisdiction of a federal court in a suit against a corporation of another state, although the averment of citizenship in his declaration is defective. Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Davis, (1906) 149 Fed. 191, 79 C. C. A. 139.

Where plaintiff brought suit in a federal court sitting in Nevada, against citizens of that state, and alleged that he was a resident of California, and testified that he had left California and gone to Nevada for his health, but intended to return, and considered California as his home, it was held that such testimony was sufficient to establish diverse citizenship in the absence of proof to the contrary. Eisele v. Oddie, (1904) 128 Fed. 941.

Stockholders. — The presumption that the stockholders of a corporation are citizens of the state which created it does not preclude them from asserting their actual citizenship to sustain the jurisdiction of a federal Circuit Court of a suit brought by them as such stockholders. Doctor v. Harrington, (1905) 196 U. S. 579, 25 S. Ct. 355, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 606.

Where the question is as to the citizenship of an individual as determining his right to maintain an action in a federal court, the fact that he is president of a corporation creates no legal presumption that he is a citizen of the same state as the corporation, the presumption that the members of a corporation are citizens of the state in which it is incorporated being indulged only for the purpose of fixing the status of the corporation as a litigant in such courts. Utah-Nevada Co. v. De Lamar, (1904) 133 Fed. 113, 66 C. C. A. 179.

Domicile of married woman. — Where, in a suit in the federal courts, one of the plaintiffs was a married woman whose husband, for more than three years prior to the institution of the action and at the time thereof, was a resident and citizen of the state of Nevada, it was held that the wife's domicile for the purpose of jurisdiction was also there, though she in fact resided during such time in another state. Thompson v. Stalman, (1905) 139 Fed. 93.

Citizens of territories.—Diversity of citizenship between citizens of different states is indispensable to the jurisdiction of a federal court on that ground, and a controversy between a citizen of a state and a citizen of a territory will not confer jurisdiction. McClelland v. McKane, (1907) 154 Fed. 164; Maxwell v. Federal Gold, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 1907) 155 Fed. 110; Clark v. Southern Pac. Co., (1909) 175 Fed. 122.

Citizenship of corporation.—A corporation cannot be considered a citizen, inhabitant, or resident of a state in which it has not been incorporated for the purpose of determining federal jurisdiction. Fribourg v. Pullman Co., (1910) 176 Fed. 981.

It is settled law that for purposes of the jurisdiction of a federal court a corporation is a citizen only of the state in which it is incorporated; and, where it is doing business and has an established office in another state, such fact does not affect its citizenship, but it may be there sued in such court by a citizen of the state residing in the district. Haight, etc., Co. v. Weiss, (C. C. A. 1907) 156 Fed. 328.

Incorporators under a charter which declares that they "are hereby created a body politic and corporate" become a corporation under the laws of Mississippi for the purpose of suing and being sued in the federal courts as a citizen of that state upon the approval of such charter by the governor, and the certification of such approval by the secretary of state, under the great seal of the state, although there has been no compliance with the subsequent provision of the charter conferring the power to commence business when a certain proportion of the capital stock shall be subscribed and paid for. W. L. Wells Co. v. Gastonia Cotton Mfg. Co., (1905) 198 U. S. 177, 25 S. Ct. 640, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 1003.

A corporation incorporated in several states, including the one in which suit is brought against it, must be regarded as a citizen of the latter state for the purpose of determining the jurisdiction of a federal court. Lake Shore, etc., R. Co. v. Eder, (C. C. A. 1909) 174 Fed. 944.

The Boston & Maine Railroad, a corporation originally chartered in New Hampshire, but subsequently, by consolidation, also made a corporation of both Massachusetts and Maine, is a citizen of New Hampshire in such sense that the Circuit Court of the United States in that state is without jurisdiction of an action against it by another citizen of New Hampshire on the ground of diversity of citizenship. Goodwin v. Boston, etc., R. Co., (1904) 127 Fed. 986.

But it has been held that a railroad corporation of Virginia which owned and operated railroads in that and other states, including South Carolina, by taking out a charter in the latter state, as required by its laws, did not thereby become a citizen of South Carolina for the purposes of the jurisdiction of federal courts, but remained for such purposes a corporation and citizen of Virginia. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Dunlap, (C. C. A. 1908) 166 Fed. 850.

Incorporation for purposes of conferring jurisdiction.—Incorporation in Nevada by direction of a California corporation, for the sole purpose of having the matters in dispute between such California corporation and another corporation of that state determined in a federal rather than in the state court, where they were pending and undetermined, must be regarded as an attempt collusively to make a party plaintiff simply for the purpose of creating a case cognizable by the federal court, which, under the Act of March 3, 1875 (18 Stat. L. 470, 472, ch. 137, sec. 5), requires the dismissal of the suit, where the new corporation assumes to be the owner of the property rights which the old company has asserted only that it may have a standing in the federal court as a litigant in respect of those rights, and the old corporation can control the conduct of the suit brought by the new corporation at any time up to the date of the decree, and can require the new corporation, in the event of a decree in its favor, to transfer the benefit of such decree to the old corporation without any new or valuable consideration. Miller v. East Side Canal, etc., Co., (1908) 211 U. S. 293, 29 S. Ct. 111, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 189.

In Percy Summer Club v. Astle, (C. C. A. 1908) 163 Fed. 1, it was held that the formation of a corporation under the laws of New Jersey to take over property in New Hampshire from a corporation of that state having the same name and composed largely of the same persons was not so clearly for the purpose of enabling it to invoke the jurisdiction of the federal courts as to defeat such jurisdiction on the ground of fraud.

A foreign corporation does not become a citizen of another state so far as to affect the jurisdiction of the federal courts upon the question of diverse citizenship, by complying with the local laws thereof which declare that such a corporation becomes a domestic corporation by filing with the secretary of state duly authenticated copies of its charter and by-laws. Southern R. Co. v. Allison, (1903) 190 U. S. 326, 23 S. Ct. 713, 47 U. S. (L. ed.) 1078; St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Cross, (1909) 171 Fed. 480.

Change of domicile.—A change of citizenship, although for the purpose of acquiring a right to sue in a federal court, is not unlawful and does not deprive the court of jurisdiction if there is an actual bona fide change with the intention of remaining in the new domicile. Wiemer v. Louisville Water Co., (1903) 130 Fed. 244; Davis v. Dixon, (1910) 184 Fed. 509. And see cases cited under catchline State Citizenship, p. 1251, supra.

Transfer of interest in subject-matter as conformity of citizenship.—Where, pending a suit in a federal court, the jurisdiction of which depended on diversity of citizenship, complainant transferred his interest in the subject-matter to a corporation of the same citizenship as the defendant, the federal court no longer had jurisdiction, and could not proceed to a decree. Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co. v. Fiske, (C. C. A. 1910) 178 Fed. 66.

Nature of suit.—Where several policies of insurance were assigned after loss, and the assignee brought separate suits in the state court against all of the insurers, who were all citizens of states other than that in which the assignee resided, and some of the suits were removed to the federal court, but others were not removable, by reason of the insufficiency of the amount involved, whereupon one of the insurers filed a bill to restrain the suits at law and to compel an adjustment of the liability of the various insurers in equity, it was held that the controversy alleged in such bill was between the various insurance companies and the assignee of the policies; and hence the bill was maintainable as an original bill. Rochester German Ins. Co. v. Schmidt, (1904) 126 Fed. 908.

Where the defendant was sued on account of a patent sold by defendant to complainant but wrongfully assigned by defendant to a co-defendant, having been a director and a salaried officer of complainant at the time he assigned the patent, he was also chargeable as trustee regardless of the written assignment; and, diverse citizenship appearing, it was held that the suit was maintainable in a federal court to require an accounting and to compel a transfer of the patent. Prest-O-Lite Co. v. Avery Portable Lighting Co., (1908) 164 Fed. 60.

If a cross-bill in a federal court assumes the character of an original bill, it will be dismissed for want of jurisdiction, where the parties to the controversy presented thereby are citizens of the same state. Patton v. Marshall, (C. C. A. 1909) 173 Fed. 350.

Where federal jurisdiction in a suit by a stockholder was sustainable on the theory that it involved a controversy between citizens of different states, the bill is not demurrable because the controversy was not one arising under the Constitution or laws of the United States. Howard v. National Telephone Co., (1910) 182 Fed. 215.

Arrangement of parties as to adverse interests.—Prior to the Judiciary Act of 1875, in determining the question of jurisdiction, based on diversity of citizenship, the rights of the parties with respect to jurisdiction based upon a diversity of citizenship were determined solely according to the position they occupied as complainants or defendants on the face of the pleadings. Under the new law, the mere form of the pleadings may be put aside, and the parties placed upon different sides of the matter in dispute, according to the facts. Stephens v. Smartt, (1909) 172 Fed. 466; Stewart v. Mitchell, (1909) 172 Fed. 905, 909.

In determining the question of federal jurisdiction, where it depends solely on adverse citizenship, it is the duty of the court to arrange the parties on the one side or the other according to their interests or the facts, regardless of the places they occupy in the pleadings as plaintiffs or defendants. Gage v. Riverside Trust Co., (1906) 156 Fed. 1002; Mann v. Gaddie, (C. C. A. 1907) 158 Fed. 42; Stephens v. Smartt, (1909) 172 Fed. 466; Stewart v. Mitchell, (1909) 172 Fed. 905, 909; Allen-West Commission Co. v. Brashear, (1910) 176 Fed. 119; Federal Min., etc., Co. v. Bunker Hill, etc., Min., etc., Co., (1909) 187 Fed. 474.

If such arrangement defeats the jurisdiction, the bill will be dismissed. Mann v. Gaddie, (C. C. A. 1907) 158 Fed. 42; Allen-West Commission Co. v. Brashear, (1910) 176 Fed. 119.

A controversy between two factions in a local church, each having a pastor and a governing board of elders all of whom are citizens of the same state, and each claiming the exclusive right to control and use the church building and property, cannot be brought by members of one faction who are citizens of other states against the pastor and elders of both factions but asking relief against one side only by injunction to restrain them from interfering with their co-defendants in the use and occupation of the property. In such case, the defendants who belong to the same faction as complainants are not merely formal parties, but the real controversy is between them and their co-defendants and requires that they be considered as complainants for the purpose of determining the court's jurisdiction. Stewart v. Mitchell, (1909) 172 Fed. 905.

In a suit in equity instituted by a stockholder in his own name, but upon a right of action in his corporation, such corporation is an indispensable party, and, for the purpose of determining the jurisdiction of a federal court, will be aligned with the defendants whenever the officers or persons controlling it are shown to be opposed to the object sought by the complaining stockholder, and when such opposition does not appear it will be aligned with the complainant. Groel v. United Electric Co., (1904) 132 Fed. 252; Kelly v. Mississippi River Coaling Co., (1909) 175 Fed. 482. See also Waller v. Coler, (1903) 125 Fed. 821.

But the fact that the ultimate interest of a corporate defendant may be the same as that of the complaining stockholders does not require, in arranging the parties to a cause for the purpose of determining the jurisdiction of a federal Circuit Court, invoked on the ground of diversity of citizenship, that such corporation be grouped on the side of complainants, where the bill alleges that the corporation is under a control antagonistic to complainants, and is made to act in a way detrimental to their rights. Doctor v. Harrington, (1905) 196 U. S. 579, 25 S. Ct. 355, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 606; Howard v. National Telephone Co., (1910) 182 Fed. 215.

The corporate defendant and the complaining stockholder will not be aligned on the same side of the controversy for the purpose of determining the jurisdiction of a federal Circuit Court, invoked on the ground of diverse citizenship, because it may be for the financial interests of the corporation that the suit shall succeed, where the corporation unites with the other defendant in resisting the claim of illegality and fraud, and both are alleged to have engaged in the same illegal and fraudulent conduct, and the injury is alleged to have been accomplished by their joint action. Venner v. Great Northern R. Co., (1908) 209 U. S. 24, 28 S. Ct. 328, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 666.

Equity rule 94, prescribing the requisites of a bill by a stockholder to enforce rights of the corporation, was adopted for the purpose of preventing collusive suits in the federal courts of which they would not otherwise have jurisdiction, and, except in the requirement that the bill be verified by oath, such rule adds nothing to what was previously substantially required by correct pleading. It in no way affects the rule that, in determining federal jurisdiction in such suits, the corporation is to be aligned with the complainant or the defendants, according to the facts. Groel v. United Electric Co., (1904) 132 Fed. 252.

In a stockholders' suit in a federal court to remove an alleged fraudulent lien from the property of the corporation, where the complainant has not complied with equity rule 94, the corporation will be aligned on the side of the complainant. Gage v. Riverside Trust Co., (1906) 156 Fed. 1002.

In a suit by a stockholder of a corporation of the same state against such corporation and a foreign corporation to charge the latter as trustee because of acts which as majority stockholder it caused the former to do in fraud of its other stockholders, the domestic corporation is not a party in the same interest as complainant, and cannot be aligned with him for the purpose of giving a federal court jurisdiction on the ground of diversity of citizenship. Redfield v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., (1903) 124 Fed. 929.

A federal court is without jurisdiction on the ground of diversity of citizenship of a suit for an accounting under a written contract, where the defendants are all citizens of the same state, and one of them is a party to the contract on the same side as complainants, made a defendant only because he refused to join as a complainant. Menefee v. Frost, (1903) 123 Fed. 633.

A federal court is without jurisdiction of a suit for the specific performance of a contract in which the complainant owns only a part interest, when the owner of the remaining interest, who is joined as a defendant, is a citizen of the same state as his codefendants, the other parties to the contract. In such case he must be arranged by the court on the side of the complainant in the controversy. Joseph Dry Goods Co. v. Hecht, (1903) 120 Fed. 760, 57 C. C. A. 64.

Where there is no controversy between one of the joint vendors in a contract for the sale of lands and the purchaser, but there is a dispute between her and the other vendors as to her share of the purchase money and the amount she should contribute toward clearing the title, and also between such other vendors and the purchaser with respect to taxes, interest, and other matters affecting the amount due under the contract which resulted in a suit by them for specific performance, the said vendor, who refused to join in such suit, was properly made a defendant, and cannot be aligned as a complainant in interest to defeat the jurisdiction of a federal court therein because of the fact that she was a citizen of the same state as the purchaser, although she was necessarily given a decree against him for the share of the purchase money to which the court determined she was entitled. Wood v. Deskins, (1905) 141 Fed. 500, 72 C. C. A. 558.

Where the bill of plaintiff corporation alleged that it was engaged in the business of selling coal and coke; that it had contracts with defendant coal companies by which it was to take and pay for all their product at the mines, to furnish transportation, and to sell the same at prices fixed by the companies, receiving a stipulated sum per ton for its services; that by the terms of such contracts defendant companies were not liable for damages for failing to furnish coal or coke to plaintiff where such failure was caused by strikes; that in reliance on such contracts plaintiff had made contracts for the sale of large quantities of coal and coke, which could only be supplied from the mines of defendant companies; that the latter were prevented from furnishing the same by the wrongful and illegal acts of individual defendants, who were conducting a strike among the miners, and who, by intimidation and threats, prevented others from working in the mines, it was held that the bill showed such an interest in plaintiff as entitled it to maintain the suit in its own right for its protection independently of the coal companies, which, while properly made defendants, could not be aligned with the plaintiff to defeat the jurisdiction of a federal court, their interests, while perhaps not adverse, being based on different rights. Carroll v. Chesapeake, etc., Coal Agency Co., (1903) 124 Fed. 305, 61 C. C. A. 49.

Actual and nominal parties.—For purposes of jurisdiction, the federal courts regard the real rather than the nominal party. Hollenbach v. Elmore, etc., Contracting Co., (1909) 174 Fed. 845.

Where plaintiff in a suit in a federal Circuit Court was not the real party in interest, and the declaration did not show the real party's interest or contain proper averments concerning his citizenship, permission will be granted to amend in such respects within ten days. Klein v. Title Guaranty, etc., Co., (1909) 166 Fed. 365.

An objection that plaintiff in a suit in the federal courts was only a nominal party, and that it did not appear that the real party in interest possessed the requisite citizenship to give the court jurisdiction, is a defect which may be remedied by amendment after a trial on the merits by amending the record so as to make it recite that the suit was by plaintiff to the use of the real party in interest, and by inserting proper averments concerning his citizenship. Baglin v. Title Guaranty, etc., Co., (1909) 166 Fed. 356.

Where the real controversy in a suit in a federal court is between citizens of different states who are in court, inability to make service upon another party named by the complainant as a defendant, whose interest is merely ministerial, will not deprive the court of jurisdiction. Slater Trust Co. v. Randolph-Macon Coal Co., (1908) 166 Fed. 171.

Where an action in the name of the United States on a public contractor's bond was brought by a banking corporation having its banking house in the state of Washington, and the contractor sued was a resident of California, and his surety a corporation organized under the laws of Connecticut, and the amount involved exceeded the sum of $2,000, the federal jurisdiction existed because of diverse citizenship. Burrell v. U. S., (1906) 147 Fed. 44, 77 C. C. A. 308.

A note made payable to the cashier of a bank as trustee, the consideration for which was furnished by the bank, which was the real owner, may be sued on by the bank in its own name, or by its receiver, without indorsement or assignment, under the statute of Utah, and the citizenship of the cashier is immaterial to affect the jurisdiction of a federal court in that state of an action thereon. Franklin v. Conrad-Stanford Co., (1905) 137 Fed. 737, 70 C. C. A. 171.

The jurisdiction of a federal court will not be permitted to be defeated by either the non-joinder or joinder of mere formal parties against whom no relief is sought, and, if necessary to sustain such jurisdiction, parties who are not indispensable should not be impleaded, and if made defendants they should be dismissed. Jackson v. Jackson, (C. C. A. 1909) 175 Fed. 710.

Plaintiff, as widow, brought an action in the state court to recover for the wrongful death of her husband under the California statute, by which she was the only person entitled to receive the proceeds of any recovery. Defendant removed the cause on the ground of diversity of citizenship, and afterward demurred to the complaint on the ground that it did not show that all of the heirs of deceased were parties as required by Code Civ. Pro. Cal., sec. 377. The demurrer was sustained, and plaintiff amended by joining the parents of deceased as defendants, on an allegation that they refused to join as plaintiffs and that they had no interest in the action. They were served with process, but made default. It was held that they were merely formal parties without interest, and that the fact that they were citizens of the same state as plaintiff did not defeat the jurisdiction of the court. Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Phillips, (C. C. A. 1910) 176 Fed. 663.

To a bill in a federal court seeking to establish a trust in favor of complainant corporation in money alleged, in effect, to have been embezzled from it by one of its officers, and deposited by him with defendants, by whom it was still held, such officer is not an indispensable party, but, if joined, is only a formal party, whose presence will not defeat the jurisdiction of the court, although he is a citizen of the same state as complainant; the requisite diversity of citizenship being shown between complainant and the other defendants. White Swan Mines Co. v. Balliet, (1905) 134 Fed. 1004.

Indispensable parties.—For jurisdictional purposes, federal courts divide parties into formal, necessary, and indispensable parties; indispensable parties being those having an interest in the controversy of such a nature that a final decree cannot be made without affecting that interest, or leaving the controversy in such a condition that its final determination may be wholly inconsistent with equity and good conscience. Caylor v. Cooper, (1908) 165 Fed. 757.

All persons who have such an interest in the subject-matter of a suit in a federal court as to render their presence necessary in order to make the final decree effectual are indispensable parties, and must be joined, although their citizenship is such as will oust the jurisdiction of the court. South Penn Oil Co. v. Miller, (C. C. A. 1909) 175 Fed. 729.

The general rule as to parties in chancery is that all ought to be made parties who are interested in the controversy, in order that there may be an end of litigation. This rule, however, is subject to the following qualifications: (1) When a person will be directly affected by a decree, he is an indispensable party, unless the parties are too numerous to be brought before the court, when the case is subject to a special rule. (2) Where a person is interested in the controversy, but will not be directly affected by a decree made in his absence, he is not an indispensable party, but he should be made a party if possible, and the court will not proceed to a decree without him, if he can be reached. (3) Where he is not interested in the controversy between the immediate litigants, but has an interest in the subject-matter, which may be conveniently settled in the suit, and thereby prevent further litigation, he may be a party or not, at the option of the complainant. In a determination of the jurisdiction of the United States Circuit Courts, indispensable parties only should be considered, because all others may be dismissed or disregarded if their presence will oust or restrict the jurisdiction or the right. Where the real controversy is between citizens of different states, or a citizen and an alien, and the complainant is by some rule of law compelled to use the name of another party as defendant, such party will not deprive the federal courts of jurisdiction, although such party be a citizen of a territory or a citizen of the same state as the complainant. Kuchler v. Greene, (1908) 163 Fed. 91.

To a suit by a stockholder in a domestic corporation to charge a foreign corporation as trustee on the ground that as the owner of a majority of the stock of the domestic corporation it caused such corporation to do acts which were in fraud of its other stockholders, the domestic corporation is an indispensable party, and a federal court is without jurisdiction of such suit where complainant and such corporation are citizens of the same state. Redfield v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., (1903) 124 Fed. 929.

Under a state law which provides that, when proceedings are commenced by a landowner for the assessment of damages where land is taken for public use, a mortgagee may join as a petitioner, and if he does not he must be served with notice and permitted to join, and that the interest of the mortgagee shall be first satisfied before any part of the damages is paid to the mortgagor, a mortgagee is an "indispensable party" petitioner in such a proceeding in a federal court, and where he is a citizen of the same state as defendant the court is without jurisdiction. Adams v. Woburn, (1909) 174 Fed. 192.

Trustees of a mortgage with power of sale are indispensable parties on foreclosure, and, their interest being antagonistic to those of the mortgagors, they must be treated as plaintiffs, and determine the question of diversity of citizenship, though for refusal to act they are properly made parties defendant by the beneficiary. Allen-West Commission Co. v. Brashear, (1910) 176 Fed. 119.

Where a bill alleged that the complainant directed C. to buy certain stock on the New York Stock Exchange; that the order was transmitted by C. to the defendant, or to some other person; that the stock was bought and the certificate came into the defendant's hands with knowledge that the stock belonged to the complainant; that the complainant, having paid C. in full, demanded the stock both of C. and of the defendant, but failed to obtain it; that if the defendant sold the stock, as the complainant was informed, its proceeds were in the defendant's hands free from lien; and that the defendant had been paid in full on account of the transaction, it was held that C. was a necessary party to the bill. Jemey v. Hayden, (1909) 171 Fed. 898.

The rule that all persons interested in a suit in a federal court must be made parties does not apply where the bringing in of a dispensable party will oust the jurisdiction of the court. Federal Min., etc., Co. v. Bunker Hill, etc., Min., etc., Co., (1909) 187 Fed. 474.

A state statute giving a tenant under a lease for more than ten years the right to maintain an action in his own name to remove a cloud upon title will be given effect by a federal court, and under such statute the lessor is not an indispensable party to a suit by a lessee for ninety-nine years, obligated by the terms of the lease to pay all taxes and assessments against the property, to set aside an assessment for local improvements on the ground of its invalidity. New York, etc., R. Co. v. New York, (1905) 145 Fed. 661.

The requisite diversity of citizenship exists where the plaintiff, a citizen of Iowa, sues a citizen of New York and two citizens of Colorado in the federal Circuit Court of the latter state. The right to object that the citizen of New York is being sued in Colorado is a privilege personal to him and cannot be made by his codefendants; nor is jurisdiction over the defendants, who are citizens of Colorado, affected by the fact that service is not had upon nor appearance made by the citizen of New York, the latter not being an indispensable party. Schiffer v. Anderson, (1906) 146 Fed. 457, 76 C. C. A. 667.

Dismissal as to certain parties. — Where a federal court has jurisdiction of the subject-matter and the necessary parties, a bill can be dismissed as to any defendant who was not an indispensable party to the suit, and whose presence would oust or restrict the jurisdiction, or the right, and be retained as to the other defendants. North Carolina Min. Co. v. Westfeldt, (1907) 151 Fed. 290.

A bill in the federal Circuit Court to enjoin interference with an employer's business may be dismissed as to a voluntary unincorporated labor union and its members generally, for want of jurisdiction of them, and stand as to the remaining individual defendants. Irving v. Joint Dist. Council of United Brotherhood of Carpenters, etc., (1910) 180 Fed. 896.

The dismissal without prejudice of a suit in a federal court as to one of several defendants who might be sued either separately or jointly, either on his objection to the local jurisdiction on the ground that neither he nor plaintiff is a resident of the district, or on the ground that he and plaintiff are both residents of the same state, where he is not an indispensable party, does not necessitate a dismissal as to other defendants properly before the court. Ladew v. Tennessee Copper Co., (1910) 170 Fed. 245.

Unnecessary parties. — In an action by two of three trustees against a corporation residing in another state, the fact that one of the trustees, who refused to join as plaintiff in the suit, and was made a defendant, resided in the same state as the corporation, did not deprive the federal court of jurisdiction, on the ground that the trustee residing in the same state with defendant was a necessary party plaintiff, since that trustee was not really a party to the controversy, but only made such in order that the rights of all interested parties might be determined in one proceeding. Einstein v. Georgia Southern, etc., R. Co., (1903) 120 Fed. 1008.

Where plaintiff, a citizen of New York, and M., a citizen of Indiana, were trustees under a mortgage executed by an Indiana corporation to secure bonds, in which water hydrant rentals due from defendant, a city of Indiana, were pledged as security, but the mortgage provided that the corporation should receive such rentals until default in the payment of interest on the bonds, the ordinance, however, under which the franchise to the corporation was granted, providing that the rentals in question should be paid to a trustee as the grantee or his assigns might elect, and plaintiff was appointed such trustee, it was held that the trust created by the ordinance was separate from that created by the mortgage, and hence plaintiff was entitled to sue therefor in the federal courts sitting in Indiana, without joining the cotrustee mentioned in the mortgage. Seymour v. Farmers' L. & T. Co., (1903) 128 Fed. 907, 63 C. C. A. 633.

Where, in a suit in the federal courts for an injunction against strikers, the court's jurisdiction depends on the residence of the parties, a party interested in the subject-matter need not be made a party to the suit where his joinder would oust the court of jurisdiction, provided a final decree against the parties before the court, consistent with equity and good conscience, can be made. Es v. Haggerty, (1902) 124 Fed. 441.

Where, in a suit to restrain defendants from selling liquor on certain land under a contract with a lumber company which held a timber contract from complainant's grantors, no relief was sought by or against the lumber company, it was not a necessary party, and hence it was not material that it was improperly joined as a defendant, and its joinder as a complainant would have defeated federal jurisdiction because of its citizenship. Paint Creek Co. v. Gallego Coal, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 1908) 166 Fed. 62.

Representative parties.—Where the plaintiff is a minor suing by his guardian, the question of the jurisdiction of a federal court is determined by his own citizenship, and not that of his guardian, which is immaterial. Toledo Traction Co. v. Cameron, (1905) 137 Fed. 48, 69 C. C. A. 28.

A Circuit Court of the United States has jurisdiction of a suit by the guardian of the person and estate of an incompetent, the guardian residing in North Dakota, where she was appointed, to compel an accounting by a guardian first appointed, residing in Minnesota, where the amount involved is over $2,000. Pulver v. Leonard, (1909) 176 Fed. 586.

Where a nonresident citizen who was a co-executor of an estate was entitled to sue in the federal courts for the benefit of the estate, the fact that another executor qualified in the state of the situs of the estate does not preclude the nonresident executor from resorting to the federal courts. Monmouth Invest. Co. v. Means, (1906) 151 Fed. 159, 80 C. C. A. 527.

A state statute providing that a nonresident cannot act as administrator does not make an administrator appointed therein a citizen of the state for the purpose of the jurisdiction of a federal court, which is determined by his actual citizenship. McDuffie v. Montgomery, (1904) 128 Fed. 105.

A federal court has jurisdiction of a suit by a legatee, who is a citizen of another state, against an executor to establish and enforce rights under the will. Higgins v. Eaton, (C. C. A. 1910) 183 Fed. 388, reversing 178 Fed. 153.

A citizen of one state, who holds the title to property in trust for others, may maintain an action for damages to it against the citizens of another state in the proper federal court, without regard to the citizenship of the beneficiary. Johnson v. St. Louis, (C. C. A. 1909) 172 Fed. 31.

Under a local statute which empowers the court in a creditor's suit against an insolvent corporation to adjudge the amount payable by each stockholder under the double liability provided for by the statute, and to appoint a receiver to collect the same with authority to maintain suits therefor against stockholders in other jurisdictions, such a receiver is in the position of a quasi assignee, representing all of the creditors, and may maintain an action in a federal court in another state, and his own citizenship, and not that of the creditors, affords the test of jurisdiction. Irvine v. Bankard, (1910) 181 Fed. 206.

Interveners and substituted parties.—Where a federal court has taken possession of the property of a railroad company by its receiver, appointed in a suit of which it had jurisdiction, it does not lose its exclusive jurisdiction to administer the property because other parties interested therein intervene to enforce particular rights, as for the foreclosure of a mortgage, even though they may be citizens of the same state as the defendant or others adversely interested. Kreider v. Cole, (1907) 149 Fed. 647, 79 C. C. A. 339, reversing (1905) 140 Fed. 944.

Where ejectment was brought in a federal court in which the requisite diversity of citizenship appeared, and, after judgment against a tenant of a part of the tract, his landlord, who was not a party to the suit, appeared and sought to have the judgment opened, the fact that such landlord is of the same citizenship as plaintiff will not oust the court of jurisdiction. King v. Davis, (1903) 137 Fed. 198, affirmed (C. C. A. 1907) 157 Fed. 676.

But where, after a foreign receiver, appointed by a state court, had brought suit in the Circuit Court of the United States sitting in Louisiana against a city of that state, his authority to prosecute the suit was annulled by the Supreme Court of the state, the Circuit Court had no jurisdiction to permit the continuance of such suit by a citizen of Louisiana, appointed as such receiver's successor after his death. Hubert v. New Orleans, (1904) 130 Fed. 21, 64 C. C. A. 389.

Partnerships, joint-stock companies, and unincorporated associations.—Limited partnerships and partnership associations in which the capital subscribed is alone responsible for the debt of the association, but which are not declared by statute to be corporations, are not citizens of the state in which they are domiciled for the purposes of federal jurisdiction, independent of the individuals composing them. Fred Macey Co. v. Macey, (1905) 135 Fed. 725, 68 C. C. A. 363.

A voluntary unincorporated association is not a citizen of any state, and hence the federal Circuit Court has no jurisdiction of a labor union constituting such association, nor of its members generally, on a bill against them to enjoin interference with an employer's business. Irving v. Joint Dist. Council of United Brotherhood of Carpenters, etc., (1910) 180 Fed. 896.

In a suit to restrain a boycott instituted by certain labor associations which were not corporations, such associations were properly designated as parties for the purpose of locating the citizenship of their members, also made defendants, in order to determine the requisite diversity of citizenship to establish federal jurisdiction. Seattle Brewing, etc., Co. v. Hansen, (1905) 144 Fed. 1011.

Under a local law which provided that on a cause of action against a joint-stock association organized under the laws of the state an action may be brought against its president or treasurer, any judgment therein, however, to bind only the property of the association, and that such an action may be brought against all of the members of the association, it was held that such statute did not affect the jurisdiction of a federal court in another state, and that, in an action therein against the president of such an association on a cause of action against the association, such president is not a real party to the controversy, within the meaning of the Constitution and laws of the United States, but merely a nominal party, and his citizenship is unavailable to confer jurisdiction on the court; the citizenship of the other members of the association not appearing. Taylor v. Weir, (C. C. A. 1909) 171 Fed. 636, reversing (1908) 162 Fed. 585.

Diverse citizenship is not available to sustain the jurisdiction of a federal Circuit Court of a suit to enjoin a sale of railway stock by a firm of bankers acting on behalf of the stockholders unless a sum shall first be deposited out of the proceeds of the sale sufficient to satisfy any judgment which may be recovered by complainant in a suit to foreclose a mortgage on the property of the railway company, where some of the members of such firm are citizens of the same state with complainant. Raphael v. Trask, (1904) 194 U. S. 272, 24 S. Ct. 647, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 973, affirming (1902) 118 Fed. 777.

Several parties plaintiff or defendant.—If there are several coplaintiffs, each must be competent to sue, or if there are several defendants, each must be liable to be sued, in a federal court, to give that court jurisdiction. Anderson v. Bassman, (1905) 140 Fed. 10; Mirabile Corp. v. Purvis, (1906) 143 Fed. 920; Blunt v. Southern R. Co., (1907) 155 Fed. 499; Gage v. Riverside Trust Co., (1906) 156 Fed. 1002.

A federal court has jurisdiction on the ground of diversity of citizenship where the parties designated in the bill as plaintiffs and defendants are respectively citizens of different states, and nothing appears from the bill which requires their rearrangement. Loose v. Hartford Pulp Plaster Corp., (1908) 159 Fed. 318.

Where federal jurisdiction rests on diversity of citizenship, it is no objection that citizens of different states, other than the state in which the suit is instituted, are combined as cocomplainants. Schultz v. Highland Gold Mines Co., (1907) 158 Fed. 337.

The bringing in of a new party in a suit in a federal court by cross-bill or otherwise, when the presence of such party as an original defendant would have defeated federal jurisdiction, violates both the constitutional and statutory requirement as to diverse citizenship, and the court is without jurisdiction to entertain a cross-bill by an intervener who could not have been made a party to the original bill, unless such intervener represents an interest already before the court or claims an interest in property of which the court holds possession. Newton v. Gage, (1907) 155 Fed. 508.

Where a creditor's bill in a federal court to enforce a state judgment sought to establish the existence of a partnership only for the purpose of subjecting the interest of the surviving partner in the partnership funds to the payment of complainant's judgment, it was held that the bill was not demurrable on the ground that complainant sought thereby to compel defendants, who were both residents of the state, to litigate in the Circuit Court a demand which one had against the other. Feidler v. Bartleson, (C. C. A. 1908) 161 Fed. 30, affirming (1906) 149 Fed. 299.

Where one partner has committed acts which render the continuation of the partnership impossible, all of the other partners are not required to join as complainants in a suit for dissolution; but such suit may be maintained by one, joining the others as defendants, and the facts that the interest of others may be similar to his own, and that they are citizens of the same state as the offending partner, will not defeat the jurisdiction of a federal court, where the complainant is a citizen of another state. Gaddie v. Mann, (1906) 147 Fed. 960.

The fact that a Delaware corporation plaintiff owned all the stock of an Oregon corporation has been held not to require the latter to be brought into a suit against defendant Oregon corporation as a plaintiff, but to permit its being a defendant. Federal Min., etc., Co. v. Bunker Hill, etc., Min., etc., Co., (1909) 187 Fed. 474.

A federal court is not ousted of jurisdiction in a suit by creditors of an insolvent corporation to enforce the double liability of stockholders for the benefit of all creditors because some of the creditors were citizens of the same state as defendants. Alsop v. Conway, (C. C. A. 1911) 188 Fed. 568.

Where a minority stockholders' bill was brought by citizens of three states against citizens of two other states, in a state where part of the defendants resided, but was not local in character, it was held that jurisdiction on the ground of diversity of citizenship attached as to all the complainants and as to all the defendants who were citizens of the state in which the suit was instituted, but not as to the defendants who were citizens of another state. Schultz v. Highland Gold Mines Co., (1907) 158 Fed. 337.

The Circuit Court has no jurisdiction over an action brought against both a domestic and a foreign corporation where there is any right of action, or any reasonable ground to claim a right of action, against the domestic corporation, and where no separable controversy is claimed to exist. Keller v. Kansas City, etc., R. Co., (1903) 135 Fed. 202.

A Circuit Court of the United States is without jurisdiction of a suit against a number of defendants to enjoin the diversion of water from a stream by means of certain irrigation ditches, in some one of which each of the defendants is alleged to own an interest, where any one of the defendants is a citizen of the same state as complainant. Anderson v. Bassman, (1905) 140 Fed. 10.

Where one or more of several joint complainants are of the same citizenship as defendant, federal jurisdiction on the ground of diverse citizenship does not exist. Key West Cigar Manufacturers' Assoc. v. Rosenbloom, (1909) 171 Fed. 296.

Where the complainant and defendant C. were joint trustees under a certain deed of trust, complainant being a citizen of Illinois, while C. and the other defendants were citizens of New York, it was held that in the absence of an allegation that C. was requested to join complainant in a suit for instructions as to the disposition of the trust funds, and refused, there was a nonjoinder of parties complainant, and since if C. was made a complainant, it would defeat federal jurisdiction, such jurisdiction was not shown. Caylor v. Cooper, (1908) 165 Fed. 757.

Where the complainant, a nonresident distributee of the estate of a deceased partner, the administration of which was pending in the probate court of the state of his decease, filed a bill in the federal Circuit Court to compel the executors of the deceased partner, one of whom was the surviving partner, to account, and prayed judgment directing an account between the two executors other than the surviving partner, and such surviving partner, together with an accounting concerning the partnership affairs between such surviving partner and the estate, it was held that the accounting concerning the partnership affairs was the principal object of the bill; and, there being no diversity of citizenship between such executors, and no federal question involved, the court was without jurisdiction. Moore v. Fidelity Trust Co., (1905) 134 Fed. 489, affirmed 138 Fed. 1, 70 C. C. A. 663.

In a suit by a stockholder against a corporation and others founded in rights which may properly be asserted by the corporation, such corporation is an indispensable party, and a federal court is without jurisdiction of the suit on the ground of diversity of citizenship where the complainant is a citizen of a state and the corporation of a territory, although the requisite diversity exists as between complainant and other defendants. McClelland v. McKane, (1907) 154 Fed. 164.

Where complainants filed a bill in a federal court against a corporation of the same state, as owner of a patent, and the patentee, who was a citizen of another state, alleging that such patentee obtained a decree against complainants in the same court adjudging the validity of the patent and enjoining its infringement; that complainants thereafter entered into a license contract with defendant corporation, giving them the right to manufacture and sell under the patent for a fixed term, with privilege of renewal, subject to the reservation of the right to such defendant to give notice by a time stated that it did not desire to renew, which notice the defendant had given; and that when the contract was signed, complainants were "orally assured" that no advantage would be taken of the reservation — the bill praying that the decree in the infringement suit be set aside or suspended, that complainants' right to a renewal of the license contract be established, and that in the meantime defendants be enjoined from proceeding under the decree or bringing suit against complainants for infringement, and no facts being alleged which would sustain a bill of review in the patent suit, it was held that the court was without jurisdiction on the ground of diversity of citizenship; the patentee being neither a necessary nor a proper party to such controversy. Lefkowitz v. Foster Hose Supporter Co., (1908) 161 Fed. 367.

Dismissal as to certain parties. — Where a bill maintainable in the federal court only because of diverse citizenship did not show that all the parties on one side of the controversy were entitled by diverse citizenship to sue all the parties on the other side, but could be made sustainable if certain defendants of the same citizenship as some of the complainants were dismissed, and it did not appear that they were necessary parties, they not having entered their appearance, the court was authorized by equity rule 47 to dismiss the case as to them. Barnes v. Berry, (1907) 156 Fed. 72.

But the power of a federal court of equity to allow the amendment of a bill by changing the parties to give the court jurisdiction, and the propriety of exercising such power if it exists, should only be determined on a formal application and due notice and hearing. Riggs v. Brown, (1909) 172 Fed. 637.

Averment of citizenship — Generally. — To sustain the jurisdiction of a Circuit Court of the United States on the ground of diversity of citizenship, that fact must be positively and unequivocally averred at the outset in the pleadings of the party invoking the jurisdiction, or it must appear affirmatively and with equal distinctness elsewhere in the record. Taylor v. Weir, (1909) 171 Fed. 636, reversing (1908) 162 Fed. 585.

The failure of an amended bill filed in a federal court to allege the citizenship of the parties at the time the suit was commenced, as well as at the time the amended bill was filed, is fatal to the jurisdiction of the court where that is dependent on diversity of citizenship. Cochran v. Pittsburg, etc., R. Co., (1907) 150 Fed. 682; International Bank, etc., Co. v. Scott, (C. C. A. 1908) 159 Fed. 58; Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Frederickson, (C. C. A. 1910) 177 Fed. 206.

An averment of residence is not equivalent to one of citizenship for the purpose of invoking the jurisdiction of a federal court. Thomas v. D. O. Mills Nat. Bank, (1901) 106 Fed. 438, 45 C. C. A. 407; Gale v. Southern Bldg., etc., Assoc., (1902) 117 Fed. 732; Yocum v. Parker, (1904) 130 Fed. 770, 66 C. C. A. 80; Stockwell v. Boston, etc., R. Co., (1904) 131 Fed. 152; Mohican Tp. v. Johnson, (1904) 133 Fed. 524, 66 C. C. A. 592; Sanbo v. Union Pac. Coal Co., (1905) 140 Fed. 713, 72 C. C. A. 24.

Jurisdictional allegations in the complaint in federal courts are not made as a basis for proof at the trial, but to found jurisdiction thereon. Per Amidon, District Judge, in Hill v. Walker, (C. C. A. 1909) 167 Fed. 241.

As far as diversity of citizenship is requisite, the jurisdiction of a federal court may not be renounced or avoided where the facts requisite to confer it appear either directly or by just inference from any part of the record. Howe v. Howe, etc., Ball Bearing Co., (1907) 154 Fed. 820, 822, 83 C. C. A. 536, 538; Adams Express Co. v. Adams, (C. C. A. 1908) 159 Fed. 62.

Sufficient averment. — That the bill merely recites facts showing diversity of citizenship of the parties, instead of making distinct traversable averments thereof, is not ground for denying relief, where the affidavits of the defendant do not in any way dispute the diversity of citizenship. Gorham Mfg. Co. v. Weintraub, (1910) 176 Fed. 927.

An allegation of a complaint admitted by answer, that "defendant is a domestic corporation duly organized and existing under the laws of New York, having its principal office for the transaction of business in the Northern District of New York," sufficiently avers that the corporation is a citizen of New York, for the purpose of giving jurisdiction to a federal Circuit Court. Sun Printing, etc., Assoc. v. Edwards, (1904) 194 U. S. 377, 24 S. Ct. 696, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 1027.

The jurisdiction of a federal Circuit Court on the ground of diverse citizenship over a suit between a citizen of Michigan and the board of trustees of the Ohio State University will sufficiently appear, so far as the pleadings are concerned, without bringing the several persons constituting the board before the court as defendants, where it is averred that the board was created by and exists as an organized body under the laws of Ohio, with power to sue and be sued by its collective name, if it is also alleged that each individual trustee is a citizen of that state. Thomas v. Ohio State University, (1904) 195 U. S. 207, 25 S. Ct. 24, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 160.

Where a petition in an action in the federal court sitting in Ohio, for injuries to a servant, alleged that plaintiff was a citizen of Ohio, and that defendant was a citizen of Maryland, such allegations were held to be sufficient to sustain the jurisdiction of the federal court, without an allegation that either party resided in the district where the suit was brought. Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Doty, (1904) 133 Fed. 866, 67 C. C. A. 38.

An allegation in a petition that plaintiff is a citizen "of said county of Monroe, in the said state of Michigan," while inexact as an averment of citizenship of the state of Michigan for the purpose of showing jurisdiction in a federal court, will be treated as sufficient, especially in an appellate court, when it has been so construed and treated by both court and counsel in the trial court, which made a finding of the fact in accordance therewith. Toledo Traction Co. v. Cameron, (1905) 137 Fed. 48, 69 C. C. A. 28.

Where a declaration by a partnership alleged that plaintiff was a partnership, having its principal place of business in K., and authorized to sue and be sued in the name of Y. Company, Limited, and that each and every member and partner of such association was a citizen of Michigan, such allegation sufficiently charged the citizenship of the parties comprising the firm to confer jurisdiction; such associations being, under the local law, quasi-corporations. Derk P. Yonkerman Co. v. Charles H. Fuller's Advertising Agency, (1905) 135 Fed. 613.

An averment that plaintiff is a resident of the state of Delaware will be regarded by an appellate court as a sufficient averment of citizenship in that state, for the purpose of giving jurisdiction to a federal Circuit Court, where the uncontradicted testimony shows a legal domicile therein, and that any absence from the state was without intention to abandon such domicile. Sun Printing, etc., Assoc. v. Edwards, (1904) 194 U. S. 377, 24 S. Ct. 696, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 1027.

Insufficient averment.—A mere averment that a party is a resident or inhabitant of a certain state is not an averment of his citizenship in that state, for the purpose of showing the jurisdiction of a federal court. Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Frederickson, (C. C. A. 1910) 177 Fed. 206.

Where, in an action in which federal jurisdiction depended solely on diversity of citizenship, there was nothing in the record to show that either plaintiff or defendant was a citizen of any state, but the complaint alleged that plaintiffs were residents and inhabitants of Kentucky, but did not state the residence of the defendants, and there was nothing to show the domicile of the parties, as distinguished from residence, jurisdiction was not shown. Newcomb v. Burbank, (C. C. A. 1910) 181 Fed. 334.

The allegation that a party was a "resident" of a certain town and county in another state is not an averment of citizenship, necessary to show jurisdiction of a federal court based on diversity of citizenship. Mayer v. Cohrs, (1911) 188 Fed. 443.

An allegation in a complaint that plaintiff is a "bona fide resident" of a certain state is not equivalent to alleging his citizenship in such state, and is not sufficient to give a federal court jurisdiction on the ground of diversity of citizenship. Koike v. Atchison, etc., R. Co., (1907) 157 Fed. 623.

Where a bill for an injunction in the federal court was sustainable only on the ground of diverse citizenship, and it failed to show that all the parties on one side of the controversy were entitled because of diverse citizenship to sue all the parties on the other side, it did not present a case of federal jurisdiction. Barnes v. Berry, (1907) 156 Fed. 72.

The allegation, as to a corporation, for the purpose of showing a federal Circuit Court's jurisdiction on the ground of diverse citizenship, that it is a citizen of a certain state, is not enough. It should be shown it was created by the laws of that state. Knight v. Litcher, etc., Lumber Co., (1905) 136 Fed. 404, 69 C. C. A. 248, rehearing denied 139 Fed. 1007, 71 C. C. A. 684; Forsyth Mfg. Co. v. Putnam, (1905) 139 Fed. 1007, 71 C. C. A. 684.

A pleading averring that plaintiff's assignor was a corporation, with its principal office in Florida, and that defendant resided in Alabama, insufficiently shows the citizenship of the assignor and of defendant, and hence is insufficient to show jurisdiction in the federal Circuit Court on the ground of diverse citizenship. J. J. McCaskill Co. v. Dickson, (C. C. A. 1906) 159 Fed. 704.

A declaration alleging that defendant was a corporation organized under the laws of Pennsylvania, and that letters of administration had been taken out by plaintiff in New Jersey, was held to be insufficient to confer federal jurisdiction on the ground of diverse citizenship. Yeandle v. Pennsylvania R. Co., (C. C. A. 1909) 169 Fed. 938.

The citizenship of the individual members of the board of trustees of the Ohio State University does not sufficiently appear for the purpose of conferring jurisdiction on a federal Circuit Court of a suit against such board, from averments that show that the board, while not an Ohio corporation, was created by and exists as an organized body under the laws of that state, although, under the Ohio constitution, no person can be elected or appointed to any office in the state unless he possesses the qualifications of an elector, and an elector must be a citizen of the state. Thomas v. Ohio State University, (1904) 195 U. S. 207, 25 S. Ct. 24, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 160.

Where the plaintiff's declaration alleged that he was a resident of the city of Dickson, Tennessee, and that defendant was a corporation organized under the laws of New Jersey, it was held that while such averment sufficiently alleged defendant's citizenship to sustain the jurisdiction of the federal court, the allegation of plaintiff's residence was not a sufficient allegation of citizenship. Crosby v. Cuba R. Co., (1908) 158 Fed. 144.

Amendment.—Where a demurrer to a declaration in a federal court was sustained because of an insufficient averment of diversity of citizenship on which jurisdiction depended, it was held that the plaintiff was entitled to amend the writ to show diversity of citizenship according to the fact. Stockwell v. Boston, etc., R. Co., (1904) 131 Fed. 153.

Resort may be had to the entire record for the purpose of curing a defective averment of citizenship, where the jurisdiction of the lower federal court is asserted to depend upon diversity of citizenship. Sun Printing, etc., Assoc. v. Edwards, (1904) 194 U. S. 377, 24 S. Ct. 696, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 1027.

Where the original petition in an action contains the requisite averments to give a federal court jurisdiction, such jurisdiction is not lost because an amended petition alleged plaintiff's citizenship in the present tense only. Toledo Traction Co. v. Cameron, (1905) 137 Fed. 48, 69 C. C. A. 28; Campbell v. Johnson, (C. C. A. 1909) 167 Fed. 102.

But where the complaint in an action in a federal court, in which jurisdiction depended on diversity of citizenship, failed to allege the plaintiff's citizenship, an amendment to cure the defect and show jurisdiction must allege the requisite citizenship, not only at the time it is filed, but at the time the action was commenced. Sanbo v. Union Pac. Coal Co., (1906) 146 Fed. 80.

Cross-bill.—The dismissal of a bill to quiet title to a mining claim does not carry with it a cross-bill filed by defendant seeking to have the title to the same claim quieted in him and which alleges facts not alleged in the original bill; nor is it necessary to the retaining of a suit for trial on the cross-bill, where it is in a federal court, that the cross-bill should contain the jurisdictional allegations as to the citizenship of the parties, which was shown by the original bill. Badger Gold Min., etc., Co. v. Stockton Gold, etc., Min. Co., (1906) 139 Fed. 838.

As to challenge and determination of jurisdiction, see notes to section 5 of this Act, infra, p. 1809, this Supplement.

VII. SUITS BETWEEN CITIZENS AND ALIENS.

Suits by aliens.—An alien may sue a citizen in the Circuit Courts of the United States. Katalla Co. v. Rones, (C. C. A. 1911) 186 Fed. 30, affirming (1910) 182 Fed. 946.

A suit for $10,000 brought by citizens and residents of France against an Illinois corporation is within the jurisdiction of the federal Circuit Court. Fribourg v. Pullman Co., (1910) 176 Fed. 981.

Where certain of the members of a limited partnership, organized under the laws of New York, were aliens, and such partnership was joined with a foreign corporation as a plaintiff in an action in the federal court in New York against a firm composed of citizens of New York, it was held that such limited partnership should not be treated, for the purpose of determining jurisdiction, as if it were a corporation located in New York, but that the members thereof retained their individual rights as aliens which entitle them to sue in the federal courts. Jewish Colonization Assoc. v. Solomon, (1903) 125 Fed. 994.

Suit by foreign state.—A suit in equity to set aside an award of arbitrators may be maintained in a court of the United States by a foreign state against a corporation of the state in which the suit is brought. Colombia v. Cauca Co., (1903) 190 U. S. 524, 23 S. Ct. 704, 47 U. S. (L. ed.) 1159, reversing (1902) 113 Fed. 1020, 51 C. C. A. 604.

A federal Circuit Court, whose action was invoked by the Republic of Colombia to set aside an award made against it in arbitration proceedings, has the same power to decree the payment of interest from the date fixed for payment by the award as in an ordinary case. Ex p. Colombia, (1904) 195 U. S. 604, 25 S. Ct. 107, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 338.

A suit brought by a citizen of one state against a citizen of another state and an alien, as defendants, involving the requisite jurisdictional amount, is within the jurisdiction of a Circuit Court of the United States. Ladew v. Tennessee Copper Co., (1911) 179 Fed. 245.

Pleading.—The alienage of the plaintiff is sufficiently alleged to sustain the jurisdiction of a federal Circuit Court by an averment in the complaint that "the plaintiff now is, and for more than one year last past has been, a resident of Washington and a citizen of Sweden," although, at the time the action was brought, Sweden was under a monarchical form of government, since the designation "citizen of Sweden" could only have been intended as a statement of the nationality of the plaintiff, viz., the country to which he bore allegiance. C. H. Nichols Lumber Co. v. Franson, (1906) 203 U. S. 278, 27 S. Ct. 102, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 181.

An allegation that plaintiff is a citizen of the British Empire is not a sufficient allegation that he is an alien, and a citizen or subject of some one foreign state, for the purpose of conferring jurisdiction on a federal court in a suit against a citizen of a state. Von Voight v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., (1904) 130 Fed. 398.

Where federal jurisdiction of an action by the liquidating committee of a bank depended on diverse citizenship, and plaintiff's petition only alleged that all of such committee resided in the Republic of Mexico, but there was no averment that they were citizens of the Republic of Mexico, it was held that jurisdiction was not shown, and that the defect was not cured by a recital in a motion for rehearing of a motion to dismiss that it appeared on the face of defendant's pleading that the "plaintiff" is a resident citizen of the Republic of Mexico, the plaintiff referred to being the liquidating committee of the bank, and not the individuals who were the real plaintiffs. International Bank, etc., Co. v. Scott, (1908) 159 Fed. 58.

VIII. SUITS BETWEEN ALIENS.

The federal courts are without jurisdiction of a suit between aliens, where no federal question is involved. Gage v. Riverside Trust Co., (1906) 156 Fed. 1002.

Where the United States Circuit Court had jurisdiction of a suit by plaintiffs against the R. & M. Co., in which a claim owing to the latter by defendant was attached, and would have had jurisdiction of such a suit by the plaintiffs against the defendant, it was held that the fact that the R. & M. Co. could not have sued the defendant in the United States Circuit Court, because both were aliens, did not deprive such court of the power to attach the debt owing from the defendant to the R. & M. Co., such company being entitled to sue the defendant in the state court. Brandenstein v. Helvetia Swiss F. Ins. Co., (1908) 159 Fed. 589.

IX. ANCILLARY PROCEEDINGS.

When ancillary relief may be had generally. — A bill in equity dependent upon a former action of which the federal court had jurisdiction may be maintained in a national court, in the absence of diversity of citizenship and of a federal question: (1) To aid, enjoin, or regulate the original suit; (2) to restrain, avoid, explain, or enforce the judgment or decree therein; or (3) to enforce or obtain an adjudication of liens upon or claims to property in the custody of the court in the original suit. Bloomington v. Watson, (1904) 128 Fed. 288, 62 C. C. A. 600; Campbell v. Golden Cycle Min. Co., (1905) 141 Fed. 610, 73 C. C. A. 260; Brun v. Mann, (1906) 151 Fed. 145, 80 C. C. A. 513; Loy v. Alston, (C. C. A. 1909) 172 Fed. 90; Preston v. Calloway, (C. C. A. 1910) 183 Fed. 19.

The jurisdiction of a federal court over the subject-matter of, and the parties to, a judgment, includes the power to enforce it, continues until it is satisfied, and may not be destroyed or impaired by the legislation of the states. Collin County Nat. Bank v. Hughes, (1907) 152 Fed. 414, 81 C. C. A. 556, rehearing denied (C. C. A.) 155 Fed. 389.

The federal courts have jurisdiction of controversies arising during the pendency of the administration of estates of decedents in the state courts which condition the enforcement of their judgments or decrees, or the rights of aliens, citizens of other states, or other parties, who might invoke their actions, and their decisions prevail over the statutes of the states and the decisions of their courts. Brun v. Mann, (1906) 151 Fed. 145, 80 C. C. A. 513.

Where a decree of a federal court had been allowed as the only claim against the estate of a decedent in a state County Court, and the only property of decedent consisted of lands and appurtenant water rights, and the statutes of the state imposed the duty on the administratrix to appeal either to a County or District Court to sell the unexempt real estate, and she claimed that the real estate was exempt and refused to bring proceedings, the federal court in which the decree was rendered had jurisdiction to entertain suit by complainant in that decree and to render a decree for the sale of the land notwithstanding the pendency of administration in the County Court. Brun v. Mann, (1906) 151 Fed. 145, 80 C. C. A. 513.

But an action by the owner of a judgment recovered against a corporation for infringement of a patent, to charge directors of such corporation with payment of the judgment on the ground that they were joint trespassers with the corporation, is not within the jurisdiction of the federal court as ancillary to the former suit. H. C. Cook Co. v. Beecher, (1909) 172 Fed. 166.

Necessity of dependent cause of action. — In order that the federal court may have jurisdiction of a dependent suit, a dependent cause of action is indispensable, although after jurisdiction is acquired by means of such a cause, the court may determine in a proper case the entire controversy between the parties relating to its subject-matter. Campbell v. Golden Cycle Min. Co., (1905) 141 Fed. 610, 73 C. C. A. 260.

Modify or correct decree. — A federal court has jurisdiction of a suit the purpose of which is to modify and correct one of its own decrees, without regard to the citizenship of the parties, and as incidental to such relief to grant an injunction to restrain a party from acting upon the decree as originally entered. Thompson v. Schenectady R. Co., (1903) 124 Fed. 274.

Determining right to proceeds of judgment. — A federal court has jurisdiction to determine the right to the proceeds of a judgment rendered therein which has been paid into court, as between different claimants who appear and assert their claims, regardless of their citizenship. Myers v. Luzerne County, (1903) 124 Fed. 436.

Suit to set aside judgment of dismissal. — A suit in equity commenced in a federal court, the purpose of which is to set aside a judgment of dismissal entered by the same court in an action at law, is ancillary to such action and within the jurisdiction of the court without regard to the citizenship of the parties, and where the defendants named in the bill were parties to the original action, or are in privity with such parties, service may be made upon them, although they reside beyond the limits of the district. O'Connor v. O'Connor, (1906) 146 Fed. 994.

Suit to set aside award of arbitrators.—Where an action is brought in a federal court on an arbitrator's award, a suit by the defendant therein to set aside the award for fraud is ancillary, but such fact does not give the court jurisdiction to bring in another party who is a citizen of the same state as the complainant to impeach an award in its favor made at the same arbitration, but which is separate and distinct from that between the other parties. Hecht v. Youghioghenny, etc., Coal Co., (1908) 162 Fed. 812.

Appointment of receiver.—Where a receiver appointed by a federal court, by reason of the character of his appointment, or because of local policy or the rights of local creditors, is not permitted to sue in a jurisdiction other than the one in which he was appointed, a bill may be filed in another federal court for the appointment of an ancillary receiver, and, the ultimate object of such proceeding being to aid the purpose of the original suit, it is in that sense ancillary, and jurisdiction thereof does not depend on diversity of citizenship of the parties. Bluefields Steamship Co. v. Steele, (C. C. A. 1911) 184 Fed. 584.

Suit to recover assets.—Where a federal court has appointed a receiver for an insolvent corporation, a suit brought by such receiver for the collection of an assessment made by the court on stockholders of the corporation to pay its debts is ancillary to the main suit, and is cognizable by a federal court, regardless of the citizenship of the parties or the amount in controversy. Brown v. Allebach, (1907) 156 Fed. 697. See also Alexander v. Southern Home Bldg., etc., Assoc., (1903) 120 Fed. 963.

The law, as recognized in the Circuit Courts of the United States, is that, when a federal court at the domicile of a corporation appoints a receiver, or makes a decree winding up the corporation and disposing of its assets, or a decree of foreclosure, or any other decree looking to a disposition of its property, having proper jurisdiction in equity therefor, the Circuit Courts in other districts will ordinarily exercise ancillary jurisdiction, and assist in carrying out the purpose of the court at the place of domicile. Conklin v. U. S. Shipbuilding Co., (1903) 123 Fed. 913.

A Circuit Court of the United States, which has appointed a receiver for an insolvent building and loan association in a suit to wind up its affairs, has jurisdiction of a suit brought by him to collect from a borrowing stockholder and to foreclose a mortgage securing the loan, regardless of the citizenship or residence of the defendants, or the fact that the mortgaged property is situated in another district. Bottom v. National R. Bldg., etc., Assoc., (1901) 123 Fed. 744; Gunby v. Armstrong, (1904) 133 Fed. 417, 66 C. C. A. 627.

But jurisdiction of a bill which seeks to reach and distribute, to the persons found entitled thereto, the proceeds of a sale of lands to the United States cannot be entertained by a federal Circuit Court on the theory that the cause is ancillary to an action at law to recover the lands from the United States, as occupied without right, in which the rival claimants had united in procuring final judgment in favor of two of their number, leaving their respective interests to be settled by arbitration. Stillman v. Combe, (1905) 197 U. S. 436, 25 S. Ct. 480, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 822.

A suit to restrain private persons from selling the stock of a railroad company is not ancillary to one to foreclose a mortgage on property of such company, to which the stockholders are not parties. Raphael v. Trask, (1902) 118 Fed. 777, affirmed (1904) 194 U. S. 272, 24 S. Ct. 647, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 973.

Suit to prevent destruction of property.—Where a federal court has acquired jurisdiction of the assets of a street railway company operating the same through a receiver for the benefit of creditors, it has ancillary jurisdiction of a petition by the receiver to restrain a competing street railway company from maintaining gates across a certain highway, the effect of which would be to practically destroy the value of the property in the hands of the receiver, without regard to the citizenship of the parties. Hampton Roads R., etc., Co. v. Newport News, etc., R., etc., Co., (1904) 131 Fed. 534.

Suit for accounting and foreclosure.—Where a federal court had jurisdiction of proceedings for the dissolution of a building and loan association, it had jurisdiction of an ancillary suit by the association's receiver for an accounting and foreclosure of a deed made to secure a loan to a borrowing member, though the amount due was less than $2,000. Cooper v. Newton, (1908) 160 Fed. 190.

To set aside fraudulent conveyances.—A federal court rendering a judgment has ancillary jurisdiction of a creditor's bill by the judgment creditor to set aside fraudulent conveyances by the judgment debtor without regard to the citizenship of the parties. Hobbs Mfg. Co. v. Gooding, (1908) 164 Fed. 91.

Suit to enforce lien.—Where an attorney who has recovered a judgment in favor of his client in a federal court, and entered notice of a lien on such judgment on the docket in conformity to the state statute, brings a suit in equity in such court against the parties to the judgment to enforce his lien, such suit is ancillary to the original suit and within the jurisdiction of the court without regard to the amount involved or the citizenship of the parties. Brown v. Morgan, (1908) 163 Fed. 395.

A suit in equity in a federal court to enforce an attachment lien obtained in a former action in the same court, and to subject the attached property or its proceeds to the satisfaction of the judgment recovered therein, is not an original suit, but is ancillary and supplementary to the former action, and may be maintained as an incident to the jurisdiction already vested, without regard to the citizenship of the parties; and it is immaterial, so far as the ancillary character of the suit is concerned, that the proceeds of the attached property are not in the actual custody of the federal court; the effect of the removal having been to bring the property potentially within the jurisdiction and custody of that court. Hatcher v. Hendrie, etc., Mfg., etc., Co., (1904) 133 Fed. 267, 68 C. C. A. 19.

A suit in equity in a federal court to enjoin the further prosecution of actions pending in said court, of which it has jurisdiction by reason of diversity of citizenship of the parties, and to enable the complainant to make his defense to such actions, is ancillary thereto and within the jurisdiction of the court, without regard to the citizenship of parties joined as defendants. South Penn Oil Co. v. Calf Creek Oil, etc., Co., (1905) 140 Fed. 807.

Where several insurers were liable, if at all, proportionately to the amount the insurance of each bore to the amount of the loss, and suits against some of them had been removed to the federal court, and the same defenses had been interposed on behalf of all, a bill in the federal court to restrain the suits at law and to adjust the liability of the various insurers was held to be an ancillary, and not an original, bill; and hence the jurisdiction of the federal court did not depend on the citizenship of the parties or the amount involved. Rochester German Ins. Co. v. Schmidt, (1904) 126 Fed. 998.

Where an action at law was pending in the federal Circuit Court, such court had ancillary jurisdiction before judgment to entertain a bill to restrain the further prosecution of such action on equitable grounds not available as a defense to the action at law, without regard to the citizenship of the parties. Leigh v. Kewanee Mfg. Co., 127 Fed. 990.

The states of Georgia and Alabama each chartered a corporation having the same name and the same incorporators, conferring thereon certain riparian rights on the Chattahoochee river. The business was conducted as that of a single corporation, having one set of officers, and a dam and manufacturing plant were built on the river, partly in each state. Thereafter a mortgage was executed on the property in the name of the corporation, it not being stated of which state it was a corporation, and subsequently the property was sold, subject to the mortgage, to a second corporation of Alabama. Later a suit to foreclose was brought against the mortgagor and its successor in interest in the federal court for Georgia by the trustee, who was a citizen of Alabama, it being alleged that defendants were citizens of Georgia. Answers were filed admitting such allegation, and the cause proceeded to a decree and sale, a third corporation being the purchaser of the property. It was held that since neither of the Alabama corporations could be parties defendant to the foreclosure suit without ousting the jurisdiction of the court, and neither they nor their property rights in Alabama were affected by the decree and sale, a bill by the purchaser to restrain them from maintaining a suit in Alabama in relation to such rights was not within the jurisdiction of the federal court in Georgia as ancillary to the foreclosure suit. Riverdale Cotton Mills v. Alabama, etc., Mfg. Co., (1905) 198 U. S. 188, 25 S. Ct. 629, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 1008, reversing (1904) 127 Fed. 497, 62 C. C. A. 295.

Ancillary relief by way of cross-bill.—A resident of the District of Columbia, although not a citizen of a state within the constitutional provision giving the federal courts cognizance of suits between citizens of different states, may maintain a cross-bill in a suit in such a court for relief which is ancillary to that sought in the original suit; the citizenship of the parties in such case being immaterial. Ulman v. Jaeger, (1907) 155 Fed. 1011.

In a suit in a federal court of equity to establish and protect rights in the waters of a stream against other separate appropriators of water from the same stream, all of whom are citizens of different states from complainant, the court may entertain cross-bills by any or all of the several defendants setting up priority of right as against complainant or their codefendants, since they relate to the subject of the original suit, which is the water of the stream, and, being ancillary to the original suit, the court has jurisdiction to determine the issues raised thereby without regard to the citizenship of the parties thereto. Rickey Land, etc., Co. v. Miller, (1907) 152 Fed. 11.

Relief by injunction.—Ancillary relief in a federal Circuit Court by way of an injunction in aid of a decree in a suit over the validity of state taxation, in which jurisdiction as to the state and its officers had been acquired as the result of the voluntary action of the state in submitting its rights to judicial determination, is not forbidden by Const. U. S., Amend. 11, as a suit against the state. Gunter v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., (1906) 200 U. S. 273, 26 S. Ct. 252, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 477.

X. CRIMES AND OFFENSES.

Perjury, committed by false swearing before a United States commissioner, has been held not to be subject to the jurisdiction of a state court under a state statute broad enough in its terms to embrace a case of false swearing in any tribunal, either state or federal. Com. v. Kitchen, (1911) 141 Ky. 655, 133 S. W. 586.

Perjury in state court.—Under the Federal Constitution providing that the judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one Supreme Court and in such inferior courts as the Congress may ordain and establish, and that the judges shall hold office during good behavior, and shall receive a compensation which shall not be diminished during their continuance in office, it has been held that state courts acting in the naturalization of aliens pursuant to the authority given by Congress remain state tribunals, and do not become in any degree courts of the United States; and hence a perjury committed in such proceedings is an offense against the state, and not the federal sovereignty, and, in the absence of statute conferring jurisdiction on the federal courts, is exclusively a matter of state cognizance. U. S. v. Severino, (1903) 125 Fed. 949.

XI. PLACE OF BRINGING SUIT.

To what suits applicable.—Where an action is within the general jurisdiction of the federal courts, both on the ground of diversity of citizenship and because founded on a law of the United States, such action can be brought only in the district of which defendant is an inhabitant. Whittaker v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., (1910) 176 Fed. 130.

But this inhibition is ineffective and inapplicable in instances in which exclusive jurisdiction over particular cases or classes of cases has been conferred upon the federal courts by special Acts of Congress. U. S. v. Standard Oil Co., (1907) 152 Fed. 200; Lewis Blind Stitch Co. v. Arbetter Felling Mach. Co., (1910) 181 Fed. 974.

Where the jurisdiction of the Circuit Court is based solely on diversity of citizenship, the suit may be maintained in the district in which either plaintiff or defendant resides. Wolf v. Chocaw, etc., R. Co., (1904) 133 Fed. 601; U. S. Fidelity, etc., Co. v. Woodson County, (1906) 145 Fed. 144, 76 C. C. A. 114; Schultz v. Highland Gold Mines Co., (1907) 158 Fed. 337.

Service on a defendant does not give a federal court jurisdiction, where it is founded only on diversity of citizenship and neither party is a resident of the state, if seasonable objection is made. Slater Trust Co. v. Randolph-Macon Coal Co., (1908) 166 Fed. 170.

A suit by a shipper against a carrier to require it to receive and transport property tendered for shipment involves a question of general law, and where a diversity of citizenship exists between the parties a federal court acquires jurisdiction on that ground alone, and the suit may be brought in the district of which either complainant or defendant is an inhabitant. Danciger v. Wells, (1907) 154 Fed. 379.

A bill filed on the equity side of a federal court to enjoin the further prosecution of an action at law therein, by the defendant in such action, who is a nonresident of the state, against the plaintiff therein and a nonresident corporation, which is not a party to the law action, is not ancillary in such sense as to give the court jurisdiction over the corporation defendant by service on its attorneys within the district, or on such defendant outside of the district, but is an original suit, within the meaning of this section. Manning v. Berdan, (1904) 132 Fed. 382.

Where an action for injuries to a servant is brought under the federal Employer's Liability Act, federal jurisdiction does not depend solely on diverse citizenship, but is also sustainable as depending on the construction of such Act, and hence the suit cannot be maintained over defendant's objection in a district other than that in which defendant is an inhabitant. Smith v. Detroit, etc., R. Co., (1909) 175 Fed. 506.

A suit brought in the name of the United States on the bond of a public contractor, for the benefit of a person furnishing materials and labor for the construction of a public work, is governed by this section. Davidson Bros. Marble Co. v. U. S., (1909) 213 U. S. 10, 29 S. Ct. 324, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 675; U. S. v. O'Brien, (1903) 120 Fed. 446.

As to suits of a local nature, see section 8 of the Act of March 3, 1875, 4 Fed. Stat. Annot. 380, and the corresponding annotation in this Supplement.

As to suits not of a local nature in states containing several districts, see R. S. sec. 740, 4 Fed. Stat. Annot. 554, and the corresponding place, infra, this Supplement.

As to suits to enjoin railroad companies from establishing and enforcing rates in violation of the Interstate Commerce Act, see Act of Feb. 4, 1887, ch. 104, sec. 9, 24 Stat. L. 382, 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 833, and note thereto, infra, this Supplement.

Amendment ousting jurisdiction.—Where after suit brought March 5, 1910, in the federal Circuit Court sitting in Pennsylvania, by a citizen of Pennsylvania against a Maryland corporation, to recover damages for injuries resulting from defendant's negligence, in which federal jurisdiction rested exclusively on diverse citizenship, plaintiff so amended his original statement as to allege a cause of action for injuries to a servant while engaged in interstate commerce, under the federal Employer's Liability Act, so that jurisdiction did not depend solely on diversity of citizenship, the court was thereby deprived of jurisdiction; the suit not having been brought in the district of defendant's residence. Newell v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., (1910) 181 Fed. 698.

Suits in admiralty.—In a suit in admiralty, where two or more defendants are citizens of different districts of the state, the suit may be brought in either district, under Act March 3, 1891, ch. 144, sec. 2, 21 Stat. L. 507, 4 Fed. Stat. Annot. 641. Downs v. Wall, (1910) 176 Fed. 657, 190 C. C. A. 209.

Suit by assignee.—Where the assignor of a cause of action before the assignment could have prosecuted the action in a federal Circuit Court, the assignee, if the requisite diversity of citizenship exists, can prosecute the action in such court in the district of which he is a resident or in that of the defendant, and in the former case it is not required that the assignor should have also been a resident of the same district so that he might have brought suit therein. Stimson v. United Wrapping Mach. Co., (1907) 156 Fed. 298.

Where the plaintiff, a citizen of New York, brought an action in the Circuit Court of the Southern District of New York, as assignee of a British corporation, against defendant corporation, a citizen of New Jersey, it was held that the court had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit over defendant's protest. Consolidated Rubber Tire Co. v. Ferguson, (C. C. A. 1910) 183 Fed. 756.

A suit to enforce rights given by the Interstate Commerce Act may be brought in any federal district where the defendant can be found. Kalispell Lumber Co. v. Great Northern R. Co., (1907) 157 Fed. 845.

An action by certain shippers to restrain an interstate carrier from enforcing a re-consignment charge of five dollars per car, as unreasonable, though maintainable at common law, is nevertheless a suit within the Interstate Commerce Act, so that federal jurisdiction is not alone dependent on diverse citizenship, and hence can be brought only in the district of which the defendant is an inhabitant. Sunderland v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1908) 158 Fed. 877.

Suit by or against aliens.—An alien, although resident in a state, can maintain a suit against a citizen of the United States only in the district of defendant's residence. Miller v. New York Cent., etc., R. Co., (1906) 147 Fed. 771; Barlow v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1909) 172 Fed. 513; McAulay v. Moody, (1911) 185 Fed. 144.

A suit by a citizen of the United States against an alien can only be maintained in a federal court in a district in which valid service can be made on the defendant. Tierney v. Helvetia Swiss F. Ins. Co., (1908) 163 Fed. 82.

The facts that an alien corporation is authorized to do business in a state, and that under the state law service of process in any suit against such corporation may be made on an officer of the state, do not give a federal court within the state jurisdiction of a suit against such corporation, where it does not appear that service was made, or could have been made, within the district of such court, and the fact that defendant is authorized to do business in the district is not sufficient to authorize service to be made therein, unless it is actually so doing business. Tierney v. Helvetia Swiss F. Ins. Co., (1908) 163 Fed. 82.

A suit between citizens of France and an Illinois corporation, where federal jurisdiction depended on diversity of citizenship, cannot be brought over defendant's protest in the federal Circuit Court for the district of North Carolina, where neither plaintiff nor defendant resides. Fribourg v. Pullman Co., (1910) 176 Fed. 981.

Where a defendant, who was a nonresident of, and not subject to suit in, the district, was an indispensable party to a suit between plaintiffs, who were citizens of a foreign country, and the other defendants, citizens of the state and district, federal jurisdiction does not obtain under R. S. sec. 737, 4 Fed. Stat. Annot. 552. McAulay v. Moody, (1911) 185 Fed. 144.

An alien corporation, operating an Atlantic steamship line, could be sued for injuries to a passenger, who was a citizen of New Jersey, in a federal Circuit Court sitting in New York. Jarowski v. Hamburg-American Packet Co., (C. C. A. 1910) 182 Fed. 320.

Suit against federal corporation.—A corporation created by an Act of Congress, which, having designated Dallas, Texas, where its senior vice-president lives, as its general office, maintains an office in Dallas county, and has all the acts of its board of directors taken in New York city affirmed by a meeting of the board at Dallas before they are considered effective, is suable in the Northern District of Texas, as being a resident of and doing business in that district, and having an agent there upon whom service can properly be made. In re Dunn, (1909) 212 U. S. 374. 29 S. Ct. 299, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 558.

An action against a corporation created by an Act of Congress is one arising under the laws of the United States, and can only be brought in a federal court of the district in which it has its principal offices, regardless of the residence of plaintiff. Wolff v. Choc-taw, etc., R. Co., (1904) 133 Fed. 601.

Suits by and against domestic corporations.—A suit against a railroad company based on the Interstate Commerce Act, and within the jurisdiction of a federal court for that reason, can only be brought in the state in which the defendant is incorporated. Memphis Cotton Oil Co. v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., (1908) 164 Fed. 290; Imperial Colliery Co. v. Chesapeake, etc., R. Co., (1909) 171 Fed. 589.

Where a corporation was organized under the laws of Delaware, the fact that its principal place of business was within the middle federal district of Pennsylvania does not give the corporation a domicile there for the purpose of determining the jurisdiction of the federal courts. Peake v. Marian Coal Co., (1908) 172 Fed. 639.

A federal court of equity will not entertain jurisdiction of a suit to wind up a corporation or appoint a general receiver therefor, where neither the domicile nor property of the corporation is within the state or district, and the residence of the stockholders is immaterial. Kirwin v. Boston, etc., Min. Co., (1908) 171 Fed. 900.

An action against a corporation in a federal court for a common-law tort can be maintained only in the district of plaintiff's residence, or that in which defendant is incorporated, and such requirement cannot be avoided by joining in the same complaint another count stating an entirely separate cause of action of which the court has jurisdiction, nor by stating a joint cause of action against such defendant and another which is an inhabitant of the district and may be there sued; the cause of action being several as well as joint. Ware-Kramer Tobacco Co. v. American Tobacco Co., (1910) 178 Fed. 117.

Where a state contains more than one federal judicial district, a corporation of the state, for the purpose of bringing suit or being sued in a federal court, is at least prima facie a resident and inhabitant of the district in which it has its principal office, as designated in its certificate or articles of incorporation in accordance with the requirement of the state law. Firestone Tire, etc., Co. v. Vehicle Equipment Co., (1907) 155 Fed. 676.

A federal court of a district of which the complainants are inhabitants has jurisdiction of a suit to enjoin several railroad companies, who are members of an association, but not citizens of the state, from putting into effect an unlawful rate on all food commodities shipped in interstate commerce within the territory in which such district is situated, where they operate roads in the state and district, and are found and served therein. Macon Grocery Co. v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., (1908) 163 Fed. 736.

Where service is made upon an officer or agent of a foreign corporation temporarily within the state or district of suit, in order to give a federal court jurisdiction to render a personal judgment against the corporation, it must appear that it was actually and substantially engaged in business in such state or district, its business must have been transacted by some agent or manager representing the corporation, and it must also appear that the local statute provides for suit against such foreign corporation which has been permitted to transact business within the state. A corporation of another state, which has no place of business within the state of suit, but merely solicits and obtains orders for goods therein by correspondence by agent, is not within the rule. Buffalo Glass Co. v. Manufacturers' Glass Co., (1905) 142 Fed. 273.

A corporation which is a citizen of New York and carries on its business through an agent in the Southern District of Georgia may be sued there by a citizen of Georgia who resides in the district. Barnes v. Western Union Tel. Co., (1903) 120 Fed. 550.

A federal court does not acquire jurisdiction of a corporation of another state by service of process on an officer or agent of the corporation within the state where the court is held unless it appears from some part of the record or by the return that the corporation is doing business in such state. Green v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1906) 147 Fed. 767, modified (1907) 205 U. S. 530, 27 S. Ct. 595, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 916.

The presence of an officer of a corporation in another state than that of its domicile, for the purpose of discussing a proposed adjustment of a single controversy, does not constitute a doing of business within the state by the corporation such as to subject it to the jurisdiction of a federal court therein by service of process on such officer. Wilkins v. Queen City Sav. Bank, etc., Co., (1907) 154 Fed. 173.

A foreign corporation which, under the constitution and statutes of the state, can be sued in the state courts only in counties in which it does business, is not suable in a federal court in the state unless it does business in some one of the counties within the territorial jurisdiction of such court. Kibbler v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., (1906) 147 Fed. 879.

A Pennsylvania corporation which has filed with the auditor-general of the state a certificate designating its office and place of business, pursuant to a local statute, must be deemed a resident of the federal district within which such place is situated, and cannot be sued in another district of the state, although its operations may extend into such district. Weed v. Centre, etc., St. R. Co., (1904) 132 Fed. 151.

But an action by a citizen of Pennsylvania may be properly brought against a foreign corporation doing business in Pennsylvania in the federal district of plaintiff's residence. Hagstoz v. Mutual L. Ins. Co., (1910) 179 Fed. 569.

Where a railroad company, incorporated in Illinois, filed the statement required by law to entitle it to do business in Pennsylvania, designating its agent in that state, and subsequently such company leased its lines to defendant, an Iowa corporation, which thereafter operated the same, the designated agent of the lessor in Pennsylvania testifying that he thereafter performed the same services for the lessee that he had previously for the lessor, it was held that in the absence of proof of the terms of the lease, it did not appear that defendant was doing business in Pennsylvania under the registration of its lessor or was in any way bound or affected by it, and that a federal court in that state did not acquire jurisdiction of defendant by service of process on such designated agent of the lessor, it not appearing that defendant was in fact doing business in the state. Green v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1906) 147 Fed. 767, modified (1907) 205 U. S. 530, 27 S. Ct. 595, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 916.

Inhabitant and resident.—For jurisdictional purposes a corporation is an "inhabitant" only of the state under which it was incorporated, and is not suable elsewhere without its consent. U. S. v. Northern Pac. R. Co., (1905) 134 Fed. 715, 67 C. C. A. 269, reversing (1903) 120 Fed. 546.

A corporation is an inhabitant of the state or district in which its principal offices are and its corporate business is transacted, and the fact that it is doing business in a state or district other than that in which it has its residence does not make it an inhabitant of such state or district. Wolff v. Choctaw, etc., R. Co., (1904) 133 Fed. 601.

Several parties plaintiff and defendant.—In a suit in a federal court against numerous defendants on a contract binding them jointly and severally, the jurisdiction of the court is not defeated because some of the defendants are not inhabitants of nor served within the district, but the case may proceed against those who have been served. Richmond Cedar Works v. Buckner, (1910) 181 Fed. 424.

Two citizens of different states may maintain an action against a citizen of a third state in the federal Circuit Court for the district of the latter's residence. Sweeney v. Carter Oil Co., (1905) 199 U. S. 252, 26 S. Ct. 55, 60 U. S. (L. ed.) 178.

An action cannot be maintained in a federal court against a defendant who is a non-resident of the district, over his objection, where the plaintiff is also a nonresident, and jurisdiction is founded only on the fact of diversity of citizenship, although the court has jurisdiction of the action by reason of the residence within the district of other defendants. Tice v. Hurley, (1906) 145 Fed. 391.

Where a citizen of Iowa sued a citizen of New York and two citizens of Colorado in the federal Circuit Court of Colorado, the right to object that the citizen of New York was not suable in Colorado, being a privilege personal to him, cannot be made by his codefendants. Schiffer v. Anderson, (1906) 146 Fed. 457, 76 C. C. A. 667.

Suit by United States under Anti-Trust Act of July 2, 1890, ch. 647, sec. 4, 26 Stat.

L. 209, 7 Fed. Stat. Annot. 344, see Standard Oil Co. v. U. S., (1911) 221 U. S. 1, 31 S. Ct. 502, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 619, affirming (1909) 173 Fed. 177.

Special provision for suits against several defendants residing in different districts in Illinois, see Act of March 2, 1887, ch. 315, sec. 4, 24 Stat. L. 442, 4 Fed. Stat. Annot. 636, and Petri v. F. E. Creelman Lumber Co., (1905) 199 U. S. 487, 26 S. Ct. 133, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 281.

Objection to jurisdiction.—The question whether a suit in a federal court is maintainable in the district where brought, under the statute, may be raised either by motion to set aside the service of process or by special demurrer, where a special appearance is made for that purpose only, and before pleading to the merits. Ware-Kramer Tobacco Co. v. American Tobacco Co., (1910) 178 Fed. 117.

The objection of a defendant to the maintenance of an action against him in a federal court on the ground that neither he nor plaintiff is a resident of the district may be taken by demurrer under the Kentucky practice, where the facts appear on the face of the petition. Tice v. Hurley, (1906) 145 Fed. 391.

Waiver of objections.—As stated in the original annotation, 4 Fed. Stat. Annot. 305, the provision as to the particular district in which the action shall be brought does not affect the general jurisdiction of the court over the cause, but is a personal privilege which the defendant may insist upon or may waive, at his election. It has been frequently held that an objection that suit is not brought in the proper district is waived by a general appearance, pleading to the merits, or removing the cause without raising the objection. Ingersoll v. Coram, (1908) 211 U. S. 335, 29 S. Ct. 92, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 208, reversing (1906) 148 Fed. 169, 78 C. C. A. 303; Occidental Coal Min. Co. v. Comstock Tunnel Co., (1903) 120 Fed. 518; Pepper v. Rogers, (1904) 128 Fed. 987; Von Voigt v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., (1904) 130 Fed. 398; Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Doty, (1904) 133 Fed. 866, 67 C. C. A. 38; Lebensberger v. Scofield, (1905) 139 Fed. 380, 71 C. C. A. 476; Mahr v. Union Pac. R. Co., (1905) 140 Fed. 921; Iowa Lilloet Gold Min. Co. v. Bliss, (1906) 144 Fed. 446; U. S. Fidelity, etc., Co. v. Woodson County, (1906) 145 Fed. 144, 76 C. C. A. 114; U. S. v. California Bridge, etc., Co., (1907) 152 Fed. 559; Midland Contracting Co. v. Toledo Foundry, etc., Co., (1907) 154 Fed. 707, 83 C. S. v. Schofield*

Co., (1910) 182 Fed. 240; Gearlds v. Johnson, (1911) 183 Fed. 611; U. S. Gypsum Co. v. Shliwenska, (C. C. A. 1910) 183 Fed. 688; Bluefields Steamship Co. v. Steele, (C. C. A. 1911) 184 Fed. 584; Title Guaranty, etc., Co. v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1911) 187 Fed. 98, affirming (1910) 182 Fed. 240.

The Circuit Courts of the United States having full jurisdiction of patent cases, the limitation in respect to the district of residence of a defendant or of place of business and acts of infringement may be waived, and the objection cannot be made after the case has proceeded beyond the pleadings and into the taking of testimony. General Electric Co. v. Wagner Electric Mfg. Co., (1903) 123 Fed. 101, affirmed (1904) 130 Fed. 772, 66 C. C. A. 82.

Where a defendant corporation, sued in a federal court in a district of which neither complainant nor any defendant is an inhabitant, waives any objection to the place of suit by appearing and joining in complainant's prayer for a receiver, such waiver is conclusive upon third persons not parties, who cannot claim that the appointment of the receiver was without jurisdiction, there being the requisite diversity of citizenship to confer constitutional jurisdiction on the court. Horn v. Pere Marquette R. Co., (1907) 151 Fed. 626.

Where a federal court in which suit was brought was without jurisdiction, because neither plaintiff nor defendant resided in the state or district, and such want of jurisdiction was raised by demurrer, it was held that the defendant did not waive the objection either by appearing at the taking of the depositions and cross-examining witness without declaring its intent to insist on its objection to the jurisdiction, or by stipulating during the taking of such depositions that copies of letters and telegrams might be used by either party in lieu of the originals. Stonega Coal, etc., Co. v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., (1905) 139 Fed. 271.

A foreign corporation, by appointing a registered agent on whom summons could be served in Pennsylvania, does not thereby waive its privilege to be free from suit in a federal Circuit Court of Pennsylvania, except where the plaintiff is a citizen and resident of that state. Hagstoz v. Mutual L. Ins. Co., (1910) 179 Fed. 569.

XII. SUITS BY ASSIGNEES.

General construction.—Where, under the terms of a town vote granting aid to a railroad company, no cause of action ever accrued to the railroad corporation, but did accrue to its receiver or the assignee of his successor who furnished funds to complete the road under an assignment of the subscription, the fact that the corporation could not have maintained an action in the federal courts to recover such subscription because it was of the same citizenship as the town did not deprive such assignee of the right to sue in the federal courts. Paige v. Rochester, (1905) 137 Fed. 663.

The original beneficial owner may sue in a federal court on a note, although the nominal payee by reason of his citizenship would not have such right. Kirven v. Virginia-Carolina Chemical Co., (1906) 145 Fed. 288, 70 C. C. A. 172.

That a cause of action was transferred for the purpose of enabling the transferee to sue thereon in the federal courts does not deprive such courts of jurisdiction, where the transfer was real and absolute. Ashley v. Presque Isle County, (1897) 83 Fed. 534, 27 C. C. A. 585, certiorari denied (1898) 169 U. S. 736, 18 S. Ct. 940, 42 U. S. (L. ed.) 1216; Kreider v. Cole, (1907) 149 Fed. 647, 79 C. C. A. 339.

Where a sale and conveyance of a mining claim are real, and not merely simulated, the motive of the sale is immaterial, so far as affecting the right of the grantee to maintain a suit for its possession in a federal court on the ground of diversity of citizenship. Willitt v. Baker, (1904) 133 Fed. 937.

A New York corporation may bring suit in a federal Circuit Court on the notes of an Illinois corporation, although the treasurer of the latter corporation, to whose order the notes were made payable, and by whom they were, before delivery, indorsed to the New York corporation, which loaned the money for which they were given, may be a citizen of Illinois. Blair v. Chicago, (1906) 201 U. S. 400, 26 S. Ct. 427, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 801, reversing (1904) 132 Fed. 848.

Where one of complainant's contracts is clearly within the jurisdiction of a federal court, it draws to that court jurisdiction to determine the entire controversy, although others of the contracts, as to which the issues are the same, were acquired by complainant through assignments from persons who could not have sued in such court. Howe, etc., Co. v. Haugan, (1904) 140 Fed. 182.

Instruments made by corporation.—Where a note between parties of the same citizenship is made by a corporation payable to bearer, a suit thereon brought by the holder of different citizenship from the maker against it is maintainable in the federal courts, since the paper passes by delivery and requires no assignment. Denison State Nat. Bank v. Eureka Springs Water Co., (1909) 174 Fed. 827.

County warrants payable to bearer are choses in action made by a corporation, and a holder thereof who is a citizen of another state may maintain an action against the county to recover thereon in a federal court, regardless of the citizenship of the original holders. Kearny County v. Irvine, (1903) 126 Fed. 689, 61 C. C. A. 607.

Payable to order.—Where there is no diversity of citizenship between the maker and payee of certain notes payable to the payee's order, suit cannot be brought thereon by an indorsee, whose citizenship was diverse, in the federal court. Denison State Nat. Bank v. Eureka Springs Water Co., (1909) 174 Fed. 827.

Payable to bearer.—Notes of a city payable to bearer are excepted from the operation of this section, whether the notes were first negotiated to a citizen of a state other than that of the maker or not. Citizens' Sav. Bank v. Newburyport, (C. C. A. 1909) 169 Fed. 760.

Suits by administratrix.—A suit to declare and enforce a lien on certain interests in distributive shares of the property of a decedent in the hands of an ancillary administrator is not within this section because plaintiff's right is derived from an heir whose citizenship is the same as that of such administrator, where the plaintiff, who sues as administratrix, and who is a citizen of a different state from the defendant administrator, is suing primarily on the obligation of such heir to her intestate, to secure which a lien was given upon such heir's distributive share. Ingersoll v. Coram, (1908) 211 U. S. 335, 29 S. Ct. 92, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 208.

A suit to recover the contents of a chose in action can only be maintained in a federal court where the assignor could have sued in that court if no assignment had been made. Kolze v. Hoadley, (1906) 200 U. S. 76, 20 S. Ct. 220, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 377; Tierney v. Helvetia Swiss F. Ins. Co., (1908) 163 Fed. 82; Farr v. Hobe-Peters Land Co., (C. C. A. 1910) 188 Fed. 10.

"In construing this clause the decisions of this court have settled the following propositions," said the court in Kolze v. Hoadley, (1906) 200 U. S. 76, 26 S. Ct. 220, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 377: "1. That a suit to recover the contents of a promissory note or other chose in action is a suit to recover the amount due upon such note, or the amount claimed to be due upon an account, personal contract, or other chose in action. Sere v. Pitot, (1810) 6 Cranch (U. S.) 332; Deshler v. Dodge, (1853) 16 How. 622, 631; Bushnell v. Kennedy, (1869) 9 Wall. 387; Shoecraft v. Bloxham, (1888) 124 U. S. 730. . . . 2. That a suit to foreclose a mortgage is within the inhibition of the Act, and can only be maintained where the assignor was competent to file the bill. Sheldon v. Sill, (1850) 8 How. 441; Blacklock v. Small, (1888) 127 U. S. 96. 3. That the bill or other pleading must contain an averment showing that the suit could have been maintained by the assignor if no assignment had been made. Turner v. Bank of North America, (1799) 4 Dall. (U. S.) 8; Mollan v. Torrance, (1824) 9 Wheat. 537; Bradley v. Rhines, (1869) 8 Wall. 393; Anderson v. Watt, (1891) 138 U. S. 694, 702; Robertson v. Cease, (1878) 97 U. S. 646, 649; Brock v. Northwestern Fuel Co., (1889) 130 U. S. 341. 4. That a suit may be maintained between the immediate parties to a promissory note as indorser and indorsee, provided the requisite diversity of citizenship appears as between them, or upon a new contract arising subsequently to the execution of the original, notwithstanding a suit could not have been maintained upon the original contract. In such case the original contract may be considered to ascertain the amount of the damages. Young v. Bryan, (1821) 6 Wheat. 146; U. S. Bank v. Moss, (1848) 6 How. 31; Superior v. Ripley, (1891) 138 U. S. 93; Mollan v. Torrance, (1824) 9 Wheat. 537; Marine, etc., Phosphate Min., etc., Co. v. Bradley, (1881) 105 U. S. 175."

Where separate assignees of two vendor's lien notes brought suit thereon in a federal court, and it did not appear that the notes were foreign bills of exchange or that suit might have been brought in the federal court by the assignor, it was held that federal jurisdiction was not shown. Troy Bank v. Whitehead, (1910) 184 Fed. 932.

A suit by the assignee of an oral contract to recover a sum of money due thereon is one to recover contents of a chose in action, and a federal court is without jurisdiction of such suit unless it could have been maintained by the assignor. Utah-Nevada Co. v. De Lamar, (1904) 133 Fed. 113, 66 C. C. A. 179.

A pledgee of stock cannot, on account of the diverse citizenship existing between himself and the corporation, sue the corporation in the federal court for the appointment of a receiver where his pledgor is a resident of the state of which the corporation is a citizen. Gorman-Wright Co. v. Wright, (1904) 134 Fed. 363, 67 C. C. A. 345.

A federal court is without jurisdiction of a suit on a cause of action existing in favor of a partnership brought by one partner in his own right and as assignee of the interest of his copartner, unless the bill shows that the citizenship of the assignor is such that the suit might have been maintained in that court by the firm. Ban v. Columbia Southern R. Co., (C. C. A. 1902) 117 Fed. 21.

In an action against two railroad companies, the complaint alleged the delivery of goods to one, which it accepted as a common carrier, and agreed and undertook to carry and safely deliver to the second; that it failed to take proper care of such goods, whereby they became damaged and injured in transit; that it delivered the same to the second company, which accepted them as a common carrier, and agreed and undertook to carry them and safely deliver them to a third company, but, in violation of its agreement and duty, diverted and unreasonably delayed the shipment; and that the goods were finally sold by both defendants without notice to plaintiff; and it was held that the action was one for breach of duty as a carrier, arising by operation of law or by express contract, and in either case was in tort, and not to recover on a chose in action, and might, therefore, be brought in a federal court by an assignee without reference to the citizenship of his assignor. Muller v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1906) 149 Fed. 939.

This section does not apply to a bill by a nonresident stockholder of a corporation, who acquired his stock by assignment from a resident of the state where the corporation was domiciled, to restrain the latter's directors and trustees from using the corporate assets for an alleged ultra vires business, affecting complainant's interest only in common with all other stockholders. Consumers' Gas Trust Co. v. Quinby, (1905) 137 Fed. 882, 70 C. C. A. 220.

A bill by a corporation alleged that one of the defendants, who had made an invention and applied for a patent therefor, by a written instrument assigned a two-thirds interest therein and in the right to the patent therefor to two other persons; that the three organized complainant corporation, and thereupon sold their rights to the corporation, receiving in payment its capital stock; that complainant, under the management of such three persons, engaged in the manufacture of the invention, but that defendant subsequently sold his stock therein, and on the issuance of the patent caused the same to be assigned to another corporation, which was made defendant, and which had engaged in the manufacture of the patented article; that the two other persons had assigned their equitable interest in the invention and patent to complainant. The bill prayed for an accounting of profits, an injunction to restrain defendants from manufacturing the patented article, and that they be required to assign the patent to complainant. It was held that the purpose of the bill was not the specific enforcement of the written assignment made by defendant, but to charge him as trustee ex maleficio on the ground of fraud, and that the case was not, therefore, within the statutory provisions relating to suits by assignees. Prest-o-Lite Co. v. Avery Portable Lighting Co., (1908) 164 Fed. 60.

Where a city ordinance, under which a water franchise was granted, provided that hydrant rentals should be paid to plaintiff, a nonresident corporation, as trustee, the fact that the original ordinance granting the franchise was not to the water company, but to M. and his assigns, who assigned the same to the water company, and that both M. and the company were citizens of the same state, does not preclude the trustee from bringing an action to recover such rents in the federal court. Seymour v. Farmers' L. & T. Co., (1903) 128 Fed. 907, 63 C. C. A. 633.

Where plaintiff alleged a cause of action for damages for a conspiracy charged to have been committed by defendants against plaintiff after he became the owner of a contract for the sale of real estate by assignment, it was held that the citizenship of plaintiff's assignor of the contract was immaterial to the jurisdiction of the federal Circuit Court, the cause of action alleged never having existed in his favor. Noyes v. Crawford, (1904) 133 Fed. 796.

Where, under the terms of a town vote granting aid to a railroad company, no cause of action ever accrued to the railroad corporation, but did accrue to its receiver or the assignee of his successor, who furnished funds to complete the road under an assignment of the subscription, it was held that the fact that the corporation could not have maintained an action in the federal courts to recover such subscription because it was of the same citizenship as the town did not deprive such assignee of the right to sue in the federal courts. Paige v. Rochester, (1905) 137 Fed. 663.

Merger by judgment. — Where the assignee of a cause of action has reduced the same to judgment, in a subsequent action on the judgment in a federal court the citizenship of the original assignor is wholly immaterial on the question of the jurisdiction of such court. Hultberg v. Anderson, (1909) 170 Fed. 657.

Judgment creditors of an insolvent corporation may maintain a suit in a federal court to enforce a trust against a third party in property alleged to belong to the corporation, and to have been acquired by defendant in fraud of their rights, where diversity of citizenship appears, and the requisite amount is involved, although complainants' judgments were recovered in a state court in suits on assigned notes, of which the federal court would not have had jurisdiction. Stanwood v. Wishard, (1905) 134 Fed. 959.

To what assignment or transfer applicable.—Where the receiver of a railroad corporation completed the road, and thereby became entitled to a town subscription, it was held that the receiver's successor was not an assignee, within the meaning of the statute. Paige v. Rochester, (1905) 137 Fed. 663.

Where a mortgage was given to secure a prior indebtedness from the mortgagor to the mortgagee, who were citizens of different states, the jurisdiction of a federal court of a suit to foreclose the mortgage is not affected by the fact that it also secured other indebtedness owing by the mortgagor to a third person, who was a citizen of the same state, which had been assigned to the mortgagee. Peacock, etc., Co. v. Thaggard, (1904) 128 Fed. 1005, affirmed 129 Fed. 1005, 64 C. C. A. 490.

Suit to recover possession of mortgaged property.—An action of replevin by the assignee of a promissory note, secured by a chattel mortgage, to recover possession of the mortgaged property from a stranger to the contract, for the purpose of ultimately subjecting it to the mortgage, is not a suit to recover the contents of a chose in action. Buckingham v. Dake, (1901) 112 Fed. 258, 50 C. C. A. 492.

Reassignment.—Where the original owner of a chose in action, who might have sued thereon in a federal court, assigned the same, he is entitled to sue in such court on again becoming the owner by a reassignment from his assignee, without regard to the citizenship of the latter. Moore Bros. Glass Co. v. Drevet Mfg. Co., (1897) 154 Fed. 737.

Intermediate assignees.—The limitation imposed by this section on suits in the federal courts by assignees does not extend to intermediate assignees. Farr v. Hobe-Peters Land Co., (C. C. A. 1910) 188 Fed. 10, reversing (1908) 170 Fed. 644.

Suit by assignee of national bank.—Under the federal Judiciary Act (Act of March 3, 1887, ch. 373, sec. 4, 24 Stat. L. 554, 5 Fed. Stat. Annot. 193, which makes national banks citizens of the state in which they are located for the purposes of the jurisdiction of a federal court, it has been held that the assignment of a chose in action by such a bank does not vest the assignee with the right to maintain an action thereon in a federal court against a citizen of the state in which the bank is located. Sullivan v. Ayer, (1909) 174 Fed. 199.

Where a national bank executed a non-negotiable note to another national bank, both being citizens of Nebraska, which note was assigned to a citizen of another state, an action by him thereon against the maker and other defendants, the most of whom were also citizens of Nebraska, cannot be maintained in the federal courts on the ground of diversity of citizenship. George v. Wallace, (1904) 135 Fed. 286, 68 C. C. A. 40, affirmed (1906) 201 U. S. 230, 26 S. Ct. 495, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 738.

In Sullivan v. Ayer, (1909) 174 Fed. 199, it appears that a national bank located in Pennsylvania recovered a judgment in the Supreme Court of New York against a New York corporation and issued an execution thereon, which was returned unsatisfied. The bank then assigned the judgment, with all its rights, to the plaintiff, a citizen of New York, who brought suit thereon in a federal court in Pennsylvania against a citizen of that state to enforce his statutory liability under the laws of New York as a stockholder of the judgment defendant, and it was held that such suit was one to recover the contents of the judgment, which was a chose in action, and, since it could not have been maintained by the bank in such court, could not be by plaintiff, as its assignee.

Citizenship at time suit commenced.—In an action by an assignee of a chose in action to recover the contents thereof, the jurisdiction of the federal Circuit Court depends on whether the action might have been brought by the assignor when it was commenced, if he had made no assignment thereof; and hence, where there was a diversity of citizenship at that time between both the assignor and the assignee and defendants, it was immaterial that at the time of the assignment the defendants and the assignor were citizens of the same state. Noyes v. Crawford, (1904) 133 Fed. 796.

Assignment merely changing venue.—The right to maintain a suit in the Circuit Court of the United States, where the original parties to the controversy were citizens of different states, is not lost by an assignment of the cause of action to one who is also a citizen of a different state from the defendant, although the effect of the assignment is to change the venue of the action to the district of the assignee's residence. Bolles v. Lehigh Valley R. Co., (1904) 127 Fed. 884.

Pleading citizenship of original parties.—Where the right of a plaintiff to maintain an action in a federal court on an assigned claim, which depended on the citizenship of his assignor, was not questioned in the trial court, it is sufficient to sustain the jurisdiction that it appears in the record that the assignor had a domicile and resided in a state other than that of which the defendant was a citizen. Canyon First Nat. Bank v. Crowley, (C. C. A. 1910) 183 Fed. 578.

Objection to jurisdiction.—An objection to the jurisdiction of a federal court on the ground that the action is based on a contract assigned to plaintiff, and it does not appear that it could have been maintained in that court by the assignor, is one which cannot be waived, and may be raised at any time, or considered by the court on its own motion, and it need not, therefore, be presented by an assignment of error in the appellate court.

Utah-Nevada Co. v. De Lamar, (C. C. A. 1904) 133 Fed. 113, certiorari denied (1905) 199 U. S. 805, 26 S. Ct. 746, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 330.

XIII. SERVICE OF PROCESS.

Running of process. — In the absence of express statutory authority, there is no power in a court to order actual personal service of process upon a defendant beyond its territorial jurisdiction. Jennings v. Johnson, (C. C. A. 1906) 148 Fed. 337.

On foreign corporations. — Where service of process, in an action brought in the court of a state against a corporation of another state, is made upon an officer of such corporation temporarily in such state on his own private business, the corporation having no office or agent or property in the state where such service is made, and doing no business there, the court obtains no jurisdiction of such corporation, even though the statutes of the state and its highest court pronounce and hold such service good and sufficient, and in such cases, after removal to the federal courts, the actions must be dismissed. Venner v. Great Northern R. Co., (1907) 153 Fed. 408, affirmed (1908) 209 U. S. 24, 28 S. Ct. 323, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 666, citing the earlier decisions to this effect.

I. CASES INVOLVING FEDERAL QUESTION.

The phrase "laws of the United States," as used in the Removal Acts, means Acts of Congress, and does not include executive rules and regulations, unless a recovery of damages is expressly authorized by statute for a disregard of such regulations. Beck v. Johnson, (1909) 169 Fed. 154.

A suit is removable as arising solely under the Constitution, laws, or treaties of the United States if from the questions raised by the bill it appears that some title, right, privilege, or immunity, on which the recovery depends, will be defeated by one construction of the Constitution or laws of the United States, and sustained by the opposite construction. Oregon v. Three Sisters Irrigation Co., (1907) 158 Fed. 346; Beck v. Johnson, (1909) 169 Fed. 154.

Where the facts stated in plaintiff's petition disclose a right of action given or created by an Act of Congress, and also a right of action created by a state law, it would be for the court on petition to remove to determine under which statute the action was maintainable, if at all, and if one construction of the federal statute would sustain and another defeat a recovery, the action would be one arising under a law of the United States, and therefore of federal cognizance. Hall v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1906) 149 Fed. 564.

But a cause cannot be removed to a federal court, on the ground that it is one arising under the Constitution, laws, or treaties of the United States, merely because it may become necessary in the progress of the litigation to construe the Constitution or laws of the United States; the cause must be one the decision of which depends on such construction. Miller v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., (1909) 168 Fed. 982; Leggett v. Great Northern R. Co., (1910) 180 Fed. 314; Schnayler v. Southern Pac. Co., (Utah 1910) 169 Pac. 458.

A suit in equity to cancel certain agreements regulating the price of paint and varnish removers, manufactured and sold under patents issued to defendant, on the ground that such agreements are in violation of the Sherman anti-trust law, is a suit directly involving the construction of a law of the United States, and is therefore removable to the federal courts, regardless of the citizenship of the parties. Chalmers Chemical Co. v. Chadeloid Chemical Co., (1909) 175 Fed. 995.

Where a contract between plaintiff, the state of Oregon, and defendants, for the reclamation of certain desert lands, depends for its validity on federal legislation, an action by the state to annul the contract because of defendant's failure to comply therewith is one arising solely under the laws of the United States, and therefore removable to the federal courts. Oregon v. Three Sisters Irrigation Co., (1907) 158 Fed. 346.

An action on a promissory note by one claiming as a bona fide holder for value before maturity does not arise under the Constitution or laws of the United States, so as to be removable to a federal Circuit Court, because the makers of the note relied for their defense upon provisions of certain federal statutes as establishing that the transaction upon which the right to recover was based was prohibited by law, which would only demonstrate that the suit could not be maintained at all, and not that the cause of action arose under the Federal Constitution or laws. Williams v. Pauls Valley First Nat. Bank, (1910) 216 U. S. 582, 30 S. Ct. 441, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 825, affirming (1908) 20 Okla. 274, 95 Pac. 457.

Effect of previous determination.—A federal question which will confer jurisdiction on a United States court either by original process or by removal must be a question of law as stated by the plaintiff in his complaint, and when a legal question arising under the Constitution or a law or treaty of the United States has been decided by the Supreme Court, it ceases to be a federal question for removal purposes. Where the facts only are in dispute, the federal court cannot take jurisdiction. Arkansas v. Choctaw, etc., R. Co., (1905) 134 Fed. 106; Myrtle v. Nevada, etc., R. Co., (1905) 137 Fed. 193.

Action under postal laws.—Although Congress has not authorized by special act the removal of causes arising under the postal laws of the United States, if the bill on its face shows that the controversy is one arising under the postal laws of the United States, and the value of the matter in controversy exceeds $2,000, exclusive of interest and costs, such cause is removable from the state to a national court. Lewis Pub. Co. v. Wyman, (1907) 152 Fed. 200. See also Bryant Bros. Co. v. Robinson, (1906) 149 Fed. 321, 79 C. C. A. 259.

Actions based on federal "Employer's Liability Law."—An action by an employee against a railroad company to recover for a personal injury, where both parties were engaged in interstate commerce at the time of the injury, is governed by the federal Employers' Liability Act, which supersedes all other law and is controlling on the question of the jurisdiction of a federal court and the right of removal. Bottoms v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., (1910) 179 Fed. 318.

Although state courts have concurrent jurisdiction with federal courts in actions in which it is sought to recover damages for injury or death caused by a violation of the federal Employers' Liability Act, if action is brought in the state court and motion is made in due time in such court by defendant to remove the action to the federal court, the motion must prevail; the right to remove depending on the original jurisdiction of the United States court. Calhoun v. Central of Georgia R. Co., (1910) 7 Ga. App. 528, 67 S. E. 274; Lemon v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., (1910) 137 Ky. 276, 125 S. W. 701.

But even though an action for injuries to a servant of a railroad company is brought under the Employers' Liability Act, if it does not appear from the plaintiff's declaration that the construction of the Act is involved, but that the decision will depend on the law as applied to the facts, the cause is not removable as arising under the laws of the United States. Miller v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., (1909) 168 Fed. 982; Nelson v. Southern R. Co., (1909) 172 Fed. 478.

Thus, where the plaintiff brought suit against defendant, an interstate carrier, for death of her husband, a locomotive fireman, while engaged in interstate commerce, alleging that his death resulted from a collision due to the negligence of the engineer and conductor of the train on which he was employed, it was held that such action was not brought under or in pursuance of the federal Employers' Liability Act, but under the Missouri state law, and hence the cause was not removable on the ground that it involved a construction of a law of the United States. Thompson v. Wabash R. Co., (1911) 184 Fed. 554.

Suits under federal "Safety Appliance Act."—Where, after pleas of assumed risk and contributory negligence in an action for injuries to a brakeman while uncoupling cars, plaintiff amended his petition so as to allege a violation of the federal Safety Appliance Act, prohibiting interstate carriers from using cars not equipped with automatic couplers, and providing that a servant injured while using cars not so equipped should not be held to have assumed the risk, the cause thereupon became one arising under the laws of the United States, and is removable to the federal court, though the petition, before amendment, stated a cause of action independent of such statute. Nicholas v. Chesapeake, etc., R. Co., (1907) 127 Ky. 310, 105 S. W. 481.

But an action in a state court to recover for personal injuries alleged to have been received by reason of the failure of defendant railroad company to properly equip its cars with safety appliances is not removable merely because of an allegation in the complaint that defendant is engaged in interstate commerce, where it does not appear that there is any controversy as to the construction or effect of the federal law relating to railroads engaged in such commerce, because the questions of fact as to whether the defendant is engaged in interstate commerce, and, if so, whether it has complied with the law, are not federal questions. Myrtle v. Nevada, etc., R. Co., (1905) 137 Fed. 193.

Even if the allegation of the petition of a switchman against a railroad company for injury from defective couplers, that the "cars in use on defendant's said railway, and particularly the cars on which plaintiff was injured, were not properly equipped with automatic couplers, as required by law," necessarily implies a reliance on the Act of Congress requiring automatic couplers, a removable case is not shown, as the statute applies only to carriers engaged in interstate commerce; and neither the petition in the case nor the petition for removal shows that defendant was so engaged, nor that the cars in question were being used in such commerce. International, etc., R. Co. v. Elder, (1907) 44 Tex. Civ. App. 605, 99 S. W. 856.

Suit against federal corporation.—In an action pending in the United States Court of Appeals for the Indian Territory at the time of the admission of the state, in which plaintiff, who was a resident of the Indian Territory prior to statehood and has been a citizen of the state since its admission, alleges in her complaint that defendant is a corporation organized under an Act of Congress, the action arises under the laws of the United States, and the defendant is entitled to have the case removed to the Circuit Court of the United States. Choctaw, etc., R. Co. v. Hendricks, (1908) 21 Okla. 135, 95 Pac. 970.

Where the plaintiff, a corporation, sued defendant in a state court and alleged that it was, and at all times had been, a corporation created, organized, and existing under an Act of Congress, and it appeared that the plaintiff was organized as a corporation in the Indian country under the Arkansas laws made applicable thereto by such Act of Congress, the action was held to be one necessarily arising under and involving the Constitution and laws of the United States. Canary Oil Co. v. Standard Asphalt, etc., Co., (1909) 182 Fed. 663.

An action brought jointly against a corporation chartered under an Act of Congress, and a local defendant, upon a joint liability, is a suit arising under the laws of the United States, and, as such, is removable from a state court to a federal Circuit Court on petition of both defendants. In re Dunn, (1909) 212 U. S. 374, 29 S. Ct. 299, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 558; Texas, etc., R. Co. v. Eastin, (1909) 214 U. S. 153, 29 S. Ct. 564, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 946, affirming (1907) 100 Tex. 556, 102 S. W. 105; Martin v. St. Louis Southwestern R. Co., (1904) 134 Fed. 134; Choctaw, etc., R. Co. v. Hamilton, (1908) 21 Okla. 126, 95 Pac. 972; Texas, etc., R. Co. v. Beckworth, (Tex. 1909) 118 S. W. 729.

Suits against federal officers.—Where suit was brought in a state court against defendant as "the duly qualified and acting postmaster at Dallas, Tex.," and sought relief against certain official acts performed by the defendant under orders of the postmaster-general, it was held to be a suit against an officer of the United States in his official capacity, and removable to the federal courts. Bryant Bros. Co. v. Robinson, (1906) 149 Fed. 321, 79 C. C. A. 259.

But an action for libel against individuals is not removable upon averments in the petition for removal that the action complained of was taken by defendants as officers of the United States, and that such fact was fraudulently omitted from plaintiff's petition for the purpose of preventing a removal, since such fact, if it had been pleaded, would not have conferred original jurisdiction on the federal court. People's U. S. Bank v. Goodwin, (1908) 160 Fed. 727.

A receiver of a national bank being entitled to remove actions against him to the federal courts as an action arising under the laws of the United States, as provided by R. S. sec. 629, 4 Fed. Stat. Annot. 245, a defendant when sued in a state court by such receiver is also entitled to exercise the same right. Johnson v. Rankin, (Tex. 1906) 95 S. W. 665.

Suits against other receivers appointed by federal court.—The fact alone that a defendant in an action in a state court is a receiver appointed by a federal court does not render the cause removable as one arising under the laws of the United States. Pepper v. Rogers, (1904) 128 Fed. 987; Rural Home Telephone Co. v. Powers, (1910) 176 Fed. 986; People v. Bleecker St., etc., R. Co., (1910) 178 Fed. 156; Dale v. Smith, (1910) 182 Fed. 360; Vanderbilt v. Kerr, (1911) 188 Fed. 537; Jeffery v. Osborne, (1911) 145 Wis. 351, 129 N. W. 931.

Where receivers of an interstate railroad were appointed by a federal court, it was held that actions against them instituted by claimants in a state court were not removable to the federal court as involving a federal question on the theory that to permit such suits to be maintained in the state court would interfere with the receiver's operation of the road and their performance of its duties to the public. Dale v. Smith, (1910) 182 Fed. 360.

That no consent had been obtained to sue federal receivers does not warrant a removal of the cause to the federal court. People v. Bleecker St., etc., R. Co., (1910) 178 Fed. 156.

Suits concerning navigable streams.—An original application in the state Supreme Court for a writ of mandamus to compel railroad companies owning and operating a bridge over a navigable river to replace it with another bridge according to plans and specifications to be approved by the court, is a case arising under the laws of the United States. State v. White River Valley R. Co., (S. D. 1911) 129 N. W. 1034.

The justness and feasibility of railroad regulations made by the State Corporation Commission are reviewable only by the state tribunals, and not by the federal courts, unless the regulations are so unreasonable or arbitrary as to violate the protective clauses of the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution, when they may be reviewed only by the Supreme Court of the United States on a writ of error after the railroad company has exhausted its right of review afforded by the laws of the state. North Carolina Corp. Commission v. Southern R. Co., (1909) 151 N. C. 447, 66 S. E. 427.

The validity of resolutions prohibiting the construction by a street railway company of switches on a bridge, and approaches thereto, etc., adopted by a city possessing power under its charter, statutes, and its franchise ordinance to the street railway, to prescribe reasonable regulations, etc., does not involve a federal question. Eastern Wisconsin R., etc., Co. v. Hackett, (1908) 135 Wis. 464, 115 N. W. 376, 1136, 1139.

Question depending on federal homestead law.—A question depending for solution upon the laws of the United States, and therefore justifying removal from a state to a federal Circuit Court, is involved in a suit by the daughter of a deceased homestead settler to establish her title under the operation of the state laws, as against his widow, to whom, in accordance with a federal statute, the patent has issued. McCune v. Essig, (1905) 199 U. S. 382, 26 S. Ct. 78, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 237, affirming (1902) 118 Fed. 273, (1903) 122 Fed. 588, 59 C. C. A. 429.

Suits affecting judgment of federal court.—Suits in equity in a state court, the effect of which, as disclosed on the face of the bills, is to delay and obstruct, and perhaps defeat, the enforcement of a judgment of a federal court, are removable, as involving a federal question. Cornue v. Ingersoll, (1909) 174 Fed. 666, decree affirmed (1910) 176 Fed. 194, 99 C. C. A. 548.

How federal question presented.—To entitle a party to remove a cause to a federal court on the ground that a federal question is involved, it is necessary that the fact appear from the plaintiff's statement; that the allegation be real and substantial; that it appear from the complaint that in some aspect which the case may assume a federal question will be involved, and that it is set up in good faith; but, if there is a doubt as to the right to remove, the doubt must be resolved against jurisdiction. Minnesota v. Northern Securities Co., (1904) 194 U. S. 48, 24 S. Ct. 598, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 870; Arkansas v. Choctaw, etc., R. Co., (1905) 134 Fed. 106; Oregon v. Three Sisters Irrigation Co., (1907) 158 Fed. 346; People's U. S. Bank v. Goodwin, (1908) 160 Fed. 727; Beck v. Johnson, (1909) 169 Fed. 154; Clark v. Southern Pac. Co., (1909) 175 Fed. 122; Leggett v. Great Northern R. Co., (1910) 180 Fed. 314; St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Neal, (1906) 83 Ark. 591, 98 S. W. 958; Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Hollan, (1908) 49 Tex. Civ. App. 55, 107 S. W. 642; Schuyler v. Southern Pac. Co., (Utah 1910) 109 Pac. 458. See also Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Blachley, (1908) 50 Tex. Civ. App. 141, 109 S. W. 995.

Allegations in the petition for the removal will not justify removal on the ground that the cause is one arising under the Federal Constitution and laws, where the cause of action itself is not so based. In re Winn, (1909) 213 U. S. 458, 29 S. Ct. 515, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 873; Mitchell Engineering, etc., Co. v. Worthington, (1905) 140 Fed. 947; Cella v. Brown, (1906) 144 Fed. 742, 75 C. C. A. 608; Hall v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1906) 149 Fed. 564; Miller v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., (1909) 168 Fed. 982; Rural Home Telephone Co. v. Powers, (1910) 176 Fed. 986; Hubbard v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1910) 176 Fed. 994; Shohoney v. Quincy, etc., R. Co., (1909) 223 Mo. 649, 122 S. W. 1025.

A defendant by his petition to remove cannot change plaintiff's cause of action as stated in his petition, so as to bring it within a federal law, nor can plaintiff so state his cause of action as to deprive defendant of the right of removal, if defendant by his answer or plea shows that he relies for his defense on an Act of Congress or a provision of the Federal Constitution. Shohoney v. Quincy, etc., R. Co., (1909) 223 Mo. 649, 122 S. W. 1025.

But the petition for the removal of the cause, on the ground that it is one arising under the Constitution or laws of the United States, must state the facts showing that such is the case, what the federal question is, and how it arises. Rural Home Telephone Co. v. Powers, (1910) 176 Fed. 986.

II. DIVERSE CITIZENSHIP AND ALIENAGE.

1. IN GENERAL.

A state is not a citizen, so as to come within this section authorizing removal on the ground of diversity of citizenship. Ayer, etc., Tie Co. v. Kentucky, (1906) 202 U. S. 409, 26 S. Ct. 679, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 1082; O'Connor v. Texas, (1906) 202 U. S. 501, 26 S. Ct. 726, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 1120.

Therefore an action in which a state is the real party in interest cannot be removed from a state to a federal court solely on the ground of diverse citizenship. Southern R. Co. v. State, (1905) 165 Ind. 613, 75 N. E. 272.

Thus it has been held that a suit by a state to recover taxes on property omitted from taxation, brought against nonresidents, is not removable to the federal court. Darnell v. State, (Ind. 1910) 90 N. E. 769.

In an action in the name of the state, by the prosecuting attorney of a judicial circuit against a railroad company, to recover penalties for the railroad's violation of a local statute requiring the posting of trains in passenger depots in which there is a telegraph office, the state is the real party in interest, even though one-half of the penalties recovered are payable to the prosecuting attorney. Southern R. Co. v. State, (1905) 165 Ind. 613, 75 N. E. 272.

But the mere presence on the record of the state as a party plaintiff will not defeat the jurisdiction of a federal Circuit Court to which the cause has been removed from a state court, if it appears that the state has no real interest in the controversy. Ex p. Nebraska, (1908) 209 U. S. 436, 28 S. Ct. 581, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 876.

Citizens of territories.—An action by a citizen and resident of the Indian Territory against a citizen of a state is not removable to the federal court on the ground of diversity of citizenship. Kansas City Southern R. Co. v. McGinty, (1905) 76 Ark. 356, 88 S. W. 1001.

An action against defendants, some of whom are citizens of Porto Rico, is not removable on the ground of diversity of citizenship. Healy v. McCormick, (1907) 157 Fed. 318.

Representative parties.—The personal representative of a nonresident deceased, having qualified as such, is a "citizen" of the state for purposes of the action, and as bearing on the question of removal of the cause. Lemon v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., (1910) 137 Ky. 276, 125 S. W. 701.

But where the plaintiffs sued as individuals, and the state courts sustained their right to maintain the suit in such capacity, their individual citizenship must determine the right of a defendant to remove the cause, notwithstanding an averment in the petition for removal that they sued as stockholders of a corporation, and that the recovery they sought was in the sole right and for the benefit of such corporation. Dodd v. Louisville Bridge Co., (1904) 130 Fed. 186.

Interveners and substituted parties.—The lessee under a long-term lease of a railroad assuming all the lessor's obligations is the real party to a suit to compel the lessor to grant switch connections in accordance with a stipulation in its grant of a right of way, and is entitled to intervene, and being a citizen of another state is entitled to a removal to the federal court. Chase v. Beech Creek R. Co., (1906) 144 Fed. 571.

Where a person found in possession of part of the property, on the service of a summons in ejectment, is thereupon brought in as a defendant, and serves as provided by the state statute, he becomes a party for all purposes, and if a citizen of the same state as plaintiff, the cause is not removable by the original defendant unless a separable controversy is shown, nor is the filing of a disclaimer by such person in the federal court sufficient to sustain the removal, the question of his possession and consequent liability for costs and mesne profits remaining, which the federal court is not competent to try. Davies v. Wells, (1904) 134 Fed. 139.

In an action against a foreign railroad corporation, an amended petition, tendered after the filing by the defendant of a petition for the removal of the case to the federal court, making a domestic corporation, original defendant's lessor, a party, comes too late to prevent the removal. Davis v. Chesapeake, etc., R. Co., (1903) 116 Ky. 144, 75 S. W. 275, withdrawing opinion in (1902) 70 S. W. 857, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 1125.

Dismissal as to coparty.—The dismissal, against the contention of plaintiff, after the expiration of the time prescribed by statute for the removal of causes from the state to the federal court, of an action which was brought against a resident and a nonresident, so far as it affects the former, does not deprive the state court of jurisdiction to proceed with the cause against the latter, or entitle him to remove the cause to the federal court. Lathrop, etc., Co. v. Interior Constr., etc., Co., (1909) 215 U. S. 246, 30 S. Ct. 76, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 177, reversing (1907) 150 Fed. 666.

Plaintiff's announcement that he was ready for trial in an action against two defendants, one of whom had not then been served, which was known to the other defendant, amounted to notice to the defendant served that plaintiff would proceed against it alone, and was a severance of the action as to such defendant, rendering the defendant served the sole defendant, within this section. Golden v. Northern Pac. R. Co., (1909) 39 Mont. 435, 104 Pac. 549.

Where a suit to remove a cloud from the complainants' title is brought against a resident and a nonresident, and the resident disclaims interest, thereby retiring from the suit, the nonresident may procure the removal of the cause to the federal court. Day v. Oatis, (1904) 85 Miss. 128, 37 So. 559.

Time of diverse citizenship.—To render an action removable to the federal court, on the grounds of diversity of citizenship, such diversity must exist both at the beginning of the suit, and when the petition for removal is filed. O'Connor v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1909) 144 Ia. 289, 122 N. W. 947; Day v. Oatis, (1904) 85 Miss. 128, 37 So. 559.

Where both at the commencement of an action in the state court by attachment, and at the time of its removal, the defendants were citizens of states other than that of which the plaintiff was a citizen, the fact that, after removal on the ground of diverse citizenship, one of the defendants removed to the state where plaintiff resided, and became a citizen of that state, does not deprive the federal court of jurisdiction. Lebensberger v. Scofield, (1905) 139 Fed. 380, 71 C. C. A. 476.

Where an original complaint stated a joint cause of action against a resident and non-resident defendant, and an amended complaint for the first time made the resident defendant a mere nominal party to the record, asserting no cause of action against him, it was held that the nonresident defendant was not precluded from removing the cause to the federal court because the case was not removable at the time when, by the literal terms of the statute, removal might be had, and he had answered the original complaint and went to trial thereon; the time within which application for removal must be made being not jurisdictional, but modal and formal. Bagenas v. Southern Pac. Co., (1910) 180 Fed. 887.

Both plaintiff and defendant nonresidents.—Where a suit is brought in a state court, and neither plaintiff nor defendant is a resident of that state, it is not removable to the Circuit Court of the United States solely on the ground of diversity of citizenship. Gebbie v. Review of Reviews Co., (1905) 134 Fed. 150; Baxter, etc., Constr. Co. v. Hammond Mfg. Co., (1907) 154 Fed. 992; Gillespie v. Pocahontas Coal, etc., Co., (1907) 162 Fed. 742; Gruetter v. Cumberland Telephone, etc., Co., (1909) 181 Fed. 248; Southern R. Co. v. Ansley, (1910) 8 Ga. App. 325, 68 S. E. 1086.

But this section confers jurisdiction on a federal Circuit Court of a suit to remove a cloud from the title to land lying within the district where the suit is brought; so, where neither of the parties to a suit for such relief was a resident of the state in the courts of which the suit was brought, it was held to be removable to the federal Circuit Court. Gillespie v. Pocahontas Coal, etc., Co., (1907) 162 Fed. 742.

So, also, where the parties to a suit in a state court are citizens of different states, and the other conditions necessary to make the cause one of federal cognizance exist, it is removable by the defendant, although neither party is a citizen or resident of the state in which suit is brought. Robert v. Pineland Club, (1905) 139 Fed. 1001; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Whitworth, (1903) 115 Ky. 286, 73 S. W. 766. But see dissenting opinion in this case in 75 S. W. 849, 25 Ky. L. Rep. 439.

Suits by and against aliens.—An action brought by a nonresident alien in a state court against a citizen of another state is removable by the defendant where the requisite amount is involved. Barlow v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1908) 164 Fed. 765, rehearing denied (1909) 172 Fed. 513; Bagenas v. Southern Pac. Co., (1910) 180 Fed. 887; Katalla Co. v. Ronas, (C. C. A. 1911) 186 Fed. 30, affirming (1910) 182 Fed. 946.

Where an alien brought suit in a state court against a nonresident corporation, it was held that the plaintiff thereby voluntarily submitted his person to the jurisdiction of any court sitting in that state having jurisdiction of the subject-matter, so that, the action being otherwise removable to the federal courts sitting in such state, it was removable by defendant without plaintiff's consent. Iowa Lilloet Gold Min. Co. v. Bliss, (1906) 144 Fed. 446.

Diverse citizenship as to several plaintiffs or defendants.—Where a plaintiff and one of the defendants were citizens of Maryland, it was held that the other defendant could not have the cause removed to the United States court on the ground of diverse citizenship, though it was a foreign corporation. Diamond State Telephone Co. v. Blake, (1907) 105 Md. 570, 66 Atl. 631.

An action by a citizen of another state against citizens of the state in which it is brought, and aliens, is not removable. Hackett v. Kuhne, (1907) 157 Fed. 317.

In an action to foreclose a mortgage and adjust liens on the property, where the plaintiff and defendant mortgagor are citizens of the same state, and the creditor of the mortgagors, claiming a lien on the property, is a citizen of another state, such mortgage creditor cannot, on the ground of diverse citizenship, remove the case into the federal court. Boatmen's Bank v. Fritzlen, (1905) 135 Fed. 650, 68 C. C. A. 288, reversing (1904) 128 Fed. 608.

A recovery against one only of several defendants charged with joint and concurring negligence does not deprive such defendant of any federal right, because if it had been sued alone the diversity of citizenship existing between it and the plaintiff would have authorized the removal of the cause from the state court to a federal Circuit Court. Southern R. Co. v. Carson, (1904) 194 U. S. 136, 24 S. Ct. 609, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 907, affirming (1902) 68 S. C. 55, 46 S. E. 525.

But where a domestic corporation is joined as defendant with a foreign corporation, the plaintiff has the right to a trial in the state court if the liability of the domestic corporation is fairly debatable, unless his conduct in joining the domestic corporation amounts to a fraudulent interference with the jurisdiction of the federal courts. Keller v. Kansas City, etc., R. Co., (1903) 135 Fed. 202.

A suit against two railroad companies, one a foreign corporation and the other a domestic corporation, in which the petition sets forth no cause of action whatever against the domestic corporation, either as a joint wrongdoer with a foreign corporation, or otherwise, and the amount in controversy exceeds $2,000, is removable to the federal court on the application of the foreign corporation, on the ground of diverse citizenship. Louisville, etc.,

R. Co. v. Newman, (1907) 128 Ga. 283, 57 S. E. 515.

A partnership suing as such in a state court cannot prevent a nonresident defendant from removing the cause to the proper Circuit Court of the United States on the ground of diverse citizenship, if its individual members are shown in the petition for removal to be each and all citizens and residents of a state other than that of the plaintiffs, in which they reside and the suit is brought. Bruett v. F. C. Austin Drainage Excavator Co., (1909) 174 Fed. 668.

Indispensable and unnecessary parties.—In determination of the jurisdiction of the national courts and the right to remove causes of action to them, indispensable parties only should be considered, because all others may be dismissed if their presence will oust or restrict jurisdiction. Boatmen's Bank v. Fritzlen, (1905) 135 Fed. 650, 68 C. C. A. 288; Cella v. Brown, (1905) 136 Fed. 439; Rogers v. Penobscot Min. Co., (C. C. A. 1907) 154 Fed. 606.

Where the complainants, who were citizens of Missouri, sued B. & Co., nonresidents, to avoid a railroad reorganization contract and for specific performance of a contract of B. & Co. to convey to complainants their share of certain pledged securities of the railroad without complainants consenting to certain alleged invalid conditions, the bill also alleged that defendant bank, of the same citizenship as complainants, through which the transaction was to be carried out, made the required payment of complainants' share of the railroad's indebtedness on complainants' refusal to consent to the conditions, and claimed the right to receive complainants' share of the securities, and demanded, as against the bank, that it be required to deliver to complainants their share of such securities on payment of their share of the indebtedness. It was held that the bank was not a necessary party to the determination of the controversies between complainants and B. & Co., and that they were entitled to remove the cause to the federal court. Cella v. Brown, (1905) 136 Fed. 439.

Where a bill in equity was filed by a citizen of Delaware against two respondents, one of whom was a citizen of Delaware and the other a citizen of Maryland, on petition of the latter, averring that the controversy was between him on the one side and complainant and the other respondent, both citizens of Delaware, on the other side, an order will be made for its removal to the United States Circuit Court. Hutton v. Joseph Bancroft, etc., Co., (1896) 8 Del. Ch. 55, 67 Atl. 972.

An action by a resident of Iowa against a resident and a nonresident is not removable to the federal court on the application of the nonresident, where the resident defendant is a proper, if not a necessary, party to the determination of the controversy. Wilson v. Big Joe Block Coal Co., (1907) 135 Ia. 531, 113 N. W. 348.

One improperly joined as a defendant is to be disregarded. Axline v. Toledo, etc., R. Co., (1903) 138 Fed. 169.

Garnishees are not indispensable parties.

Macurda v. Globe Newspaper Co., (1908) 165 Fed. 104.

The joinder of a tenant at will of the same citizenship as plaintiff as a party in ejectment does not prevent the removal of a cause otherwise removable to the federal court. Wallin v. Reagan, (1909) 171 Fed. 758.

Defendants, who were joined in a suit in a state court to recover an interest in lands only as trustees holding the paramount title in trust, and whose title as such was not disputed, are not indispensable parties, whose citizenship and residence in the same state as complainant would prevent a removal of the cause by the other defendants, who were the real parties in interest. Lawrence v. Southern Pac. Co., (1908) 165 Fed. 241.

Where bill in equity instituted in the state court on its face states no ground of equitable relief against two defendant corporations, citizens of the same state as that of the complainants, such defendants should be eliminated from the case in determining the right of removal by a nonresident defendant in such action. Cella v. Brown, (1906) 144 Fed. 742, 75 C. C. A. 608.

Where, in a suit to avoid a scheme and contract of B. & Co. to reorganize certain railroads, and to enforce specific performance of B. & Co.'s contract to convey to complainants their share of certain pledged securities of the railroad companies, there was no allegation that the railroads had done or threatened to do any act in violation of, or to prevent performance of, the contracts, and the only prayer affecting the railroads was for an injunction to forbid them doing any act or taking any steps interfering with plaintiff's rights, which prayer was unsupported by any averment of fact, it was held that the railroads were not indispensable parties. Cella v. Brown, (1905) 136 Fed. 439.

To a suit by a stockholder to have stock and bonds issued by a railroad company, to be exchanged for a prior issue of bonds, declared ultra vires and void, the company is the only necessary party defendant, and the joinder as defendants of directors or persons interested in the bonds to be retired will not prevent a removal of the cause by the company, where diversity of citizenship exists between it and the complainant. Politz v. Wabash R. Co., (1907) 163 Fed. 941.

Nominal or formal parties.—A suit between a corporation of one state and a corporation of another is removable by the latter, although there are joined with it as defendants a second corporation and two individuals, all citizens of the same state as the complainant, where such second corporation is a mere stakeholder, having no interest in the suit, and the individual defendants are, respectively, the president and treasurer of complainant, and their interests are substantially identical. Johnson Railroad Frog, etc., Co. v. Buda Foundry, etc., Co., (1906) 148 Fed. 883.

A bill for specific performance of a contract for the sale to complainant of certain shares of the issued stock of a corporation, and to recover damages for its breach, which does not allege the insolvency of the other party to the contract, nor that he is about to dispose of the stock, does not state any cause of action against the corporation, which is not an indispensable nor a necessary party. If joined, it is merely a formal party, and its presence, although a citizen of the same state as complainant, will not defeat the right of the real defendant to remove the cause, where it is otherwise removable. Lucas v. Milliken, (1905) 139 Fed. 816.

But where the plaintiff's declaration in an action on a contract in a state court against three defendants alleged that the defendant which made the contract in its own name acted in doing so as the agent for its codefendants, who were the real parties, they cannot be treated as merely nominal or unnecessary parties to the suit, for the purposes of removal of the cause to the federal court. Patton v. Meadows Co., (1909) 173 Fed. 224.

So where the local law provides that personal judgment is to be rendered in a suit to foreclose a mortgage against those personally liable for the debt, a corporation and its receiver, made defendants, and shown by the complaint to be personally liable, cannot be held nominal parties merely, so as to make the controversy wholly between plaintiff and the owner of the mortgaged land, though the petition for removal to the federal court alleges that the corporation and its receiver have been duly released and discharged of personal liability; this being a defense personal to them. McClure v. U. S. Mortgage Co., (1905) 197 U. S. 624, 25 S. Ct. 798, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 911.

Sham parties.—The institution of a fictitious action in a court of the state of which the plaintiff is a citizen, for the purpose of bringing two defendants of diverse citizenship—one being a nonresident—into such court, to enable the resident defendant to litigate a cause of action against the nonresident defendant in that court, and to prevent the nonresident defendant from removing such cause into the federal court, is a fraud upon the jurisdiction of the federal court and upon the nonresident defendant, and upon a reasonable application by the nonresident defendant the sham plaintiff should be disregarded and the real controversy removed to the federal court. Boatmen's Bank v. Fritzlen, (1907) 75 Kan. 479, 89 Pac. 915.

Rearrangement of the parties.—In determining questions as to removal of causes the court should ascertain the real matter in dispute and arrange the parties on opposite sides according to the facts and their respective interests. Boatmen's Bank v. Fritzlen, (1905) 135 Fed. 650, 68 C. C. A. 288, reversing (1904) 128 Fed. 608.

In considering a petition for removal of a cause to a federal court, a court should disregard an improper or sham party who has injected a fictitious cause of action into the case and may arrange the actual parties on opposite sides of the real controversy according to their respective interests, and if there then appears to be a controversy between citizens of different states involving the requisite amount, the cause may be removed. Boatmen's Bank v. Fritzlen, (1907) 75 Kan. 479, 89 Pac. 915.

In a suit by a stockholder of a corporation against the corporation and other stockholders to prevent the consummation of an alleged conspiracy by the latter to obtain control of the corporation for the purpose of canceling or terminating a contract made by the corporation, and alleged to be for its benefit, and substituting another, by which the conspirators would profit at the expense of the company and its other stockholders, the corporation must be aligned with the complainant for the purpose of determining the removability of the cause, in accordance with its interest as shown by the bill, and especially where it adopts the allegations of the bill by its answer. Lucas v. Milliken, (1905) 139 Fed. 916.

A proceeding in garnishment, after judgment, is a civil suit in which an issue of fact is or may be joined between the plaintiff and garnishee, and in such proceeding, while the judgment defendant is an indispensable party, his pecuniary interest is with the plaintiff on the issues between him and the garnishee, and he is to be ranged on that side of the controversy for the purposes of removal. Baker v. Duwamish Mill Co., (1906) 149 Fed. 612.

2. HOW DIVERSE CITIZENSHIP MADE TO APPEAR.

From the record. — Where the jurisdiction of a federal court depends upon the citizenship of the parties, such citizenship, and not merely their residence, must be shown by the record. Kansas City Southern R. Co. v. Prunty, (1904) 133 Fed. 13, 66 C. C. A. 163.

The fact that there are a large number of parties plaintiff or defendant does not take a case out of the well-settled rule that, in order to show the jurisdiction of the federal court on removal, the petition therefor must allege the citizenship of each party. It is not sufficient to allege a diversity of citizenship in general terms. Jones v. Adams Express Co., (1904) 129 Fed. 618.

A petition for the removal of a cause from a state to a federal court on the ground of diverse citizenship should not only allege that the citizenship of the parties is diverse, but should also disclose the states of which the parties, respectively, are citizens. Thompson v. Stalman, (1904) 131 Fed. 809.

An allegation in a petition for removal that defendant is a citizen of a state other than that in which the suit is pending is not equivalent to an allegation that he is a "non-resident of that state" and does not show his right to a removal. Irving v. Smith, (1904) 132 Fed. 207.

But a petitioner to remove a cause to the federal court is only required to allege the diverse citizenship, and is not required to negative any defense which may be made to the petition. Wisecarver v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1908) 139 Ia. 596, 117 N. W. 961.

Allegations deemed to be true. — A petition for removal may allege the citizenship of the parties regardless of the allegations of the plaintiff's pleading, and where its allegations show the requisite citizenship to authorize the removal they are to be deemed true unless controverted by the plaintiff. Harrington v. Great Northern R. Co., (1909) 169 Fed. 714.

Where the alleged ground for removal of a cause from the state to the federal court is diverse citizenship, the allegations of the petition alone can be looked to by the state court in determining the right of removal. Texarkana Telephone Co. v. Bridges, (1905) 75 Ark. 116, 86 S. W. 841.

Sufficiency of averment. — Sufficient allegation of citizenship. — Where the plaintiff, a citizen of Nebraska, averred that defendant was a corporation under the laws of the state of New York, and defendant in the petition for removal alleged and in its answer admitted that it was a corporation organized under the laws of New York, it was held that the citizenship of the defendant in that state sufficiently appeared from the pleading. Adams Express Co. v. Adams, (C. C. A. 1908) 159 Fed. 62.

Where a corporation defendant in a petition for removal alleges that it was organized under the laws of a state other than that in which it is sued, an allegation that it is not a citizen of the latter state is unnecessary. Lee v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., (1906) 150 Fed. 775.

Insufficient allegation. — Where a suit by the transferee of a note was removed to the federal courts, but the removal petition contained no allegation as to the citizenship or residence of the transferrer, showing that the citizenship of the defendant and transferrer was diverse, or that the action could have been originally brought in the Circuit Court for the particular district, the federal court has no jurisdiction. Hall v. Tevis, (1910) 177 Fed. 600.

Where a suit in equity was removed to the federal court on the ground of diversity of citizenship, an allegation that plaintiff was and is "a citizen of the state of Michigan," plaintiff elsewhere being styled a "partnership association organized and existing under the laws of the state of Michigan," in the absence of some further averment concerning the citizenship of the members of the association, was held to be insufficient to establish that plaintiff was a citizen of the state of Michigan for the purposes of federal jurisdiction, unless the plaintiff was a corporation of that state. Fred Macey Co. v. Macey, (1905) 135 Fed. 725, 68 C. C. A. 363.

An allegation in a petition for removal, merely, that certain of the petitioners are "residents" of a state other than that of which plaintiff is a citizen, and that none of the petitioners are "residents and citizens" of the state whereof the plaintiff is a citizen, is insufficient to give the federal court jurisdiction. Laden v. Meck, (1904) 130 Fed. 877, 65 C. C. A. 361.

A petition for removal filed by a defendant railroad company stated that it was a corporation incorporated under the laws of a number of different states, among which were the states of Indiana and Illinois; that it was formed by a consolidation of corporations of said several states; that the cause of action sued on arose out of a contract for the use of a bridge across the Ohio river owned by a Kentucky corporation of which complainants were stockholders, which contract was made by an Indiana railroad company subsequently consolidating with others to form the defendant. It further averred, as a conclusion from such facts, that, in respect of the obligation sued on, defendant was a corporation of the state of Indiana, and no other state. It did not appear in what state the defendant was first incorporated, where its general offices were, where the cause of action arose, nor whether its assumption of the contract and its use of the bridge for which complainants sought to recover were in its capacity of an Indiana corporation or generally. It was held that in the absence of any statement in the complainant's pleadings to show that the defendant was sued as a citizen of Indiana alone, the facts alleged in the petition did not warrant such a finding, and, it being shown that one of the complainants was a citizen of Illinois, the cause was not removable on the ground of diversity of citizenship. Dodd v. Louisville Bridge Co., (1904) 130 Fed. 186.

A petition to remove a cause from the state court of California, alleging that when the action was commenced and when the petition was filed the petitioner was a resident of New York, does not allege that he was a "non-resident" of California, as required by this section. De La Montanya v. De La Montanya, (1907) 158 Fed. 117.

Amendment.—On the removal of a cause in which, as appears by the record, the parties are citizens of different states, but neither is an inhabitant of the district of suit, the federal court acquires general jurisdiction by virtue of the diversity of citizenship of the parties, and has power to permit the petition for removal to be amended to show that plaintiff is in fact a citizen and resident of the district of suit. Harding v. Standard Oil Co., (1909) 170 Fed. 651.

Where a cause has been removed on the ground of diversity of citizenship on a motion to remand on the ground that plaintiff sues as assignee of a chose in action, and that the petition for removal does not show the citizenship of the assignors, the court has power to permit its amendment to show, according to the fact, that their citizenship was such as to give jurisdiction. Muller v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1906) 149 Fed. 939.

3. HOW AMOUNT IN CONTROVERSY MADE TO APPEAR.

Amount demanded.—In determining a party's right to remove to the federal court an action between citizens of different states, the amount demanded in the complaint must be taken as the amount in controversy, though differing from the damages alleged, and though the prayer was amended before answer to prevent a removal. Lake Erie, etc., R. Co. v. Juday, (1898) 19 Ind. App. 436, 49 N. E. 845.

In actions for unliquidated damages, the amount in controversy is the amount which plaintiff in good faith demands, and where the law prescribes no limitation on the extent of the recovery, the determination of the amount rests with the court and jury. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Stone, (1905) 70 Kan. 708, 79 Pac. 655.

The fact that a judgment is recovered for less than $2,000 does not affect the jurisdiction acquired by a federal court by a removal of the cause, where the amount claimed, apparently in good faith, exceeded such sum. Roesaler-Haaslacher Chemical Co. v. Doyle, (1905) 142 Fed. 118, 73 C. C. A. 174.

Where a plaintiff in a state court alleges title to real estate and a trespass thereon by defendant, and prays for damages and for general relief, as may be done under the state practice, and his title is put in issue by the answer, it is a part of the matter in dispute, the value of which is to be taken into account in determining the right of removal. Porter v. Northern Pac. R. Co., (1908) 161 Fed. 773.

Effect of limiting demand.—Though a party may allege facts in his complaint from which it appears that more than $2,000 is due him, yet if he limit his demand to less than that amount the cause cannot be removed to the federal court on the ground of diverse citizenship. Lesh v. Bailey, (Ind. 1911) 95 N. E. 341.

Where plaintiff's original complaint averred a cause of action for damages amounting to $2,040.50, but prayed judgment only for the sum of $1,932, it was held that the demand for judgment constituted the matter in dispute, for the purpose of determining whether the cause was removable to the federal courts. Stark v. Port Blakely Mill Co., (1906) 44 Wash. 309, 87 Pac. 339.

Sufficient demand.—A cause between citizens of different states, wherein plaintiff sought $2,000 damages and a permanent injunction to prevent his land from becoming "wholly worthless," is removable as a cause wherein the relief asked for exceeds the jurisdictional amount. Harbison v. Allen, (1910) 152 N. C. 720, 68 S. E. 207.

Where a suit was brought by a city against a telegraph company to recover $1,772 for street rentals for the maintenance of defendant's poles and wires, and the bill prayed for the payment of the rentals or forfeitures of defendant's rights in the streets, and that its occupation thereof should cease, it was held that the amount in controversy was sufficient to confer federal jurisdiction. Memphis v. Postal Tel. Cable Co., (1906) 145 Fed. 602, 76 C. C. A. 292, reversing (1905) 139 Fed. 707.

Insufficient demand.—A suit relating to a mortgage given to secure a note for $1,700 does not involve a sum exceeding $2,000, exclusive of interest and costs, and is not removable. Daugherty v. Sharp, (1908) 171 Fed. 466.

A suit involving exactly $2,000 is not removable to the federal courts. Kaufman v. I. Rheinstrom Sons Co., (1911) 188 Fed. 544.

An action on the case to recover $2,000 damages for negligence is not removable, al though the actual damages are alleged to be greater. Barber v. Boston, etc., R. Co., (1906) 145 Fed. 52.

Where a complaint in an action for death seeks damages in the sum of $2,000, the amount in dispute is not modified by the formal prayer for "other and proper relief" so as to warrant removal to the federal court, there being no proper relief other than the pecuniary remedy demanded. Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Ryan, (1903) 31 Ind. App. 597, 68 N. E. 923.

Allegations in petition for removal.—In a suit in a state court for an injunction, based upon a law of the United States, where the value in controversy is not shown by the complainant's pleading, for the purposes of removal of the cause, it may be shown in the petition for removal. Order of Railroad Telegraphers v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., (1906) 148 Fed. 437.

An allegation, in a petition for removal, that the amount in dispute exceeds $2,000, exclusive of interest and costs, is sufficient to give the federal court jurisdiction, although there may be no proof given on the trial to sustain it. South Dakota Cent. R. Co. v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1905) 141 Fed. 578, 73 C. C. A. 176.

An allegation in a petition for the removal of a suit to determine the right to take water from a public stream for irrigation or other purposes, that the value of the matter in dispute exceeds $2,000, where not denied, is sufficient to authorize the federal court to take jurisdiction. Waha-Lewiston Land, etc., Co. v. Lewiston-Sweetwater Irrigation Co., (1907) 158 Fed. 137.

Where a controversy relates to plaintiffs' right to have their property and business undisturbed and undiminished in value by defendant's malicious conduct, and the petition for removal avers that the matter in controversy exceeds $2,000, this is controlling, it not appearing from the averments of the bill that the matter in controversy is not capable of being valued in money, and that it does not exceed $2,000 in value. Duff v. Hildreth, (1903) 183 Mass. 440, 67 N. E. 356.

In a complaint to the corporation commission to compel a railroad company to deliver four cars of coal on a private siding, the complainant put no valuation either on the particular delivery or on the effect of a similar delivery of all cars in future. After an appeal to the Superior Court, the railroad company petitioned for removal to the federal Circuit Court, alleging that the proceeding was of a civil nature to assert the right of the complainant to have the commission order the company to deliver interstate shipments to the complainant, and that the matter actually in controversy, involving the right of the defendant to manage its large interstate commerce without any interference on the part of the plaintiffs, largely exceeds the sum or value of $2,000. It was held that as the allegation as to value was a mere conclusion of law, unwarranted by the facts in the record or the petition, the petition was insufficient to oust the state court of jurisdiction, and was properly denied. North Caro- lina Corp. Commission v. Southern R. Co., (1904) 135 N. C. 81, 47 S. E. 229.

In a suit against two defendants, where no joint liability was alleged, and the amount claimed against each was less than $2,000, it was held that the cause was not removable to the federal court. Texas, etc., R. Co. v. Dishman, (1905) 38 Tex. Civ. App. 277, 85 S. W. 319.

Several counts.—Where a complaint in an action for negligent death contained several counts, each demanding damages in the sum of $1,990, and only damages resulting from the death were sought to be recovered, it was held that the cause was not removable to the federal court, as the sum sought to be recovered was not within its jurisdiction. Nashville, etc., R. Co. v. Hill, (1906) 146 Ala. 240, 40 So. 612.

Although each paragraph of a complaint in an action for personal injuries alleged that plaintiff was damaged in the sum of $5,000, but demanded judgment in a sum less than $2,000, it was held that the petition to remove was properly denied. Springer v. Bricker, (1905) 165 Ind. 532, 76 N. E. 114.

Where each of two paragraphs of a complaint seeks a recovery for the death of the same person, wrongfully caused by defendant's servants, and each relates to the same occurrence, and each seeks a recovery in the sum of $2,000, the matter in dispute does not amount to $4,000, so as to authorize a removal to the federal court. Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Ryan, (1903) 31 Ind. App. 597, 68 N. E. 923.

A cause removed from the state court will be remanded on the ground that the amount involved is only $1,900, and therefore not within the jurisdiction of the federal Circuit Court, though the complaint, in form, states two causes of action, the prayer as to each of which is for a judgment for $1,900; each being for nondelivery of a telegram; the only difference therein being that one is addressed to "Mrs. P." and the other to "Mr. P."; and it appearing that the complaint, in form, stated two causes of action because plaintiffs' counsel was uncertain, from the chirography, as to which of the two persons the telegram was addressed. Pooser v. Western Union Tel. Co., (1905) 137 Fed. 1001.

But a declaration containing two counts, each claiming damages in the sum of $1,900, and which alleges that the acts of defendant complained of have caused damage to the plaintiff in its present and accrued sales in the sum of $1,900, and also in its future sales and business in a like sum, authorizes a recovery of $3,800, and the amount involved is sufficient to render the cause removable, where the other jurisdictional facts appear. Southern Cash Register Co. v. Montgomery, (1906) 143 Fed. 700.

Where plaintiffs' pleading in a state court contained a number of counts or paragraphs, each claiming damages for alleged wrongful acts of the defendant in the sum of $1,900, and also a prayer for an injunction to restrain a continuance of such acts, an allegation in a petition for removal that the amount in controversy exceeds $2,000 must be accepted as true, even if the prayers for damages be construed as claiming only $1,900 in all, there being nothing in the pleading showing the value of the matter involved in the controversy with respect to the injunctive relief sought. Southern Cash Register Co. v. National Cash Register Co., (1906) 143 Fed. 659.

Consolidated causes.—The fact that two actions between the same parties, pending in the same state court, and each involving less than $2,000, are consolidated on motion of the defendant for "taking proof and hearing," does not render the consolidated cause removable as a single action. Holmes v. U. S. Fire Ins. Co., (1906) 142 Fed. 863.

Suit for penalty.—Under a local statute which defines what shall amount to railroad extortion, and declares that the party injured may recover of the person or corporation guilty of extortion twice the amount of damages sustained by the overcharge or discrimination, as the case may be, it was held that where a declaration against a railroad company for extortion minutely alleged the overcharges claimed, which amounted to $837.18, and the amount of the recovery on that account was alleged to be $1,674.36, the amount in controversy was not sufficient to justify a removal of the cause to the federal court, though the declaration also alleged that, by the railroad company's failure to pay the damages alleged, plaintiff had been damaged in the sum of $2,500. Barataria Canning Co. v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., (1906) 143 Fed. 113, 74 C. C. A. 307.

Interest.—Where plaintiff sued defendant insurance company to recover dues and assessments amounting to $1,527.25, together with interest, in all amounting to $2,346.50, and prayed judgment against defendant for the sum of $2,346.50, being the amount of dues and assessments paid to date, with interest, and for costs, the fact that the interest was added to the principal did not change it to principal, so as to justify a removal of the cause to the federal court on the ground that the parties were citizens of different states, and that the amount involved exceeded $2,000, exclusive of interest and costs. Gilson v. Mutual Reserve Fund L. Assoc., (1904) 129 Fed. 1003.

Costs.—Under a statute providing that on a recovery in certain suits a reasonable attorney's fee shall be allowed "as part of the costs," the amount prayed for as an attorney's fee cannot be added to the amount of the lien for the purpose of making the requisite amount to give a federal court jurisdiction on removal. Swofford v. Cornucopia Mines of Oregon, (1905) 140 Fed. 957.

Counterclaim.—Where the defendant, in an action by a nonresident in a state court to recover a sum less than $2,000, files a counterclaim by which he seeks to recover a sum greater than $2,000, the cause is removable by the plaintiff at or before the time he is required to plead such counterclaim. Price v. Ellis, (1904) 129 Fed. 482.

Amendment reducing demand.—Where a complaint at the time petition for removal and bond are filed states a case removable to a federal court, a subsequent amendment reducing the amount of dispute to less than a sum cognizable by the federal court, in order to prevent removal, cannot be allowed. Johnson v. Computing Scale Co., (1905) 139 Fed. 339; Donovan v. Dixieland Amusement Co., (1907) 152 Fed. 661; Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Stone, (1905) 70 Kan. 708, 79 Pac. 655; Ray v. Southern R. Co., (1906) 77 S. C. 103, 57 S. E. 636.

But see Western Union Tel. Co. v. Campbell, (1905) 41 Tex. Civ. App. 204, 91 S. W. 312, wherein it appears that a petition in an action against a foreign corporation demanded judgment for $6,000, and that plaintiff filed in vacation and without notice an amended petition, reducing the amount claimed to $1,999; and it was held that the amended petition superseded the original petition, and changed the suit to one for less than $2,000, and thereby deprived defendant of his right to remove the same to the federal court.

4. WHO MAY REMOVE THE SUIT.

Who is a defendant.—The word "defendant," as used in the Removal Act, includes only a party who was a defendant on the record in the state court. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Waller, (1908) 164 Fed. 358.

A local statutory provision to the effect that, on the appeal to a District Court, which either party may take from the commissioners' award in proceedings to condemn land for railway purposes, the "landowner shall be plaintiff and the corporation defendant," does not fix the status of the parties under the Removal Act, but the landowner must be deemed the defendant so far as the right of removal to a federal Circuit Court on the ground of diverse citizenship is concerned, because, under the state statutes, the institution and continuance of the proceedings depend upon the will of the railroad company. Mason City, etc., R. Co. v. Boynton, (1907) 204 U. S. 570, 27 S. Ct. 321, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 629.

Parties brought into an action in a state court by a cross-complaint alleging that they claim an interest in the property involved, and who appear and file a complaint setting up that they have succeeded to the interest of the plaintiffs, and alleging substantially the same cause of action against defendants upon which the original complaint was based, must be treated as plaintiffs, taking the place and rights of the original plaintiffs, and have no standing as defendants to remove the cause. Nash v. McNamara, (1906) 145 Fed. 541.

Where a nonresident of the state sued in a state court, and defendant, by cross-plea, sought affirmative relief, the plaintiff did not thereby become a defendant, so as to be entitled to remove the cause to the federal court. Smithers v. Smith, (1904) 35 Tex. Civ. App. 508, 80 S. W. 646, rehearing granted 98 Tex. 83, 81 S. W. 283.

Intervener.—A nonresident heir, who by leave of court intervenes in the matter of a contested claim in the court of probate, cannot, where an administrator pro tem representing the estate is defendant and does not join with him, petition for the removal of such a cause to the federal court. Mayer v. Schneider, (1903) 112 Ill. App. 628, affirmed (1904) 212 Ill. 286, 72 N. E. 436.

Effect of counterclaim. — A plaintiff in a suit in a state court for the recovery of a sum less than $2,000 does not become theoretically or constructively a defendant, so as to entitle him to remove the cause on the ground of diversity of citizenship, because the defendant in his answer sets up a counterclaim for more than $2,000, as permitted by the statute of the state, and which counterclaim under such statute would remain for trial, although the plaintiff should dismiss his action. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Waller, (1908) 164 Fed. 358.

Being nonresidents of that state. — The phrase "being nonresidents of that state" should be construed as equivalent to the words "not being citizens of that state." Madisonville Traction Co. v. St. Bernard Min. Co., (1904) 130 Fed. 789.

A defendant, sued jointly with another in a state court, who testified that his home was in another state, where he had property and to which he expected to return, does not become a resident of the state and district of suit so as to prevent a removal of the cause by the defendants by moving there with his family for temporary purposes of his employment and for an indefinite time. Willingham v. Swift, (1908) 165 Fed. 223.

Where plaintiff, a citizen of Pennsylvania, brought suit on contract in the Supreme Court of New York against citizens of that state, it was held that it was not removable to the Circuit Court of the United States sitting in New York under this section. Juillard v. Barr, (C. C. A. 1910) 177 Fed. 921.

A suit in a state court is not removable to the United States court on motion of a nonresident defendant on the ground of diverse citizenship, when the resident codefendant is an indispensable party against whom substantial relief is prayed. Paulk v. Ensign-Oskamp Co., (1905) 123 Ga. 467, 51 S. E. 344.

Where, in a joint action of negligence in the state court against three defendants, a peremptory instruction is given in favor of two of them who are residents of the state, it does not entitle the other, though a citizen of another state, to remove the cause to the United States court for diverse citizenship. Southern R. Co. v. Nichols, (1910) 135 Ga. 11, 68 S. E. 789.

An alien nonresident can no longer claim the privilege of removing to a federal Circuit Court an action commenced against him in a state court. O'Connor v. Texas, (1906) 202 U. S. 501, 26 S. Ct. 726, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 1120, affirming (1903) 96 Tex. 484, 73 S. W. 1041.

5. PETITION FOR REMOVAL.

All the defendants must join in the application. — Where a suit does not present a separable controversy, it can only be removed on a petition in which all the defendants join.

Huntington v. Pinney, (1903) 126 Fed. 237; Miller v. Clifford, (1904) 133 Fed. 880, 67 C. A. 52, 5 L. R. A. N. S. 49; Blackburn v. Blackburn, (1906) 142 Fed. 901.

A petition to remove an action against two defendants for a joint tort to the federal court on the ground that both defendants are nonresidents should be made on behalf of both. Baber v. Southern R. Co., (1907) 76 S. C. 4, 56 S. E. 540.

A cause is not removable by one of several defendants on the ground of diversity of citizenship alone, where no separable controversy is alleged or shown. McNaul v. West Indian Securities Corp., (1910) 178 Fed. 308.

Fraudulent joinder to prevent removal. — The jurisdiction of the federal court cannot be defeated by plaintiff's fraud in stating a case of joint liability against two or more defendants for that sole purpose. Reinartson v. Chicago G. W. R. Co., (1909) 174 Fed. 707; Floyd v. Shenango Furnace Co., (1911) 186 Fed. 539; St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. v. Adams, (1908) 87 Ark. 136, 112 S. W. 186; Stratton's Independence v. Sterrett, (Colo. 1911) 117 Pac. 351; Eastin v. Texas, etc., R. Co., (1906) 99 Tex. 654, 92 S. W. 838, reversing (1905) 89 S. W. 440.

Where it is apparent that a resident defendant was joined with a nonresident defendant only to prevent the removal of the case to the United States court, and without any reasonable ground on the part of the plaintiff to expect a recovery against him, the court should dismiss the action as to the defendant thus joined, and remove the cause to the federal court. Underwood v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., (Ky. 1907) 103 S. W. 322.

A federal Circuit Court to which a case has been removed as presenting a separable controversy properly refuses to remand the cause to the state court, where the testimony shows that the real purpose of the plaintiff in suing jointly in tort a resident employee and his nonresident employer was to prevent the exercise of the right of removal by the nonresident defendant. Wecker v. National Enameling, etc., Co., (1907) 204 U. S. 176, 27 S. Ct. 184, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 430.

Where an action is brought against a foreign corporation and a resident citizen, and it appears from the evidence on the trial that plaintiff had no reasonable ground to believe that the resident was in any manner liable, the court should give a peremptory instruction in behalf of the resident defendant, and order the case removed to the federal court on application of the defendant corporation. Clinger v. Chesapeake, etc., R. Co., (Ky. 1908) 109 S. W. 315.

Where, in an action for injuries to a servant, plaintiff joined a resident employee as a party defendant with the railroad company, which was a nonresident, and at the close of plaintiff's evidence no cause of action had been established against the resident defendant, and there was nothing to warrant the presumption that a stronger case could have been made out when the petition was filed, it was proper for the court to grant the railroad company's renewed motion for a removal of the cause to the federal court, on the ground that the citizen defendant had been joined for the sole purpose of preventing such removal. Dudley v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., (1906) 98 S. W. 835, 29 Ky. L. Rep. 1029.

In an action for death, plaintiff joined a resident corporation and two nonresident corporations, charging that defendants, together and jointly, were engaged in the building of a bridge over the Tennessee river, and that plaintiff's intestate was employed by the three defendants to work on the bridge, and while so engaged was killed by the fall of a mortar bucket, owing to the negligence of the three defendants and to the improper, defective, and unsafe condition of the machinery in use; it was held that the petition stated a cause of action against all the defendants, which precluded a removal of the cause to the federal court by the nonresident defendants, on a petition alleging that the resident corporation was joined for the fraudulent purpose of preventing a removal, etc. White v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1906) 96 S. W. 911, 29 Ky. L. Rep. 1062.

Where an attorney, when drawing a pleading, had knowledge of facts which showed that allegations of negligence made therein against a defendant were without foundation, or notice of other facts to put him on inquiry which would have led to such knowledge, both he and his client are chargeable therewith; and where such allegations were made for the purpose of showing a joint cause of action against two defendants, one a citizen of the state and the other of another state, it is a fair inference that the defendants were joined for the sole purpose of preventing a removal of the cause by the nonresident defendant. Gustafson v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1904) 128 Fed. 85.

The right of removal cannot be defeated by the joinder of a resident with a nonresident defendant, even though a joint cause of action is alleged, where the court finds as a fact that the averments on which the joint liability is asserted are palpably untrue, and were not made in good faith, but for the sole purpose of preventing a removal, and in fraud of the jurisdiction of the federal court. Crawford v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., (1904) 130 Fed. 395.

The question of fraud or good faith as affecting the right to remove a cause to the federal court is not presented by the plaintiff's claim that the liability of the master and servant is joint, but would arise where defendant denies the truth of the facts stated in the complaint, and so conclusively establishes that the relation of master and servant did not exist, or that the claim of the plaintiff was for other reasons false in fact, and that the complaint could not have been presented in good faith. Jacobson v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1910) 176 Fed. 1004.

In a suit against a railroad company and a general foreman employed to repair engines, by an engineer, for personal injuries caused by the bursting of a "sight tube," the railroad company being the only defendant against whom a cause of action was stated in the pleadings, and being a citizen of another state, the cause was held to be removable.

Cincinnati, etc., R. Co. v. Robertson, (1903) 115 Ky. 858, 74 S. W. 1061.

Fraud must be alleged and proved.—Where a joint cause of action against a resident and a nonresident defendant for a tort is stated in the complaint, the joinder of the defendants is within the plaintiff's right, and the cause is not removable on the ground that such joinder was for the fraudulent purpose of preventing a removal, unless such actual purpose is alleged and proved. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Willard, (1911) 220 U. S. 413, 31 S. Ct. 460, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 521, affirming (C. C. A. 1908) 165 Fed. 181; Thomas v. Great Northern R. Co., (1906) 147 Fed. 83, 77 C. C. A. 255; Offner v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1906) 148 Fed. 201, 78 C. C. A. 359; Welch v. Cincinnati, etc., R. Co., (1908) 177 Fed. 760; Shaver v. Pacific Coast Condensed Milk Co., (1911) 185 Fed. 316; Chesapeake, etc., R. Co. v. Banks, (1911) 144 Ky. 137, 137 S. W. 1066; Blackwell's Durham Tobacco Co. v. American Tobacco Co., (1907) 144 N. C. 352, 57 S. E. 5; Hough v. Southern R. Co., (1907) 144 N. C. 692, 57 S. E. 469; Baber v. Southern R. Co., (1907) 76 S. C. 4, 56 S. E. 540; Eastin v. Texas, etc., R. Co., (1906) 99 Tex. 654, 92 S. W. 838, reversing (1905) 89 S. W. 440.

Where in an action for injuries to a passenger, the petition joined the railroad company and its servants as defendants, and charged them jointly as wrongdoers, a petition by the railroad company to remove the cause to the federal court, for diversity of citizenship, on the ground that the action involved a separable controversy between it and its servants, whose citizenship was the same as plaintiffs'—merely denying the negligence of its codefendants as charged, and alleging that plaintiffs' purpose in joining such codefendants was for the fraudulent purpose of defeating the jurisdiction of the federal court—was insufficient; such averments being mere conclusions, and not facts showing a separable controversy. Rutherford v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., (1905) 120 Ky. 15, 85 S. W. 199.

Where, in an action for injuries to plaintiff at a railroad crossing, the petition stated a nonseparable cause of action against the railroad and the conductor and engineer of the train by which plaintiff was struck, and the railroad company, whose citizenship was diverse to that of plaintiff, pleaded that the engineer and conductor, who were citizens of the same state as plaintiff, had been fraudulently joined to prevent a removal of the cause to the federal court, but there was no proof of such fraud, the overruling of the railroad's petition to remove and plea in abatement for want of jurisdiction of the state court, on the same ground, was not error. Stotler v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1906) 200 Mo. 107, 98 S. W. 509.

In a suit for injuries to a brakeman by the separation of a defective brake staff, plaintiff joined the railroad company and the manufacturer of the car, who were nonresidents, and two of the railroad's car inspectors who were residents of the state. The petition alleged a cause of action against the inspectors, but a removal petition, without denying that the inspectors were such, or that they approved the car, alleged that no cause of action existed against them, that they had nothing to do with the matters alleged in the petition, nor with the defective brake staff, and that they were not in any manner responsible therefor. It was held that such allegations were insufficient to show that plaintiff had no cause of action against the inspectors, and that they were therefore fraudulently joined to prevent a removal of the cause. Ward v. Pullman Car Corp., (1908) 131 Ky. 142, 114 S. W. 754.

Allegations of petition taken as true in state court.—Where it is charged in a petition for the removal of a cause to the federal court that averments against resident defendants jointly sued were falsely and fraudulently made to prevent removal, the state court must accept the allegations as to fraud as true, and sustain the petition; the truth of the issue of fraud being triable in the federal court upon a motion to remand. Southern R. Co. v. Sittasen, (1906) 166 Ind. 257, 76 N. E. 973.

A petition for removal of a cause to the federal courts, alleging diverse citizenship, etc., between plaintiffs and the principal defendant, and that there was no cause of action against the citizen defendant, but that he had been fraudulently joined by plaintiff to deprive the noncitizen defendant of its right to remove the cause, and that the citizen defendant acted in the matter in controversy merely as petitioner's agent, is sufficient on its face to require removal. Eastin v. Texas, etc., R. Co., (1906) 99 Tex. 654, 92 S. W. 838, reversing (1905) 89 S. W. 440.

In an action for personal injuries, two defendants were alleged in the complaint to be foreign corporations, but the complaint contained no allegation as to whether a street railway company which was joined as a defendant was a corporation. The two defendants described as foreign corporations filed a petition and bond for removal to the federal court, stating that the street railway company was not a corporation, but a trade name under which one of two individuals was doing business, and that neither of such persons had been served with process or was a party to the suit. It was held that on the showing made by the petition it was the duty of the trial court to accept the petition and bond, and proceed no further in the suit. Texarkana Telephone Co. v. Bridges, (1905) 75 Ark. 116, 86 S. W. 841.

Where the fact is clear on the face of the pleadings that an improper party has been joined, or an assumed cause of action injected into the case, to defeat the jurisdiction of the federal court over the real controversy, the court may find the attempted fraud on its jurisdiction from the record alone and prevent its perpetration. Boatmen's Bank v. Fritzlen, (1905) 135 Fed. 650, 68 C. C. A. 288, reversing (1904) 128 Fed. 608.

Joinder to prevent removal.—A plaintiff has the right to join a citizen of the same state with a citizen of another state as defendants, although his purpose is to thereby prevent a removal of the cause, if the cause of action is in fact joint. Gustafson v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1904) 128 Fed. 85; Evansberg v. Insurance Stove, etc., Co., (1908) 168 Fed. 1001; Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Daniels, (1909) 175 Fed. 302; Southern R. Co. v. Sittasen, (1906) 166 Ind. 257, 76 N. E. 973, reversing (1905) 74 N. E. 898; Dowell v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1910) 83 Kan. 562, 112 Pac. 136; Calder v. Southern R. Co., (1911) 89 S. C. 287, 71 S. E. 841.

That a resident employee is joined with a nonresident corporation to keep the cause of action out of the federal courts is not conclusive on the question of plaintiff's good faith as affecting the right of removal. Jacobson v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1910) 176 Fed. 1004.

A joinder of parties cannot be fraudulent for the purpose of defeating federal jurisdiction where it is authorized by the laws of the state where the suit is brought. Ward v. Pullman Car Corp., (1908) 131 Ky. 142, 114 S. W. 754.

In an action against a railroad company for injuries to plaintiff by the giving way of the floor of a platform at a coal dock at a small station, plaintiff's claim that it was the duty of the station agent to inspect and repair the platform, so as to render him jointly liable with the railroad company, cannot be said to be in bad faith, so as to authorize the removal of the case to the federal court. Jacobson v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1910) 176 Fed. 1004.

While a joint defendant sued purely by a fictitious name without other facts identifying him as a proper or necessary party to the action stated will be regarded as a formal party merely, whose presence on the record will not affect the right of removal by one otherwise entitled thereto, yet one may sue any or all of those jointly liable for a tort, and, where a joint cause of action is stated against them, a defendant so sued cannot question the good faith with which his co-defendants have been joined with him, though such joinder may appear to be for the very purpose of preventing a removal to the federal court. Bagenas v. Southern Pac. Co., (1910) 180 Fed. 887.

Under a local statute declaring a corporation and its agents or servants negligently causing the death of another jointly liable therefor, an action for negligent death brought against a railroad and its servants causing such death is not removable to the federal court on the ground of the nonresidence of the railroad, where the servants are residents of the state, although they are joined solely for the purpose of preventing such removal. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Sheegog, (1909) 215 U. S. 308, 30 S. Ct. 101, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 208, affirming (1907) 126 Ky. 252, 103 S. W. 323; Pierce v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., (1905) 86 S. W. 703, 27 Ky. L. Rep. 801.

Time of diverse citizenship.—A petition for the removal of an action to the federal court on the ground of diversity of citizenship must state that the petitioner was a nonresident at the commencement of the action, and it is not sufficient to aver that he was a nonresident at the time of the application for removal. Chesapeake, etc., R. Co. v. Banks, (1911) 142 Ky. 746, 135 S. W. 285.

A petition by defendant for the removal of an action to the federal court, which avers that "the controversy in said action is between citizens of different states;" that defendant "at the time of the commencement was and still is a citizen and resident . . . of Illinois; that plaintiff was then and still is a resident . . . of Iowa," is insufficient, for failing to allege the citizenship of plaintiff at the commencement of the action. O'Connor v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1908) 117 N. W. 979. On rehearing, (1909) 144 Ia. 289, 122 N. W. 947.

Averment of nonresidence.—A removal petition by an alien, failing to allege that he is a nonresident of the state, is fatally defective. Mayer v. Karaghuesian, (1909) 169 Fed. 736.

An averment, in a petition for removal, that defendant is, and was at the time of the commencement of the suit, a citizen and resident of another state named, is equivalent to an allegation of nonresidence in the state of suit, and is sufficient. Lawrence v. Southern Pac. Co., (1908) 165 Fed. 241.

Where a removal petition alleged that petitioner was a citizen of Illinois and a nonresident of Iowa, it was not necessary that it should also allege that it was not a citizen of Iowa; plaintiffs' remedy being by counter-showing if they desired to controvert the citizenship alleged. Wisecarver v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1908) 139 Ia. 596, 117 N. W. 961.

A petition for removal to the federal court, alleging that certain defendants are united as codefendants to prevent petitioner from exercising its right of removal, necessarily concedes the residence of the codefendants, and an answer affirmatively alleging such residence is immaterial. Pierce v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., (1905) 86 S. W. 703, 27 Ky. L. Rep. 801.

III. SEPARABLE CONTROVERSIES.

1. "BETWEEN CITIZENS OF DIFFERENT STATES."

See, generally, supra, this note, II. Diverse Citizenship and Alienage.

To authorize a removal by one or more of the defendants on the ground that there is a separable controversy which is "wholly between citizens of different states," it must appear from the petition that each party to the controversy is a citizen of some state. Laden v. Meck, (1904) 130 Fed. 877, 65 C. A. 361.

Aliens.—A suit in which there is a separable controversy between an alien corporation and a nonresident corporation defendant is subject to removal under this section. Iowa Lilloet Gold Min. Co. v. Bliss, (1906) 144 Fed. 446.

An alien corporation is, under this section, a nonresident although it has a branch office within the state for the transaction of business. Baumgarten v. Alliance Assur. Co., (1907) 153 Fed. 301.

2. WHO MAY REMOVE.

See, generally, infra, this note, subdivision 4. Separable Character of Controversy.

Defendant sued in court of his own state.—A cause will not be removed to a federal court on the ground that certain parties in interest are not residents of Pennsylvania, where it appears that the application for removal is made by the only defendant in the case who is present, and is admittedly a resident of Pennsylvania. McFadden v. McFadden, (1907) 32 Pa. Super. Ct. 534.

Assignee.—An action to recover the price of property sold, brought against the original purchasers and one to whom they assigned their contract, who assumed payment and to whom the property was delivered, presents a separable controversy as to the assignee, who may remove the same into a federal court, where the requisite jurisdictional facts appear, regardless of the citizenship of the other defendants. Stimson v. United Wrapping Mach. Co., (1907) 156 Fed. 298.

Where there are several defendants, it is not necessary that the removing defendant should be a nonresident. Battle Creek Nat. Bank v. Howard, (1907) 54 Misc. 81, 103 N. Y. S. 814.

3. PETITION FOR REMOVAL.

See, generally, infra, this title, vol. 4, p. 349, sec. 3, annotation 1.; and see also infra, this note, subdivision 5, How Separable Controversy Made to Appear.

A contention that a suit against a domestic and against a foreign corporation presents a separable controversy, and is removable to the Circuit Court, cannot be considered on the hearing of a petition for removal where the petition is not grounded on any such proposition. Keller v. Kansas City, etc., R. Co., (1903) 135 Fed. 202.

An action against two defendants is not removable from the state to the federal courts on their joint petition averring that the controversy arises under the laws of the United States as to one of them alone, where there is no separable controversy between the plaintiff and the latter defendants, nor any evidence showing that the other defendant was made a party solely to defeat the removal. Texas, etc., R. Co. v. Huber, (1903) 33 Tex. Civ. App. 75, 75 S. W. 547.

Fraudulent joinder.—Where a removable petition alleged the requisite diversity of citizenship, that the matter in dispute exceeded, exclusive of interest and costs, the sum of $2,000, that a separable controversy existed between plaintiff and petitioner, and that a codefendant was fraudulently joined to defeat federal jurisdiction and prevent removal, it was sufficient for that purpose, though it was defective in detail as to what constituted the alleged fraud. Donovan v. Wells, (C. C. A. 1909) 169 Fed. 363.

4. SEPARABLE CHARACTER OF CONTROVERSY.

Default.—The complaint, in an action in a state court, stated a joint cause of action against two defendants, one a domestic and the other a foreign corporation. The latter, which was brought in by substituted service, made default, and a judgment was entered against it thereon. On a trial of the case against the domestic corporation, a judgment was rendered in its favor, from which plaintiff appealed. It was held that until final disposition of the appeal, it was not established that a separable controversy existed between plaintiff and the foreign corporation which entitled the latter to remove the cause. Lathrop, etc., Co. v. Interior Constr., etc., Co., (1906) 143 Fed. 687.

"Controversy" and "cause of action."—Where the plaintiffs, who furnished materials to contractors of a building, sued, claiming the privilege on the building, making the contractors, the owners of the building, and a surety company which had executed a bond for faithful performance of the contract, defendants; and the complaint charged that the owners of the building had become personally liable by not having required the contractors to furnish a bond to secure the payment of workmen and materialmen, the surety was made a party on the ground that the contractors, having defaulted, had assigned the contract to the company with all its rights and all the materials belonging to them. The plaintiff was a Missouri corporation, the contractors were citizens of Texas, the surety company was a citizen of Maryland, and the owner of the building was a Louisiana corporation. It was held that an application by the contractors and the surety company to have the case removed to the federal court was properly denied, the action being joint and several, arising ex contractu so as not to present a separable controversy between plaintiffs and petitioners for removal. Union Iron, etc., Co. v. Sonnefeld, (1904) 113 La. 436, 37 So. 20.

Where, in an action against a railroad and a construction company for services under a contract made between the plaintiff and the latter, the citizenship of the construction company only was diverse, and the plaintiff alleged in a single cause of action that he performed services and furnished material for the railroad company, and that the construction company acted as agent of the railroad company, and sought to recover against the defendants jointly, it was held that the complaint did not allege a separable cause of action, and that the action was not, therefore, removable. Lathrop-Shea, etc., Co. v. Pittsburg, etc., R. Co., (1905) 135 Fed. 619.

That plaintiff might have sued defendants separately is immaterial on a petition to remove the cause. Davis v. Rexford, (1907) 146 N. C. 418, 59 S. E. 1002.

Where an action was brought against a railroad company, which, if sued alone, would have been entitled to remove the cause, and a resident not entitled to remove, and a verdict was rendered in favor of the resident and against the corporation, on which a judgment was entered, which was reversed on the railroad company's appeal, that plaintiff did not appeal from the judgment in favor of the resident defendant did not entitle the railroad company, after reversal, to remove the cause on the theory that the action then involved a controversy only between plaintiffs and itself. Huber v. Texas, etc., R. Co., (Tex. 1908) 113 S. W. 984.

Where two persons, one a resident of the state and one a resident of another state, were joint receivers of a corporation, and acted jointly in receiving and holding what they had received from their predecessor, so that they were both indispensable parties to an action concerned with their receivership, or with their conduct as receivers, it was held that there was no separable controversy between the nonresident receiver and plaintiff suing for relief from certain transactions of the receivers' predecessor relating to the receivership, which would entitle the nonresident receiver to remove the cause to the federal court. Wrightsville Hardware Co. v. Hardware, etc., Mfg. Co., (1910) 180 Fed. 586.

Action on contract.—A complaint against one resident and two nonresident defendants for breach of a contract to purchase land for the benefit of all, states a breach by all of the defendants, and therefore shows a joint liability defeating a removal of the cause, where it avers that by the terms of the contract the nonresident defendants agreed to furnish the money for the purchase of the land, the resident defendant to pass on the title to the land purchased, and the plaintiff to give his services in making the purchase; that the defendants, and each of them, had refused to carry out the agreement; and that one of the nonresident defendants notified the plaintiff to discontinue work under the contract and that the defendants would not further comply with it. Davis v. Rexford, (1907) 146 N. C. 418, 59 S. E. 1002.

The contracts and liability of the maker of a promissory note and of the several indorsers thereon are each separate and distinct from the others, and their joinder as defendants in the same action, as permitted by a state statute, does not render the cause of action joint, or joint and several; but such an action is severable, and may be removed by any defendant who would have the right if sued alone, without regard to the citizenship of his codefendants. But such removal carries only the controversy between such defendant and the plaintiff, and does not give the federal court jurisdiction over the other defendants or of the causes of action against them. Manufacturers' Commercial Co. v. Brown Alaska Co., (1906) 148 Fed. 308.

Action for tort.—Where an action for tort is brought in the state court by a resident plaintiff, against a resident and a nonresident defendant who are jointly liable and there is no separable controversy, it may not be removed. Heffelfinger v. Choctaw, etc., R. Co., (1905) 140 Fed. 75; Blunt v. Southern R. Co., (1907) 155 Fed. 499; Foster v. Coos Bay Gas, etc., Co., (1911) 185 Fed. 979; Wabash R. Co. v. Keeler, (1906) 127 Ill. App. 265; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Coley, (1905) 121 Ky. 385, 89 S. W. 234, 1 L. R. A. N. S. 370; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Houchins, (1905) 121 Ky. 526, 89 S. W. 530, 1 L. R. A. N. S. 375, 123 Am. St. Rep. 205; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Proctor, (1905) 122 Ky. 92, 89 S. W. 714; White v. Southern R. Co., (1907) 148 N. C. 340, 59 S. E. 1042.

Where the complainant in an action for injuries to a servant against two railroad companies, one of which only was a nonresident, did not allege a separable controversy between plaintiff and each defendant, it is immaterial to the right of the nonresident company to remove the cause to the federal court that a peremptory instruction was given by the court in favor of the resident defendant. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Harris, (1905) 85 Miss. 15, 38 So. 225.

Where the plaintiff, in an action for death, pleaded a cause of action against several defendants, some of whom were of the same citizenship as the plaintiff, the test of plaintiff's right to join such defendants, and thereby preclude a removal of the cause to the federal courts by defendants whose citizenship was diverse, depended on whether there was a legal concert or identity of the defendants in the same tortious act, or in the concurring acts of negligence contributing to the same injury, and not whether such defendants might present separate and different defenses to the action. American Bridge Co. v. Hunt, (1904) 130 Fed. 302, 64 C. C. A. 548.

In a suit to join the destruction of a water privilege by diverting water from a stream, the complainant may properly join as defendants the persons who are undertaking such diversion, and one with whom they have contracted to do the work, and ask for a common injunction against all, and in such case there is no separable controversy which entitles the former to remove the cause when the contractor could not. McMillan v. Noyes, (1906) 146 Fed. 926.

An action to recover damages for the negligent injury of a person while a passenger on a street car is one ex delicto, and not on the contract of carriage, and the plaintiff may join as defendants the street railroad company and an employee, where their joint negligence is alleged to have been the cause of the injury; and in such case the cause of action is not separable for the purpose of removal. Knuth v. Butte Electric R. Co., (1906) 148 Fed. 73.

A suit by a citizen of the state against a foreign and a domestic railroad company for damages for interference with his easements in streets on which his property abuts, caused by the operation of trains thereon pursuant to an agreement between the companies, and for an injunction to prevent further interference, presents a controversy which is not separable, and the foreign company is not entitled to remove the cause to the federal court on the ground of diversity of citizenship. Staton v. Atlantic Coast Line

R. Co., (1907) 144 N. C. 135, 56 N. E. 794.

Where the plaintiff, a brakeman in the employ of defendant G. Railroad Company, alleged that it had an agreement with defendant I. Railroad Company for the use of the latter's switches and yard, subject to the control of the latter company's yardmaster; that, on the occasion of plaintiff's injury, his conductor and such yardmaster negligently ordered the caboose of plaintiff's train to be placed on a specified track; and that, in so placing it, it encountered the corner of a freight car belonging to the I. Company, negligently protruding over the way, but invisible to plaintiff, causing a collision, in which plaintiff was hurt, it was held that such declaration did not allege a separable controversy between plaintiff and the defendant companies, entitling the I. Company, which was the sole nonresident, to remove the case to the federal courts. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Harris, (1905) 85 Miss. 15, 38 So. 225.

A complaint in an action against a foreign railway corporation and a domestic corporation and individuals, citizens and residents of Kentucky, brought by a resident and citizen of the state, which alleges that the foreign corporation was the owner of a railroad and its equipments, and that the domestic corporation and the individuals were its agents to keep the same in safe condition, and had undertaken to perform such duty, and had assured plaintiff, an engineer, that they had put an engine in good repair, when they knew that it was out of repair, thereby causing injury to the plaintiff, states a cause of action jointly against the foreign and domestic corporations and the individuals, and the foreign corporations cannot remove the cause to the federal courts on the ground of diversity of citizenship. Ayles v. Southern R. Co., (1905) 121 Ky. 59, 88 S. W. 1048.

But a joint action in a state court against two defendants for a tort, which is governed as to the two defendants by different statutes, fixing different grounds of liability and admitting of different defenses, is separable and is removable by one defendant, where the necessary diversity of citizenship exists as to such defendant, although the other defendant may be a citizen of the same state as plaintiff. Jackson v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (C. C. A. 1902) 178 Fed. 432.

Though, in a suit against two or more defendants one of whom is a nonresident, there may be charges of concurrent negligence against all, yet if there be also a distinct charge of negligence against the nonresident defendant alone, sufficient in and of itself to constitute a cause of action, the case is one involving a separable controversy between citizens of different states, and is therefore removable to the federal courts. McIntyre v. Southern R. Co., (1904) 131 Fed. 985.

Where the plaintiff alleged the death of her decedent while working in the mill of defendant box company, a foreign corporation, owing to the latter's failure to provide a reasonably safe place for deceased to work, in that such company was required, but failed, to provide a guarded platform over its shaving pit, where he was required to go to open the pipes leading into it, and that while performing such work, and using a defective stick provided by defendant, deceased fell from the platform by reason of its unguarded condition, and lost his life, the petition alleging also that defendant K., a resident of the same state as plaintiff, was negligent in failing to inspect the place and appliances, and discover and report any defects found therein to defendant company, it was held that the box company and defendant K. were not jointly liable, but that there was a separable controversy between plaintiff and the box company, which was removable to the federal court. Marach v. Columbia Box Co., (1910) 179 Fed. 412.

Action against master and servant—Removal allowed.—Where the petition in a joint action in a state court against a railroad company and its servant to recover for a personal injury alleges facts which show that the corporation is charged with negligence solely because of an act of its codefendant, under the rule of respondent superior, it states a cause of action which is several and not joint, notwithstanding a general averment of joint negligence, and the cause involves a separable controversy which renders it removable by such company, the other jurisdictional facts being shown. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Bailey, (1907) 151 Fed. 891.

Where a complaint against a nonresident railway company and certain of its employees in charge of the train by which deceased was killed, who were of the same citizenship as plaintiff, alleged that, in violation of the rules of the railway company, "defendants negligently, wilfully, and maliciously, by their joint, concurrent acts," gave certain box cars a high, unusual, and dangerous rate of speed, uncoupled them from the engine, turned a switch, and permitted them to roll down a steep grade over a crossing, by which plaintiff's intestate was knocked down and killed; and the complaint also charged defendants jointly with negligence in maintaining such steep grade and closely adjoining switch at such place, in not providing a switchman at the crossing, in not providing a brakeman in charge of the cars, and in that the railway company's employees were incompetent, and that they were retained in its employ with knowledge that they were accustomed to violate its rules, it was held that such acts of negligence were not joint, but that the complaint alleged a separable controversy entitling the railway company to remove the cause to the federal courts. McIntyre v. Southern R. Co., (1904) 131 Fed. 985.

Where, in an action for death of a passenger, the plaintiff joined the railroad company, a nonresident corporation, with certain of its employees, operating the colliding trains which caused the accident, who were of the same citizenship as plaintiff, but the only negligence averred was that of the servants in control of the trains, the corporation's liability being based wholly on the fact that the acts of the servants were within the scope of their employments, and bound the company, it was held that the complaint did not charge a joint tort, and hence the corporation was entitled to remove the cause to the federal court. Sessions v. Southern Pac. Co., (1904) 134 Fed. 313.

In an action for injuries to a servant, plaintiff sued defendant company, a nonresident, and B., a resident, who was plaintiff's superintendent. The corporation's liability, if any, was based on its negligence in providing a defective appliance, or because of B.'s negligence in directing plaintiff to pour iron into the mould known to him to be defective. It was held that the liability of B. and the corporation was not joint, but severable as to each, and that the cause was therefore removable. Evansberg v. Insurance Stove, etc., Co., (1908) 168 Fed. 1001.

Where the petition against a railroad company and an individual for death of an employee of the company and the petition of the company for removal of the cause show that the individual defendant, a resident of the state, is a mere employee of the company, against whom no recovery can be had under the statute on which the action is based, so that there is no joint liability, the mere subsequent allegation in plaintiff's petition that "defendants" negligently did certain things, is ineffective to prevent the company, a nonresident, from removing the cause to the federal court. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Stepp, (1907) 151 Fed. 908. See also Slaughter v. Nashville, etc., R. Co., (1906) 91 S. W. 744, 28 Ky. L. Rep. 1195.

A plaintiff corporation instituted suit against defendant railroad company, a non-citizen, and against the railroad company's engineer, a citizen of the same state as plaintiff, alleging the burning of plaintiff's warehouse by the joint negligence of the railroad company and the engineer, and that the fire was caused by the engineer's operation of an engine equipped with an improper spark arrester, also alleging that the engineer was negligent in handling the engine at the time and place alleged, so as to cause a great and unnecessary amount of sparks to be emitted. It was held that the engineer was not a necessary party to the determination of the controversy between plaintiff and the railroad company, the substantial defendant, since, if the locomotive had been equipped with a proper spark arrester, no conduct of the engineer could have caused the emission of sufficient sparks to cause a fire; and hence the controversy between the plaintiff and the railroad company was severable and removable to the federal courts. Bainbridge Grocery Co. v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., (1910) 182 Fed. 276.

Where the petition in an action against a railroad company and an engineer of one of the trains for negligently causing the death of plaintiff's intestate is based on the Iowa statute giving a right of action for wrongful death, which has never been construed by the courts of the state to create a joint liability in such cases, and alleges acts of negligence on the part of the railroad company with which its codefendant had no concern, and which are essential to make out a cause of action under the state law, a separable controversy is disclosed, and the cause is removable on petition of the railroad company showing diversity of citizenship, and alleging that the joinder of defendants was for the fraudulent purpose of preventing a removal. Henry v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., (1903) 132 Fed. 715.

If the complaint against a nonresident corporation and its alleged resident foreman does not charge a joint liability, it will not preclude removal by the nonresident defendant. Shaver v. Pacific Coast Condensed Milk Co., (1911) 185 Fed. 316.

Removal denied.—A suit in which plaintiff, in good faith, has joined as for a joint liability in tort a foreign railway corporation and certain of its resident employees whose negligence caused the injury complained of, is not removable to a federal Circuit Court as presenting a separable controversy between the plaintiff and the corporate defendant. Southern R. Co. v. Miller, (1910) 217 U. S. 209, 30 S. Ct. 450, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 732, affirming (1908) 3 Ga. App. 410, 59 S. E. 1115; Roberts v. Shelby Steel Tube Co., (1904) 131 Fed. 729, 65 C. C. A. 589; Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Roberts, (Ga. 1911) 71 S. E. 425.

Where a nonresident mining corporation and its local foreman in charge were joined as defendants in an action by a miner for personal injuries, and the complaint alleged that the foreman knew of the unsafe condition of the stope where plaintiff was injured, and negligently permitted such condition to exist, and also charged that the stope was by negligence in mining rendered unsafe, and was negligently maintained in such condition under the direction of the corporation's superintending officers and with its knowledge and consent, it was held that the complaint charged concurrent acts of negligence against defendants, and did not present a separable controversy, so as to entitle the corporation to remove the cause to the federal court. Stratton Cripple Creek Min., etc., Co. v. Ellison, (1908) 42 Colo. 498, 94 Pac. 303.

In an action against a master for wilful tort committed by his servant in his employment, the servant is a proper party, and the case is not removable to the United States court on the theory that he is a sham defendant. Able v. Southern R. Co., (1906) 73 S. C. 173, 52 S. E. 962.

That an action for causing death, against a railroad company, and a conductor and brakeman in its employ, is based as against the railroad company on a local statute providing that every railroad company shall be liable for damages inflicted on passengers, while the liability of the employees is for negligence under the common law, does not present a separable controversy so as to entitle the railroad to removal of the cause. Painter v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1909) 177 Fed. 517; Schwychart v. Barrett, (Mo. 1910) 130 S. W. 388.

In Taylor v. Southern R. Co., (1910) 178 Fed. 380, it appears that the plaintiff, a railroad bridge hand, was injured while at work on one of its bridges by an alleged defective scaffold on which he was directed to work. He joined the railroad company, a citizen and resident of another state, and his foreman, who was a resident and citizen of the same state as plaintiff, in which an action for his injuries was brought, alleging that while he was absent from work the foreman had placed a plank on the side of the bridge below the tracks to be used as a scaffold, without nailing it to the sills of the bridge, and that after his return he was directed by the foreman to tie a rope to the plank so that it might be lifted to the trestle, and while attempting to do so the plank tilted over the end of the sills, throwing plaintiff to the ground below. It was held that the complaint stated a cause of action against the railroad company for failing to furnish a safe place, and an action against the foreman for misfeasance, and that the cause was, therefore, not removable.

Where the plaintiff brought suit for the death of his intestate against the defendant railroad company and the engineer and conductor of the train by which deceased was killed, both of whom were of the same citizenship as plaintiff; and the declaration alleged negligence, consisting of a failure to warn deceased that the track where deceased was directed to work was defective, and that the operatives of the train negligently moved the same before deceased came out from between certain cars which he was engaged in coupling; and also alleged that "said negligence of the corporate defendant was done by and through its servants (to wit, the conductor and engineer)", and was the joint negligence of all the defendants, and that the injuries and death suffered by plaintiff's intestate were the true and proximate result of the combined joint and concurrent negligence of the corporate defendant and its codefendants then in its service," it was held that the declaration stated a cause of action for a joint tort committed by all of the defendants, and that the railroad company, whose citizenship alone was diverse, was therefore not entitled to remove the cause to the federal court. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Vincent, (1906) 116 Tenn. 317, 95 S. W. 179.

An action in a state court against a servant of a railroad and the railroad jointly, for the negligence of the servant, and where any liability of the company was under the principle of respondet superior, the servant being a citizen of the state, and the railroad a corporation of another state, is not removable to the federal court. Lanning v. Chicago G. W. R. Co., (1906) 196 Mo. 647, 94 S. W. 491.

Where, in an action for wrongful death of plaintiff's intestate, the complaint joined the coemployee by whose alleged negligence plaintiff's intestate was killed, whose citizenship was the same as that of plaintiff, with decedent's employer, which was a foreign corporation, and alleged that such corporation was negligent in supplying an electric crane which was not equipped with good and sufficient brakes or other appliances by which it might be controlled, in consequence of which an iron beam being carried by the crane came in contact with other beams on the shop floor, causing them to fall on deceased, and that the corporation was also negligent in causing the crane to be operated by a young, inexperienced, and unskilful boy, who was alleged to have operated the crane so negligently as to permit the beam being carried to swing against the other beams and cause them to fall, etc., it was held that the complaint alleged a joint and not a separable controversy against such defendants. American Bridge Co. v. Hunt, (1904) 130 Fed. 302, 61 C. C. A. 548.

Joinder to prevent removal.—A case in which the plaintiff, in good faith, has elected to sue jointly in tort a corporation and its servants whose misconduct caused the injury complained of, does not, even though such joinder may have been made for the purpose of preventing removal, present a separable controversy between the plaintiff and the corporation which can be removed from a state to a federal Circuit Court without regard to the citizenship of the individual defendants. Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Thompson, (1906) 200 U. S. 206, 26 S. Ct. 161, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 441; Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Gollihur, (1907) 40 Ind. App. 480, 82 N. E. 492; Hough v. Southern R. Co., (1907) 144 N. C. 692, 57 S. E. 469; Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Vincent, (1906) 116 Tenn. 317, 95 S. W. 179.

In an action against a railway company and its train dispatcher and others for the killing of plaintiff's intestate, it is not material that the train dispatcher was joined as a party for the sole purpose of preventing a removal of the cause for the railway company to the federal court, nor as to the motive for bringing a joint action against the defendants, unless they were illegally joined. Hough v. Southern R. Co., (1907) 144 N. C. 692, 57 S. E. 469.

Where, in a suit for the death of a railroad employee, the plaintiff had a good cause of action for a joint tort against the railroad company and against certain of its servants, whose citizenship was the same as plaintiff's, it was held to be immaterial to the railroad company's right to remove the cause to the federal court, because its citizenship was diverse, that the plaintiff joined the resident defendants for the purpose of avoiding federal jurisdiction. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Vincent, (1906) 116 Tenn. 317, 95 S. W. 179.

Where the plaintiff in a negligence action against a railroad and its employee, which action is both joint and separable, elects to make it joint, the defendants cannot make it separable for the purpose of removal from a state to a federal court, although the purpose of suing defendants jointly was to prevent the removal, since the motive of a person asserting a right is immaterial. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Gollihur, (1907) 40 Ind. App. 480, 82 N. E. 492.

Under a state statute authorizing the maintenance of a joint action against a corporation and its servant for death resulting from the negligence of a servant, such action is not removable to the federal courts because of diverse citizenship between the plaintiff and the corporation. Cincinnati, etc., R. Co. v. Bohon, (1906) 200 U. S. 221, 26 S. Ct. 166, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 448, affirming (Ky. 1904) 83 S. W. 580; Clinger v. Chesapeake, etc., R. Co., (1908) 128 Ky. 736, 109 S. W. 315; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Leisure, (1906) 90 S. W. 269, 28 Ky. L. Rep. 768; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Cane, (1906) 90 S. W. 1061, 28 Ky. L. Rep. 1018; Dudley v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., (1906) 96 S. W. 835, 29 Ky. L. Rep. 1029.

Condemnation proceedings — Removal allowed.—In a proceeding in a state court by a railroad company to condemn right of way, in which the owners of different parcels of land are joined as permitted by a local statute, which provides that such owners may be joined or proceeded against separately, there is a separable controversy between the petitioner and the owner or owners of each tract, and, where all those defendants owning or having any interest in certain tracts are citizens of other states, and have no interest in any other tract, they may remove the cause as to them into the federal court, where the amount in controversy is sufficient. Deepwater R. Co. v. Western Pocahontas Coal, etc., Co., (1907) 152 Fed. 824.

A proceeding by a railroad company to condemn a right of way under a local statute against a number of defendants owning land in severalty, presents a separable controversy with respect to each owner, and is removable by a defendant who is a citizen of another state, where the requisite amount is involved to give the federal court jurisdiction. South Dakota Cent. R. Co. v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1905) 141 Fed. 578, 73 C. C. A. 176.

Removal denied.—An action in a state court to condemn right of way over a tract of land, the fee of which is owned by a defendant who is a citizen of the same state as plaintiff, does not involve a separable controversy between plaintiff and a nonresident defendant, joined as having a leasehold interest in all or a part of the tract, which entitles the latter to remove the cause into a federal court, although he may be entitled to a separate award of compensation, covering his interest. Oroville, etc., R. Co. v. Leggett, (1908) 162 Fed. 571.

Where it appears from the record in a proceeding in a state court to condemn land that the equitable title to the land is in a defendant who is a citizen of the state, while the legal title is in another defendant who is a citizen of another state, there is no separable controversy between the plaintiff and the nonresident defendant, which entitles the latter to remove the cause. Helena Power Transmission Co. v. Spratt, (1906) 146 Fed. 310.

Under the statutes of New Jersey, which provide for making a mortgagee a party to a proceeding for the condemnation of land for public use, both owner and mortgagee are indispensable parties and interested in the same questions, and the cause is not removable by the owner, on the ground of diversity of citizenship, where the mortgagee is a citizen of the same state as the petitioner, and it is immaterial that the owner alone appealed from the award. Fishblatt v. Atlantic City, (1909) 174 Fed. 196.

In a condemnation proceeding instituted by a railroad company, by the filing of a petition in a Circuit Court of the state against numerous property owners, under a statute which provides for a hearing as to the petitioner's right to condemn, and, if such right is sustained, for the appointment of a commission, which, on request of the company or the owner, shall appraise any piece of the property described, from which appraisal an appeal may be taken to the court, and tried to a jury as in ordinary law actions, it was held that there is a single controversy only presented as to the right to condemn, to be determined between the petitioner, on one side, and all of the parties joined as defendants, on the other; and the mere fact that a defendant is the owner of a part of the lands sought to be taken in severalty does not create a separable controversy between him and the petitioner, which entitles him to remove the proceeding into a federal court on the ground of diversity of citizenship. Perkins v. Lake Superior, etc., R. Co., (1905) 140 Fed. 906.

Actions against lessor and lessee of railroad — Removal allowed. — The declaration of an action in a state court by an employee of a railroad company which is a citizen of another state, operating a railroad under a lease from a local company, against both lessor and lessee, to recover for personal injuries alleged to have resulted solely from the negligence of the lessee in operating a train with improper and defective equipment, does not state a joint cause of action against the defendants, but a single cause of action against the lessee alone, and the action is removable by such defendant. Curtis v. Cleveland, etc., R. Co., (1905) 140 Fed. 777.

Removal denied. — A case in which plaintiff has elected to sue jointly in tort a non-resident lessee railroad company operating a road, and its resident corporate lessor, under a cause of action arising in the state, cannot be removed to a federal Circuit Court as presenting a separable controversy. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Willard, (1911) 220 U. S. 413, 31 S. Ct. 460, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 521, affirming (1908) 165 Fed. 181, 91 C. C. A. 215.

A petition alleging that a resident defendant, a sawmill corporation, was using by permission the tracks of a railroad defendant to haul logs, that the railroad ran through a certain city, and that it was the duty of both defendants in approaching the crossings of a street to signal, that plaintiff was driving at such crossing and by attempting to cross was damaged by the negligence of both defendants in failing to signal or ring the bell of the engine, that the drawgates were not down, and it was negligence in both defendants not to lower the drawgates, and that it was the custom and duty of defendants to cause the gates to be lowered, states a cause of action against both defendants, so that the nonresident defendants cannot remove the case as a separable controversy. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Bryant, (1910) 7 Ga. App. 703, 707, 67 S. E. 1049, 1051.

In an action by a widow to recover the statutory penal sum for the death of her husband, against a foreign railroad corporation and against a domestic terminal railroad company, the complaint alleged that a train belonging to the foreign corporation, while running over the tracks of the domestic corporation, ran over decedent, the train having been running at an unlawful rate of speed, and the operatives having failed to give the warning signals required by law, and that, under the traffic agreement between the corporations, the operatives of the train were, though in the employ of the foreign corporation, subject to the orders and directions of the domestic corporation; and it was held that an application to remove the cause to the federal court on the ground that the cause of action so far as the foreign corporation was concerned was separable, and that the domestic corporation was fraudulently joined, was properly denied. Johnson v. St. Joseph Terminal R. Co., (1907) 203 Mo. 381, 101 S. W. 641.

A joint action brought in a state court of Illinois against a lessor and a lessee railroad company to recover for a personal injury incurred in the operation of the road, in which joint negligence and liability are charged, is not removable by the lessee on the ground that it is a foreign corporation and in the exclusive use and operation of the railroad and alone liable, if there is any liability, for the injury complained of, and that its co-defendant, a resident corporation, was fraudulently joined, in view of the established rule in Illinois which authorized the joinder and joint recovery in such cases in the state courts. Willard v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (C. C. A. 1908) 165 Fed. 181.

Priority of liens. — A separable controversy exists, removable from a state court to a federal court by a foreign corporation, joined as a party defendant to a suit to foreclose a mortgage, where both mortgagor and mortgagee, who are citizens of the state, unite in attacking the validity of a prior mortgage in favor of such corporation on the ground that it was doing business without complying with the state laws, and that the note secured thereby embraced charges exacted because of an illegal combination in restraint of trade. Fritzlen v. Boatmen's Bank, (1909) 212 U. S. 364, 29 S. Ct. 366, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 551, affirming (1907) 75 Kan. 479, 89 Pac. 915.

In a suit by a judgment creditor against the debtor and a lien creditor, a prayer for the subjection of the property of the defendant debtor to the plaintiffs' judgment does not make a separable controversy between plaintiffs and the nonresident creditor defendant, so as to authorize removal to the United States court on the ground of diverse citizenship. Palmer v. Inman, (1905) 122 Ga. 226, 50 S. E. 86.

In an action against a principal and his surety on a bond or other obligation, there is no separable controversy such as will entitle one defendant to remove the cause. Mutual Reserve Fund L. Assoc. v. Farmer, (1896) 77 Fed. 929, 23 C. C. A. 574.

But where plaintiff, an alien, sued defendant guaranty company, a nonresident corporation, on a fidelity bond, in which the only obligation of the principal was to hold the guaranty company harmless from any liability on the bond, and in the same action the plaintiff sought to hold the principal liable for the embezzlement for which action was brought on the bond, it was held that the controversy between plaintiff and the guaranty company was separable from that between it and the principal on the bond and removable to the federal courts, regardless of the citizenship of the principal, who was a resident of the state where the action was brought. Iowa Lilloet Gold Min. Co. v. Bliss, (1906) 144 Fed. 446.

Ejectment.—A plaintiff in ejectment has the right to join a lessee in possession, having a leasehold estate and an equity for improvements made, and the lessor, so as to conclude both by one judgment; and, having such right, one of the defendants so joined cannot make the controversy separable, nor remove the cause, where the other defendant and plaintiff are citizens of the same state. Cleveland v. Cleveland, etc., R. Co., (1906) 147 Fed. 171, 77 C. C. A. 467, reversing (1899) 93 Fed. 113.

An action of trespass to try title brought in a Texas court under a statute of that state, in which different persons, each claiming title to the same tract of land, are made parties, and answer setting up their respective claims, some of said defendants as well as the plaintiff being citizens of the state while others are citizens of another state, does not involve a separable controversy between citizens of different states which renders it removable by a nonresident defendant. Lomax v. Foster Lumber Co., (C. C. A. 1909) 174 Fed. 959.

In a suit for an undivided half interest in a single tract of land alleged to be wrongfully withheld by the two defendants, there is no separable controversy, so as to allow removal to the federal Circuit Court, though the citizenship of plaintiffs and of only one of defendants is adverse. Knight v. Litcher, etc., Lumber Co., (1905) 136 Fed. 404, 69 C. C. A. 248.

Suit by or against stockholders.—A bill by a stockholder of a railroad company against the company, its resident officers, and directors, certain bondholders and the trustee in a mortgage securing a new issue of bonds to be exchanged with a large bonus of stock for the old bonds of the company, praying that such exchange be adjudged illegal and ultra vires and that the original status be restored, and alleging that such exchange was effected through a confederacy of certain of the defendants for their own benefit and to the injury of the stockholders, states a joint cause of action, and the cause is not removable by the company, which is a foreign corporation, on the ground of separable controversy, where the other defendants are citizens of the state. Pollitz v. Wabash R. Co., (C. C. A. 1910) 176 Fed. 333, reversing (1909) 167 Fed. 145.

In a suit in equity brought in a state court on behalf of all the creditors of an insolvent bank in Colorado against a number of stockholders to enforce their double liability under the Colorado statute, by requiring them each to pay the full amount of such liability to a master, to be applied pro rata, together with such sums as may be collected from other stockholders, on the debts of the bank—the remainder, if any, to be returned to defendants—there is no separate controversy with a single defendant which entitles him to remove the cause into a federal court. Miller v. Clifford, (1904) 133 Fed. 880, 67 C. C. A. 52, 5 L. R. A. N. S. 49.

Foreclosure suits.—Changes in the pleadings in an action to foreclose a mortgage after the cause has been remanded to the state court whence it had been removed, which show the untruth of the averment in the petition of the junior character of another mortgage held by a foreign corporation which was made a party defendant, and the existence of a separable controversy between such corporation and the other parties, who are all citizens of the state, are sufficient to justify the granting of a second application for removal. Fritzen v. Boatmen's Bank, (1909) 212 U. S. 364, 29 S. Ct. 366, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 551, affirming (1907) 75 Kan. 479, 89 Pac. 915.

Where a bill against numerous defendants for the foreclosure of a mortgage alleged that certain property nominally owned by a defendant other than the mortgagor was within the complainant's mortgage, under a clause covering after-acquired property, in which claim some, but not all, of the defendants were interested, it was held that such claim created a separable controversy, which rendered the cause removable by the defendant claiming ownership of the property, the requisite diversity of citizenship being shown between the parties interested therein. New England Water Works Co. v. Farmers' L. & T. Co., (1905) 136 Fed. 521, 69 C. C. A. 297.

It being necessary to join, in a suit to foreclose a mortgage, persons against whom the plaintiff desires personal judgment, there is not a separable controversy between the plaintiff and the owner of the land, for the purpose of removal to the federal court. U. S. Mortgage Co. v. McClure, (1902) 42 Ore. 190, 70 Pac. 543, writ of error dismissed (1904) 197 U. S. 624, 25 S. Ct. 798, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 911.

In a suit by a purchaser to enforce specific performance of a contract for the sale of lands, against the vendor and grantees to whom he conveyed the land subsequent to the contract with complainant but before it was recorded, there is a separate controversy with such grantees, involving their right to hold the land as against the complainant, which gives them the right to remove the cause, where they are nonresidents and the requisite amount is involved. Elkins v. Howell, (1905) 140 Fed. 157.

In a suit by a purchaser to enforce specific performance of a contract for the sale of land against the vendor, and a grantee to whom he conveyed the land subsequent to the contract with complainant, but before it was recorded, there is a separate controversy with such grantee involving his right to hold the land as against the complainant, which gives him the right to remove the cause where he is a nonresident and the requisite amount is involved. Wheeling Creek Gas, etc., Co. v. Elder, (1909) 170 Fed. 215.

5. HOW SEPARABLE CONTROVERSY MADE TO APPEAR.

From pleadings at time of filing petition.

—The question whether there is a separable controversy warranting a removal of a cause must be determined by the state of the pleadings and the record of the case at the time of the application for removal, and not by the allegations of the petition therefor, or the subsequent proceedings which may be had in the Circuit Court. American Bridge Co. v. Hunt, (1904) 130 Fed. 302, 64 C. C. A. 548; Laden v. Meck, (1904) 130 Fed. 877, 65 C. C. A. 361; Cleveland v. Cleveland, etc., R. Co., (1906) 147 Fed. 171, 77 C. C. A. 467, reversing (1899) 93 Fed. 113; Oroville, etc., R. Co. v. Leggett, (1908) 162 Fed. 571.

On an application for the removal of a cause to the federal court, the question whether there is a separable controversy between plaintiff and each defendant which will warrant a removal is to be determined by the condition of the record in the state court at the time of the filing of the petition to remove, independent of the allegations of such petition or in the affidavit of petitioner, unless petitioner both alleges and proves that defendants were wrongfully made joint defendants for the purpose of preventing removal. Thomas v. Great Northern R. Co., (1906) 147 Fed. 83, 77 C. C. A. 255.

From plaintiff's pleading.—The question whether the controversy in an action by a citizen of the state against another citizen of the state and a citizen of a sister state is separable, so as to authorize the latter to remove the cause to the federal court on the ground of diversity of citizenship, must be determined by the complaint, and the petition for removal cannot be considered. Thomas v. Great Northern R. Co., (1906) 147 Fed. 83, 77 C. C. A. 255; Blunt v. Southern R. Co., (1907) 155 Fed. 499; Carp v. Queen Ins. Co., (1909) 168 Fed. 782; Foster v. Coos Bay Gas, etc., Co., (1911) 185 Fed. 979; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Harris, (1905) 85 Miss. 15, 38 So. 225; Staton v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., (1907) 144 N. C. 135, 56 S. E. 794.

The right of removal to a federal court on the ground of separable controversy must be determined solely by the case made by the complainant itself, unaided by judicial knowledge or by subsequent pleadings. Straton Cripple Creek Min., etc., Co. v. Ellison, (1908) 42 Colo. 498, 94 Pac. 303.

Whether two defendants are improperly joined, and whether there is a separable controversy authorizing a removal of the cause by one of the defendants to the federal court, must be determined by the case made by the complaint, and the question of removal cannot be made to depend upon the question whether the federal court might eventually determine that the theory on which the action was brought was erroneous, and that no joint liability in fact existed. Galeotti v. Diamond Match Co., (1910) 178 Fed. 127.

Where the right to remove a cause from a state court depends upon whether the declaration states a joint cause of action against the defendants, that question should be determined by the law of the state. Morris v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., (1910) 175 Fed. 491.

Where a removal petition is filed before the declaration is filed or due under the state practice, whether the suit involves a separable controversy is to be determined from plaintiff's sworn plea to the petition for removal. Welch v. Cincinnati, etc., R. Co., (1908) 177 Fed. 760.

Removal allowed.—It is usual in a petition for removal which alleges a separable controversy to set out the nature of such controversy, but it is sufficient if it appears from the record that such controversy actually exists. Harding v. Standard Oil Co., (1909) 170 Fed. 651.

Where, in an action against a railroad company for the death of plaintiff's husband, the declaration alleged several joint and concurrent acts of negligence between the railroad company, a nonresident corporation, and the conductor and engineer, joined as codefendants, who were citizens and residents of the district, and then charged that the engineer was incompetent, stating several acts of negligent operation on his part, and charging that the railroad company employed him knowing that he was incompetent, it was held that such allegation raised a separable controversy between plaintiff and the railroad company, authorizing a removal of the cause. Adderson v. Southern R. Co., (1910) 177 Fed. 571.

Separate causes of action disclosed by the bill or complaint in a single suit, on either of which a separate suit could be maintained, and the determination of neither of which is essential to the determination of the other, constitute separate controversies, and if either controversy, when the parties have been properly arranged on opposite sides, is wholly between citizens of different states, the suit is removable. Boatmen's Bank v. Fritzlen, (1905) 135 Fed. 650, 68 C. C. A. 288, reversing (1904) 128 Fed. 608.

Where the plaintiff, suing several defendants, does not allege with reasonable particularity the facts relied on to sustain a joint cause of action, but charges negligence generally against all, such allegation is indicative of an attempt to frame a petition that will prevent a defendant entitled to do so from removing the cause to a federal court. Reinartson v. Chicago G. W. R. Co., (1909) 174 Fed. 707.

Removal denied.—Where a complaint on its face states a cause of action against both defendants which can be properly joined in one action, the cause cannot be removed on the ground that it is a separable controversy merely by raising an issue of fact in the petition for removal as to whether or not a joint cause of action exists. St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. v. Adams, (1908) 87 Ark. 136, 112 S. W. 186.

It has been held that where a complaint in a negligence action against a nonresident railroad company and a resident defendant alleged that defendants negligently caused a car that injured plaintiff to be or remain in the position where it caused the injury, it could not be said as matter of law on the face of the pleading that it was impossible for all the defendants to have participated in the single act charged in a manner to have constituted it in law the joint act of all, carrying with it a joint and several liability, so as to warrant a removal of the case against the railroad to the federal court. Southern R. Co. v. Arnold, (1909) 162 Ala. 570, 50 So. 293.

A bill which seeks to enjoin the principal defendants from practicing a secret process alleged to be owned by the complainant and to have been learned by such defendants through a breach of trust, and to restrain another defendant from assisting them in carrying out their unlawful purposes by using knowledge obtained while an employee of complainant as to the construction of machinery for practicing the process, does not present a separate controversy between complainant and the latter defendant, which gives him the right of removal. Vulcan Detinning Co. v. American Can Co., (1904) 130 Fed. 635.

Though a separable controversy exists so as to authorize the removal of a cause, notwithstanding the joinder of a defendant whose citizenship is the same as that of the plaintiff, with a noncitizen defendant, when the case is one capable of separation into parts, so that in one of the parts a controversy will be presented with citizens of one or more states on one side and citizens of another state on the other, which can be fully determined without the presence of any of the other parties to the suit as begun, or where two or more causes of action are united in one suit, and there can be a removal of the whole suit on the petition of one or more of the defendants interested in the controversy which, if it had been sued on alone, would be removable, the controversy does not necessarily become separable merely because the plaintiff could have prosecuted its cause of action against the defendant seeking to remove without the joinder of any other defendant. Regis v. United Drug Co., (1910) 180 Fed. 201.

Since a proceeding to condemn land by

Kansas City under its city charter, as construed by the Supreme Court of the state, presents a case of an indivisible unit, to be tried to one and the same jury, unless a jury trial is waived, and the whole finding as against all the defendants must be embraced in one judgment, so that if reversed on appeal the entire case must be tried de novo, such a proceeding as against both residents and non-residents does not present a separable controversy as between the city and the nonresidents whose property was sought to be condemned, and is therefore not removable to the federal courts. Kansas City v. Hennegan, (1907) 152 Fed. 249.

Plaintiff's pleading to be taken as true.—Whether an action against nonresident and resident defendants is separable, so as to warrant a removal to the federal court, must be determined from the record in the state court when the petition for removal is filed, independently of the allegations in the petition for removal or in the affidavit of the petitioner, unless the petitioner both alleges and proves that defendants were wrongfully joined to prevent a removal to the federal court, and in determining the question the averments of the complaint are to be taken as confessed. Southern R. Co. v. Arnold, (1909) 162 Ala. 570, 50 So. 293.

The question whether there is a separable controversy in a suit in equity is to be determined from the allegations of the bill alone, which, for the purpose of a motion to remand, are taken as confessed, and independent of any allegations in the petition for removal or of answers filed after removal. Elkins v. Howell, (1905) 140 Fed. 157.

6. ENTIRE SUIT REMOVED.

There is a clear distinction between controversies which are merely "separable," within the meaning of the removal statute, and those which are wholly separate and distinct, and only joined in one suit by express statutory permission, as in case of proceedings for condemnation of a railroad right of way in which, as permitted by statute, owners of different tracts of land are joined in the same proceeding, and in such a case a removal of the cause by the owner or owners of one tract does not carry with it the proceedings as against other owners. Deepwater R. Co. v. Western Pochahontas Coal, etc., Co., (1907) 152 Fed. 824.

IV. PREJUDICE OR LOCAL INFLUENCE.

1. IN GENERAL.

Classes of cases.—This section relates only to special cases comprised in the preceding clauses, consisting of cases in which there is a controversy between a citizen or citizens of the state in which the suit was brought, and a citizen or citizens of other states, excluding cases wherein the controversy is partly between citizens of the same state. Cochran v. Montgomery County, (1905) 199 U. S. 260, 26 S. Ct. 58, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 182, reversing (1904) 128 Fed. 1019, 62 C. C. A. 680; Southern R. Co. v. Thomason, (1906) 146 Fed. 972, 77 C. C. A. 170.

An action to foreclose a mortgage and adjust liens on property cannot be removed into the federal court by a nonresident mortgage creditor of his codefendant mortgagor on the ground of prejudice and local influence. Boatmen's Bank v. Fritzlen, (1905) 135 Fed. 650, 68 C. C. A. 288, reversing (1904) 128 Fed. 608.

Citizenship of parties.—The existence of prejudice and local influence does not furnish a separate and independent ground for the removal of a cause, but only operates to extend the time within which a case may be removed when the requisite diversity of citizenship exists. Cleveland v. Cleveland, etc., R. Co., (1906) 147 Fed. 171, 77 C. C. A. 467, reversing (1899) 93 Fed. 113.

Amount in controversy.—Where, after judgment in favor of a nonresident plaintiff was affirmed as to the original cause of action, but was reversed as to a counterclaim, defendant obtained leave to amend the counterclaim by increasing the amount demanded, it was held that such amended counterclaim did not change the status of the parties so that the defendant became the plaintiff in the action, and the plaintiff became the defendant, and entitle plaintiff to remove the cause to the federal courts. Indian Mountain Jellico Coal Co. v. Asheville Ice, etc., Co., (1905) 135 Fed. 837.

2. WHO MAY REMOVE.

A suit in which one of two defendants is a citizen of the same state as the plaintiff cannot be removed by the other defendant for prejudice or local influence from a state to a federal Circuit Court, since to hold otherwise would bring this provision into conflict with the rule that suits, to be removable, must be within the original jurisdiction of the Circuit Court. Cochran v. Montgomery County, (1905) 199 U. S. 260, 26 S. Ct. 58, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 182, reversing (1904) 128 Fed. 1019, 62 C. C. A. 680.

Boatmen's Bank v. Fritzlen, (1905) 135 Fed. 650, 68 C. C. A. 288, reversing (1904) 128 Fed. 608, and Parker v. Vanderbilt, (1905) 136 Fed. 246, it would seem, are no longer law in so far as they conflict with the opinion in the case cited in the preceding paragraph.

The right of a foreign corporation to remove to a federal court, for prejudice or local influence, a suit brought in a court of North Carolina by a citizen of that state, is not defeated because such corporation has complied with the provisions of a local statute which declares that foreign railroad corporations shall become domestic by filing with the secretary of state duly authenticated copies of their charters and by-laws. Southern R. Co. v. Allison, (1903) 190 U. S. 326, 23 S. Ct. 713, 47 U. S. (L. ed.) 1078, reversing (1901) 129 N. C. 336, 40 S. E. 91; Southern R. Co.

v. Beach, (1904) 193 U. S. 667, 24 S. Ct. 854, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 839, reversing (1902) 131 N. C. 399, 42 S. E. 856.

3. APPLICATION FOR REMOVAL.

Petition for removal.—In a petition filed in a United States Circuit Court for the removal of a cause from a state court on the ground of local prejudice, the defendant corporation alleged that it "is, and was at the commencement of this suit, a nonresident of the state of North Carolina, . . . and is not a citizen of North Carolina." On the facts admitted, the Supreme Court of the state had previously held that the defendant was a domestic corporation. It was held that in view of these previous decisions the allegation in the petition would be construed as merely a denial of the propriety of the Supreme Court's former ruling, and not as an allegation of fact. Southern R. Co. v. Beach, (1904) 193 U. S. 667, 24 S. Ct. 854, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 839, reversing (1902) 131 N. C. 399, 42 S. E. 856.

Requirements of petition.—Where, under the laws of a state in which a nonresident was sued, a change of venue for prejudice or local influence was wholly within the discretion of the trial judge, such defendant was not required to show that he could not obtain justice in the counties of the state to which the cause might be removed by the state court, in order to entitle him to remove the cause to the federal court on such ground. Parker v. Vanderbilt, (1905) 136 Fed. 246.

Citizenship.—A petition for removal of a cause from a state to a federal court on account of prejudice or local influence, alleging that the defendant was at the time of the commencement of the suit, and still is, a citizen of a state other than that in which the suit was begun, and of no other state, is sufficient to show that he was a nonresident of the state where sued. Parker v. Vanderbilt, (1905) 136 Fed. 246.

Verification.—Where a removal petition on the ground of prejudice or local influence was supported by affidavits of parties who averred that they were thoroughly conversant with the facts alleged in the petition, it was held to be immaterial that the petition was not verified by petitioner, but by his duly authorized agent. Parker v. Vanderbilt, (1905) 136 Fed. 246.

I. PETITION FOR REMOVAL

"May make and file a petition in such suit in such state court."—This section authorizes the removal of a cause on the filing of a petition disclosing a right to remove and the giving of the prescribed bond. Donovan v. Wells, (C. C. A. 1909) 169 Fed. 363.

The proper procedure for removing a cause from a state to a federal court, as authorized by this section, is for the defendant to file a petition for removal in the state court, together with a bond conditioned that the defendant will enter in the federal Circuit Court on the first day of its next session, a transcript of the record from the state court, and will pay costs awarded in case it shall be determined that the suit has been wrongfully removed. Bryant Bros. Co. v. Robinson, (1906) 149 Fed. 321, 79 C. C. A. 250.

The presentation of a petition and bond for removal to a judge of the state court in chambers, and the filing of the same, with his order approving the bond indorsed thereon, with the clerk of the state court, is a sufficient presentation to such court within the removal statute. Johnson v. Computing Scale Co., (1905) 139 Fed. 339. See also Remington v. Central Pac. R. Co., (1905) 198 U. S. 95; 25 S. Ct. 577, '49 U. S. (L. ed.) 959.

And it has been held that an oral motion in a state court for the removal of a cause is a sufficient presentation to the court of the petition and bond for removal, where they are on file with the clerk. Mays v. Newlin, (1906) 143 Fed. 574.

It is not necessary that the petition be presented to a judge of the state court holding or sitting in open court, or to a court in session, or that an order be made by the court permitting the filing of the petition or directing the removal; but it is sufficient if the petition is presented to a judge in chambers, with the bond, and after approval of the bond the petition and bond are filed with the clerk of the court of the county where the venue was laid. Groton Bridge, etc., Co. v. American Bridge Co., (1905) 137 Fed. 284.

Time to file petition for removal.—This section implies that a failure to apply for removal upon the first opportunity waives the privilege, so that a defendant waives the right of removal on the ground of diverse citizenship by not filing his petition until the second day of the trial at the close of the introduction of plaintiff's evidence in chief upon the plaintiff's failure to then serve a joint defendant, which the petitioning defendant claimed showed a joinder merely to prevent the transfer of the case to the federal court, as the petition should have been filed at the opening of trial. Golden v. Northern Pac. R. Co., (1909) 39 Mont. 435, 104 Pac. 549. See also Morgan's Louisiana, etc., R., etc., Co. v. Street, (Tex. 1909) 122 S. W. 270.

Where two defendants were sued jointly, and at the close of plaintiff's evidence a verdict was directed for one of them, a renewal of a motion made by the other to remove the case to some other court was made too late, though no verdict had been entered for the other defendant. Diamond State Telephone Co. v. Blake, (1907) 105 Md. 570, 66 Atl. 631.

Where, on appeal from an order denying a petition for removal, it appears that such petition was not made until after an amended complaint had been filed after answer, and the original complaint is not in the record, it will be presumed that there was no such difference between the complaints as would authorize a removal at such time. Pennsylvania Co. v. Leeman, (1903) 160 Ind. 16, 66 N. E. 48.

A state court having jurisdiction of a cause removable to the federal court on the ground of diverse citizenship need not surrender its jurisdiction, unless the petition and accompanying bond are filed in the state court within the time required. Higson v. North River Ins. Co., (1910) 153 N. C. 35, 68 S. E. 920.

A petition and bond addressed to the judge of the Circuit Court and an order obtained from him for such removal are ineffective to remove the cause, though the petition and bond were subsequently filed in the office of the clerk of the state court. Higson v. North River Ins. Co., (1911) 184 Fed. 165.

The term "the rule of court."—The rule of court referred to in the federal statute relates not to special orders granted on application or stipulation of the parties, but to a general rule fixing the date at which all defendants are required to appear in order to avoid being in default. Wilson v. Big Joe Block Coal Co., (1907) 135 Ia. 531, 113 N. W. 348.

A petition must be filed by the time an affidavit of defense is required by the Pennsylvania practice, which, under the rules of the court, is an answer to the plaintiff's claim and frames the issues to be tried. Overholt v. German-American Ins. Co., (1907) 155 Fed. 488.

Filed but not presented to the court.—A removal petition and bond must be presented in the first instance to the presiding judge of the state court in which the cause is pending, that he may first pass on their sufficiency; the mere filing of a petition and bond with the clerk is insufficient to remove the cause. Higson v. North River Ins. Co., (1911) 184 Fed. 165.

"To answer or plead to the declaration or complaint."—An application by a defendant to remove a cause from a state court to the federal court on the ground of diversity of citizenship must be made to the state court when the answer is due, though plaintiff does not then move for judgment by default, and the fact that the original summons and complaint were destroyed by fire subsequent to the time for answering does not affect the rights of defendant. Higson v. North River Ins. Co., (1910) 153 N. C. 35, 68 S. E. 920.

It has been held that in view of the language of the statute, and the evident congressional intent, as shown by prior legislation, a plea in abatement is an answer, within the statute. Pennsylvania Co. v. Leeman, (1903) 160 Ind. 16, 66 N. E. 48.

A petition for the removal of a cause to the federal court, filed after the time allowed by the statutes of the state for the filing of the answer to the complaint, is too late. Midland Valley R. Co. v. Hoffman Coal Co., (1909) 91 Ark. 180, 120 S. W. 380; Wilson v. Big Joe Block Coal Co., (1907) 135 Ia. 531, 113 N. W. 348; Cincinnati, etc., R. Co. v. Evans, (1908) 129 Ky. 152, 110 S. W. 844; Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Little Tarkio Drainage Dist. No. 1, (Mo. 1911) 139 S. W. 572.

Where one of the heirs of a decedent appeared in a probate court and filed objections to the allowance of a claim against the estate, it was held that he had no right afterwards to file a petition for the removal of the cause. Mayer v. Schneider, (1904) 212 Ill. 286, 72 N. E. 436, affirming 112 Ill. App. 628.

But where a defendant filed a removal petition in a state court before the expiration of the time within which it was entitled to file either a demurrer or answer, it was held to be in time, though the time prescribed by the state practice within which he could have attacked the plaintiff's pleading by motion, etc., had expired. Groton Bridge, etc., Co. v. American Bridge Co., (1905) 137 Fed. 284.

A petition is not insufficient to justify the removal of a cause from a state court to a federal Circuit Court because the allegation that the time had not arrived at which the defendant was required to answer or plead is an allegation of a conclusion of law. Remington v. Central Pac. R. Co., (1905) 198 U. S. 95, 25 S. Ct. 577, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 959.

When time to file petition begins to run — Generally. — The right to remove a cause to the federal court must be asserted as soon as a cause, not theretofore removable, assumes a removable shape; and hence where defendants, who were citizens of the state, were dismissed, leaving the action solely between corporations of different states, and hence removable, a petition to remove, presented nine days thereafter, and after judgment, with no prior notice that it would be filed, was too late. Ætna Indemnity Co. v. Little Rock, (1909) 89 Ark. 95, 115 S. W. 960. See also Quilhot v. Hamer, (1907) 158 Fed. 188; Pennsylvania Co. v. Leeman, (1903) 160 Ind. 16, 66 N. E. 48.

Right to remove undisclosed. — Where the original pleadings and record in a cause in a state court do not disclose a fact which entitled the defendant to remove the same, he may file a petition for removal after an amended pleading filed by plaintiff for the first time discloses such fact. Robinson v. Parker-Washington Co., (1909) 170 Fed. 850.

A petition to remove a cause from a state to a federal court is in time when filed as soon as the petitioner learns of the filing, without notice, of additional pleadings in the state court, the effect of which is to disclose a removable controversy. Fritzlen v. Boatmen's Bank, (1909) 212 U. S. 364, 29 S. Ct. 366, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 551, affirming (1907) 75 Kan. 479, 89 Pac. 915.

But where the defendant appeared and took no exception to an order granting the complainant ninety days to file his complaint, and granting defendant ninety days thereafter to answer, and after the complaint was filed at a term succeeding that at which the summons was returned, the defendant appeared, requested time to answer, and was granted sixty days, it was held that it was not then entitled to remove the cause to the federal courts, though it could not be known prior to the filing of the complaint that the amount demanded would be sufficient to confer jurisdiction on the federal courts. Bryson v. Southern R. Co., (1906) 141 N. C. 594, 54 S. E. 434.

Time to plead or answer. — A petition for the removal of a cause from a court in which by a rule thereof the defendant is given four days from the service of statement on him to file any dilatory plea, and fifteen days within which to file an affidavit of defense, must be filed within the four days, which is the time when he is required to "answer or plead," within the meaning of the removal statute. Garrett First Nat. Bank v. Appleyard, (1905) 138 Fed. 939.

Where a summons served on September 16th required defendant to appear and plead within twenty days, exclusive of the day of service, a petition for removal filed on October 6th was held to be in time. South Dakota Cent. R. Co. v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1905) 141 Fed. 578, 73 C. C. A. 176.

A defendant cannot remove a cause after the hearing and determination of a demurrer by the state court. Lantz v. Fretts, (1909) 173 Fed. 1007.

The time for removing to a federal Circuit Court, for diversity of citizenship, a proceeding for the taking of land by eminent domain is not postponed until after the case has been taken by appeal to a state Circuit Court, where it can be tried de novo, where under the state statute the condemning party is entitled, even after such appeal, to pay into court the damages assessed in the County Court, and, before the case is concluded in the higher court, to take possession of the land and oust the owner. Madisonville Traction Co. v. St. Bernard Min. Co., (1905) 196 U. S. 239, 25 S. Ct. 251, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 462.

Under a state law which provides that one summoned by publication shall be deemed to plead on the return day of the summons, it was held that the day on which the notice in eminent domain proceedings, served on a non-resident, is returnable, is the day for answering; and though the law does not require the filing of a written pleading, and though no default is taken, a petition for removal not filed until after such day comes too late. South Park Com'rs v. Ayer, (1908) 237 Ill. 211, 86 N. E. 704.

On bringing in new parties. — Where, in a suit in a state court against an unincorporated association to recover lands the title to which was vested in defendant's trustees, the court held that such trustees were necessary parties, and they were thereupon brought in, it was held that the cause was removable on a petition filed by them in apt time after the service of process on them, although the time for the filing of an answer by the association had expired. Robert v. Pineland Club, (1905) 139 Fed. 1001.

Extension of time — Generally. — This section was designed to contract the jurisdiction of the federal courts and it requires the removal petition to be filed as soon as the defendant is required to make any defense in the state court, whether in abatement or to the merits, which time is not extended by a failure to take judgment by default, an extension of time to answer, either by order of the state court or by stipulation of the parties, or by a special appearance to set aside service. Heller v. Ilwaco Mill, etc., Co., (1910) 178 Fed. 111.

An order extending defendant's time to answer carries with it an extension of the time to file a petition and bond for the removal of the cause to the federal court. Higson v. North River Ins. Co., (1911) 184 Fed. 165.

Under a state law which requires a defendant to plead on or before the last day of the term to which the summons is returned, "unless the time therefor be extended by the judge," it was held that an order made by the court on the last day of the term, extending the time for a defendant to answer, operates to extend the time within which he may file a petition for removal. Avent v. Deep River Lumber Co., (1909) 174 Fed. 298.

But it has been held that the time for the filing of a petition to remove a cause to the federal court is not extended by an extension of the statutory time in which to answer. Midland Valley R. Co. v. Hoffman Coal Co., (1909) 91 Ark. 180, 120 S. W. 380.

A defendant having been served with a summons requiring an answer in the November, 1909, term of the state court, and no such term having been held, the court at the December term made a general order extending the time to answer in all cases not otherwise provided "until the next term as of this term." At the succeeding January, 1910, term, a similar order was entered, and on Feb. 23, 1910, the courthouse with the records, including the summons and complaint, was destroyed by fire. At the succeeding March term the court entered an order reciting the fact, and directing that all parties should have until the next term of court to supply papers, and that in all cases in which complaints and answers were filed it would only be necessary to file new complaints and answers without restoring the summons. In cases where no answers had been filed, the summons and complaint should be restored. It was held that such order did not extend defendant's time to answer, which had expired at the beginning of the March term, and hence the filing of a petition and bond to remove in the state court on April 23, 1910, was too late. Higson v. North River Ins. Co., (1911) 184 Fed. 165.

By stipulation. — Where defendant was granted an extension of time to plead by stipulation as authorized by the state court rules, and within the time as extended defendant filed a petition and bond for removal of the cause to the Circuit Court of the United States, the proceedings for removal were held to be in time. Groton Bridge, etc., Co. v. American Bridge Co., (1905) 137 Fed. 284; Sanderlin v. People's Bank, (1905) 140 Fed. 191.

A written stipulation by the parties to a suit, signed the day after it was brought, providing that no steps should be taken in the cause by either party before a stated time pending a provisional agreement for settlement, that no advantage should be taken of the time that might elapse by reason of the agreement, and in case it should not become effective defendant should have twenty days thereafter in which to make a proper defense, stops the plaintiff from objecting that a petition for removal filed within such twenty days was not in time, stipulations being recognized by a rule of the state court as a proper and effective method of extending the time to plead. Russell v. Harriman Land Co., (1906) 145 Fed. 745.

Where a rule of the state court, from which a cause was removed, provided that no agreement or consent of counsel in respect to the proceedings in a cause, the purport of which is disputed or denied, will be regarded, unless the same shall have been made or assented to in open court and entered in the minutes, or unless the evidence thereof shall be in writing, subscribed to by the party against whom the same may be alleged or by his attorney, and plaintiff's counsel stipulated in writing that defendant might have until Oct. 10, 1906, within which to plead to the complaint or file or make such motion as it might be advised, it was held that the plaintiff could not object that such stipulation did not extend defendant's time to plead for the purpose of filing a petition to remove the cause to the federal courts on or before the time so fixed. Tevis v. Palatine Ins. Co., (1906) 149 Fed. 560.

General requirements of petition for removal. — In general. — A state court having jurisdiction of a cause removable to the federal court on the ground of diverse citizenship need not surrender its jurisdiction unless the petition for removal shows on its face a removable cause founded on diverse citizenship. Higson v. North River Ins. Co., (1910) 153 N. C. 35, 68 S. E. 920.

The record may be examined in aid of a petition for the removal of a cause to the federal courts, where such averments do not disclose sufficient ground for jurisdiction on removal. Gillespie v. Pocahontas Coal, etc., Co., (1907) 162 Fed. 742.

Verification. — While it is the better practice to verify a petition for removal, there is no law requiring it, and no particular form of verification is essential. A verification by the attorney for the defendant, made on belief, is sufficient, especially where the defendant is a corporation. Porter v. Northern Pac. R. Co., (1908) 161 Fed. 773.

A petition for the removal of a cause to the federal court is not fatally defective for want of a verification where the ground of removal is not prejudice or local influence, or the denial of equal civil rights, and the case is not a suit or prosecution against revenue officers. Groton Bridge, etc., Co. v. American Bridge Co., (1905) 137 Fed. 284. See also Donovan v. Wells, (C. C. A. 1909) 169 Fed. 363.

An objection that a removal petition was sworn to on Sunday is trivial. Bilby v. Hancock, (Tex. 1910) 125 S. W. 370.

A petition for removal filed by an alien, which alleges positively that plaintiff is a citizen of one of the states of the United States, and on information and belief that he is a citizen and resident of the district, is sufficient to give the federal court jurisdiction on the face of the record. Holton v. Helvetia-Swiss F. Ins. Co., (1908) 163 Fed. 659.

Signing. — Where the petitioner for the removal of a cause to the federal court signed the petition, it is not necessary that he should sign the verification, certified by the notary public as having been sworn to before him. Groton Bridge, etc., Co. v. American Bridge Co., (1905) 137 Fed. 284.

A petition by a company to remove a cause signed by an agent on whom the bill was served is sufficiently signed. Fayette Title, etc., Co. v. Maryland, etc., Telephone, etc., Co., (1910) 180 Fed. 928.

Allegations of fact.—A petition for removal in order to confer jurisdiction must state facts sufficient to warrant the process, which facts must affirmatively appear of record, as jurisdiction cannot be conferred by consent, agreement, or estoppel. Rones v. Katalla Co., (1910) 182 Fed. 946, affirming (C. C. A. 1911) 186 Fed. 30.

A petition to remove a cause to the federal court must state facts which deprive the state court of the right to proceed, and must show that the federal court has jurisdiction, together with the grounds for which the removal is asked. Neesley v. Southern Pac. Co., (1909) 35 Utah 259, 99 Pac. 1067.

But the petition for removal is required to repeat facts appearing in the complaint showing grounds for removal. Stratton's Independence v. Sterrett, (Colo. 1911) 117 Pac. 351.

Where, in an action for injuries, the petition stated as a ground for liability against the resident defendant that he knew of the defective mold into which plaintiff was pouring molten iron at the time he was injured by such defect, and with such knowledge directed the plaintiff so to do, a petition for removal on the ground of fraudulent joinder, alleging that such defendant had nothing to do with the accident, was not present, and did not construct the mold, but which failed to deny plaintiff's allegation and to allege that it was known by plaintiff to be untrue when made, and was made to prevent removal, was insufficient. Evansburg v. Insurance Stove, etc., Co., (1908) 168 Fed. 1001.

In an action on an account, where the complaint shows the original indebtedness, the payments thereon, and the balance due, which is less than $2,000, and the petition for removal merely alleges in general terms that the petitioner is defendant in the cause, which is a suit of a civil nature involving a controversy between citizens of different states, involving more than $2,000, exclusive of interest and costs, but there are no facts stated controverting the complaint as to the amount in controversy, no issue of fact is raised, and an order for removal is properly denied; the petitioner for removal being bound to show by the record a case within the statute. Gibbes Machinery Co. v. Santee River Cypress Lumber Co., (1908) 79 S. C. 201, 60 S. E. 689.

On allegations of petition.—Averments of fact in a petition for removal, in the absence of some denial by answer or by comparison with the record, must be taken as admitted, and if sufficient upon their face to justify a removal, all other questions out of the way, will sustain the jurisdiction of the Circuit Court. Atlanta, etc., R. Co. v. Southern R. Co., (C. C. A. 1907) 153 Fed. 122.

A petition to remove a cause must be decided upon the pleadings and record as they are when the petition is filed. Davis v. Rexford, (1907) 146 N. C. 418, 59 S. E. 1002.

On a petition for removal of a cause to the federal court, the trial court, in determining whether the amount in controversy is sufficient, is required to look to the complaint as well as to the averments of the petition. Springer v. Bricker, (1905) 165 Ind. 532, 76 N. E. 114.

The right of removal to the federal court depends upon the state of the pleadings and the record at the time of the application for removal, and if upon the face of the declaration—the only pleading filed in the case—the action is joint, for the purpose of determining the right of removal, the cause of action must be deemed to be joint. Southern R. Co. v. Miller, (1907) 1 Ga. App. 616, 57 S. E. 1090.

Designating wrong statute.—Under a local statute which provides that "in pleading a private statute it shall be sufficient to refer to it by stating its title and the day on which it became a law," it was held that a petition for removal of a case to the federal court was defective which did not state the title of a private statute, nor its contents, but merely the petitioner's conclusions as to its contents. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Sheegog, (1907) 126 Ky. 252, 103 S. W. 323.

Irregular petition.—No stay of proceedings in a cause in a state court exists under the federal removal statute, unless the removal proceedings are valid and divest the state court of further jurisdiction and vest it in the federal court. Tierney v. Helvetia Swiss F. Ins. Co., (1908) 126 App. Div. 446, 110 N. Y. S. 613.

Prayer.—A prayer "that said surety and bond may be accepted that his suit may be removed into the next Circuit Court of the United States" is sufficient as a prayer for a removal; a semicolon after the word "accepted" being obviously inadvertently omitted. Gruetter v. Cumberland Telephone, etc., Co., (1909) 181 Fed. 248.

Amendment.—Where a removal petition is defective for failure to state the necessary jurisdictional facts, the omission is fatal to the right of removal, and cannot be settled or cured in the federal court by amendment. Santa Clara County v. Goldy Mach. Co., (1908) 159 Fed. 750.

Where a petition for removal as filed in the state court shows that the cause was not removable, it cannot be amended to show a different state of facts in the federal court. Healy v. McCormick, (1907) 157 Fed. 318.

But where, in a petition for removal, counsel through misinformation erroneously stated the citizenship of the plaintiff, the federal court may permit an amendment after removal accurately stating the facts so as to show that the court has jurisdiction. Wilbur v. Red Jacket Consol. Coal, etc., Co., (1907) 153 Fed. 662.

Where a removal petition was defective in alleging that, when the action was commenced and when petition was filed, petitioner was a resident of New York, instead of alleging that he was a nonresident of the state in which the action was brought, but it also alleged that petitioner was a citizen of the republic of France, such allegation, coupled with the allegation of nonresidence in the state, gave petitioner the right to remove, and hence entitled him to amend the removal petition so as to correct the allegation of nonresidence. De La Montanya v. De La Montanya, (1907) 158 Fed. 117.

II. BOND FOR REMOVAL.

Bond as prerequisite.—A bond capable of being enforced in case of the default of the party executing it is a prerequisite to removal. Alexandria Nat. Bank v. Willis C. Bates Co., (C. C. A. 1908) 160 Fed. 839.

An undertaking to dissolve a foreign attachment, under the law of Pennsylvania, must be an absolute one for the payment of the debt or damages recovered, and constitutes "special bail," within the meaning of the Removal Act, but since a defendant is not required to enter such bail under the law of the state, but may at his option appear and contest the action, leaving the attachment in force, it is not necessary that a removal bond in such case be so conditioned, particularly where an undertaking to that effect has been given in the state court, which necessarily remains in full force and effect in the federal court after the removal. Preston v. McNeil Lumber Co., (1906) 143 Fed. 555.

Execution of bond.—A bond by a company to remove a cause signed by an agent of the company on whom the bill was served is sufficient, though his authority does not appear. Fayette Title, etc., Co. v. Maryland, etc., Telephone, etc., Co., (1910) 180 Fed. 928.

Where the local law, which authorizes the giving of surety company bonds, declares that any foreign company, empowered by its charter to issue bonds or policies of suretyship, may, with the consent and approval of the governor, comptroller-general, and secretary of state, issue such bonds within the state; and it appears that a removal bond tendered with a removal petition was signed by M. as attorney in fact for the foreign corporate surety, authorized to do business within the state, and was sealed with the seal of the corporation, and it also contained an affidavit that the affiant saw the corporate seal of the company affixed, saw M. sign as attorney in fact for such surety, and witnessed the execution and delivery thereof as the act and deed of such surety, it was held that the bond was sufficient, though it was not accompanied by a power of attorney authorizing M. to sign the bond. Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Langley, (1906) 145 Fed. 415.

Signing by petitioner.—Where a removal bond was signed "Willis C. Bates Company, by Willis C. Bates, Treasurer," but it did not appear that Willis C. Bates as treasurer had any authority to execute the bond, and the corporate seal was not attached, and it was not shown that the person signing the bond had authority to attach the seal, the bond was void. Alexandria Nat. Bank v.

Willis C. Bates Co., (C. C. A. 1908) 160 Fed. 839.

Where a removal bond was signed by a surety, it was not defective because it was not signed by the defendant, and because the penalty thereof was limited to $500, as this section does not require such signature, nor that the bond shall be for an unlimited penalty. Groton Bridge, etc., Co. v. American Bridge Co., (1905) 137 Fed. 284.

Irregularities in the bond.—Where an action was brought against the Willis C. Bates Company, a corporation, whereupon a removal bond was filed reciting that the "Willis C. Bates & Co. undertake," etc., and described the suit as one pending "wherein the Alexandria National Bank is plaintiff and said Willis C. Bates is defendant," it was held that the bond was void for failure to properly describe the action. Alexandria Nat. Bank v. Willis C. Bates Co., (C. C. A. 1908) 160 Fed. 839.

A bond to remove a cause is sufficient where there is a good and sufficient surety for payment of costs. Fayette Title, etc., Co. v. Maryland, etc., Telephone, etc., Co., (1910) 180 Fed. 928.

III. RELATIVE AUTHORITY OF STATE AND CIRCUIT COURTS.

Petition presents question of law in state court.—A petition for removal of a case to the federal court presents to the state court a question of law as to whether, admitting the facts stated in the petition to be true, it appears on the face of the record which includes the petition, pleading, and proceedings down to that time, that petitioner has complied with the statute and is entitled to removal of the suit. Morbeck v. Bradford-Kennedy Co., (1910) 19 Idaho 83, 113 Pac. 89; Chesapeake, etc., R. Co. v. Banks, (1911) 144 Ky. 137, 137 S. W. 1066.

A removal petition presents for the state court's consideration a question of law only as to whether, assuming the facts stated in the petition to be true, the face of the record discloses a removable cause. Donovan v. Wells, (C. C. A. 1909) 169 Fed. 363.

Every court has power to determine the question of its own jurisdiction subject to review of its decisions by the court having proper jurisdiction, and this rule applies to the right of a state court to determine its jurisdiction upon the filing of a petition for removal of the cause to the federal court. Golden v. Northern Pac. R. Co., (1909) 39 Mont. 435, 104 Pac. 549.

The court, on the filing of a petition for the removal of a cause to the federal court, may, though a sufficient bond is filed, examine the petition, and determine whether it shows on its face that the petitioner has a right of removal. Wilson v. Big Joe Block Coal Co., (1907) 135 Ia. 531, 113 N. W. 348.

Where defendant seeks to remove a case to the federal court on the ground of diverse citizenship, the allegations of his petition must be taken as true in determining the right of removal, though they contradict the averments as to citizenship contained in plaintiff's petition. Lane Bros. Co. v. Rickard, (1911) 135 Ga. 650, 70 S. E. 565.

Whether there is a separable controversy so as to authorize the removal of a cause to the federal court must be determined in the first instance by the state trial court, and if it decides from the removal papers in connection with the record that the controversy is not separable, the application will be denied. State v. Mosman, (Mo. 1910) 133 S. W. 38.

Where a petition for the removal of a cause is demurrable on its face, the state court may properly decline to order the removal, and will not lose jurisdiction; but if the petition is not demurrable, jurisdiction thereby passes, however inartificial the petition may be. Donovan v. Wells, (C. C. A. 1909) 169 Fed. 363.

When the record, including the petition for removal, shows a cause to be removable from the state to the federal court for diversity of citizenship, the state court should accept the petition. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Kitchen, (Ark. 1911) 136 S. W. 970.

When petition and bond for removal of a cause to the federal court are filed in the state court, it is its duty to determine whether, on the face of the record, including such petition, a case for removal is made out; and, if it decides in the affirmative, it merely accepts the bond and petition, without further proceedings. Duff v. Hildreth, (1903) 183 Mass. 440, 67 N. E. 356.

Where a petition is filed for the removal of a case to the federal court, it is the duty of the judge of the state court to determine from the petition and record, whether or not there is presented a federal case, and, if so, he should remove it to the federal court, and that court should hear the proof on the jurisdictional facts, and determine whether the state or federal court has jurisdiction. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Sheegog, (1907) 126 Ky. 252, 103 S. W. 323.

While a state court has no jurisdiction to decide the question of fact of diversity of citizenship on petition to remove a cause to the federal court on that ground, the federal courts alone having such authority, the state court does have authority to decide a question of law affecting the right of removal, which arises from the facts alleged, so that if the facts alleged in the petition for removal and in plaintiff's petition show as a matter of law that there is no diversity of citizenship, the court should deny the application for removal. State v. Mosman, (Mo. 1910) 133 S. W. 38.

Where a petition discloses a cause of action against both a resident and a nonresident defendant, the case may not be removed to the federal court in order that that court may determine whether the joinder of the resident is fraudulent, and made to defeat the right of the nonresident to remove the cause to the federal court; but, if that fact appears on the trial in the state court, the latter court should forthwith dismiss the action as to the resident and remove the cause to the federal court as to the nonresident. Illinois

Cent. R. Co. v. Coley, (1905) 121 Ky. 385, 89 S. W. 234, 1 L. R. A. N. S. 370.

Refusal of state court to approve bond. — While a removal bond should be presented to the judge of the state court for approval of the surety, the arbitrary refusal of the judge to approve a surety will not prevent the removal, the removing party then being entitled to file the bond and petition, procure the filing of the record on removal, and proceed in the federal Circuit Court, subject to a motion to remand for insufficiency of the surety. Groton Bridge, etc., Co. v. American Bridge Co., (1905) 137 Fed. 284.

Right to remove. — A federal Circuit Court must be deemed to possess the right to determine the question of the right to remove a case from a state court independently of the jurisdiction and determination of the state courts. Chesapeake, etc., R. Co. v. McCabe, (1909) 213 U. S. 207, 29 S. Ct. 430, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 765, reversing (1907) 100 S. W. 219, 30 Ky. L. Rep. 1009.

Where a petition for removal to the United States court and a bond are filed, and petition is denied, and the party desiring the removal files a transcript of the record in the Circuit Court of the United States, and the party opposing the removal moved in state court to remand said cause, which motion was overruled, the question of removability being a federal question, the state court should withhold further jurisdiction, on the facts being brought to its attention by the objecting party. Bolen-Darnell Coal Co. v. Kirk, (1909) 25 Okla. 273, 106 Pac. 813.

Issues of fact — Generally. — The state courts have no jurisdiction to pass finally upon the facts stated in a petition for the removal of a cause from a state to a federal Circuit Court, which show a cause properly removable, since that is the exclusive province of the federal court. Texas, etc., R. Co. v. Eastin, (1909) 214 U. S. 153, 29 S. Ct. 564, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 946, affirmed (1907) 100 Tex. 556, 102 S. W. 105.

Where a petition for removal shows a removable controversy, prima facie, any issue as to the truth of the facts stated in the petition is to be determined by the federal court. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Jones, (1904) 118 Ky. 158, 80 S. W. 484.

A state court has no jurisdiction to try an issue of fact arising on a removal petition; but the cause must be removed, if the petition and bond are sufficient. Wisecarver v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1908) 139 Ia. 596, 117 N. W. 961.

Fraudulent joinder. — A petitioner for the removal of a cause is not bound to prove an alleged fraudulent joinder of the defendants to prevent a removal, until issue has been joined on such allegation. Donovan v. Wells, (C. C. A. 1909) 169 Fed. 363.

On petition to remove a cause, it is for the federal court to pass upon the allegation of fraudulent joinder of defendants to prevent removal; any finding thereon by the state court not binding the federal court. Davis v. Rexford, (1907) 146 N. C. 418, 59 S. E. 1002.

A state court has no jurisdiction to try an issue of fact properly raised on a petition for removal, but that can only be done by the federal court on motion to remand after removal, and so, where a petition alleges fraud in wrongfully joining two parties as defendants solely to defeat removal, the state court cannot inquire into and determine for itself the issue thus presented. St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. v. Adams, (1908) 87 Ark. 136, 112 S. W. 186.

Where, on an application by a noncitizen to remove a cause to the federal court, the removal petition charges that a citizen defendant was fraudulently joined merely to prevent removal, such issue is triable only in the federal court after removal. Eastin v. Texas, etc., R. Co., (1906) 99 Tex. 654, 92 S. W. 838, reversing (1905) 89 S. W. 440.

Where an action could not have been originally brought in the federal Circuit Court, the Removal Acts do not require the determination of a question of alleged fraudulent joinder of parties by the federal court after the filing of a removal petition and bond. Ward v. Pullman Car Corp., (1908) 131 Ky. 142, 114 S. W. 754.

Denial of application.—Where a state court orders a removal on an insufficient petition, the party aggrieved may prosecute an appeal to the appellate court of the state to have the order reviewed. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Jones, (1904) 118 Ky. 158, 80 S. W. 484.

Where an order of the state trial court removing a cause to the federal court on the ground of diversity of citizenship is not reviewable by the state Supreme Court by appeal or writ of error, it may be reviewed on certiorari; the error, if any, appearing on the face of the record. State v. Mosman, (Mo. 1910) 133 S. W. 38.

But the dismissal by a state court of a petition for removal of a cause to a federal court cannot be reviewed on appeal where there is no bill of exceptions. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Satterwhite, (1904) 112 Tenn. 185, 79 S. W. 106. See also Stratton's Independence v. Sterrett, (Colo. 1911) 117 Pac. 351; Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Fort, (1904) 112 Tenn. 432, 80 S. W. 429.

In Pierce v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., (1905) 86 S. W. 703, 27 Ky. L. Rep. 801, it appears that a nonresident defendant, joined with residents in an action which, on the face of the petition, is not removable to the federal court, petitioned for its removal, but stated no ground in the petition for such removal. The court, in its orders, did not pass upon the petition for removal, but merely approved and accepted the bond, and permitted the plaintiff's answer to the petition for removal to be filed. Defendant evidently assumed that the case was ipso facto removed to the federal court, without any order by the state court, and plaintiff also concluded that that forum must pass upon the propriety of the removal. It was held that there was no order of the state court removing the cause to the federal court, from which plaintiff could or should have appealed in order to preserve his rights to a trial in the state court.

Setting aside order denying application.—Where a petition for removal of a cause is denied, and it thereafter becomes apparent to the court at any time that the resident defendant has been joined without reasonable grounds therefor, it is the court's duty in its discretion to set aside the former order and direct a removal of the cause. Ward v. Pullman Car Corp., (1908) 131 Ky. 142, 114 S. W. 754.

A state court declining to order a removal of the case to the federal court on the filing of a petition for removal may do so at the close of plaintiff's evidence or at the close of all the evidence. Chesapeake, etc., R. Co. v. Banks, (1911) 144 Ky. 137, 137 S. W. 1066.

Since no order for removal is necessary, where removal of a cause to a federal court is proper an order of removal by the judge of the state court confers no jurisdiction on the federal court. Hubbard v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1910) 176 Fed. 994.

Where a petition and bond for the removal of a cause from a state court to a federal court are sufficient under the federal statute, the cause is removed without an order of the state court. State v. Johnston, (1911) 234 Mo. 338, 137 S. W. 595.

On the filing of a removal petition, it becomes a part of the record, and if, on the face of the record as so constituted, the suit appears to be a removable one, the state court is bound to surrender jurisdiction. Donovan v. Wells, (C. C. A. 1909) 169 Fed. 363.

Where a petition and bond for the removal of a cause to the federal court is duly filed, and on the record made defendant is entitled to removal, its right is preserved, not only for review in the state court, but also in the Supreme Court of the United States. Shohoney v. Quincy, etc., R. Co., (1909) 223 Mo. 649, 122 S. W. 1025.

In a suit for petition in a court of North Carolina, in which, under the laws of the state, the clerk is authorized to make all necessary orders and to enter judgment, such clerk has authority to make an order for the removal of the cause on a petition filed before answer. Sanderlin v. People's Bank, (1905) 140 Fed. 191.

IV. EFFECT OF PETITION AS GENERAL OR SPECIAL APPEARANCE.

An appearance in the state court for the sole purpose of exercising a right to remove the case to the federal court should be regarded as a special appearance for such purpose, though containing no express limitation, and will not therefore constitute a waiver of an objection to the jurisdiction on the ground that the summons was not properly served. Murphy v. Herring-Hall-Marvin Safe Co., (1911) 184 Fed. 495.

Challenge to the jurisdiction.—The removal of a cause does not preclude the defendant from challenging the jurisdiction of either the state or federal court over his person, or from claiming exemption from being sued in a state other than that of his residence. Davis v. Cleveland, etc., R. Co., (1906) 146 Fed. 403.

A motion to vacate the service of the summons may properly be presented to the federal court after removal of the cause, where defendant has appeared only for the purpose of such removal, whether specially so limited or not; and such motion must be determined on the facts appearing of record at the time of removal, which cannot be supplemented by evidence taken after removal. Webster v. Iowa State Traveling Men's Assoc., (1904) 165 Fed. 367.

The validity of the service of process upon a foreign corporate defendant is open in a federal Circuit Court after the cause has been removed to that court from a state court on the petition of such defendant. Mechanical Appliance Co. v. Castleman, (1910) 215 U. S. 437, 30 S. Ct. 125, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 272.

The return of the sheriff of the state court is not conclusive upon the question of the validity of service of process, where the cause has been removed to a federal Circuit Court by a defendant who raises by plea to the jurisdiction the objection that it was a foreign corporation not doing business within the state, and that the person served with process was not its agent at that time. Mechanical Appliance Co. v. Castleman, (1910) 215 U. S. 437, 30 S. Ct. 125, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 272. See also Murphy v. Herring-Hall-Marin Safe Co., (1911) 184 Fed. 495.

V. STATE COURT TO PROCEED NO FURTHER.

The filing of a sufficient petition and bond for removal, in a cause which is removable, ipso facto divests the state court of jurisdiction to proceed further therein except to pass on the sufficiency of the papers, and any further action it may take is coram non iudice and void. While a formal order of removal is usual, it is not necessary, nor will the failure of the state court to take any action on the petition prevent the attaching of the jurisdiction of the federal court. Boatmen's Bank v. Fritzlen, (1905) 135 Fed. 650, 68 C. C. A. 288, reversing (1904) 128 Fed. 608; Mays v. Newlin, (1906) 143 Fed. 574; Phillips v. Western Terra Cotta Co., (1909) 174 Fed. 873; Flint v. Coffin, (C. C. A. 1910) 176 Fed. 872; Mannington v. Hocking Valley R. Co., (1910) 183 Fed. 133; Hunter v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., (C. C. A. 1911) 188 Fed. 645; Texarkana Telephone Co. v. Bridges, (1905) 75 Ark. 116, 86 S. W. 841; Stratton's Independence v. Sterrett, (Colo. 1911) 117 Pac. 351; Southern R. Co. v. Dukes, (1910) 7 Ga. App. 784, 68 S. E. 332; Pennsylvania Co. v. Leeman, (1903) 160 Ind. 16, 66 N. E. 48; Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Stone, (1905) 70 Kan. 708, 79 Pac. 655; Ward v. Pullman Car Corp., (1908) 131 Ky. 142, 114 S. W. 754; Chesapeake, etc., R. Co. v. Banks, (1911) 144 Ky. 137, 137 S. W. 1066; Chastain v. Missouri, etc., R. Co., (1910) 228 Mo. 94, 125 S. W. 1099; Chastain v. Missouri, etc., R. Co., (1911) 152 Mo. App. 478, 133 S. W. 853; State v. Mosman, (Mo. 1910) 133 S. W. 38; Higson v. North River Ins. Co., (1910) 153 N. C. 35, 68 S. E. 920; Eastin v. Texas, etc., R. Co., (1906) 99 Tex. 654, 92 S. W. 838; Bilby v. Hancock, (Tex. 1910) 125 S. W. 370.

Where a cause is removed to the federal court, no part of the subject-matter thereof remains in the state court. Holbrook v. Quinlan, (Vt. 1911) 80 Atl. 339.

During the pendency in a United States Circuit Court, in a cause removed thereto from a state court, of a controversy over the question whether a sufficient ground for such removal exists, the state court is without jurisdiction to proceed or to make any judgment or order in the suit. Tomson v. Iowa State Traveling Men's Assoc., (1907) 78 Neb. 400, 110 N. W. 997.

Since the presentation to the state court of the petition for removal of a cause, accompanied by the required bond praying for removal, is effective to deprive the state court of jurisdiction eo instante, if the petition on its face shows facts essential to entitle plaintiff to remove, the filing of an answer in the state court after the presentation of the petition to remove is ineffective to raise an issue as to the facts relied on for removal, since all pleading attacking the facts so alleged and the federal court's jurisdiction must be filed in and heard by the federal court to which the cause is removed. Phillips v. Western Terra Cotta Co., (1909) 174 Fed. 873.

If the determination of the state court as to its right to retain jurisdiction after petition is filed for removal to the federal court is erroneous, all subsequent proceedings therein including the judgment are void, but otherwise the proceedings are valid. Golden v. Northern Pac. R. Co., (1909) 39 Mont. 435, 104 Pac. 549.

An appointment of a receiver by a state court will be vacated by the federal Circuit Court as without jurisdiction where proper proceedings had been taken to remove the cause. Fayette Title, etc., Co. v. Maryland, etc., Telephone, etc., Co., (1910) 180 Fed. 928.

Where, in an action against a railroad company and its receivers, appointed in a federal court, to compel the defendants to remove obstructions from a street, defendants filed a cross-bill claiming title to the part of the street in question, and removed the case to the federal court, which denied a motion to remand, and assumed jurisdiction, it was held that no proceedings could be taken in such action in the state court while it was pending and undetermined in the federal court. Ashland v. Whitcomb, (1904) 120 Wis. 549, 98 N. W. 531.

But see Oishei v. Pennsylvania R. Co., (1905) 101 App. Div. 473, 91 N. Y. S. 1034, wherein it was held that where, after settlement of an action for injuries, the defendant removed the cause to the federal courts, it was held that such removal did not deprive the state court of jurisdiction to enforce the lien of plaintiff's attorney on the proceeds of the settlement.

And where an action was brought in a state court, and defendant petitioned for removal to a federal court, which was denied, judgment for plaintiff was reversed on appeal, on the ground that the lower court erred in denying the removal, and the cause was remanded with direction to proceed in a manner not inconsistent with the opinion of the Supreme Court. It was held that the state court had jurisdiction to render judgment for costs which accrued in that court, though the petition for removal filed before the accrual of costs, or the major part of them, should have been sustained. Wisecarver v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1909) 145 Ia. 281, 122 N. W. 909.

Apparent defects.—Where a defect indicating want of jurisdiction in a federal court appears on the face of a petition for removal, the state courts are not ousted of their jurisdiction; not being bound to surrender jurisdiction until a case has been made which on its face shows that petitioner has a right to transfer the cause to the federal court. North Carolina Corp. Commission v. Southern R. Co., (1909) 151 N. C. 447, 66 S. E. 427.

Where an ex parte order was made for the removal from the state Supreme Court to the federal Circuit Court of an action on judgments, but the order was void because of the failure of the petition for removal to show the citizenship of plaintiff's assignors, and no stay of proceedings having been obtained, it was held that the state Supreme Court did not lose jurisdiction of the case, and properly entered judgment against defendant on default in serving an answer. Tierney v. Helvetia Swiss F. Ins. Co., (1908) 126 App. Div. 446, 110 N. Y. S. 613.

Dismissal of cause to prevent removal.—Where proper application is made by a non-resident defendant for the removal of a case from the state court to the United States court, which application is refused by the state court, whose judgment is reversed on writ of error to the Supreme Court of the state, plaintiff cannot dismiss the case, so as to defeat its removal to the United States court, by an entry of dismissal before the remittitur from the Supreme Court has been formally made the judgment of the lower court. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Newman, (1909) 132 Ga. 523, 64 S. E. 541.

Withdrawal of petition.—Where a motion for the removal of a cause on a petition and bond on file was overruled by the state court, on the ground that the cause was still at rules and not on the court docket, and defendant acquiesced in such decision by taking no further action for removal until the next term and then again presenting the motion, it was held that such action had the effect of a temporary withdrawal of the motion, and the state court retained jurisdiction until it was again presented. Mays v. Newlin, (1906) 143 Fed. 574.

On the filing of the requisite petition and bond for removal to a federal court, the state court loses jurisdiction; but where a party procures a withdrawal of the petition and bond by the party filing it, and dismisses his action in the state court as to such party, and by agreement with the remaining parties prosecutes his suit in a state court, he cannot, after judgment against him, assert that the jurisdiction of the state court had not been restored. Anderson v. United Realty Co., (1908) 79 Ohio St. 23, 86 N. E. 644.

Right to begin new action on dismissal in Circuit Court.—After the transfer of an action to the federal court, the plaintiff has the right to dismiss it in that court and renew the action in the state court; and it is not material that an action was not dismissed in the federal court until after the second one was instituted in the state court, it being sufficient that the dismissal occurred before the trial of the second action. Dana v. Blackburn, (1906) 121 Ky. 706, 90 S. W. 237. See also Southern R. Co. v. Rowe, (1907) 2 Ga. App. 557, 59 S. E. 462; Nipp v. Chesapeake, etc., R. Co., (1904) 80 S. W. 796, 25 Ky. L. Rep. 2335; Holbrook v. Quinlan, (Vt. 1911) 80 Atl. 339.

Where an action is removed to a federal court and is there dismissed without trial or determination of the merits, plaintiff's right to sue is not affected, and he may institute a new suit on the same cause of action in the state court, as though the prior suit had not been brought. McPherson v. Swift, (S. D. 1911) 130 N. W. 768.

Where a suit against a foreign and domestic corporation was removed to the federal court on the ground of the amount in controversy, and because the domestic corporation had been fraudulently joined as a party, it was held that the plaintiff had the right to dismiss the case in the federal court, and subsequently institute a suit in the state courts against the foreign corporation, alone, laying damages in a sum less than $2,000. Pacific Express Co. v. Needham, (1904) 37 Tex. Civ. App. 129, 83 S. W. 22.

Dismissal without prejudice in federal court.—Where, after the removal of a suit, the plaintiff procures an order dismissing the same without prejudice, the jurisdiction of the federal court ends; and the fact of the removal does not affect the jurisdiction of the state court to entertain a new suit on the same cause of action. Texas Cotton Products Co. v. Starnes, (1905) 133 Fed. 1022, 66 C. C. A. 673, affirming (1904) 128 Fed. 183; Stevenson v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., (1904) 117 Ky. 855, 79 S. W. 767; DeWitt v. Chesapeake, etc., R. Co., (1904) 79 S. W. 275, 25 Ky. L. Rep. 2019.

Where a suit in a state court has been removed by defendant to the United States court having concurrent jurisdiction, and has on application of plaintiff been dismissed without prejudice, there is no merger of the cause of action, and a new suit may be brought thereon at any time in any court of competent jurisdiction as though no previous suit had been brought. Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Larwill, (1910) 83 Ohio St. 108, 93 N. E. 619.

Taking nonsuit in federal court.—Where a cause is removed to the federal court, notwithstanding the refusal of the state court to grant the application for removal, and the party resisting the removal appears in the federal court and submits himself to its jurisdiction, asking that the cause be remanded, and failing in which he appears in the federal court and takes a nonsuit, and consents that a judgment be entered against him, he cannot thereafter prosecute the same suit in the state court, but must commence a new suit in the state court. Texas, etc., R. Co. v. Huber, (Tex. 1906) 95 S. W. 568.

Proceedings after remand.—The state court, after remand of a cause removed to a federal court, cannot question the correctness of the order of remand, but must proceed to exercise jurisdiction. Feeney v. Wabash R. Co., (1907) 123 Mo. App. 420, 99 S. W. 477.

Where a cause removed to a federal court is by the latter remanded, the order of remand cannot be reviewed on appeal to the Supreme Court of the state. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Neal, (1906) 83 Ark. 591, 98 S. W. 958.

Where a case had, on defendant's petition, been transferred to a federal court, and remanded by it to the state court, the acceptance of jurisdiction by the latter does not deprive the defendant of any of its constitutional rights. Walker v. Wabash R. Co., (1906) 193 Mo. 453, 92 S. W. 83.

Where a case is removed to the federal court and thereafter on motion is remanded to the state court and the clerk enters default on failure of defendant to appear or answer, the court has jurisdiction to hear proofs submitted by plaintiff and make findings and enter judgment thereon. Morbeck v. Bradford-Kennedy Co., (1910) 19 Idaho 83, 113 Pac. 89.

Second application for removal.—An order remanding a cause to the state court whence it was removed does not control the right to make a second application for removal if it results from the subsequent pleadings or the conduct of the parties that the cause becomes a removable one. Fritzlen v. Boatmen's Bank, (1909) 212 U. S. 364, 29 S. Ct. 366, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 551, affirming (1907) 75 Kan. 479, 89 Pac. 915.

VI. CIRCUIT COURT TO PROCEED.

Acquisition of federal jurisdiction.—Where the petition for removal of a case to the federal court, and the files in the case constituting the record up to the time of filing the petition, show upon their face that the federal statute has been complied with, and that the case is one that should be removed, the jurisdiction is at once transferred to the federal court. Morbeck v. Bradford-Kennedy Co., (1910) 19 Idaho 83, 113 Pac. 89.

When this section has been fully complied with, the federal court acquires jurisdiction without an order of the state court transferring the cause. Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Langley, (1906) 145 Fed. 415.

It is not the order of a state court removing a cause that gives a federal court jurisdiction, but it is the application for removal in the form prescribed; and if the petition for removal, read in the light of the pleadings in the case, shows a removable cause, and the bond tendered is sufficient, the cause is removed without reference to the action of the state court. Shohoney v. Quincy, etc., R. Co., (1909) 223 Mo. 649, 122 S. W. 1025.

Conclusiveness of petition.—The cases removed from a state court, in which the petition filed by plaintiff in the state court is conclusive in the federal court on the question of its jurisdiction, are cases in which the question depends on the legal construction of plaintiff's petition as to the joint liability of defendants, or other questions of law. Woodson County v. Toronto Bank, (1904) 128 Fed. 157.

Defective petition.—Where, under the allegations of the petition in the action and the petition for removal, the cause is not removable to the federal court, that court acquires no jurisdiction, and its orders in the premises are void, notwithstanding plaintiff's appearance and motion to remand the case, and his participation in the trial after the motion is overruled. Pierce v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., (1905) 86 S. W. 703, 27 Ky. L. Rep. 801.

Where the petition filed in the state court does not show prima facie that there is a removable controversy, the jurisdiction of the federal court cannot be conferred by consent or by any appearance, or even by a trial therein. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Jones, (1904) 118 Ky. 158, 80 S. W. 484.

Jurisdiction of the person.—After a case has been removed from a state to a federal court, the defendant may move to vacate the service if a special appearance only is made for that purpose. Cavanagh v. Manhattan Transit Co., (1905) 133 Fed. 818.

The filing of a petition by a defendant in a state court to remove the cause to the proper Circuit Court of the United States does not prevent him, after the case is removed, from moving in the federal court to dismiss it for want of jurisdiction of defendant's person, he having appeared specially in the federal court for that purpose. Gebbie v. Review of Reviews Co., (1905) 134 Fed. 150.

Where a foreign insurance association, after suit brought in the state court, took seasonable steps to have the same removed to the federal court, it may, after such removal, appear specially for the purpose of moving to dismiss on the ground that the court had not obtained jurisdiction of defendant's person. Greenleaf v. National Assoc. of Railway Postal Clerks, (1904) 130 Fed. 209.

Service of process on the secretary of a foreign corporation while present in New York on business not connected with the company held insufficient to confer jurisdiction over the defendant on removal of the cause to the federal court. Phelps v. Connecticut Co., (1911) 188 Fed. 765.

Jurisdiction limited to statutory grounds.—The jurisdiction acquired by a federal court by removal is strictly limited to the statutory grounds, and rests solely on the state of facts and controversy of record as brought from the court of original cognizance, and neither acquiescence of the parties nor the action of the state court can enlarge the statutory jurisdiction of the federal court nor divest that of the state court. Willard v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (C. C. A. 1908) 165 Fed. 181.

Where an action begun by attachment was properly removed to the federal court pending a motion to dissolve the attachment, both the principal suit and the attachment proceeding were transferred into the federal Circuit Court, which, on the filing of the transcript and docketing the cause there, was as fully possessed of the case as if it had been begun in that court. Lebensberger v. Scofield, (1905) 139 Fed. 380, 71 C. C. A. 476. See also Clark v. Wells, (1906) 203 U. S. 164, 27 S. Ct. 43, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 138.

Where a state court has acquired jurisdiction of a suit by attachment against a foreign corporation under the state statute, a federal court has jurisdiction on removal of the cause by either the defendant or a garnishee. Greevy v. Jacob Tome Institute, (1904) 132 Fed. 408.

Waiver of objection. — By removing a cause to the federal court, defendant consents to the assumption of jurisdiction of his person by the court of the particular district to which the cause is removed. Shawnee Nat. Bank v. Missouri, etc., R. Co., (1909) 175 Fed. 456.

The requirement that an action in the federal court based upon a diversity of citizenship be brought in the district of the residence of either plaintiff or defendant is waived by defendant's removal of the cause to the federal court from the state court where it is brought. De Valle Da Costa v. Southern Pac. Co., (1908) 160 Fed. 216.

Where defendant, a foreign corporation, when sued by an alleged alien in the Illinois state courts, removed the cause to the federal Circuit Court for the Northern District of Illinois, it thereby waived any objection to the venue and its right to be sued in the federal district of its residence. Cucciarre v. New York Cent., etc., R. Co., (C. C. A. 1908) 163 Fed. 38.

Where an action by attachment against a nonresident pending in a state court having jurisdiction, in which property has been attached and the plaintiff is proceeding in conformity to the state statute to obtain service, is removed by the defendant to the federal court on the ground of diversity of citizenship, such removal confers upon the federal court jurisdiction of the defendant's person, and that court may proceed to render a personal judgment against him, to be satisfied from the proceeds of the attached property. The removal statute cannot be so construed as to permit a defendant to oust the rightful jurisdiction of a state court by a removal, and then obtain a dismissal of the action in the federal court for want of jurisdiction. Clark v. Wells, (1906) 203 U. S. 164, 27 S. Ct. 43, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 138.

Legal and equitable remedies and defenses.

— Where a cause is removed to a federal court from a state court which was competent to grant either legal or equitable relief, the plaintiff may proceed in the federal court either at law or in equity; but if he elects to proceed in equity, and no case for equitable relief is made, such court cannot retain and try the cause as an action at law. Union

Stockyards Co. v. Nashville Packing Co., (1905) 140 Fed. 701, 72 C. C. A. 195.

On filing in apt time a valid petition, the court's jurisdiction is determined, and defendant's remedy, as to an injunction granted in the cause, is by motion in the federal court to dissolve it. Harbison v. Allen, (1910) 152 N. C. 720, 68 S. E. 207.

On removal of an equitable cause, the complaint or bill should be redrafted to conform to the equity practice in the federal courts. Thornton N. Motley Co. v. Detroit Steel, etc., Co., (1904) 130 Fed. 396.

When a suit in equity is removed from a state to a federal court, it must thereafter conform to the equity practice and rules in force in such court, regardless of the forms of practice in equitable proceedings in the state court. Bryant Bros. Co. v. Robinson, (1906) 149 Fed. 321, 79 C. C. A. 259.

But the provision of equity rule 94 that a bill by a stockholder, founded on rights of the corporation, shall be verified by oath, cannot be applied to a bill filed in a state court, and from thence removed to a federal court. Maeder v. Buffalo Bill's Wild West Co., (1904) 132 Fed. 280.

Restraining proceedings in state court. — A bill to restrain a state court from proceeding in an action at law after jurisdiction has been removed to the federal court, until the question of removability has been determined, is maintainable as an auxiliary proceeding to protect the federal court's jurisdiction and to prevent unnecessary, embarrassing, fruitless, and expensive litigation. Donovan v. Wells, (C. C. A. 1909) 169 Fed. 363.

Where a cause was properly removed to a federal court, but the state court erroneously denied a motion for an order transferring the cause, the federal court has jurisdiction on the application of the party removing the cause to grant an ancillary injunction restraining the opposite party from taking further proceedings in the state court, without violating R. S. sec. 720 [4 Fed. Stat. Annot. 509] forbidding a federal court from enjoining proceedings in a state court. Madisonville Traction Co. v. St. Bernard Min. Co., (1905) 196 U. S. 239, 25 S. Ct. 251, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 462; Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Langley, (1906) 145 Fed. 415.

Where a state court wrongfully attempted to exercise jurisdiction after the case had been transferred to the federal court by defendant filing a copy of the record therein after the denial of his petition to remove, such subsequent exercise of jurisdiction by the state court will be enjoined. Donovan v. Wells, (C. C. A. 1909) 169 Fed. 363.

Where a proceeding to acquire land for a railroad right of way was properly removed to the federal court after the report of commissioners had been filed in the state court, the state court having been deprived of jurisdiction by the removal proceedings, the federal court has jurisdiction to enjoin the plaintiff from proceeding further with the action in the state court. Madisonville Traction Co. v. St. Bernard Min. Co., (1905) 196 U. S. 239, 25 S. Ct. 251, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 462.

Vol. IV, p. 370, sec. 4.

Conformity to state practice — Generally. — On removal of a cause into a federal court, that court takes it precisely as it finds it, accepting all decrees and orders of the state court as adjudications, and will not entertain a motion which had been fully presented to and finally decided by the state court before removal. Guernsey v. Cross, (1907) 153 Fed. 827.

Service of foreign corporations. — Where service on a foreign corporation is objected to after removal to the federal Circuit Court, the same rule should be applied in determining the sufficiency of the service as in a case originally brought in the Circuit Court. West v. Cincinnati, etc., R. Co., (1909) 170 Fed. 349.

Where a foreign corporation is doing some substantial business in a state, and a suit commenced in a state court by service of process valid under the state statute is removed into a federal court, such court will not set aside the service. Sleicher v. Pullman Co., (1909) 170 Fed. 365.

A foreign railroad corporation, which maintains offices in New York and there employs freight and passenger agents to solicit business, which also holds directors' meetings, disburses dividends, and keeps an office for the transfer of its stock there, with an assistant secretary, is doing some substantial business in the state, and is subject to service of process under the New York statute, and such service will not be set aside by a federal court, in a suit brought in a state court, after its removal. Sleicher v. Pullman Co., (1909) 170 Fed. 365.

Service by publication. — Service by publication in the manner prescribed by the state statutes for nonresident defendants cannot be had in the federal Circuit Court to which a suit in which an attachment has issued has been removed from a state court before service of summons. Clark v. Wells, (1906) 203 U. S. 164, 27 S. Ct. 43, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 138, modifying (1905) 136 Fed. 462. See also infra, this page, cases cited under Attachments.

But it has been held that an attachment granted by a state court in a suit in which service was made by publication cannot be vacated by the federal court on removal because the action is one in which such service is not provided for by the federal practice, but, under this section, it must stand as it would in the state court, whatever effect the failure to obtain personal service may have on its efficacy. Blumberg v. A. B. & E. L. Shaw Co., (1904) 131 Fed. 608.

Vacating service. — The denial by an inferior state court of a motion to vacate the service of summons is not res judicata on the question of the validity of such service, when raised in the federal Circuit Court to which the cause has been removed. Remington v. Central Pac. R. Co., (1905) 198 U. S. 95, 25 S. Ct. 577, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 959.

But it has been held that where defendant moved in a state court to set aside the service, and on the motion being denied, without appealing from the order as it could have done, removed the case to the federal court, it could not there renew its motion to set aside the service. Hoyt v. Ogden Portland Cement Co., (1911) 185 Fed. 889.

Power over orders of state court. — After the removal of a cause, the federal court has authority to hear and act on a motion pending in the state court at the time of removal to modify or vacate a restraining order or preliminary injunction previously granted. Mannington v. Hocking Valley R. Co., (1910) 183 Fed. 133.

Attachments — Entering judgment. — The want of any jurisdiction over the person of defendant in a case removed to a federal Circuit Court from a state court before service of summons, on a special appearance by defendant for that sole purpose, does not, in view of this section, prevent the federal court from entering a judgment enforceable against the real property of defendant which had been attached before the case was removed, where the state court might, but for such removal, have rendered such a judgment on giving notice to defendant. Clark v. Wells, (1906) 203 U. S. 164, 27 S. Ct. 43, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 138, modifying (1905) 136 Fed. 462. See also supra, this page, cases cited under Conformity to State Practice.

Where, in a suit by attachment in a state court of New York, after the levy of the attachment on property within the state, an order was made for service by publication on defendant as a nonresident of the state, in strict accordance with the requirements of the state statute, such service is sufficient to give a federal court, to which the cause is removed, jurisdiction to render judgment enforceable against the attached property, although no proof was required by the state statute, or made, that defendant owns property in the state. Mercantile Nat. Bank v. Barron, (1908) 165 Fed. 831.

Power to protect and enforce lien. — When an action is removed from a state court into a federal court, the latter takes the case in the condition in which it stood at the time of removal, and a lien obtained by an attachment in the state court is not lost or terminated by the removal; but power to protect and enforce that lien after the removal exists in the federal court in like manner as if it had been obtained by a proceeding in that court. Hatcher v. Hendrie, etc., Mfg., etc., Co., (1904) 133 Fed. 267, 68 C. C. A. 19.

Condemnation proceedings. — Where preliminary proceedings were taken for the condemnation of land for a railroad right of way without notice to the nonresident owner thereof, and no notice was given to such owner until after the report of commissioners had been filed in the state court, whereupon such owner removed the proceedings to the federal courts, the suit not having been begun until process was first issued against such owner, it was held to be proper in the federal court to contest the complainant's right to take the land, as well as the amount of compensation to be paid therefor. Madisonville Traction Co. v. St. Bernard Min. Co., (1904) 130 Fed. 789.

Vol. IV, p. 371, sec. 5.

Shall appear to the satisfaction of said Circuit Court — Generally. — This section covers the entire field of dismissals for defects of jurisdiction arising on the evidence, and prescribes the showing necessary to the exercise of the power which it grants. Hill v. Walker, (C. C. A. 1909) 167 Fed. 241.

But it has no application where the complaint to remove a cause alleges a removable controversy, and the only question in dispute is whether the case has in fact been removed. Higson v. North River Ins. Co., (1911) 184 Fed. 165.

Where the federal court has no jurisdiction of the action, it must either dismiss or remand it as justice may require. Mystic Milling Co. v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1904) 132 Fed. 289; Kinney v. Mitchell, (1905) 136 Fed. 773, 69 C. C. A. 493; Pennsylvania Co. v. Bay, (1905) 138 Fed. 203; Risley v. Utica, (1910) 179 Fed. 875; Rones v. Katalla Co., (1910) 182 Fed. 946.

A cause improperly removed under the removal act cannot be retained by the federal court on the ground that it is an action against revenue officers of the United States which might have been brought into that court by certiorari. People's U. S. Bank v. Goodwin, (1908) 160 Fed. 727.

Where a suit is brought in a state court in a federal judicial district of which neither plaintiff nor defendant is a resident, it will be remanded on seasonable motion, unless the plaintiff consents to the suit proceeding in the district by appearance and pleading. George v. Tennessee Coal, etc., Co., (1911) 184 Fed. 951.

Where a federal court has no jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the suit, an order overruling plaintiff's motion to remand unappealed from does not confer jurisdiction, which cannot be conferred by consent. Shohoney v. Quincy, etc., R. Co., (1909) 223 Mo. 649, 122 S. W. 1025.

Where a cause is erroneously removed from a state court to the Circuit Court of the United States and thereafter remanded to the state court, all orders made in the case by the United States court, except the one remanding the case, are void for want of jurisdiction. Floody v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1908) 104 Minn. 132, 116 N. W. 111.

Jurisdiction doubtful. — The general rule is that jurisdiction on removal must be clear, in order to justify the federal court in retaining the case. Dodd v. Louisville Bridge Co., (1904) 130 Fed. 186.

It is the duty of a federal court to remand a cause removed from a state court when its jurisdiction is doubtful. Dodd v. Louisville Bridge Co., (1904) 130 Fed. 186; Groel v. United Electric Co., (1904) 132 Fed. 252; Nash v. McNamara, (1906) 145 Fed. 541; Vanderbilt v. Kerr, (1911) 188 Fed. 537.

No cause is removable unless it is concurrently cognizable by the state and federal courts, and if a defendant, having removed a cause, thereafter moves to dismiss because of lack of jurisdiction of the state court over the subject-matter, it is the duty of the federal court, at least where the question is in doubt, on seasonable motion therefor to remand the cause, that the state court may for itself determine the question of its jurisdiction. Thacker Coal, etc., Co. v. Norfolk, etc., R. Co., (1909) 171 Fed. 271.

A cause removed into a federal court on the ground of diversity of citizenship will be remanded unless the jurisdiction of such court appears from the record, which includes for the purposes of such motion the petition for removal and all pleadings and other papers previously properly filed in the suit in the state court. Helena Power Transmission Co. v. Spratt, (1906) 146 Fed. 310.

On a motion to remand a cause commenced by a bill in a state court intended to invoke a special statutory jurisdiction of such court, which cannot be exercised by a federal court of equity, the court will not retain jurisdiction merely because the application of the statute to the facts alleged in the bill is in doubt; that being a question properly determinable by the state court on demurrer. Mathews Slate Co. v. Mathews, (1906) 148 Fed. 490.

Whether the amount of a counterclaim set up by a removing defendant may be added to the plaintiff's claim to give the federal court jurisdiction of the cause, is at least so doubtful under the authorities as to require that court to decline jurisdiction. Crane Co. v. Guanica Centrale, (1904) 132 Fed. 713.

Where an alien, residing in New York, instituted suits in New York state courts against defendant, a corporation organized and residing in New Jersey, which removed the causes to the federal court, it will be remanded for doubt as to the latter court's jurisdiction. Kamenicky v. Catterall Printing Co., (1911) 188 Fed. 400.

Merely formal defects in a petition to remove a cause from the state to the federal court are waived by appearing in the latter court and moving to remand on the ground that the alleged cause for removal does not exist. Tomson v. Iowa State Traveling Men's Assoc., (1907) 78 Neb. 400, 110 N. W. 997.

Where a cause was properly removable, and was actually removed, it will not be remanded because of an irregularity in the proceedings for removal or because such proceedings were taken under the improper statute. Bryant Bros. Co. v. Robinson, (1906) 149 Fed. 321, 79 C. C. A. 259.

Allowance of amendment to cure formal defect. — Where a removal petition averred that the controversy was between citizens of different states, and that the amount in controversy, exclusive of interest and costs, exceeded the sum of $2,000, the federal Circuit Court to which the cause was removed has jurisdiction to permit the petitioner to amend the petition so as to disclose the citizenship of the parties. Thompson v. Stalman, (1904) 131 Fed. 809.

Leave to amend a petition for removal, by alleging directly the citizenship of plaintiff's assignor, may be granted by the federal court after the record on removal has been filed therein, but before any action has been taken thereon, where the record already shows such citizenship in legal effect, and that the case is one properly removable. Flynn v. Fidelity, etc., Co., (1906) 145 Fed. 265.

Where a removal petition set forth the ultimate facts required by law, but did not allege in detail the facts constituting an alleged fraudulent joinder of parties defendant, it may be amended in the federal court in that regard. Donovan v. Wells, (C. C. A. 1909) 169 Fed. 363.

How question of jurisdiction raised and determined — Generally. — The federal court may determine whether or not a cause has been properly removed to it immediately upon the filing of the record therein either by the removing defendant or the plaintiff, and to make such orders as such determination may require. Harrington v. Great Northern R. Co., (1909) 169 Fed. 714.

A proper allegation of jurisdictional facts in the complaint in federal courts creates a prima facie case in favor of jurisdiction. Hill v. Walker, (C. C. A. 1909) 167 Fed. 241.

And such prima facie case in favor of jurisdiction by a proper allegation of jurisdictional facts in a complaint in an action in a federal court continues until it is overcome by convincing evidence. Hill v. Walker, (C. C. A. 1909) 167 Fed. 241.

A party removing a cause to a federal court has a right, after the removal, to the judgment of that court on any question relating to the validity of the service of process, even though such question has been passed on by the state court, since it affects the jurisdiction of the federal court itself. Flint v. Coffin, (C. C. A. 1910) 176 Fed. 872.

While this section permits a plaintiff, where the action has been removed to the federal court, to move in the federal court to have it remanded, and if his motion is overruled, and final judgment goes against him, he may appeal to the United States Supreme Court to have reviewed the action of the inferior federal court in overruling his motion to remand, if the cause is not in fact removable, he is also entitled to have it tried in the state court in the first instance without going in the federal court to have it remanded, and the question of whether the cause is removable is for the state trial court in the first instance to the extent of determining whether it will retain jurisdiction. State v. Mosman, (1910) 231 Mo. 474, 133 S. W. 38.

The action of the United States Circuit Court in remanding a cause removed from a chancery court is conclusive on the state Supreme Court. Stockley v. Cissna, (1907) 119 Tenn. 135, 104 S. W. 792.

Issue. — Plaintiff, in order to controvert the facts stated in a removal petition, must make an issue with respect thereto in the federal court in which the issue must be tried. Donovan v. Wells, (C. C. A. 1909) 169 Fed. 363.

Plea to the jurisdiction. — A petition for removal sufficient on its face gives the federal court jurisdiction only prima facie to try the case on its merits, and the truth of its essential allegations may be put in issue by any appropriate pleading, the filing of a plea to the jurisdiction being the better practice. The issue should be tried by the jury, subject to the right of the court to direct a verdict thereon when proper, and the burden of proof on the issue rests on the petitioner. Virginia v. Felts, (1904) 133 Fed. 85.

Neither the general denial under state codes nor the general issue at common law is a proper method of challenging the jurisdiction of federal courts. Hill v. Walker, (C. C. A. 1909) 167 Fed. 241.

Where federal Circuit Courts sitting in code states wherein an objection to the jurisdiction of the court over the subject-matter may be put in on the general issue follow such practice, no presumption of jurisdiction attends their judgments or decrees, but facts showing jurisdiction must appear of record. Peper Automobile Co. v. American Motor Car Sales Co., (1910) 180 Fed. 245.

Affidavits filed in connection with a plea to the jurisdiction, whether actually offered to be read in evidence or not, should be considered by a federal Circuit Court in deciding the question raised by a plea to the jurisdiction, setting up the objection that the defendant was a foreign corporation not doing business in the state, and that the person attempted to be served with process was not its agent at that time. Mechanical Appliance Co. v. Castleman, (1910) 215 U. S. 437, 30 S. Ct. 125, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 272.

Merits of cause. — On a motion to remand a cause removed by one of a number of defendants, the merits of the controversy can be considered only for the purpose of ascertaining the real nature of the alleged cause or causes of action against the several defendants, and whether or not there has been a fraudulent joinder of parties defendant for the purpose of defeating the jurisdiction of the federal court. McGuire v. Great Northern R. Co., (1907) 153 Fed. 434.

Record. — On a motion to remand, the whole record as filed in the federal court is to be taken into consideration. Kyle v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1909) 173 Fed. 238.

A motion to remand is properly determinable on the facts appearing on the face of the record, but where it controverts allegations of fact in the petition for removal necessary to sustain the jurisdiction of the court, it may by the practice of the court be treated as a plea to the jurisdiction and the parties required to take evidence on such issues. Harrington v. Great Northern R. Co., (1909) 169 Fed. 714.

In the federal courts, the record must show the facts which give the court jurisdiction; otherwise any proceedings had in the cause are void and of no force. Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Phillips, (C. C. A. 1910) 176 Fed. 693.

Proof required. — It is not sufficient that a complaint alleges facts showing federal jurisdiction, but such facts must be established by evidence. Plaut v. Gorham Mfg. Co., (1909) 174 Fed. 852.

Where, on a petition for the removal of an action of ejectment, the value of the land is traversed, it must be established by the removing party by proof. This, as the matter in controversy, is a jurisdictional fact, which cannot be left in doubt, as it must be where petition and answer contradict each other. Davies v. Wells, (1904) 134 Fed. 139.

Where a complaint contains proper jurisdictional allegations to justify the court in dismissing an action for want of jurisdiction, evidence must be produced convincing the mind to legal certainty that such suit does not really and substantially involve a controversy within its jurisdiction. Hill v. Walker, (C. C. A. 1909) 167 Fed. 241.

Burden on motion to remand or dismiss — Generally. — Where the jurisdiction of the federal court over a case removed from a state court depends upon a question of fact, the existence of such fact must be pleaded in the petition for removal; and if issue is joined thereon, the burden of proof is on the removing party to establish the existence of such jurisdictional fact. Woodson County v. Toronto Bank, (1904) 128 Fed. 157.

The burden rests on a removing defendant to show diversity of citizenship, where jurisdiction of the federal court is dependent on such fact. Fishblatt v. Atlantic City, (1909) 174 Fed. 196.

A cause having been removed to the federal court on evidence sufficient to satisfy it at the time of removal that defendant could not obtain a fair and impartial trial in the state court, on account of local prejudice against him, the burden of proof, on a motion to remand, is on plaintiff to show that such local prejudice did not exist. Parker v. Vanderbilt, (1905) 136 Fed. 246.

Motions to remand and for removal should be decided by the preponderance of the facts; an erroneous affirmation of a claim to this right may be corrected by the Supreme Court on a certificate of the question of jurisdiction, while a mistaken denial of the claim is not reviewable. Boatmen's Bank v. Fritzlen, (1905) 135 Fed. 650, 68 C. C. A. 288, reversing (1904) 128 Fed. 608.

Petition taken as true. — Distinct and unambiguous allegations of fact in a petition for removal, not denied by any pleading filed by plaintiff, except in so far as contradicted by the record, are to be taken as true, on a motion to remand, or other proceeding challenging the jurisdiction of the federal court. Kentucky v. Powers, (1906) 201 U. S. 1, 26 S. Ct. 387, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 633, reversing (1905) 139 Fed. 452.

At any time — Generally. — In a suit removed from the state to the federal courts it is the duty of the latter at any stage of the litigation to dismiss or remand the suit on a defect of federal jurisdiction being made to appear, whether the question is raised by the parties or not. American Bridge Co. v. Hunt, (1904) 130 Fed. 302, 64 C. C. A. 548.

Waiver of right to remand or dismissal. — Making up the issues on the merits without objection waives the right to object because of the nonresidence of both parties within the district, to the jurisdiction of a federal Circuit Court to which the cause has been removed from the state court for diverse citizenship. Kreigh v. Westinghouse, (1909) 214

U. S. 249, 29 S. Ct. 619, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 984, reversing (1907) 152 Fed. 120, 81 C. C. A. 338, 11 L. R. A. N. S. 684.

So, also, where a state court erroneously permitted certain defendants to file petitions for removal, and approved bonds given thereon, and such defendants took a transcript to the federal court, and the plaintiffs appeared there, and moved to have the cause remanded, and subsequently on their motion the cause was dismissed without prejudice, it was held that the plaintiffs, by their conduct, lost their right to have the state court's action corrected. Stephenson v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., (1903) 75 S. W. 260, 25 Ky. L. Rep. 442.

Plaintiff, by noticing a demurrer for argument after the removal of cause, waives his right to remand. Endera v. Supreme Lodge, etc., (1910) 176 Fed. 832.

But where a federal court does not acquire jurisdiction by the removal of a cause, it cannot be conferred by any subsequent proceedings by consent or otherwise. Lomax v. Foster Lumber Co., (C. C. A. 1909) 174 Fed. 959. See also Crane Co. v. Guanica Centrale, (1904) 132 Fed. 713.

A general appearance by the plaintiff in a federal Circuit Court after the cause has been removed from a state court does not waive an objection to the jurisdiction founded upon the total lack of any controversy of a federal nature, since in such cases consent of both parties cannot confer jurisdiction. In re Winn, (1909) 213 U. S. 458, 29 S. Ct. 515, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 873.

Where, after an attempt has been made to remove a cause to the federal court, plaintiff's counsel entered a special appearance for the sole purpose of moving to retire the case from the docket, and insisting that the proceedings taken had been insufficient to remove the cause, it was held that there was no waiver of plaintiff's right on his objection being sustained to have the cause retired from the docket. Higson v. North River Ins. Co., (1911) 184 Fed. 165.

The removal by one of two joint defendants of a cause which was not removable because of the absence of a separable controversy does not give the federal court jurisdiction, and the cause should be remanded at any stage, at the instance of any party or on the court's own motion, whenever such fact appears. International, etc., R. Co. v. Hoyle, (1906) 140 Fed. 180, 79 C. C. A. 128.

Where, on the removal of a cause to the federal court, plaintiff, simultaneously with the filing of the case in such court, moved to remand, it was held that he could not be held to have waived his right thereto by appearance or otherwise. Pepper v. Rogers, (1904) 128 Fed. 987.

Order of court ex mero motu. — It is the duty of a federal court to dismiss of its own motion, if jurisdiction does not affirmatively appear. Newcomb v. Burbank, (C. C. A. 1910) 181 Fed. 334.

In every case the question with which a federal court is first confronted is that of its jurisdiction both over the subject-matter and of the party, and this jurisdiction must affirmatively appear upon the record. Central

Grain, etc., Exch. v. Chicago Board of Trade, (1903) 125 Fed. 463, 60 C. C. A. 299.

A federal court is not only permitted, but is bound, to examine an action and refuse relief, unless jurisdictional elements affirmatively appear. A. B. Andrews Co. v. Puncture Proof Footwear Co., (1909) 168 Fed. 762.

Prior to the term of court. — A motion to remand to the state court an indictment removed to a federal court can be made prior to the first day of the then next term of the federal court on production of copies of the proceeding. New Jersey v. Corrigan, (1905) 139 Fed. 758.

Effect of amendment. — Where, after a cause had been erroneously removed to the federal court over plaintiff's objection, that court sustained a demurrer to the complaint in so far as it affected the resident defendant, it was held that the plaintiff, by amending his complaint and proceeding as against the nonresident defendant in the federal court, did not waive his objection that the cause had been erroneously removed. Thomas v. Great Northern R. Co., (C. C. A. 1906) 147 Fed. 83.

On the removal of a cause to obtain both equitable and legal relief, complainant filed amended pleadings, as required by Circuit Court rule 19, splitting the cause into two, one an action at law, and the other a suit in equity, after which it was decided in the law action that the cause was improperly removed. On appeal it was held that the bill in equity so filed did not constitute the commencement of a separate and distinct suit, and hence on the reversal of a decree therein the suit should be remanded to the state court. Utah-Nevada Co. v. De Lamar, (1906) 145 Fed. 505, 75 C. C. A. 1.

Diverse citizenship. — Where defendant removed a cause to the federal court on the ground of diverse citizenship, it was not entitled to a dismissal on its subsequently appearing that plaintiff was an alien. Rones v. Katalla Co., (1910) 182 Fed. 946, affirming (C. C. A. 1911) 186 Fed. 30.

A suit against a corporation of another state cannot be maintained in a federal court in the district of the plaintiff's residence, where jurisdiction depends on diversity of citizenship alone, where service was not made within the district of suit, and defendant has no place of business therein, although it may have such place of business and be served in another district in the same state; and where such a suit has been properly removed into a federal court the service will be quashed. Wange v. Public Service R. Co., (1908) 150 Fed. 189.

Parties collusively made or joined — Generally. — Where the arrangement of parties to a suit in a federal court is merely a contrivance between friends having no real antagonism, to give the court jurisdiction and avoid the effect of state decisions, the suit will be dismissed as collusive, although, if the controversy were real, it would have jurisdiction. Stephens v. Smartt, (1909) 172 Fed. 466.

Where a petition for removal alleges fraudulent joinder of defendants, it is the plaintiff's duty to appear and submit to the jurisdiction of the court on the merits or to plead in abatement, putting in issue the allegations of fact on which the removability of the cause depends, in which case the federal court would acquire jurisdiction to hear and determine the issue of such joinder. Donovan v. Wells, (C. C. A. 1909) 169 Fed. 363.

The rule that federal courts must take notice of a want of jurisdiction whenever it appears does not apply when such want of jurisdiction depends, not on a single uncontroverted fact, but on a finding of an issue of fact as to the fraudulent joinder of defendants to prevent a removal, which is determinable only after a hearing on the facts. Donovan v. Wells, (C. C. A. 1909) 169 Fed. 363.

Cases wherein collusiveness was found to exist. — An action brought by a South Dakota corporation against a citizen of Georgia, in a federal Circuit Court sitting in the latter state, will be dismissed as collusive, where such corporation is merely the agent of Georgia attorneys, who brought it into existence as a corporation that individual citizens of Georgia having controversies with other individual citizens of that state might, in their discretion, have the use of its corporate name in order to create cases apparently within the jurisdiction of the federal court. Southern Realty Invest. Co. v. Walker, (1909) 211 U. S. 603, 29 S. Ct. 211, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 346.

A federal Circuit Court has no jurisdiction, on the ground of diversity of citizenship, of a suit brought against a municipality by the mortgagee of a waterworks company, to enforce the municipality's contract with that company, where there is no diversity of citizenship between the municipality and the waterworks company, and the interests of the latter and its mortgages are not antagonistic, it obviously being made a defendant instead of plaintiff solely for the purpose of reopening, in the federal courts, a controversy which had been decided against the waterworks company in the state court. Dawson v. Columbia Ave. Sav. Fund, etc., Co., (1905) 197 U. S. 178, 25 S. Ct. 420, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 713.

To establish the claim that a suit brought in a federal court by a nonresident stockholder in a local corporation against the corporation and a city to enjoin the enforcement of an ordinance of the city is collusive and a fraud on the jurisdiction of the court, it is not sufficient that the company would be benefited by the success of the complainant, which is the theory upon which all suits are brought, nor that its officers express a desire for his success, nor that his counsel represented the company in a prior suit brought by it in the same behalf; but an agreement between complainant and the company, pursuant to which the suit was brought, must be shown either directly or inferentially. Chicago v. Mills, (1907) 204 U. S. 321, 27 S. Ct. 286, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 504, affirming (1906) 143 Fed. 430.

A corporation, being a citizen of the same state as the defendants, and therefore incapable of suing in the federal courts to restrain defendants from inducing its employees to strike, brought a suit for such relief in the state courts, pending which complainants, who were nonresident stockholders, made a demand on the officers of the corporation to bring suit in the federal courts, knowing that the corporation could not do so, and, on the corporation's refusal, themselves filed a bill for such relief in the federal court. It was held that such acts did not constitute a compliance with equity rule 94, relating to stockholders' bills, and requiring that such suit shall not be collusive to confer federal jurisdiction, and that the court had no jurisdiction. Kemmerer v. Haggerty, (1905) 139 Fed. 693.

Uncontradicted testimony that a resident employee sued jointly in tort with his non-resident employer was merely a draftsman, whose work was confined to making the necessary drawings based on the plans and ideas of others, and that he had nothing to do with planning the apparatus which was alleged to have been so defectively constructed as to have caused the injury complained of, is sufficient to support a conclusion of law that such employee was made a defendant for the sole purpose of preventing the exercise of the right of removal by the nonresident defendant. Wecker v. National Enameling, etc., Co., (1907) 204 U. S. 176, 27 S. Ct. 184, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 430.

Whether or not allegations of fact in a complaint intended to show a joint cause of action against two defendants are true may be put in issue by a petition for removal which alleges that the joinder was solely for the fraudulent purpose of preventing a removal, and may be inquired into and determined on a motion to remand; and if it is found that they were untrue, and that such fact was or could have been known to the pleader, the court is justified in drawing the conclusion, as a matter of law, that the purpose was to prevent the exercise of the right of removal by the nonresident defendant. Gustafson v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1904) 128 Fed. 85.

Cases decided not to have been collusively brought. — Where a suit in a federal court is between citizens of different states, and presents a bona fide cause of action involving the statutory amount, there is no collusion in a legal sense which will defeat the jurisdiction of the court because the parties agreed that the suit should be brought therein, and that the averments of the bill should be admitted by the answer. Pennsylvania Steel Co. v. New York City R. Co., (1907) 157 Fed. 440.

Where two persons, entitled to separable though precisely similar claims charged on real estate, joined in a bill to enforce the same, and the bill was amended by omitting one of them, that it might not fail for want of requisite diversity of citizenship, and was prosecuted by the other on her own claim, the amended bill stating that the person omitted consents to the relief sought and to all proceedings had or decree made or that may be made in the case, it was held that the circumstances did not disclose collusion, so as to render the amended bill demurrable. Mathieson v. Craven, (1908) 164 Fed. 471.

In a suit by a stockholder of a gas company against the company and a city to restrain the enforcement of an ordinance fixing rates to be charged by the company to consumers, the fact that the company is incorporated in the same state as the city does not deprive a federal court of jurisdiction. Mills v. Chicago, (1904) 127 Fed. 731.

Where a petition for removal filed by one of two defendants shows that its codefendant has not been served with the summons, and affirmatively alleges that he in no manner contributed to the injury sued for, and that it is not the plaintiff's intention to prosecute the action against him in good faith, but that he was fraudulently joined as a defendant for the sole purpose of defeating the jurisdiction of the federal court, if no issue is joined upon such allegations they are to be taken as true; and a motion to remand, which raises only the legal question of the sufficiency of the petition, should be overruled where the petition is otherwise sufficient. Dishon v. Cincinnati, etc., R. Co., (1904) 133 Fed. 471, 66 C. C. A. 345, affirming (1903) 126 Fed. 194.

Where the complaint in an action in a state court states a joint cause of action in tort against two defendants, one a citizen of the state and the other of another state, allegations in a petition for removal filed by the nonresident defendant, which are in substance merely denials of allegations of fact made in the complaint, are not sufficient to justify a conclusion of a fraudulent joinder, and cannot be considered on the merits by the federal court as to the issues so tendered on a motion to remand after removal, but the allegations of the complaint must be taken as true for the purposes of such motion. Thresher v. Western Union Tel. Co., (1906) 148 Fed. 649.

Where, in a suit by stockholders of a corporation, brought in a state court, relief was granted to the plaintiffs, their right to which was affirmed on appeal by the highest court of the state, on a subsequent removal of the cause, after the filing of supplemental pleadings, it will be assumed by the federal court, prima facie, at least, and for the purposes of a motion to remand, that, under the laws of the state, plaintiffs had the right to maintain the suit in their own names to enforce the rights asserted in their pleadings, and that the pleadings they were permitted to file in the state court were appropriate under the state practice. Dodd v. Louisville Bridge Co., (1904) 130 Fed. 186.

The jurisdiction of the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of Illinois, of a suit brought by a California stockholder of an Illinois gas company, after the company's refusal to sue, to enjoin the city of Chicago from enforcing an ordinance regulating gas rates, on the ground of want of power in the municipality to pass the ordinance, cannot be regarded as collusively or fraudulently invoked because of complainant's motive in preferring a federal tribunal, or because subsequent events made it to the interest of the company to make common cause with him against the enforcement of the ordinance, or because an officer and large stockholder in such company personally contributed to the expenses of the suit, or because complainant's counsel was afterwards retained in a suit then pending between the company and the municipality. Chicago v. Mills, (1907) 204 U. S. 321, 27 S. Ct. 286, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 504, affirming (1906) 143 Fed. 430.

The jurisdiction of a federal court of a suit in equity by a nonresident stockholder to enjoin an alleged breach of trust by the directors of the corporation, or other violation of corporate duty, is not affected by the fact that he is acting in concert with other stockholders, who are citizens of the same state as the corporation, or that such stockholders contribute to the expenses of the suit, where the controlling majority in the stockholders and directors is opposed to the objects of the suit; and there is therefore no collusion, in the sense of the statute, or within the meaning of equity rule 94. New Albany Waterworks v. Louisville Banking Co., (1903) 122 Fed. 776, 58 C. C. A. 576; Consumers' Gas Trust Co. v. Quinby, (1905) 137 Fed. 882, 70 C. C. A. 220.

Time of making objection. — Objection to the jurisdiction of a federal court in a suit on the ground that a collusive transfer of the property which is the subject of the suit was made for the purpose of conferring such jurisdiction cannot be taken for the first time in a bill of review after final decree has been entered and the term has ended. Acord v. Western Pocahontas Corp., (C. C. A. 1909) 174 Fed. 1019, affirming (1907) 156 Fed. 989.

Title to property made collusively. — The facts that a domestic corporation permitted a mortgage on lands owned by it to be foreclosed, and that another corporation having in part the same officers and stockholders was organized in another state, which purchased such lands at the sale and also the stock of the former corporation, which was thereafter dissolved, are not sufficient to establish a collusive transfer of the lands, for the purpose of enabling a suit in respect thereto to be brought in a federal court, such as deprived it of jurisdiction of such suit. Acord v. Western Pocahontas Corp., (C. C. A. 1909) 174 Fed. 1019, affirming (1907) 156 Fed. 989.

The conveyance of all of the property of a partnership to a corporation organized for the purpose by the partners and the division between them of the stock of the corporation, a small part of such property consisting of lands in controversy in a subsequent action brought by the corporation in a federal court, cannot be held a simulated or sham transfer which will oust such court of jurisdiction because the partnership could not have sued therein, where the conveyance was bona fide and no conveyance was contemplated. Slaugh- ter v. Mallet Land, etc., Co., (1905) 141 Fed. 282, 72 C. C. A. 430.

A trial judge may properly dismiss a suit, where he is satisfied from the evidence produced on the trial that the property involved as the subject-matter of the action was collusively transferred to plaintiff, who was a citizen of another state, to enable a suit to be brought in the federal court and in fraud of its jurisdiction, notwithstanding the fact that he had previously overruled a motion to dismiss on that ground; and such dismissal may be made by the Circuit Court of Appeals on the same grounds. Turnbull v. Ross, (1905) 141 Fed. 649, 72 C. C. A. 609.

Assigned demands. — Where persons largely interested in a Pennsylvania corporation, desiring to institute a suit in the federal courts of Pennsylvania for the appointment of a receiver, caused certain bonds and stock of little or no value to be assigned to a citizen of New Jersey, who was a mere stenographer in the office of one of the corporation's attorneys, for no other consideration than that he should sign the bill, which the corporation's attorneys thereafter filed, it was held that such transaction constituted a fraud on the court's jurisdiction sufficient to defeat it, though the assignment was absolute. Kreider v. Cole, (1907) 149 Fed. 647, 79 C. C. A. 339, reversing (1905) 140 Fed. 944.

Where it appears that a cause of action has been assigned in order to confer jurisdiction on a federal court, it is the court's duty to dismiss or demand a suit sua sponte. Consolidated Rubber Tire Co. v. Ferguson, (C. C. A. 1910) 183 Fed. 756.

On appeal to the Circuit Court of Appeals in an action removed from the state court it is the duty of the Court of Appeals to determine whether the record exhibits a case properly removable, regardless of whether any objection was taken to the jurisdiction of the federal court either in the court below or on appeal. Fred Macey Co. v. Macey, (1905) 135 Fed. 725, 68 C. C. A. 363.

A Circuit Court of Appeals may properly permit the amendment in that court of a petition for removal by supplying an averment of citizenship requisite to give jurisdiction, where it appears that its omission was inadvertent and it is shown by stipulation of the parties that the requisite diversity of citizenship in fact existed. Kansas City Southern R. Co. v. Prunty, (1904) 133 Fed. 13, 66 C. C. A. 163.

Review. — Where a case was erroneously removed from a state to a federal court, the federal court acquires no jurisdiction, and a judgment therein will be reversed on a writ of error, and the cause remanded, with directions to remand the cause to the state court. Juillard v. Barr, (C. C. A. 1910) 177 Fed. 921.

Mandamus, rather than prohibition, is the proper remedy where the Circuit Court of the United States refuses to remand to the state court from which it was removed a case over which the federal court has no jurisdiction. Ea p. Wisner, (1906) 203 U. S. 449, 27 S. Ct. 150, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 264,

Vol. IV, p. 378, sec. 6.

Effect of proceedings in state court.—Where, at the time a petition for removal of a cause was filed, a motion to make the complaint more definite and certain was pending and undetermined in the state court, such motion was transferred to the federal court with the record to be there determined. Bryce v. Southern R. Co., (1904) 129 Fed. 966.

After the removal of a cause into a federal court in a district in which the defendant could not originally have been sued in such court, and the filing of a motion to remand, the defendant cannot improve his position by entering a general appearance. Tierney v. Helvetia Swiss F. Ins. Co., (1908) 163 Fed. 82.

The time for answering a complaint in a case removed to the federal courts from a state court is fixed by ascertaining the number of days which had elapsed between the service of the complaint in the state court and the date of the removal, suspending the time between such removal and the date the record reaches the federal court, which then begins to run from the day of the entry in such court, and, as provided by the Circuit Court rules (Fourth Circuit), the defendant will be in time if he serves his answer on a rule day within twenty days thereafter. Bryce v. Southern R. Co., (1904) 129 Fed. 966.

Where, after the removal of a cause to the federal court, a motion to remand is made, such motion extends the time to answer until the rule day next succeeding the determination thereof. Bryce v. Southern R. Co., (1904) 129 Fed. 966.

Pleading.—The right of removal not being determined by the form of action in the state court, but by the essential character of the case, and, regardless of form, the cause is removable if the federal court has jurisdiction upon either its equity or law side, and it may require the plaintiff to replead accordingly. Stockton v. Oregon Short Line R. Co., (1909) 170 Fed. 627.

Where a state court had jurisdiction in equity of a suit by a tontine policy holder against the insurer for an accounting which was not possessed by a federal court sitting in equity in such state, and complainant cannot obtain adequate relief in a suit at law in the federal court, he will not be ordered to replead on the removal of the cause for diversity of citizenship, but the cause will be remanded to the state court. Peters v. Equitable L. Assur. Soc., (1906) 149 Fed. 290.

Amendment to cure defective service.—After removal of an action from a state to a federal court, and the setting aside of the service of summons in the latter court on motion of the defendant, the court may permit the plaintiff to file an amended petition and order a summons to issue thereon. U. S. Fidelity, etc., Co. v. Woodson County, (1906) 145 Fed. 144, 76 C. C. A. 114.

Where a proceeding to condemn real estate, or an easement therein, under the power of eminent domain, is removed from a state court into a Circuit Court of the United States, and after compensation has been ascertained a writ of error is prosecuted from the judgment, any supersedeas obtained should be modified so that the petitioner shall have the same rights as though the proceedings had remained in the state court; and, where the state statute provides that the proposed work shall not be delayed by appellate proceedings in case the amount of compensation awarded is paid into court, the supersedeas in the federal court will be modified to conform to such provision. Broadmoor Land Co. v. Curr, (1904) 133 Fed. 37, 66 C. C. A. 143.

A judgment of a federal court, rendered in a cause removed from a state court, is not void because of the insufficiency of averment of jurisdictional facts in the petition for removal, where the plaintiff on a motion to remand has by his answer put in issue the truth of the allegations made in the petition for removal and upon the answer and the evidence the issue was decided against him. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Sheegog, (1910) 177 Fed. 756.

Costs.—Where the judgment of a Circuit Court is reversed by the Circuit Court of Appeals on the ground that the cause was improperly removed from a state court, costs should be awarded against the removing party. Kansas City Southern R. Co. v. Prunty, (1904) 133 Fed. 13, 66 C. C. A. 163.

Where, after removal from the state court, a rule was granted on the plaintiff in the federal court to show cause why the case should not be proceeded with, though plaintiff's counsel has been negligent, the federal court is not authorized to enter an order of nonsuit and dismissal and award defendant costs, with judgment and execution against the plaintiff for the same, but can only dismiss the proceedings and remand them to the state court. Dawson v. Kinney, (1906) 144 Fed. 710.

Criminal prosecutions.—Where a defendant in a criminal prosecution, removed into the federal court, is convicted and sentenced in that court in accordance with the state law, either to be executed or imprisoned, he should be delivered to the proper officer of the state for the execution of the sentence; if a fine is imposed, which is paid, it should be transmitted to the clerk of the court from which the cause was removed. Virginia v. Felts, (1904) 133 Fed. 85.

On the trial of a defendant in a criminal prosecution, no procedure is prescribed by the statute; but the offense charged being against the state law, and prosecuted by the state, the state practice should be followed in substantive matters, at least in felony cases, such as in the impaneling and charging of the jury, the number of challenges allowed, in determining the competency of witnesses, and in confining the jurors during the trial, where that is required by the law of the state. Virginia v. Felts, (1904) 133 Fed. 85.

Where the state fails or refuses to prosecute in such a cause after its removal, the proper course is for the court to impanel a jury and direct a verdict of not guilty. Virginia v. Felts, (1904) 133 Fed. 85.

Vol. IV, p. 378, sec. 7.

Proceedings between removal and time for filing record.—Though the filing of a petition to remove a cause to the federal court operates as a removal and vests complete jurisdiction over the cause for all purposes in the federal court, the regular course of proceedings is suspended until the return day for the filing of the transcript in the federal court, though such court has jurisdiction in the interim to take any extraordinary proceedings required for the protection of any party to the cause. Goldberg v. German Ins. Co., (1907) 152 Fed. 831.

Effect of filing record.—Where, upon the face of the record, including a petition for removal duly filed, a cause appears to be removable, on the filing of such record and the docketing of the case in the federal court that court acquires jurisdiction at least for the purpose of determining that question, and, as ancillary to such jurisdiction, may enjoin the plaintiff from proceeding in the state court until it shall hear and determine the question of its own jurisdiction. McAlister v. Chesapeake, etc., R. Co., (C. C. A. 1907) 157 Fed. 740.

Where a state court refuses to order the removal of a cause, the defendant, within the prescribed time, may file a copy of the record in the proper federal court and have the cause docketed there, after which the federal court is required to proceed in the exercise of the jurisdiction lost by the state court, which can be regained only by an order of the federal court remanding the cause. Donovan v. Wells, (C. C. A. 1909) 169 Fed. 363.

But where the state court refused to remove a cause to the federal court, it has been held that the defendant's act in having the record copied and filing the same with the clerk of the federal court does not carry the case into the federal court in such a sense as to render it a pending action there. Cincinnati, etc., R. Co. v. Curd, (1905) 89 S. W. 140, 28 Ky. L. Rep. 177.

Where a state court, after denying a petition to remove an action at law to the federal court, continued to exercise jurisdiction notwithstanding the cause was removed by the filing of a certified transcript of the record, whereupon the removing party obtained an injunction restraining plaintiff from proceeding in the state court until the federal court could pass on the issue determinative of its jurisdiction, it was held that the determination of such issue should have been by the federal court having jurisdiction of the action at law, and not as a part of the injunction suit. Donovan v. Wells, (C. C. A. 1909) 169 Fed. 363.

Time for filing record.—Where a term of the federal Circuit Court was in session at the time an application for removal of a cause was made, it was held that the applicant was not in default for failure to file the record within twenty days, but was entitled to file the same on or before the first day of the next succeeding term. Goldberg v. German Ins. Co., (1907) 152 Fed. 831.

In Finney v. American Bonding Co., (1907) 13 Idaho 534, 90 Pac. 859, it appears that an attempt was made to remove a case from a state court to the United States court and judgment was rendered in favor of plaintiff in the latter court. The United States Court of Appeals remanded the case to the state court without trial; in the meantime the action had been tried by the state court in opposition to the wishes of defendant, and a judgment rendered Feb. 19, 1905, and an appeal taken April 17, 1905. The order remanding the case to the state court was filed in the state court March 20, 1907, after which transcript on appeal was filed. It was held that the party undertaking the removal must take the consequences of the same, and his failure to file a transcript on appeal from the judgment of the state court within the time required by statute rendered dismissal of the appeal necessary.

Record in prosecution against revenue officer.—Where a prosecution against a revenue officer has been commenced by caus or other process of arrest, the federal court, on the filing of the petition for removal, issues a writ of habeas corpus cum causa, which, in case the defendant has given bail, may be addressed to the marshal, a duplicate to be served upon the clerk of the state court. It is the duty of the petitioner, and not of the state, to procure the indictment and proceedings of the state court; and where the clerk has been tendered his proper fees therefor, and fails or refuses to furnish a certified copy of the record, a writ of certiorari should issue from the federal court, or the record may be supplied by affidavit, which course may also be taken when the petitioner is unable to pay the clerk's fees. Virginia v. Felts, (1904) 133 Fed. 85.

Attachment record.—Under a statute which provides that an attachment against a non-resident of the state may be made returnable to the Superior Court of any county where an attachment is sued out in one county, and executed by serving summons of garnishment in another county on filing in the court therein a certified copy of the original affidavit and bond, it has been held that the proceedings in the court where the service is made are ancillary to, and a part of, the original suit, and on a removal of such suit, the record required to be filed in the federal court includes such proceedings. Woodward Lumber Co. v. Vizard, (1906) 144 Fed. 982.

Vol. IV, p. 380, sec. 8.

General application of section.—This section evidently applies to suits local in character, and there may be cases where it is a matter of indifference whether the suit be regarded as brought under this section or under R. S. sec. 742, 4 Fed. Stat. Annot. 555, See Horn v. Pere Marquette R. Co., (1907) 151 Fed. 626, 632.

This statute clearly does not enlarge the right of the individual to bring suit, where before he had no right to sue, but simply allows him, if he has right of action, to bring it in loco rei sitæ. Canton Roll, etc., Co. v. Rolling Mill Co., (1907) 155 Fed. 321, holding that this section confers no right upon a simple contract creditor to maintain a creditors' suit in a federal court to set aside an alleged fraudulent conveyance of property by the debtor, nor does the fact that complainant has an alleged mechanic's lien upon the property afford basis for such a general creditor's suit, since such lien, if valid, may be enforced in rem against the property, regardless of conveyances, whether prior or subsequent.

Strictly construed.—The requirements of this section are not met by an order merely directing the service of process on a defendant by the marshal of another district, and such service of a subpoena in the usual form does not confer jurisdiction. Jennings v. Johnson, (C. C. A. 1906) 148 Fed. 337, where the court said: "The statute clearly intends that the court should set the time within which the defendant should plead, answer, or demur. In many cases it would be proper to give a much longer time than would be allowed by the terms of a subpoena in equity issued in the usual form. Besides, there is nothing in the statute to indicate that Congress intended to confer the authority to issue process to, and serve it on, defendants without the territorial jurisdiction of the court. Statutes conferring jurisdiction to proceed against absent parties are strictly construed. In such cases, to permit the court to assume jurisdiction without conforming to the statute would be to dispense with the forms of law prescribed by Congress for the security of absent parties."

"A claim to" real property.—The asserted right of citizens of New York and West Virginia, as owners of timber lands in Georgia, near the Tennessee boundary line, to protection against the destruction of their forests by the discharge of deleterious fumes and gases from the works of a New Jersey corporation situated within the territorial jurisdiction of the federal circuit for the Eastern District of Tennessee, is not a claim to real property within the district, within the meaning of this section. Ladew v. Tennessee Copper Co., (1910) 218 U. S. 357, 31 S. Ct. 81, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 1069, affirming 179 Fed. 245.

Letting in absent defendants.—This section gives to absent defendants an absolute right to appear in and defend within a year after final judgment a suit to enforce a lien or to remove a cloud on title to property within the district, whenever the jurisdiction of the federal Circuit Court over them rested upon publication, even though they may in fact have had knowledge of the suit. Perez v. Fernandez, (1911) 220 U. S. 224, 31 S. Ct. 412, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 443.

No other terms than the payment of costs can be imposed by the court in opening a decree to permit absent defendants to appear and defend. Perez v. Fernandez, (1911) 220 U. S. 224, 31 S. Ct. 412, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 443.

Property not wholly in one district.—Suit may be brought within either district, where the property against which the proceeding shall be taken lies partly in one district and partly in another, and both districts are within the state. Horn v. Pere Marquette R. Co., (1907) 151 Fed. 626, 632.

Indispensable parties.—The relief provided for in this section cannot be granted in a suit in equity in the absence of an indispensable party. Mathieson v. Craven, (1908) 164 Fed. 471.

Special appearance and motion to quash service.—The filing by the defendant, who was a citizen and resident of another state and was there served, of a motion to quash the service on the ground that it appeared from the face of the bill of complaint that the relief sought was of such a nature that he could not lawfully be called upon to defend against the same in that district, does not invoke the exercise of the jurisdiction of the court on the merits, so as to constitute a general appearance; the question raised being whether the case made by the bill was one of a local nature within this section so as to authorize the court to obtain jurisdiction of the defendant by publication or by service of process without the district, which necessarily required the court to look into the bill. Jones v. Gould, (C. C. A. 1906) 149 Fed. 153. See also York County Sav. Bank v. Abbot, (1905) 139 Fed. 988.

On motion to vacate an order for substituted service under this section the court must examine the bill in order to ascertain whether or not the case is within the statute; and in respect to the scope and extent of such examination it is not sufficient for the complainant, with such facts alleged in his bill as indicate his good faith and relieve the case from a charge of frivolousness, to pray for one or more of the objects enumerated in the section, but he must also show himself entitled to such relief. Gage v. Riverside Trust Co., (1906) 156 Fed. 1002.

To what suits applicable.—Under this section the federal court has no jurisdiction of a suit in equity by a lessee against a nonresident lessor to enforce alleged rights under the terms of the lease by requiring the defendant, who has not appeared, to elect either to sell the land to, or to buy the building thereon from, complainant at an appraised value, or to have the court make such election and carry the same into effect through a master or trustee appointed for the purpose. York County Sav. Bank v. Abbot, (1905) 139 Fed. 988.

Where a minority stockholders' bill sought the appointment of a receiver for the corporation, with authority to appear in an action in a state court and there obtain relief against a judgment rendered against the corporation with an injunction against further interference with the corporation's property, and an accounting as to certain stock alleged to have been pledged for the indemnity of the corporation, it was held that the suit was not local in character, warranting service on defendants, not citizens of the state, by publication. Schultz v. Highland Gold Mines Co., (1907) 158 Fed. 337.

A suit by a receiver to adjust equities existing between himself, as such receiver, and nonresident defendants, in whose behalf in part another defendant has obtained a judgment in his own name which he is seeking to enforce against a fund in the receiver's hands, is one to remove an incumbrance or lien or cloud within the meaning of this section. Brown v. Pegram, (1906) 143 Fed. 701.

Title to real or personal property. — The statutory language imports a localized subject. It does not concern the rights to property which is intangible and transitory, choses in action and the like, adhering to the person of the owner, who may be here to-day and abroad to-morrow. In strictness, the word "title" is applicable only to real estate. But it is also sometimes used to denote a similar attribute of personal property. When so used it has a kindred meaning, and contemplates some specific tangible thing, having some resemblance to real property in its characteristics which justifies the borrowing of the term. Jones v. Gould, (C. C. A. 1906) 149 Fed. 153.

Suit to wind up partnership, etc. — A suit by a member of a syndicate, which was in effect a partnership, to wind up its affairs and for the appointment of a receiver on the ground of mismanagement by the managers, is not within this section, especially where the only allegation in the bill with respect to property within the district is that the syndicate is the owner of stock in certain railroads therein. Jones v. Gould, (C. C. A. 1906) 149 Fed. 153.

A bill to set aside a deed and enforce a claim to certain land. For such a case see Miller v. Ahrens, (1907) 150 Fed. 644.

Ejectment is an action within the provisions of this section. Elk Garden Co. v. T. W. Thayer Co., (1910) 179 Fed. 556.

Suit to set aside judgments. — Under this section a federal Circuit Court has jurisdiction of a suit in equity brought by citizens of the state in which it sits, against citizens of other states, to set aside, as fraudulently obtained, judgments of a probate court against an intestate's estate, which are a lien on his property situated within the district and inherited by complainants. McDaniel v. Traylor, (1905) 196 U. S. 415, 25 S. Ct. 369, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 533.

A suit to cancel and annul certain deeds and leases of the property of a railway company lying wholly within the Eastern District of Illinois may be brought and maintained in the federal Circuit Court for that district against defendants who are inhabitants of the Northern District of Illinois, as being a suit to remove an incumbrance, etc., within the meaning of this section. Citizens' Sav., etc., Co. v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., (1907) 205 U. S. 46, 27 S. Ct. 425, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 703.

Suit to enjoin diversion of stream. — A suit brought to enjoin a defendant from wrongfully diverting, in California, the waters naturally flowing down a river having its source in that state, and flowing into and through the state of Nevada, where complainant's lands are situated, he being the lowest proprietor on the river, is an action transitory in its nature, so that a court in Nevada, having acquired jurisdiction of defendant's person, has jurisdiction to try the same. Miller v. Rickey, (1904) 127 Fed. 573.

A suit for partition comes within the class of cases specified in this section, and one in which any question between any of the parties, plaintiffs or defendants, affecting their rights or interests in the land, may be put in issue and determined; and a federal court is not without jurisdiction because questions may arise between plaintiffs who are citizens of the same state, nor will it make a realignment of parties to defeat its jurisdiction because such questions may arise, where the bill, although properly setting out the interest of each party in the premises, does not disclose any controversy which renders it necessary. German Sav., etc., Soc. v. Tull, (C. C. A. 1905) 136 Fed. 1.

Residence in the district. — This section confers a privilege upon the plaintiff of joining in local actions defendants who are non-residents of the district. Miller v. Ahrens, (1907) 150 Fed. 644.

This section gives jurisdiction to a Circuit Court over an action brought by a resident of one state against a corporation organized under the laws of another state and stockholders of that corporation, for the purpose of removing incumbrances from the property of the corporation in the district in which the suit is brought, even if some of the stockholders are not residents of the district in which they are sued. Schultz v. Diehl, (1910) 217 U. S. 594, 30 S. Ct. 694, following Jelenik v. Huron Copper Min. Co., (1900) 177 U. S. 1, 20 S. Ct. 559, 44 U. S. (L. ed.) 647.

Vol. IV, p. 387, sec. 3.

This section is re-enacted without change in Judicial Code, sec. 66, ante, title JUDICIARY, p. 159 of this Supplement.

Prior to the enactment of this statute a receiver could not be sued without leave of the court by which he was appointed. This was a rule of universal application in so far as the federal courts were concerned. Willcox v. Jones, (C. C. A. 1910) 177 Fed. 870.

This Act abrogated the rule that a receiver could not be sued without leave of the court appointing him, and gave the citizen the unconditional right to bring his action in the local courts and to have the justice and amount of his demand determined by the verdict of a jury. He ceased to be compelled to litigate at a distance or in any other forum or according to any other course of justice than he would be entitled to if the property or business were not being administered by the federal court. Gableman v. Peoria, etc., R. Co., (1900) 179 U. S. 335, 21 S. Ct. 171, 45 U. S. (L. ed.) 220.

Service of process on receiver sued in state court.—Under this section a federal receiver in charge of corporate property who is sued in a state court may be served with process in the manner prescribed by the law of such state for service of like process upon the corporation. Peterson v. Baker, (1908) 78 Kan. 337, 97 Pac. 373.

Trustee in bankruptcy sued as "manager."—A trustee in bankruptcy is appointed by a "court of the United States," and is a "manager" of property within the meaning of this section and may be sued in a state court in respect to an act or transaction described in the section. Gardner v. Planters' Nat. Bank, (Tex. 1909) 118 S. W. 1146.

Receiver in bankruptcy.—Under this section a temporary receiver in bankruptcy, appointed by a federal District Court, may be sued in trover in a state court, without leave of the bankruptcy court. In re Kanter, (C. C. A. 1903) 121 Fed. 984.

Acts and transactions in carrying on business.—Where the cause of action alleged in a suit against a receiver is primarily one for the recovery of land and to remove cloud from title, and incidentally to recover for the removal of timber from the land by the receiver and his employees, it is not a suit within the description of this section. Morse v. Tackaberry, (Tex. 1911) 134 S. W. 273.

A federal Circuit Court appointed a receiver for a railroad, and thereafter entered an order in the receivership proceedings appointing a commissioner to hear garnishment suits against employees of the railroad and provided how such claims could be adjusted. A garnishment suit was filed with the commissioner, and the receiver, in pursuance of the order, certified the amount due the employee, and the garnishment was satisfied. The employee then sued the receiver in the state court without leave of the federal court to recover the full amount of the wages due. It was held that the employer could not maintain the suit without leave of court, since the commissioner and receiver in satisfying the garnishment acted only under order of the court, and the transaction did not amount to a carrying on of business connected with the property. Harmon v. Best, (Ind. 1910) 91 N. E. 19.

As to what are acts or transactions "in carrying on the business connected with such property" see further Wrightsville Hardware Co. v. Hardware, etc., Mfg. Co., (1910) 180 Fed. 586; Wrightsville Hardware Co. v. Colwell, (1910) 180 Fed. 589.

A person injured by the operation of a street railway by a receiver appointed in mortgage foreclosure proceedings in a federal court is not bound to apply for an allowance of damages in such proceedings, but may reduce his claim to judgment in a state or other court having jurisdiction. Nashville R., etc., Co. v. Bunn, (C. C. A. 1909) 168 Fed. 862.

Prior demands.—This section is limited to suits arising out of transactions of the receiver after his appointment and assumption of control of the property, and does not apply to causes of action against the corporation arising, but not sued on, prior to the receiver's appointment. Harmon, v. Perkins, (1909) 45 Ind. App. 83, 88 N. E. 961.

Where the cause of action in a suit in a state court against a receiver is one against a railroad for loss of freight before the appointment of the receiver, the failure to obtain leave to sue justifies the court in dismissing the receiver from the proceedings. Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Pennefather, (Tex. 1910) 126 S. W. 948.

Implied leave to sue receiver.—Where the federal court appointing a receiver for a railroad expressly authorized him to defend all actions theretofore brought, seeking to establish any claim against the property in his hands, including the demands of plaintiff for damages for personal injuries, such order was ample authority for the maintenance of plaintiff's action against the receiver regardless of whether this section would authorize such a suit without leave. International, etc., R. Co. v. Wynne, (Tex. 1909) 122 S. W. 50.

Interference with property in receiver's custody.—This section does not authorize the bringing of a suit to condemn a crossing over the right of way of a railroad company in the hands of a receiver appointed by a federal court without leave thereof. Buckhannon, etc., R. Co. v. Davis, (1905) 135 Fed. 707, 68 C. C. A. 345, affirming (1904) 131 Fed. 115, the court saying: "The statute in question cannot be construed to mean that suits may be brought against a receiver to establish any right to the property which may be placed in his custody without the permission of the court. The property being at all times under the control of the court of administration, it would be absurd to permit the institution of suits in another forum to recover such property or diminish its value."

"Subject to the general equity jurisdiction."—Where plaintiff sued the receiver of a corporation for loss because of inability of the receiver to complete deliveries on an executory contract for future delivery of goods without the fault of the receiver, an affidavit of defense is insufficient which fails to show equities in favor of others superior to those of a purchaser, and especially where the receiver has not applied, as provided in this section, for equitable relief to the federal court which appointed him. Hallowell v. Williams, (1907) 217 Pa. St. 501, 66 Atl. 864.

A judgment rendered against a federal receiver by a state court in an action brought against him for the death of an employee is conclusive on the federal court as to the right to recover, and the amount that should be recovered, but the time and manner of payment is within the control of the federal court. Willeox v. Jones, (C. C. A. 1910) 177 Fed. 870, where the court said: "This statute is framed so as to permit the United States courts to fully administer estates that may be placed in the hands of receivers, and while permission is granted to institute suits against receivers, still there is nothing in the statute which in the slightest degree authorizes the doing of any act calculated to hinder, delay, or embarrass a court of equity in the exercise of its functions. In Street's Federal Equity Practice, sec. 2688, in referring to the reservation contained in the second clause of this section, it is said: 'The most important feature of this statute, so far as regards equity practice, is found in the reservation contained in the second clause. This reservation has at least two important effects, namely: (1) it prevents the creditor who is thus permitted to sue from obtaining any undue advantage over other creditors and claimants, and (2) it prevents such creditor from depriving the receiver, and through the receiver, the court, of the possession or control of any property in his hands by virtue of the receivership'" (the distinguished author citing In re Tyler, (1893) 149 U. S. 164, 13 S. Ct. 785, 37 U. S. (L. ed.) 689; Comer v. Felton, (1894) 61 Fed. 731, 10 C. C. A. 28; J. I. Case Plow Works v. Finks, (1897) 81 Fed. 529, 26 C. C. A. 46; Dillingham v. Hawk, (1894) 60 Fed. 497, 9 C. C. A. 101; St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. v. Holbrook, (1896) 73 Fed. 112, 19 C. C. A. 385).

Vol. IV, p. 389, sec. 648.

Precisely what is the status of this section after Jan. 1, 1912, in respect of waiver of a jury trial, is matter for consideration, in view of the fact that R. S. sec. 566, 4 Fed. Stat. Annot. 236, and sections 648, 649, 700, 4 Fed. Stat. Annot. 389, 393, 450, are not repealed by Judicial Code, sec. 297, ante, p. 250, of this Supplement, nor any provisions substituted therefor, and yet the Circuit Courts are abolished by Judicial Code, sec. 289, ante, p. 249, and Judicial Code, sec. 292, ante, p. 249, is perhaps a disturbing factor.

Jury trial in bankruptcy proceedings. — See section 19a of the Bankruptcy Act, p. 586, of this Supplement, and 1 Fed. Stat. Annot. 586.

Right to jury trial generally. — The presumptions are all unfavorable to the waiver of the right of trial by jury. Swift v. Jones, (C. C. A. 1906) 145 Fed. 489.

By force of this section and provisions in the Hawaiian statutes, and because Congress has not itself provided a peculiar mode of trial in proceedings for the condemnation of lands for public use, it was held that an issue of fact as to the value of land in such a proceeding by the United States in the District Court of the United States for the District of Hawaii is triable by jury. U. S. v. Honolulu Plantation Co., (C. C. A. 1903) 122 Fed. 581.

A plea to the jurisdiction, with a replication raising an issue of fact, should be submitted to the jury, subject to the right of the court to direct a verdict on the issue when proper. Virginia v. Felts, (1904) 133 Fed. 85, where the conflicting authorities are cited.

But on a motion to quash service on a foreign corporation defendant, it was held not to be entitled to a jury trial of the issues whether it was doing business within the state, and whether the person on whom service was made was its representative. Peper Automobile Co. v. American Motor Car Sales Co., (1910) 180 Fed. 245, citing numerous cases.

Assessment of damages on default or confession in certain cases. See R. S. sec. 961, 4 Fed. Stat. Annot. 604.

Assessment of damages for wrongful attachment may be enforced in Porto Rico pursuant to the special procedure expressly provided in the Porto Rican Code, regardless of section 648. Perez v. Fernandez, (1906) 202 U. S. 80, 26 S. Ct. 561, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 942.

Trial by referee. — Findings of fact by a consent referee are not reviewable on a writ of error further than to ascertain if they are sufficient to warrant the judgment of the court. U. S. Fidelity, etc., Co. v. Hampton, (1905) 134 Fed. 734, 67 C. C. A. 638.

The question of following the state practice in matters of reference to referees and auditors has quite frequently been under review by the federal courts, and the general trend of the decisions is to the effect that such statutes will not be followed, and that in said courts trial by jury is the only prescribed method for the ascertainment of facts, unless the same be waived, as contemplated by the Act, except in cases of equity, admiralty, and bankruptcy. Swift v. Jones, (C. C. A. 1906) 145 Fed. 489. See U. S. v. Ramsey, (1907) 158 Fed. 488, and the note to R. S. sec. 700, 4 Fed. Stat. Annot. 450, and the note to the same section, infra, this title, in this Supplement.

Vol. IV, p. 393, sec. 650.

This section is expressly repealed by Judicial Code, sec. 297, infra, p. 250, of this Supplement.

The Act of 1891 superseded the existing provisions as to a certificate of difference of opinion. U. S. v. Dickinson, (1909) 213 U. S. 92, 29 S. Ct. 485, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 711.

For a history of the legislation touching review on certificate of difference of opinion, see Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, (1909) 215 U. S. 216, 222 note, 30 S. Ct. 86 note, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 164 note.

Cases brought under Anti-trust Act of 1890 reviewed on certificate or difference of opinion, see Act of Feb. 11, 1903, ch. 544, 32 Stat. L. 823, 10 Fed. Stat. Annot. 199, annotations, infra, this title.

Vol. IV, p. 395, sec. 657.

This section is expressly repealed by Judicial Code, sec. 297, ante, p. 250 of this Supplement. And see Judicial Code, sec. 97, ante, p. 177.

The words "northern district of said state" must be construed as meaning the territory comprised within said district when the section was enacted; and the division of said district into the Northern and Western Districts by Act of May 12, 1900, ch. 391, 31 Stat. L. 175, 4 Fed. Stat. Annot. 42, 43, did not have the effect of enlarging the jurisdiction of the Circuit Court for the Southern District to include causes of action arising in the Western District. Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Erie R. Co., (1909) 172 Fed. 899.

Vol. IV, p. 396, sec. 2.

Form of appellate remedy.—A decree in equity cannot be reviewed by a writ of error. Thomson v. Travelers' Ins. Co., (C. C. A. 1908) 161 Fed. 867, citing this section for the statement that it "preserves the same distinction in the appellate jurisdiction."

Printing of transcripts.—In In re Bradford, (C. C. A. 1905) 139 Fed. 518, the Circuit Court of Appeals for the 6th Circuit denied an application to dispense with its rule 23 requiring the printing of all transcripts from the court, since the cost of printing is, under the rule, a part of the taxable costs of the cause, including the supervising fee to the clerk, all of which costs and fees are required to be accounted for and paid over to the treasury department in the same manner as is provided in respect to other costs by the second section of the Circuit Court of Appeals Act of 1891.

As to printed transcripts of record to be filed in the Circuit Court of Appeals or Supreme Court in cases carried there by appeal or writ of error, see the Act of Feb. 13, 1911, ch. 47, 36 Stat. L. 901, ante, p. 255 of this Supplement.

Vol. IV, p. 396, sec. 3.

With slight verbal changes this section is re-enacted in, and evidently superseded by, Judicial Code, sec. 120, ante, title JUDICIARY, p. 192, of this Supplement.

Constitution of the court.—In the absence of the chief justice or an associate justice of the Supreme Court or a circuit judge, a Circuit Court of Appeals is legally constituted where made up of three district judges of the circuit, regularly designated by particular assignments to attend as members for the term. Peters v. Hanger, (C. C. A. 1905) 136 Fed. 181, one judge dissenting.

Vol. IV, p. 397, sec. 4.

Pecuniary limit.—The provision of R. S. sec. 631, 4 Fed. Stat. Annot. 251, limiting appeals from the District to the Circuit Court in equity and admiralty to cases where the sum in dispute exceeded fifty dollars, is not applicable to appeals to the Circuit Court of Appeals, but was superseded by the Act establishing such courts, which created a new appellate jurisdiction without any pecuniary limitation. The Joseph B. Thomas, (C. C. A. 1906) 148 Fed. 762.

Vol. IV, p. 398, sec. 5.

This section, with the exception of clause [3] as to criminal cases, is substantially re-enacted in Judicial Code, sec. 238, ante, title JUDICIARY, p. 231, of this Supplement. And see the note to that Judicial Code section.

Jurisdiction of the Supreme Court in cases not capital was withdrawn by the Act of Jan. 20, 1897, ch. 68, 29 Stat. L. 492, 4 Fed. Stat. Annot. 433; and now by Judicial Code, sec. 238, ante, title JUDICIARY, p. 231, of this Supplement, it has no jurisdiction in any criminal case.

SECTION 5 IN GENERAL.

Only final decisions reviewable.—Appeals or writs of error can be allowed under this section only in cases in which there has been a final judgment; "a case cannot be brought here by piecemeal." Heike v. U. S., (1910) 217 U. S. 423, 30 S. Ct. 539, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 821.

No pecuniary limit is imposed upon the appellate jurisdiction under this section. The Paquete Habana, (1900) 175 U. S. 677, 683, 20 S. Ct. 290, 293, 44 U. S. (L. ed.) 320, 322; Kirby v. American Soda Fountain Co., (1904) 194 U. S. 141, 24 S. Ct. 610, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 911.

The time limit for appeals or writs of error under this section is two years, as provided in R. S. sec. 1008, 4 Fed. Stat. Annot. 623. Holt v. Indiana Mfg. Co., (1900) 176 U. S. 68, 20 S. Ct. 272, 44 U. S. (L. ed.) 374; Frederic L. Grant Shoe Co. v. W. M. Laird Co., (1909) 212 U. S. 445, 29 S. Ct. 332, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 591.

Appeals in habeas corpus cases, however, under this section, must be taken within six months, as provided in R. S. sec. 706, as amended by the Act of March 3, 1893, ch. 226, 27 Stat. L. 751, 8 Fed. Stat. Annot. 179. Ex p. Lennon, (1893) 150 U. S. 393, 14 S. Ct. 123, 37 U. S. (L. ed.) 1120.

A party may appeal on more than one ground specified in this section. North American Cold Storage Co. v. Chicago, (1908) 211 U. S. 306, 29 S. Ct. 101, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 195; an appeal on the ground of a question of jurisdiction involved and also a constitutional question. See also Anglo-American Provision Co. v. Davis Provision Co., (1903) 191 U. S. 376, 24 S. Ct. 93, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 228; Bien v. Robinson, (1908) 208 U. S. 423, 28 S. Ct. 379, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 556.

Habeas corpus cases.—Appeals in habeas corpus cases cannot now be taken direct to the Supreme Court unless they are of the kind specified in some of the enumerations in this section. Otherwise they are reviewable only by the Circuit Court of Appeals. Pierce v. Creecy, (1908) 210 U. S. 387, 28 S. Ct. 714, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 1113.

CLAUSE 1. IN ANY CASE IN WHICH THE JURISDICTION OF THE COURT IS IN ISSUE.

Clause [1] of section 5 authorizing cases "in which the jurisdiction of the court is in issue" to be taken "direct to the Supreme Court" is re-enacted in Judicial Code, sec. 238, ante, title JUDICIARY, p. 231, of this Supplement; and a similar provision is in Judicial Code, sec. 250, ante, p. 235, of this Supplement, prescribing the appellate jurisdiction of the United States Supreme Court to review judgments and decrees of the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia. The clause is also applicable, in proper cases, to appellate review by the Supreme Court under section 24a of the Bankruptcy Act of 1898, as annotated in title BANKRUPTCY, ante, p. 603, of this Supplement.

The predecessor of this clause in the Circuit Court of Appeals Act of 1891 is a provision in section 1 of the Act of Feb. 25, 1889, ch. 236, 25 Stat. L. 693, 4 Fed. Stat. Annot. 492.

"Jurisdiction is the power to adjudicate a case upon the merits, and dispose of it as justice may require." The Resolute, (1897) 168 U. S. 437, 18 S. Ct. 112, 42 U. S. (L. ed.) 533.

The jurisdiction here referred to.—See infra, this note, p. 1324, When Jurisdiction Is in Issue.

The action of the court is not reviewable where its jurisdiction was questioned merely in respect to its general authority as a judicial tribunal or its power as a court of equity. Courtney v. Pradt, (1905) 196 U. S. 89, 25 S. Ct. 208, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 398; U. S. v. Larkin, (1908) 208 U. S. 333, 28 S. Ct. 417, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 517; Bien v. Robinson, (1908) 208 U. S. 423, 28 S. Ct. 379, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 556.

"The statute means to give a review, not of the jurisdiction of the court upon general grounds of law or procedure, but of the jurisdiction of the court as a federal court." Fore River Shipbuilding Co. v. Hagg, (1911) 219 U. S. 175, 31 S. Ct. 185, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 163.

"Whether the bill presented a case for equitable relief does not present a question of the jurisdiction of the court as a court of the United States." Scully v. Bird, (1908) 209 U. S. 481, 28 S. Ct. 597, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 899.

"Whether a remedy should be sought at law or in equity, or which of two courts having concurrent jurisdiction first acquired jurisdiction, or which of two federal courts of equal rank but in different localities has jurisdiction" would not be appealable questions of jurisdiction within the meaning of the statute. Morrisdale Coal Co. v. Pennsylvania R. Co., (C. C. A. 1910) 183 Fed. 929.

Where jurisdiction is the sole question in issue the Supreme Court and not the Circuit Court of Appeals has appellate jurisdiction; and the dismissal of a prior writ of error by the Circuit Court of Appeals for want of jurisdiction is no bar to a writ of error in the Supreme Court. Davis v. Cleveland, etc., R. Co., (1910) 217 U. S. 157, 30 S. Ct. 463, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 708.

Where jurisdiction is the sole question in issue, whereby no other question can be considered, the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court is exclusive. U. S. v. Larkin, (1908) 208 U. S. 333, 28 S. Ct. 417, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 517, citing American Sugar Refining Co. v. New Orleans, (1901) 181 U. S. 277, 21 S. Ct. 646, 45 U. S. (L. ed.) 859. To the same point see St. Louis Cotton Compress Co. v. American Cotton Co., (1903) 125 Fed. 196, 60 C. C. A. 80, dismissing a writ of error; Halpin v. Amerman, (1905) 138 Fed. 548, 70 C. C. A. 462 Morrisdale Coal Co. v. Pennsylvania R. Co., (C. C. A. 1910) 183 Fed. 929.

"If the jurisdiction of the Circuit Court is in issue and decided in favor of the defendant, the Circuit Court of Appeals has no jurisdiction to review the decision, because it disposes of the case, and the plaintiff must have the question certified and take his appeal or writ of error to the Supreme Court. U. S. v. Jahn, (1894) 155 U. S. 109, 15 S. Ct. 39, 39 U. S. (L. ed.) 87." Campbell v. Golden Cycle Min. Co., (1905) 141 Fed. 610, 73 C. C. A. 260.

Where a demurrer to a bill in a Circuit Court assigned as grounds want of jurisdiction in the court as a federal court, because neither diversity of citizenship nor any federal question was disclosed, and also want of "jurisdiction" as a court of equity for lack of equity in the bill, a decree sustaining the demurrer and dismissing the bill "for want of jurisdiction" must be construed to refer to the real jurisdictional grounds, and an appeal therefrom lies to the Supreme Court and not to the Circuit Court of Appeals. Crawford v. McCarthy, (1906) 148 Fed. 198, 78 C. C. A. 356, dismissing an appeal.

Where the jurisdiction of the court below depended entirely on the fact that a constitutional question was in issue, the Circuit Court of Appeals had no jurisdiction of an appeal therein. Wright v. MacFarlane, (1903) 122 Fed. 770, 58 C. C. A. 570.

Where the power of a Circuit Court to proceed to the trial of an action against a nonresident defendant depends on whether there has been a general appearance by defendant, or, if not, upon the validity of attachments and garnishments of property within the district, both such questions are jurisdictional, and a decision of the court determining them in favor of the defendant and dismissing the action for want of jurisdiction is reviewable only by the Supreme Court. Davis v. Cleveland, etc., R. Co., (1907) 156 Fed. 775, 84 C. C. A. 453.

Where a Circuit Court found that an attachment was fraudulently sued out by the plaintiff and levied on property of the defendants, who were nonresidents of the state, without a substantial bond being given as required by law, for the purpose of compelling the defendants to come within the jurisdiction, and dismissed the action for want of jurisdiction, without determining any other question, the judgment was not reviewable by the Circuit Court of Appeals, but only by the Supreme Court. Hays v. Richardson, (1903) 121 Fed. 536, 57 C. C. A. 598, dismissing a writ of error.

Jurisdiction of an appeal in an ancillary suit where the only question presented by the assignments of error is the jurisdiction of the court below in the principal suit is exclusively vested in the Supreme Court. Kentucky State Board of Control v. Lewis, (C. C. A. 1910) 176 Fed. 556, dismissing the appeal.

Where other questions are involved.—Where the jurisdiction of the Circuit Court attached on the ground of diverse citizenship, and also upon a separate and independent constitutional ground, the defeated party may take a direct appeal to the Supreme Court, or at his option to the Circuit Court of Appeals. Mississippi R. Commission v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., (1906) 203 U. S. 335, 27 S. Ct. 90, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 209.

In a case which had been removed from a Kentucky court to the federal Circuit Court solely upon diversity of citizenship, the court said: "That the defendants subsequently claimed that there was no jurisdiction over their persons, because the Kentucky statute allowing constructive service was in contravention of the Constitution of the United States, presented, in one aspect, a question as to the jurisdiction of the court below. When that was decided against them they went to trial upon the merits. They lost the case upon this line of defense. They then had to elect whether they would abandon the merits and go to the Supreme Court upon the jurisdiction, or to the Court of Appeals upon both questions. They elected to come to this court, and this court has decided for itself the question of jurisdiction as well as the questions upon the merits. It was under no obligation to certify the question of jurisdiction, being clear in the opinion that the court below had jurisdiction. No right to a writ of error from the judgment of the Circuit Court of Appeals now exists." Weber v. Kentucky Grand Lodge, (C. C. A. 1909) 171 Fed. 839, denying an application for a writ of error.

Where the question of jurisdiction is in issue, and the jurisdiction is sustained, and a judgment or decree is rendered in favor of the defendant upon the merits, the Circuit Court of Appeals has jurisdiction to review it. Campbell v. Golden Cycle Min. Co., (1905) 141 Fed. 610, 73 C. C. A. 260, holding that a general decree of dismissal without more is a decree that the court has jurisdiction, but that there are no merits in the case.

An order of the Circuit Court made on an application for leave to file a bill of review for the purpose of setting aside a decree in favor of a bank, which quashed the service of notice of the application on the ground that the bank had become defunct as a corporation, but which also denied leave to file the bill on the merits, although for the same reason, did not relate wholly to matters of jurisdiction, and an appeal therefrom was within the jurisdiction of the Circuit Court of Appeals. Frankfort v. Deposit Bank, (1903) 124 Fed. 18, 59 C. C. A. 538.

Where a District Court for the district of Alaska, on dismissal of an appeal from a conviction in a justice court which had been superseded by the giving of an appeal bond, entered judgment "as it was given in the court below," as required by Code Crim. Pro. Alaska, sec. 450, 1 Fed. Stat. Annot. 404, it was held that the whole case might be taken for review by writ of error to the Circuit Court of Appeals, even though the motion to dismiss was based on want of jurisdiction. Cartier v. U. S., (1906) 148 Fed. 804, 78 C. C. A. 494.

Where other questions are involved which are within the jurisdiction of the Circuit Court of Appeals, the latter may determine them all, even if it had power to certify the sole question of jurisdiction of the court below to the Supreme Court. Boston, etc., R. Co. v. Gokey, (1908) 210 U. S. 155, 28 S. Ct. 657, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 1002; Wirgman v. Persons, (1903) 126 Fed. 449, 62 C. C. A. 63; Grand Trunk Western R. Co. v. Reddick, (C. C. A. 1908) 160 Fed. 898; Meeker v. Lehigh Valley R. Co., (C. C. A. 1910) 183 Fed. 548. See also Seattle Electric Co. v. Seattle, etc., R. Co., (C. C. A. 1911) 185 Fed. 365. It seems to have been held otherwise by a majority of the court in the earlier case of Waterford v. Elson, (1906) 149 Fed. 91, 78 C. C. A. 675, and in Sun Printing, etc., Assoc. v. Edwards, (1903) 121 Fed. 826, 58 C. C. A. 162. As to certification of questions by the Circuit Court of Appeals, see infra, p. 1339, note to section 6 of the Circuit Court of Appeals Act of 1891.

"If a case in a District or Circuit Court goes to trial or hearing on a question of jurisdiction and on the merits, and the question of jurisdiction is one concerning either the jurisdiction of the parties or the power of the court as a federal court to take jurisdiction of the subject-matter, the party dissatisfied with the final judgment or decree, whether he be plaintiff or defendant, may waive all errors on the merits, and take the case directly to the Supreme Court, on appeal or error, with a certificate from the lower court of the question of jurisdiction; or he may assign errors on the question of jurisdiction, and take the whole case, on appeal or error, to the proper Circuit Court of Appeals. In the latter proceeding the Circuit Court of Appeals may certify the question of jurisdiction to the Supreme Court, and defer decision upon the other questions until the answer of the Supreme Court shall have been received." Morrisdale Coal Co. v. Pennsylvania R. Co., (C. C. A. 1910) 183 Fed. 929, 942, sustaining jurisdiction of a writ of error where an action at law was tried on the merits before a jury and a special verdict rendered, subject to the determination of the law by the court, and pending a motion for judgment on the verdict the defendant filed a motion to dismiss on the ground that the court was without jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the action, which motion was sustained and judgment rendered thereon for the defendant; both parties arguing at length in the Circuit Court of Appeals both the question of jurisdiction and the questions concerning the merits, all of which were presented by the assignments of error.

A Circuit Court of Appeals has no power to interfere by mandamus with the action of a Circuit Court where the question involved relates to its jurisdiction as a Circuit Court of the United States; but such want of power does not exist where the question involved relates to the jurisdiction of a Circuit Court as a judicial tribunal of original jurisdiction, having no relation to its limitation as a national court. Dowagiac Mfg. Co. v. McSherry Mfg. Co., (1907) 155 Fed. 524, 84 C. C. A. 38.

When jurisdiction is in issue.—See cases cited supra, this note, 1322, The Jurisdiction Here Referred To, and Where Jurisdiction Is the Sole Question.

The jurisdiction challenged must be that of the court rendering the decree appealed from, not merely that of the court rendering a former decree, which is set up in the complaint as the basis of the title sued upon. Empire State-Idaho Min., etc., Co. v. Hanley, (1907) 205 U. S. 225, 27 S. Ct. 476, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 779.

The question whether the federal Circuit Court in Massachusetts could entertain an action for damages under the Employers' Liability Act of that state did not involve the jurisdiction of the court within the meaning of this section. "Whether other sovereignties would enforce penal actions of the character alleged to arise under the Massachusetts statute was not a question peculiar to the federal jurisdiction of the court. It was general in its nature, and to be determined upon principles controlling in other courts as well as those of federal creation." Fore River Shipbuilding Co. v. Hagg, (1911) 219 U. S. 175, 31 S. Ct. 185, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 163. See also Mexican Cent. R. Co. v. Eckman, (1903) 187 U. S. 429, 23 S. Ct. 211, 47 U. S. (L. ed.) 245.

The contention that under R. S. sec. 1342, art. 62, 1 Fed. Stat. Annot. 405, a court-martial has exclusive jurisdiction over the crimes committed by a military officer which are cognizable by courts-martial under the provisions of that article was too clearly unfounded to serve as the basis of a writ of error to review a conviction in the Circuit Court. Franklin v. U. S., (1910) 216 U. S.

559, 30 S. Ct. 434, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 615, dismissing a writ of error.

The question whether or not one District Court acquired jurisdiction of an information for forfeiture of smuggled property by lawful seizure in that district or whether another District Court alone had jurisdiction thereof is not reviewable under this section, for "District Courts are the proper courts of the United States to adjudicate forfeiture, and the question involved was not the jurisdiction of the United States courts as such." U. S. v. Larkin, (1908) 208 U. S. 333, 28 S. Ct. 417, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 517.

But where a suit is brought in a federal court solely on the ground of diverse citizenship of the parties, but in the district of which neither party is a resident, the question whether the defendant could waive and had waived the objection is an appealable question of jurisdiction, although "the suit is cognizable in some Circuit Court." Western Loan, etc., Co. v. Butte, etc., Consol. Min. Co., (1908) 210 U. S. 368, 28 S. Ct. 720, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 1113.

Since the federal courts have exclusive jurisdiction of cases arising under the copyright laws, the question whether, by construction of federal statutes, the court below could entertain a suit to recover damages for an alleged infringement of the copyright of a map, is a question of jurisdiction of a federal court as such, and a decree involving the question is appealable. Globe Newspaper Co. v. Walker, (1908) 210 U. S. 356, 28 S. Ct. 726, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 1096.

A contention in the court below that it had no jurisdiction of a case removed from a state court, for the reason that the state court had none, has nothing to do with the jurisdiction of the federal court as such, but is to be determined on principles of general application, and therefore does not present an appealable question. Kansas City Northwestern R. Co. v. Zimmerman, (1908) 210 U. S. 336, 28 S. Ct. 730, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 1084.

"If a case in a District or Circuit Court is dismissed by final judgment or decree for want of jurisdiction, either after a hearing on a question of jurisdiction only or after a hearing or a trial on a question of jurisdiction and the merits, and the question of jurisdiction is not one concerning jurisdiction of the parties or concerning the power of the court as a federal court to take jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the action, but is a question of jurisdiction relating to the general authority of the court as a judicial tribunal, the party dissatisfied with the judgment or decree, whether he be plaintiff or defendant, may have the judgment or decree reviewed, on appeal or error, by the proper Circuit Court of Appeals only." Morrisdale Coal Co. v. Pennsylvania R. Co., (C. C. A. 1910) 183 Fed. 929, 943.

On a decree against a defendant under section 10 of the Food and Drugs Act of Congress of June 30, 1906, 1909 Supp. Fed. Stat. Annot. 141, "whether a personal judgment for costs can be rendered, may be said to be simply a question of the construction of the section, and not one which involves the jurisdiction of the court. In other words, the rulings of the court may be error only, not in excess of its power." Hipolite Egg Co. v. U. S., (1911) 220 U. S. 45, 31 S. Ct. 364, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 364.

The dismissal by the court below of a suit against a foreign executor for the want of jurisdiction in the state court, from which it had been removed for diversity of citizenship, does not present an appealable question of jurisdiction of the federal court. "The court had power to so adjudicate." Courtney v. Pradt, (1905) 196 U. S. 89, 25 S. Ct. 208, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 398.

Dismissal of a bill "for want of jurisdiction" on a demurrer which does not put in issue the jurisdiction of the court under its federal limitations alone does not present an appealable question of jurisdiction, and an appeal may therefore be taken to the Circuit Court of Appeals. Alton Water Co. v. Brown, (1908) 166 Fed. 840, 92 C. C. A. 598.

Exercise of a power incident to the court's unquestioned jurisdiction over the parties to and the subject-matter of the suit will not give rise to an appealable question of jurisdiction. Chapman v. Atlantic Trust Co., (1902) 119 Fed. 257, 56 C. C. A. 61.

Jurisdiction of the court is not in issue where "the established rules of practice as to bringing in parties to ancillary or pro interesse suo proceedings, and those governing courts of concurrent jurisdiction as between themselves," are alone involved. Bache v. Hunt, (1904) 193 U. S. 523, 24 S. Ct. 547, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 774.

The question "whether the Circuit Court had power to allow the amendment" of plaintiff's complaint, after verdict and judgment thereon, and on plaintiff's affidavit, without further proceedings taken, by inserting a necessary allegation of diverse citizenship, and to retain the judgment after such amendment, was treated as an appealable question of jurisdiction in Mexican Cent. R. Co. v. Duthie, (1903) 189 U. S. 76, 23 S. Ct. 610, 47 U. S. (L. ed.) 715.

Denial of a motion to remand a cause removed from a state court does not present an appealable question of the federal court's jurisdiction where such motion did not, in terms, put in issue the power of the federal court as a court of the United States to hear and determine the cause. Courtney v. Pradt, (1905) 196 U. S. 89, 25 S. Ct. 208, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 398.

Objection that an attachment suit in aid of an action at law was not cognizable in a federal Circuit Court to which it had been removed from the state court for diversity of citizenship, because the proceeding was equitable in form, did not create an appealable question of jurisdiction. Courtney v. Pradt, (1905) 196 U. S. 89, 25 S. Ct. 208, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 398.

"It is very doubtful" whether the authority of the court to vacate and set aside its previous decree, after the lapse of the term, does not involve a power to exercise a jurisdiction already vested, rather than a question of jurisdiction itself. Van Wagenen v.

Sewall, (1896) 160 U. S. 369, 16 S. Ct. 370, 40 U. S. (L. ed.) 460.

Whether the court erred in refusing leave to file a plea during the progress of the trial on the question of the plaintiff's citizenship, and in refusing to permit issue to be joined thereon, are not appealable questions of jurisdiction. Mexican Cent. R. Co. v. Pinkney, (1893) 149 U. S. 194, 13 S. Ct. 859, 37 U. S. (L. ed.) 699.

Where an appeal was taken from the Circuit Court to the Circuit Court of Appeals, which reversed the decree and remanded the case, and the Circuit Court entered a decree in conformity to the mandate, no appealable question can arise out of a contention that the Circuit Court did not have jurisdiction to make its first decree or that the Circuit Court of Appeals did not have jurisdiction of the appeal. Aspen Min., etc., Co. v. Billings, (1893) 150 U. S. 31, 14 S. Ct. 4, 37 U. S. (L. ed.) 980.

Jurisdiction is in issue in a judgment dismissing a suit on the ground of the invalidity of the attachment and garnishment of the property of the nonresident defendant, and upon the lack of a general appearance by such defendant. Davis v. Cleveland, etc., R. Co., (1910) 217 U. S. 157, 30 S. Ct. 463, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 708.

The question whether a case removed from a state court to a federal court was removed at a proper stage of the case under the removal statutes seems to have been regarded as an appealable question of jurisdiction. Madisonville Traction Co. v. St. Bernard Min. Co., (1905) 196 U. S. 239, 25 S. Ct. 251, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 462. See also Powers v. Chesapeake, etc., R. Co., (1898) 169 U. S. 92, 18 S. Ct. 264, 42 U. S. (L. ed.) 673; McDonnell v. Jordan, (1900) 178 U. S. 229, 20 S. Ct. 886, 44 U. S. (L. ed.) 1048; Remington v. Central Pac. R. Co., (1905) 198 U. S. 95, 25 S. Ct. 577, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 959.

The contention that there was no valid service of process upon a foreign corporation in a suit removed by it from a state court, because the corporation was not doing business in the state and the person attempted to be served was not its agent at that time, presents an appealable question of jurisdiction. Mechanical Appliance Co. v. Castleman, (1910) 215 U. S. 437, 30 S. Ct. 125, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 272, citing Remington v. Central Pac. R. Co., (1905) 198 U. S. 95, 25 S. Ct. 577, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 959, in which latter case it was also held, however, that the question whether the denial by a state court of a motion to vacate the summons is res judicata on the question of the validity of such service, when raised in the federal court to which the cause has been removed, is one of practice and not of jurisdiction of the federal court.

The question of jurisdiction is fairly presented, despite the indefiniteness of allegations in a plea to the jurisdiction, where the certificate states that the defendant raised by such plea the objection that it was a foreign corporation not doing business in the state, and that the person attempted to be served was not its agent at the time, and shows that the court did not consider the affidavits which the bill of exceptions states were filed, but overruled the plea on the sole ground that the facts stated in the return of the sheriff to the summons were conclusive, and also recites that when the case was filed for trial the same objection was made and overruled for the same reason. Mechanical Appliance Co. v. Castleman, (1910) 215 U. S. 437, 30 S. Ct. 125, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 272.

The question of the validity of the service of process of a federal Circuit Court on certain persons as the agents of a foreign corporation involves an appealable question of jurisdiction, as against the contention that the case rests upon grounds alike applicable to any other judicial tribunal, state or federal, under the same circumstances. Chicago Board of Trade v. Hammond Elevator Co., (1905) 198 U. S. 424, 25 S. Ct. 740, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 1111; Kendall v. American Automatic Loom Co., (1905) 198 U. S. 477, 25 S. Ct. 768, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 1133. Likewise, a judgment of dismissal of an action removed from a state court, where the ground of the judgment was lack of a valid service of process on the defendant, and the plaintiff had moved to remand the cause. Remington v. Central Pac. R. Co., (1905) 198 U. S. 95, 25 S. Ct. 577, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 959. To the same point see Peterson v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1907) 205 U. S. 364, 27 S. Ct. 513, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 841, and Green v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1907) 205 U. S. 530, 27 S. Ct. 595, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 916, deciding, as a matter of law and fact, that a foreign corporation was not doing business in a state so that valid service of process could be made upon it there.

"All admiralty jurisdiction belongs to courts of the United States as such," and therefore a decree dismissing a libel for contribution on the ground that the court sitting as a court of admiralty had no jurisdiction to enforce contribution between the parties on the facts is not a decree on the merits, but appealable as going to the jurisdiction. The Ira M. Hedges, (1910) 218 U. S. 264, 31 S. Ct. 17, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 1039, reversing the decree. See also The Blackheath, (1904) 195 U. S. 361, 25 S. Ct. 46, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 236, holding that admiralty jurisdiction extends to a libel in rem against a vessel for negligently colliding with and destroying a beacon owned by the government and standing some fifteen or twenty feet from the channel, in water fifteen or twenty feet deep, though it is built upon piles driven firmly into the bottom. Cleveland Terminal, etc., R. Co. v. Cleveland Steamship Co., (1908) 208 U. S. 316, 28 S. Ct. 414, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 508, affirming a decree dismissing for want of jurisdiction a libel in rem against a vessel for injuries inflicted to a railroad bridge and a dock or wharf. Followed in The Troy, (1908) 208 U. S. 321, 28 S. Ct. 416, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 512, holding that redress cannot be afforded in admiralty for injuries inflicted by a colliding vessel upon the draw of a bridge over a navigable stream, and to its centre pier protection.

Where the exceptions to a libel and intervening petition claiming salvage for services rendered to a vessel in a dry dock challenged the jurisdiction because, from the situation of the vessel, the place where the services were rendered, and their nature and character, they afforded no basis for the jurisdiction of the court as a federal court of admiralty, and this was the conception upon which that court acted in dismissing such libel and intervening petition, the decree was appealable. The Steamship Jefferson, (1909) 215 U. S. 130, 30 S. Ct. 54, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 125.

A contention that the relief sought will violate R. S. sec. 720, 4 Fed. Stat. Annot. 509, forbidding the granting of an injunction to stay proceedings in a state court, presents a question of jurisdiction. Hunt v. New York Cotton Exch., (1907) 205 U. S. 322, 27 S. Ct. 529, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 821.

Where the lower court decides that the case does not involve the construction or application of the Federal Constitution or other federal question, and upon that ground dismisses a suit for want of jurisdiction, its judgment is properly appealable on a certified question of jurisdiction. See among other reported cases Mercantile Trust, etc., Co. v. Columbus, (1906) 203 U. S. 311, 27 S. Ct. 83, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 198.

For the purpose of appeal, the question whether a suit is one against a state, and therefore forbidden by the Eleventh Amendment to the Constitution, is a question of jurisdiction and not a question on the merits. Scully v. Bird, (1908) 209 U. S. 481, 28 S. Ct. 597, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 899. See also Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Adams, (1901) 180 U. S. 28, 21 S. Ct. 251, 45 U. S. (L. ed.) 410.

Appeal cannot be taken before final judgment.—A judgment of the court below, rendered after the plaintiff, having unsuccessfully moved to remand the cause to the state court whence it was removed, had elected to stand upon his motion to remand, and refused to recognize the jurisdiction of the federal court, that plaintiff take nothing of the suit, and that the defendants go hence without day and recover their costs against the plaintiff, is final for the purpose of appeal on the question of jurisdiction, regardless of whether such judgment would be a bar to another action. *Wecker v. The appeal lay directly to this court under section 5 of the Judiciary Act of March 3, 1891, . . . and not to the Circuit Court of Appeals. American Sugar

Refining Co. v. New Orleans, (1901) 181 U. S. 277, 21 S. Ct. 646, 45 U. S. (L. ed.) 859. Nevertheless, an appeal having been prosecuted to the latter court, and having there gone to decree, an appeal was allowed to this court because the judgment was not made final in that court by section 6 of the Act. But the case being here, and the jurisdiction of the Circuit Court having depended on the sole ground that it arose under the Constitution, we are constrained to reverse the decree of the Circuit Court of Appeals, not on the merits, but by reason of the want of jurisdiction in that court. If this were not so, the right to two appeals would exist in every similar case, notwithstanding, as we have repeatedly held, that such was not the intention of the Act." Union, etc., Bank v. Memphis, (1903) 189 U. S. 71, 23 S. Ct. 604, 47 U. S. (L. ed.) 712, citing cases and distinguishing Pullman's Palace-Car Co. v. Central Transp. Co., (1898) 171 U. S. 138, 18 S. Ct. 808, 43 U. S. (L. ed.) 108.

Where the Circuit Court dismissed a declaration on sustaining a demurrer for want of jurisdiction, and on the plaintiff's writ of error the Circuit Court of Appeals reversed the judgment and the case proceeded to trial below, the defendant still objecting, the latter was not debarred from taking a judgment against him direct to the Supreme Court on a writ of error on the question of jurisdiction. Globe Newspaper Co. v. Walker, (1908) 210 U. S. 356, 28 S. Ct. 726, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 1096.

But in a case similar to the foregoing, except that the defendant had not confined its defense to a denial of jurisdiction, it was held that the defendant could not, after a decree against it pursuant to a judgment of the Circuit Court of Appeals on the plaintiff's appeal, take the case direct from the Circuit Court to the Supreme Court on the question of jurisdiction. Kansas City Northwestern R. Co. v. Zimmerman, (1908) 210 U. S. 336, 28 S. Ct. 730, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 1084.

In Petri v. F. E. Creelman Co., (1905) 199 U. S. 487, 26 S. Ct. 133, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 281, where the court entertained jurisdiction of the appeal, the case had been previously taken to the Circuit Court of Appeals and dismissed by that court.

Affirmance by the Circuit Court of Appeals of an interlocutory decree appointing a receiver, and issuing a preliminary injunction, does not prejudice a subsequent appeal by another party, who appeared later in the action, from a decree made thereafter involving the question of jurisdiction. Stillman v. Combe, (1905) 197 U. S. 436, 25 S. Ct. 480, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 822.

If an appeal is taken to and determined by the Circuit Court of Appeals in a case which does not really involve the jurisdiction of the District Court as a federal court, and subsequently an appeal is taken in the same case direct from the District Court to the Supreme Court, obviously the correctness of the judgment of the Circuit Court of Appeals is not open to consideration. U. S. v. Larkin, (1908) 208 U. S. 333, 28 S. Ct. 417, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 517.

Second appeal.—After a decree of dismissal on sustaining a demurrer for want of a jurisdictional amount in controversy has been reversed by the Supreme Court with direction for further proceedings, and the court below, after hearing evidence, again dismisses for failure to prove a jurisdictional amount, a second appeal to the Supreme Court may be taken on the jurisdictional question. McDaniel v. Traylor, (1908) 212 U. S. 428, 29 S. Ct. 343, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 584.

Necessity of certificate.—In the absence of a certificate or its equivalent an appeal will be dismissed, unless the appeal is sustainable on another ground. Colvin v. Jacksonville, (1895) 157 U. S. 368, 15 S. Ct. 634, 39 U. S. (L. ed.) 736; Courtney v. Pradt, (1905) 196 U. S. 89, 25 S. Ct. 208, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 398.

But "it would be our duty, without action of the trial court or of the parties, to look at the record to determine whether or not the court below had jurisdiction of the action." C. H. Nichols Lumber Co. v. Franson, (1906) 203 U. S. 278, 27 S. Ct. 102, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 181, citing Thomas v. Ohio State University, (1904) 195 U. S. 211, 25 S. Ct. 24, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 164. See also Mattingly v. Northwestern Virginia R. Co., (1895) 158 U. S. 53, 15 S. Ct. 725, 39 U. S. (L. ed.) 894.

There may be on the face of the record "a question of jurisdiction paramount to that passed on by the Circuit Court" and certified by it, which may necessitate reversal of a decree of the Circuit Court determining that it had jurisdiction. Lathrop, etc., Co. v. Interior Constr., etc., Co., (1909) 215 U. S. 246, 30 S. Ct. 76, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 177.

Where there is no certificate, and the case is appealed to the Supreme Court only upon the ground of a constitutional question involved, if the record shows that the court below had no jurisdiction the Supreme Court will take notice of the fact, and decree accordingly. Shawnee Sewerage, etc., Co. v. Stearns, (1911) 220 U. S. 462, 31 S. Ct. 452, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 544.

If the record should disclose that there was a want of jurisdictional amount involved in the court below, even if that was not one of the questions certified, it seems that the Supreme Court would take notice of it, provided there was jurisdiction of the appeal. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Adams, (1901) 180 U. S. 28, 21 S. Ct. 251, 45 U. S. (L. ed.) 410.

Formal certificate, when necessary.—"Ordinarily a formal certificate is essential.

But where the record shows that the only matter tried and decided in the [court below] was one of jurisdiction, and the petition upon which the writ of error was allowed asked only for a review of the judgment that the court had no jurisdiction of the action, the question of jurisdiction alone is sufficiently certified." U. S. v. Larkin, (1908) 208 U. S. 333, 28 S. Ct. 417, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 517.

A certificate is unnecessary, where, upon the face of the record, irrespective of the recitals in the order made on the allowance of the appeal, it is apparent that the only question which was decided below was one of jurisdiction, and the decree on its face shows that the cause was dismissed for want of jurisdiction. The Steamship Jefferson, (1909) 215 U. S. 130, 30 S. Ct. 54, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 125.

In Petri v. F. E. Creelman Lumber Co., (1905) 199 U. S. 487, 26 S. Ct. 133, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 281, the bill of exceptions filed below and the certificate made as to the question of jurisdiction were authenticated by a judge other than the trial judge, and moreover, the certificate was not made at the term at which the judgment complained of was entered. But the court said: "We are relieved, however, from the necessity of considering these objections, for the reason that the judgment of dismissal and the prior proceedings clearly exhibit the ground upon which the judgment was based, and plainly make apparent on the record the fact that the only matter tried and decided in the Circuit Court were demurrers to pleas to the jurisdiction, and that the petition upon which the writ of error was allowed asked only for the review of the judgment, which decided that the court had no jurisdiction of the action. This being the state of the record, no bill of exceptions or formal certificate in respect to the matter decided was required, and the question of jurisdiction alone was sufficiently certified to this court."

If the certificate of the court below fails to show the exact ground of federal jurisdiction that was in question, it may sufficiently appear by examination of the record, aided by the opinion of the court contained therein, and made part thereof. Chicago v. Mills, (1907) 204 U. S. 321, 27 S. Ct. 286, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 504, citing as in point Smith v. McKay, (1896) 161 U. S. 355, 16 S. Ct. 490, 40 U. S. (L. ed.) 731, which cited with approval Shields v. Coleman, (1895) 157 U. S. 168, 15 S. Ct. 570, 39 U. S. (L. ed.) 660, and In re Lehigh Min., etc., Co., (1895) 156 U. S. 322, 15 S. Ct. 375, 39 U. S. (L. ed.) 438.

The record does not show an equivalent of the certificate of jurisdiction to review a judgment dismissing a complaint for want of jurisdiction, where the assignment of errors is directed both to the jurisdiction and the merits, and the petition for the writ of error, which was allowed generally and without any limitation or specification, prays for a review to the end that the rulings and judgment of the court below may be reversed. Filhiol v. Torney, (1904) 194 U. S. 356, 24 S. Ct. 698, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 1014.

In Chicago v. Mills, (1907) 204 U. S. 321, 27 S. Ct. 286, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 504, an appeal in equity, portions of the proceedings, including the testimony on the question of jurisdiction, duly signed and sealed and made part of the record, were certified to the Supreme Court in the form of a bill of exceptions.

Form and frame of certificate.—Supreme Court rule 37, 210 U. S. 501, 29 S. Ct. xxii, does not control in appellate proceedings under the section to which this note is devoted. See Bowker v. U. S., (1902) 186 U. S. 135, 22 S. Ct. 802, 46 U. S. (L. ed.) 1090.

In Woodside v. Beckham, (1910) 216 U. S. 117, 30 S. Ct. 367, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 408, the certificate referred to the reasons stated in the opinion filed in the case, which opinion was, by the terms of the certificate, made a part of the record directed to be certified and sent up as such.

The Supreme Court will accept a precise statement in the certificate as to the grounds of the decision of the court below, notwithstanding a contention that there is an inconsistency between the opinion and order of the court below and its certificate. Scully v. Bird, (1908) 209 U. S. 481, 28 S. Ct. 597, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 899.

If a certificate does not state in proper form any facts or propositions of law, it is nevertheless sufficient where the record clearly shows that the only matter tried and decided was one of jurisdiction. Davis v. Cleveland, etc., R. Co., (1910) 217 U. S. 157, 30 S. Ct. 463, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 708.

"The question of jurisdiction alone shall be certified," reads the statute. But this may be divided into a number of specific questions, as in some of the following cases where certificates are quoted in full, or nearly in full: Hooe v. Jamieson, (1897) 166 U. S. 395, 17 S. Ct. 596, 41 U. S. (L. ed.) 1049; Glass v. Concordia Parish Police Jury, (1900) 176 U. S. 207, 20 S. Ct. 346, 44 U. S. (L. ed.) 436; Huntington v. Laidley, (1900) 176 U. S. 668, 20 S. Ct. 626, 44 U. S. (L. ed.) 630; McDonnell v. Jordan, (1900) 178 U. S. 229, 20 S. Ct. 886, 44 U. S. (L. ed.) 1048; North American Transp., etc., Co. v. Morrison, (1900) 178 U. S. 262, 20 S. Ct. 869, 44 U. S. (L. ed.) 1061; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Adams, (1901) 180 U. S. 28, 21 S. Ct. 251, 45 U. S. (L. ed.) 410; Put-in-Bay Waterworks, etc., Co. v. Ryan, (1901) 181 U. S. 409, 21 S. Ct. 709, 45 U. S. (L. ed.) 927; Mexican Cent. R. Co. v. Eckman, (1903) 187 U. S. 429, 23 S. Ct. 211, 47 U. S. (L. ed.) 245; Bigby v. U. S., (1903) 188 U. S. 400, 23 S. Ct. 468, 47 U. S. (L. ed.) 519; Doctor v. Harrington, (1905) 196 U. S. 579, 25 S. Ct. 354, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 606; Sweeney v. Carter Oil Co., (1905) 199 U. S. 252, 26 S. Ct. 55, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 178; Venner v. Great Northern R. Co., (1908) 209 U. S. 24, 28 S. Ct. 328, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 666; Scully v. Bird, (1908) 209 U. S. 481, 28 S. Ct. 597, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 899; Lathrop, etc., Co. v. Interior Constr., etc., Co., (1909) 215 U. S. 246, 30 S. Ct. 76, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 177; Mechanical Appliance Co. v. Castleman, (1910) 215 U. S. 437, 30 S. Ct. 125, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 272.

Time of granting certificate.—To the point that the certificate must be granted during the term at which the judgment was rendered, see Davis v. Cleveland, etc., R. Co., (1910) 217 U. S. 157, 30 S. Ct. 463, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 708.

But if a certificate was not made at the term at which judgment was rendered, and therefore comes too late, it is not fatal to the appellate jurisdiction in a case where no formal certificate was necessary. U. S. v. Larkin, (1908) 208 U. S. 333, 28 S. Ct. 417, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 517.

"The question of jurisdiction was certified before the adjournment of the term of the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District and Northern Division of Alabama, at which term the judgment was entered; and we decline, under the circumstances disclosed, to discuss what the effect might have been if the certificate had shown on its face that it was in fact signed in the Southern Division of the district within which the presiding judge had jurisdiction." McDonnell v. Jordan, (1900) 178 U. S. 229, 20 S. Ct. 886, 44 U. S. (L. ed.) 1048.

The certificate, if otherwise in time, may be granted after one of the justices of the Supreme Court has allowed the appeal, as in Aspen Min., etc., Co. v. Billings, (1893) 150 U. S. 31, 14 S. Ct. 4, 37 U. S. (L. ed.) 986.

Amendment of certificate. — It is "extremely questionable" whether the lower court, having granted a certificate presenting the question of jurisdiction during the term at which the judgment was rendered, has power to amend the same after the lapse of the term and in a material respect, to cure an alleged error not clerical. Patch v. Wabash R. Co., (1907) 207 U. S. 277, 28 S. Ct. 80, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 204, holding it to be doubtful whether such amendment of the certificate, without leave of the Supreme Court, could be considered on a writ of error.

A bill of exceptions is not necessary where the question of jurisdiction is susceptible of determination by what appears on the face of the record. C. H. Nichols Lumber Co. v. Franson, (1906) 203 U. S. 278, 27 S. Ct. 102, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 181.

In Smithers v. Smith, (1907) 204 U. S. 632, 27 S. Ct. 297, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 656, there was a bill of exceptions containing the evidence taken on the question of jurisdiction. So in Peterson v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1907) 205 U. S. 364, 27 S. Ct. 513, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 841. See also conclusion of opinion in C. H. Nichols Lumber Co. v. Franson, (1906) 203 U. S. 278, 27 S. Ct. 102, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 181.

While the Supreme Court must consider the record for the purpose of determining the question of jurisdiction which the certificate shows adequately to have been raised, it cannot consider, in passing upon the question, in the absence of a bill of exceptions, extraneous matter which forms no part of the record, such as the testimony of witnesses. C. H. Nichols Lumber Co. v. Franson, (1906) 203 U. S. 278, 27 S. Ct. 102, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 181.

Who may allege error. — The question of jurisdiction must have been decided against the appellant, in order to authorize an appeal. Carey v. Houston, etc., R. Co., (1893) 150 U. S. 170, 14 S. Ct. 63, 37 U. S. (L. ed.) 1041.

When a bill was dismissed for want of equity as specified in a demurrer, but at the same time held sufficient as against a specified want of jurisdiction in the demurrer, "the decree did not injure defendant, but sustained its contention, and defendant is in no position to complain that it is aggrieved by its own success." New Orleans v. Emsheimer, (1901) 181 U. S. 153, 21 S. Ct. 584, 45 U. S. (L. ed.) 794.

"It is no infringement upon the ancient maxim of the law, that consent cannot confer jurisdiction, to hold that where a party has procured the removal of a cause from a state court upon the ground that he is lawfully entitled to a trial in a federal court, he is estopped to deny that such removal was lawful if the federal court could take jurisdiction of the case, or that the federal court did not have the same right to pass upon the questions at issue that the state court would have had if the cause had remained there." De Lima v. Bidwell, (1901) 182 U. S. 1, 174, 21 S. Ct. 743, 45 U. S. (L. ed.) 1041.

If the jurisdiction is sustained — by overruling a demurrer to the bill, for example — and then a judgment or decree is rendered in favor of the defendant, the plaintiff cannot appeal to the Supreme Court on the jurisdictional question. Anglo-American Provision Co. v. Davis Provision Co., (1903) 191 U. S. 376, 24 S. Ct. 93, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 228.

Case advanced for hearing in Supreme Court — motion to dismiss or affirm. — Supreme Court rule 32, (1892) 146 U. S. 707, 13 S. Ct. iii, provides for advancement, on motion, of appeals on the question of jurisdiction. A motion to dismiss or affirm under Supreme Court rule 6 may be treated as equivalent to submission under said rule 32. Kirby v. American Soda Fountain Co., (1904) 194 U. S. 141, 24 S. Ct. 619, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 911.

An order to advance is unnecessary and would be superfluous where a motion to dismiss coupled with a motion to affirm is filed, and it is evident that the case will be dismissed on the motion. Aspen Min., etc., Co. Billings, (1893) 150 U. S. 31, 14 S. Ct. 4, 37 U. S. (L. ed.) 986.

On motion to dismiss or affirm, it is only necessary to print so much of the record as will enable the court to act understandingly without reference to the transcript. Carey v. Houston, etc., R. Co., (1893) 150 U. S. 170, 14 S. Ct. 63, 37 U. S. (L. ed.) 1041.

Oral argument is not allowed on motions to dismiss appeals or writs of error, as a general rule. Aspen Min., etc., Co. v. Billings, (1893) 150 U. S. 31, 14 S. Ct. 4, 37 U. S. (L. ed.) 986; Carey v. Houston, etc., R. Co., (1893) 150 U. S. 170, 14 S. Ct. 63, 37 U. S. (L. ed.) 1041.

Questions reviewable — The question whether the Circuit Court in a case removed from a state court was without jurisdiction because the removal was improper is not open where the certificate and the record on appeal show that the jurisdiction of the Circuit Court was denied solely on the ground that the state court wherein the cause originated had no jurisdiction. Kansas City Northwestern R. Co. v. Zimmerman, (1908) 210 U. S. 336, 28 S. Ct. 730, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 1084.

Review limited to question of jurisdiction — exceptions. — The Supreme Court is concerned only with the correctness of the conclusion reached in the court below as to the question of jurisdiction. Chicago v. Mills, (1907) 204 U. S. 321, 27 S. Ct. 286, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 504.

"The whole case is not open to us, but only the question of jurisdiction." Mexican Cent.

R. Co. v. Eckman, (1903) 187 U. S. 429, 23 S. Ct. 211, 47 U. S. (L. ed.) 245.

"We have not to consider how far the injunction should go in case the plaintiff succeeds, or anything except the objection" to the jurisdiction. American Colortype Co. v. Continental Colortype Co., (1903) 188 U. S. 104, 23 S. Ct. 265, 47 U. S. (L. ed.) 404.

The Supreme Court is not concerned with the merits of the controversy as disclosed by the pleadings further than the allegations concerning the same are necessary to be considered in determining the question of jurisdiction of the court below. Whitney v. Wenman, (1905) 198 U. S. 539, 25 S. Ct. 778, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 1157.

Where the appeal is taken on a certified question whether the court below had jurisdiction on the ground of a federal question, other matters of law or fact are not considered, and the function of the Supreme Court "is restricted to the inquiry whether, upon the allegations of the bill of complaint, assuming them to be true in point of fact, a federal question is disclosed so as to give the Circuit Court jurisdiction." Vicksburg Waterworks Co. v. Vicksburg, (1902) 185 U. S. 65, 22 S. Ct. 585, 46 U. S. (L. ed.) 808.

Where an appeal is based on the question whether a jurisdictional amount was in dispute in a cross-bill, no question of error in matter of equity procedure in the retaining of the cross-bill after the dismissal of the bill is open for consideration. Kirby v. American Soda Fountain Co., (1904) 194 U. S. 141, 24 S. Ct. 619, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 911.

Exercise of discretion to grant or refuse leave to file a supplemental bill is not reviewable on appeals of this character. Raphael v. Trask, (1904) 194 U. S. 272, 24 S. Ct. 647, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 973.

An "appeal, although general in form, does not and could not bring up for review anything more than the question of jurisdiction certified by the lower court," Passavant v. U. S., (1893) 148 U. S. 214, 13 S. Ct. 572, 37 U. S. (L. ed.) 426, except, however, when a general appeal is taken in a case involving matters that are appealable under other clauses of the text section.

In the case of a general appeal with a sole question of jurisdiction certified, if the Supreme Court decides that the court below had jurisdiction, it may proceed to determine an appealable constitutional question in the record, since "the appeal opens the whole case" and "the certificate was unnecessary to found the jurisdiction of this court, and could not narrow it." Giles v. Harris, (1903) 189 U. S. 475, 23 S. Ct. 639, 47 U. S. (L. ed.) 909, followed in North American Cold Storage Co. v. Chicago, (1908) 211 U. S. 306, 29 S. Ct. 101, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 195.

If the appellate jurisdiction fails, so far as the question of the jurisdiction of the court below is concerned, the Supreme Court may, under some circumstances, consider the appeal as taken on the ground of a constitutional question involved. Filhiol v. Torney, (1904) 194 U. S. 256, 24 S. Ct. 698, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 1014, quoting Chappell v. U. S.,

"As the writ of error was allowed upon assignments claimed to present questions as to the jurisdiction of the Circuit Court, and the circuit judge certified the question of jurisdiction, the writ might well be treated as bringing up only jurisdictional questions. Inasmuch, however, as the right to bring a case direct to this court exists when constitutional questions are raised and decided in the Circuit Court, we will briefly notice the assignments not stated as jurisdictional." Bien v. Robinson, (1908) 208 U. S. 423, 28 S. Ct. 379, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 556, dismissing the writ altogether.

A question of fact necessarily involved in a decision on the question of jurisdiction, the record containing the evidence thereon, is before the Supreme Court for review on a writ of error as well as on appeal. Wetmore v. Rymer, (1898) 169 U. S. 115, 18 S. Ct. 293, 42 U. S. (L. ed.) 682; Chicago v. Mills, (1907) 204 U. S. 321, 27 S. Ct. 286, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 504; Commercial Mut. Acc. Co. v. Davis, (1909) 213 U. S. 245, 29 S. Ct. 445, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 782.

Evidence bearing on the question of the citizenship of the respective parties to a suit in a federal court must be examined on appeal, although the motion to dismiss for want of jurisdiction in the court below did not distinctly raise any question concerning the absence of diverse citizenship, but only stated that the parties were "residents" of the same state, where the court below treated the question of jurisdiction as raised, and passed upon it. Steigleder v. McQuesten, (1905) 198 U. S. 141, 25 S. Ct. 616, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 986.

The grounds of a finding by the court below, on evidence taken without a jury on the question whether a jurisdictional amount was in dispute, are re-examinable by the Supreme Court. Globe Refining Co. v. Landa Cotton Oil Co., (1903) 199 U. S. 540, 23 S. Ct. 754, 47 U. S. (L. ed.) 1171.

A finding of a Circuit Court that a foreign insurance company was not induced by fraud or artifice to send its medical representative into the state, so as to permit service of process on him in an action against the company, will not be set aside by the Supreme Court on a writ of error where the lower court might have found on the testimony in the record that there was a bona fide attempt to settle the controversy between the parties, and that it was only upon failure to reach a settlement that service of summons was made upon such representative as the agent of the company. Commercial Mut. Acc. Co. v. Davis, (1909) 213 U. S. 245, 29 S. Ct. 445, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 782.

Determination and disposition. — "The power to certify to this court other than jurisdictional questions is vested only in the Circuit Court of Appeals." Hence if the question certified as one of jurisdiction of the court appears by the record to have been one of a different character, and the appeal is not sustainable on other grounds, it will be dismissed. Arkansas v. Schlierholz, (1900) 179 U. S. 598, 21 S. Ct. 229, 45 U. S. (L. ed.)

335. See also Fore River Shipbuilding Co. v. Hagg, (1911) 219 U. S. 175, 31 S. Ct. 185, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 163.

Questions certified are not answered seriatim when the record discloses to the Supreme Court a want of jurisdiction in the court below which justified the latter in dismissing the cause. Cleveland Terminal, etc., R. Co. v. Cleveland Steamship Co., (1908) 208 U. S. 316, 28 S. Ct. 414, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 508.

If the Supreme Court decides that the jurisdiction of the lower court was not in issue within the meaning of the statutory provision for appeal, the appeal will be dismissed, as in Lucius v. Cawthon-Coleman Co., (1905) 196 U. S. 149, 25 S. Ct. 214, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 425. If it adjudges that the jurisdiction was in issue, it affirms, modifies, or reverses the judgment or decree of the court below, according as the decision of the Supreme Court on the question of jurisdiction may require.

Where an appeal was properly taken, both on the ground of a certified question of jurisdiction and on the ground of a federal question involved, and it was determined that the court erred in dismissing a bill on the former ground, but that the dismissal would be correct on the merits of the federal question, the decree was modified by striking out the ground for dismissal as being for want of jurisdiction, and, as so modified, affirmed. North American Cold Storage Co. v. Chicago, (1908) 211 U. S. 306, 29 S. Ct. 101, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 195.

"The rule is without exception that the facts upon which the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States rests must appear in the record of all suits prosecuted before them." Hence if an appeal be taken on a question of jurisdiction, decided by the court below in favor of its jurisdiction, the judgment may be reversed for a fatal defect of jurisdiction on another ground. Fishback v. Western Union Tel. Co., (1896) 161 U. S. 96, 16 S. Ct. 506, 40 U. S. (L. ed.) 630.

Where the Supreme Court decided that the lower court exceeded its jurisdiction in rendering a personal judgment absolute in terms, the judgment to that extent was modified by making it collectible only from attached property. Clark v. Wells, (1906) 203 U. S. 164, 27 S. Ct. 43, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 138.

The decision of the court below on a question of jurisdiction may be so plainly right that the Supreme Court, instead of affirming the decree, may dismiss the appeal as frivolous. Steele v. Culver, (1908) 211 U. S. 26, 29 S. Ct. 9, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 74, where the court below had properly dismissed a bill on demurrer for want of the requisite diversity of citizenship.

In order to decide the question of jurisdiction properly shown to have been raised, the Supreme Court cannot resort to the statements in the certificate for the purpose of supplying elements of decision which could not properly be considered in an action at law without a bill of exceptions; but "when the record does not otherwise show when and how the question of jurisdiction was raised, the certificate of the Circuit Court may be considered for the purpose of supplying such deficiency when the elements necessary to decide the question are in the record," although it is "the better practice in every case of direct review on a question of jurisdiction to make apparent on the record, by a bill of exceptions or other appropriate mode, the fact that the question of jurisdiction was raised and passed upon, and the elements upon which the decision of the question was based." C. H. Nichols Lumber Co. v. Fran-son, (1906) 203 U. S. 278, 27 S. Ct. 102, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 181.

Moot case.—An appeal or writ of error will be dismissed where it is properly shown that there is nothing but a moot case remaining and an adjudication would be ineffectual. Jones v. Montague, (1904) 194 U. S. 147, 24 S. Ct. 611, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 913; Selden v. Montague, (1904) 194 U. S. 153, 24 S. Ct. 613, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 915.

CLAUSES 4-6. QUESTIONS UNDER THE CONSTITUTION AND TREATIES OF THE UNITED STATES.

Issue must appear of record.—"If a case is brought up from the Circuit Court on the ground that it involves the construction or application of the Constitution of the United States, the record must show that the question was raised for the consideration of the court below." Paraiso v. U. S., (1907) 207 U. S. 368, 28 S. Ct. 127, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 249.

Exclusive jurisdiction of Supreme Court.—Where the jurisdiction of the court below depends entirely upon the question whether a constitutional question is involved—the parties being citizens of the same state, for example—and other questions involved concern the merits, "an appeal lies only to the Supreme Court." Paducah v. East Tennessee Telephone Co., (C. C. A. 1910) 182 Fed. 625, dismissing an appeal and citing Union, etc., Bank v. Memphis, (1903) 189 U. S. 71, 23 S. Ct. 604, 47 U. S. (L. ed.) 712; MacFadden v. U. S., (1909) 213 U. S. 288, 29 S. Ct. 490, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 801, and Owensboro v. Owensboro Waterworks Co., (1902) 115 Fed. 318, 53 C. C. A. 146. Compare cases cited supra, this note, p. 1322. And observe, as in the cases cited supra, p. 1326, under What are appealable questions of jurisdiction, and some of the cases cited in 4 Fed. Stat. Annot. 405, under Exclusive jurisdiction of Supreme Court, that the question whether a federal question is sufficiently presented in a plaintiff's pleading is a question of "jurisdiction of the court."

Where a case involves the constitutionality of an Act of Congress, or the construction or application of the Constitution of the United States, and nothing else, the Supreme Court has exclusive appellate jurisdiction. Spreckels Sugar Refining Co. v. McClain, (1904) 192 U. S. 397, 24 S. Ct. 376, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 496. But where the case also involves questions not exclusively cognizable on appeal by the Supreme Court, such as the construction and effect of state statutes, and the regularity and effect of proceedings under a federal statute, the defeated party may, at his election, take it for review to the Circuit Court of Appeals. Hooper v. Rammel, (1908) 165 Fed. 336, 91 C. C. A. 598.

A suit, although not one of diversity of citizenship, which, according to the complainant's bill, depends not only upon the construction and application of the Constitution of the United States and the constitutional validity of an Act of Congress, but also upon the proper construction of the Act of Congress, is one in respect of which the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court is not exclusive, and an appeal from the final decree may be taken to the Circuit Court of Appeals. Harris v. Rosenberger, (1906) 145 Fed. 449, 76 C. C. A. 225, certiorari denied 203 U. S. 591, 27 S. Ct. 778, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 331.

The fact that constitutional questions were involved in a case in the District Court does not deprive the Circuit Court of Appeals of jurisdiction to entertain an appeal therefrom, where other questions also were involved and determined. In re Can Pon, (C. C. A. 1909) 168 Fed. 479.

On appeal to the Circuit Court of Appeals in a habeas corpus proceeding, the judgment of that court is not appealable to the Supreme Court on the contention that a right under the Constitution was involved, for "it is settled that, having elected to go to the Circuit Court of Appeals for a review of the judgment, the appellant must abide by the judgment of that court." MacKenzie v. Pease, (1906) 146 Fed. 743, 77 C. C. A. 233.

An appeal lies to the Circuit Court of Appeals under this section where diversity of citizenship is duly alleged as the basis for the jurisdiction of the court below and the substantial question involved is the validity and proper construction of a state statute, which is alleged to be void as in violation of the Federal Constitution. Love v. Busch, (1906) 142 Fed. 429, 73 C. C. A. 545.

Prior to the Act of April 14, 1906, ch. 1627, 34 Stat. L. 116, 1909 Supp. Fed. Stat. Annot. 291, now embraced in Judicial Code, sec. 129, ante, vol. 1, p. 195, of this Supplement, there was no appeal to the Circuit Court of Appeals from an order or decree of a federal court, or judge thereof, granting or continuing an injunction or appointing a receiver if a constitutional question was alleged in the bill of complaint, and the only hearing in such a case was in the Supreme Court upon an appeal from final decree. Since the Act above cited, however, an appeal may be taken from such interlocutory decree, though a constitutional question be involved, and the constitutional question may be determined by the Circuit Court of Appeals. Seattle Electric Co. v. Seattle, etc., R. Co., (C. C. A. 1911) 185 Fed. 365.
